GERHARDT, PAULUS

given in 3st. of 4 l. in the American Universalist's Hymn for Christian Devotion, 1846, No. 356, as "Gently, my Father, let me down." (See Various.) [J. J.]

Gerhardt, Paulus, s. of Christian Gerhardt, burgomaster of Grafenhaynich, near Wittenberg, was b. at Grafenhaynich, Mar. 21, 1628. On January 2, 1629, he matriculated at the University of Wittenberg. In the registers of St. Mary's church, Wittenberg, his name appears as a godfather, on July 13, 1641, described still as "student." He seems to have remained in Wittenberg till at the end of April, 1642. He appears to have gone to Berlin in 1642-43, and was there for some time (certainly after 1641) a tutor in the house of Maxime Andreas Barthold, whose daughter (Anna Maria, b. May 19, 1622, d. March 5, 1658) became his wife in 1655. During this period he seems to have frequently preached in Berlin. He was appointed in 1651, at the recommendation of the Berlin clergy, Lutheran Protas (chief pastor) at Mittenwalde, near Berlin, and ordained to this post Nov. 18, 1651. In July, 1657, he returned to Berlin as third dean of St. Nicholas' church; but becoming involved in the contest between the Elector Friedrich Wilhelm (who was of the Reformed Church) and the Lutheran clergy of Berlin, he was deposed from his office in February, 1666, though he still remained in Berlin. In Nov., 1669, he accepted the post of archdeacon at Lübben, on the Spree, was installed in June, 1669, and remained there till his death on June 7, 1676 (Koch, iii. 297-326; Allg. Deutsche Biog., viii. 774-783, &c.).

The outward circumstances of Gerhardt's life were for the most part gloomy. His earlier years were spent amid the horrors of the Thirty Years' War. He did not obtain a settled position in life till he was 46 years of age. He was unable to marry till four years later, and his wife, after a long illness, died during the time that he was without office in Berlin; while of the five children of the marriage only one passed the period of childhood. The earliest period of his life was during the early years of his office in Berlin; while he enjoyed universal love and esteem; but his later years at Lübben as a widower with one surviving child were passed among a rough and unsympathizing people. The motto on his portrait at Lübben mort unjutly styles him "Theologus in eirbrio Satanae versatus."

Gerhardt ranks, next to Luther, as the most gifted and popular hymn-writer of the Lutheran Church. Germain (ed. 1842, pt. iii. p. 368, the well-known historian of German literature, thus characterizes him:-

"He went back to Luther's most genuine type of hymn in such manner as no one else had done, only so far modified as the requirements of his time demanded. In Luther's time the believer in Free Grace and the work of the Atonement, in redemption and the bursting of the gates of Hell was the inspiration of his life, and the love of God. With Luther the old, ancient, now an unceasingly living, sacred, and heavenly, the blissfulness of his faith and love is made simple, and pleasing in his way, without thinking.

With a firm grasp of the objective realities of the Christian Faith and a loyal adherence to the doctri-have its sometimes morbid moods, as it is the representative member of the Church speaking out the thoughts and feelings he shares with his fellow members: while in style Gerhardt is simple and graceful, with a considerable variety of verse form at his command, and often of bell-like purity in tone.

From the first publication of Gerhardt's hymns they at once came into favour among all ranks and creeds; and a large proportion are among the hymns most cherished and most widely used by German-speaking Christians at the present day. They appeared principally in the various eds. of Crüger's Praxis, and the Crüger Range G. B., 1853 (see Crüger, J.). The first collected ed. was prepared by J. G. Ebeling, and pub. in separate "Doenea," 1-4 in 1666, 5-10 in 1667, i.e. 120 in all. In the ed. of J. H. Foustling, Zerlet, 1707, a few st. were intercalated (from miss. in the possession of Gerhardt's surviving son), but no new hymns were added.

Among modern eds. of Gerhardt's hymns (mostly following the text of Ebeling) may be mentioned those by Langbecker, 1842; Schulte, 1842; Wackernagel, 1843; Bachmann, 1851, 1857, 1861; and Godeke, 1818. The Historico-Critical ed. of Dr. J. F. Bachmann, 1866, in the complete (with 11 additional pieces hardly Church hymns), and reverts to the pre-Ebeling text.

The length of many of Gerhardt's hymns ("Ein Lämmlein" is 10 st. of 10; "Fröhlich soll," 15 st. of 8 l. &c.), and the somewhat intricate metres of others, have caused his hymns to be less used in English than otherwise might have been the case; but a considerable proportion have come in some form or other into English hymn-books. A large selection, translated with scrupulous faithfulness but not retaining much of the lyric grace of the originals, was pub. by the Rev. John Kelly, in 1867, as Paul Gerhardt's Spiritual Songs; while many individual hymns have been tr. by John Wesley, Miss Winkworth, Miss Cox, Miss Borthwick, and many others. His trs. from St. Bernard are noted under "O Haupt voll Blut!" There are separate notes on 19 of his greater hymns. (See Index.) Besides these the following have passed into English:

1. Hymns in English C. U.

i. Auf den Nebel folgt die Sonne. Thanksgiving after great sorrow and affliction. In Crüger's Praxis, 1856, No. 249, in 15 st. of 7 l.; thence in Wackernagel's ed. of his Geistliche Lieder, No. 87, and Bachmann's ed., No. 64, in the Unc. L. S., 1851, No. 402. Tr. as:

Cometh sunshine after rain. A good tr, omitting st. iv., vii., x., xi., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 1st Ser., 1855, p. 100 (trs. of x., xi., added to 2nd ed., 1866). Repeated, omitting the trs. of st. ii., xii., as No. 4 in her C. B. for England, 1863. In the Christi-n H. Bk., Cincinnati, 1865, No. 705, with st. xii., as "Now as long as here I roam.

Another tr. is:—"After clouds we see the sun," by J. Kelly, 1867, p. 261.

Other trs. are:—(1) "May I when time is o'er," of st. vii., viii., as part of No. 31 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1749; in the 1861 and later eds. (1861, No. 1355), beginning, "I shall, when time is o'er." (2) "The time is very near," by J. Kelly, 1861, p. 341.

iii. Gottlob, nun ist erhöht. Peace. Thanksgiving for the Proclamation of the Peace of Westphalia, in 1648, after the Thirty Years' War. In Crüger's Praxis, 1856, No. 497, in 6 st. of 12 l., and thence in Wackernagel's ed. of his Geistliche Lieder, No. 64, and Bachmann's ed., No. 84; and in the Unc. L. S., 1851, No. 589. Tr. as:

Another tr. is:—"Praise God for forth hath sounded," by J. Kelly, 1867, p. 291.

iv. Ich, der ich oft in tiefes Leid. Ps. xcv. 1st pub. in J. G. Ebeling's ed. of his Geistliche Andachten Dritte Dutzet, 1666, No. 27, in 18 st. of 7 l. Thence in Wackernagel's ed., No. 95, and Bachmann's ed., No. 103; also in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 1004. Tr. as:

I who so oft in deep distress. A good tr., omitting st. ii., iv., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 149. Her trs. of st. i., xiiii., xvi., xvii., were included as No. 224, and of st. vi., viii., ix., xi., altered, and beginning, "O God! how many thankful songs," as No. 118, in Holy Song, 1899.

Another tr. is:—"Who is so full of tenderness," of st. viii., as tr. of No. 197 in the Sprüche, of 1876 to the Moravian H. Bk., 1901 (1866, No. 531).

v. Ich stehe an deiner Krippen hier. Christmas. Included in Crüger's Praxis, 1856, No. 105, in 15 st. of 7 l. Thence in Wackernagel's ed., No. 9, and Bachmann's ed., No. 45; and in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 157. A beautiful hymn, in which the poet puts himself in the place of the shepherds and the wise men visiting Bethlehem; and in praise and adoration tenders his devotion, his love and his all, to the Infant Saviour in the manger. Tr. as:

My faith Thy lowly bed beholds. A tr. of st. i., iv., viii., x., by A. T. Russell, as No. 57 in his Ps. & Hym., 1851.

Other trs. are:—(1) "I stand beside Thy manger bed," by Miss W. Martin, 1864, p. 38. (2) "Now at the manger here I stand," by J. Kelly, 1867, p. 32.

vi. Ich weise dass mein Erlöser lebt. Easter. Founded on Job xxi. 23-27. 1st pub. in J. G. Ebeling's ed. of his Geistliche Andachten Zehende Dutzet, 1867, No. 119, in 6 st. of 7 l.; repeated in Wackernagel's ed., 1843, No. 118 (1874, No. 123); in Bachmann's ed., No. 119; and in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 301. Tr. as:

I know that my Redeemer lives. In this my faith is fast. A full and spirited tr. by J. Omerford, in Lays of the Sanctuary, 1859, p. 122. His trs. of st. i., ii., vi., vii., were included, altered, as No. 779 in Kennedy, 1863.

Another tr. is:—"I know that my Redeemer lives. This hope," &c., by Miss W. Martin, 1863, p. 18.

vii. Ich weise, mein Gott, dass all mein Then. Supplication. A prayer for success in all Christian works and purpose; founded on Jeremiah x. 23, and Acts v. 31, 39. Included in Crüger's Praxis, 1856, No. 332, in 18 st. of 5 l. in Wackernagel's ed., No. 40; Bachmann's ed., No. 71, and the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. Tr. as:

I know, my God, and I rejoice. A good tr. of st. i.-iii. viii., xi. ix. by J. Kelly, 1867, p. 162.

Behold! behold! what wondrous love. In full, by J. Kelly, 1867, p. 19. From this, 12 st. were included in the Ohio Luth. Hymn., 1885, as Nos. 25, 26: No. 26 beginning with the tr. of st. xi., "It is a time of joy to-day."

xiii. Warum willst du drinnen stehn. Advent. Suggested by Gen. xxviii. 1. Appeared in the Crüger-Runge G. B., 1853, No. 78, in 9 st. of 4 l. viii., x. st. i.-vi. xi., xii. of the full form; viii.-x. being added in Ebeling's Geistliche Andachten Fünftes Dutzet. 1867, No. 50. The full text, in 12 st., is also in Wackernagel's ed., No. 2; Bachmann's ed., No. 23, and the Univ. L. S., 1851, No. 29. Tr. as:

Wherefore dost Thou long tarry, a good tr., omitting st. vii., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Germ., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 6. In her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 133, the tr. of st. iii., vii., viii., are omitted.

Praise God, praise Him! all ye men that fear Him! This is from the version in Bunsen's Alte L. B., 1846, No. 167, st. i. being from Gerhardt, and st. ii. and iii. from "Lobet den Herren, denn ihr seid sehr forchterlich" (q.v.); and appeared in the Dalston Hospital H. Bk., 1849, No. 55. Signed "A. G."

xv. Was Gott geküsst, mein frommes Kind. Reformation. This beautiful hymn, on resignation to "what pleases God," first appeared in the Crüger-Runge G. B., 1653, No. 290, in 20 st. of 5 l. Thence in Wackernagel's ed., No. 60; Bachmann's ed., No. 37, and the Univ. L. S., 1851, No. 723. Tr. as:

xvi. Wie schön ist doch, Herr Jesu Christ. For Married Persons. Founded on Ps. cxvii. 2. 1st pub. in Ebeling's ed. of his Geistliche Andachten Viertes Dutzet. 1866, No. 38, in 8 st. of 12 l. Thence in Wackernagel's ed. 1874, No. 109; Bachmann's ed., No. 105, and the Univ. L. S., 1851, No. 680. Tr. as:

II. Hymns not in English. C. U. xvi. Also by Gott die Welt gegr. Good Friday. On St. John iii. 16. In Crüger's Praxis, 1656, No. 372, in 17 st. Tr. as: "Be good cheer and be not sad, etc." by P. H. Moeller, of st. 16, as No. 1. as in the Moravians.
German Hymnody.

German hymnody surpasses all others in wealth. The church hymn in the strict sense of the term, as a popular religious lyric in praise of God to be sung by the congregation in public worship, was born with the German Reformation, and most extensively cultivated ever since by the evangelical church in Germany. The Latin hymns and sequences of Hilary, Ambrose, Fortunatus, Gregory the Great, Notker, St. Bernard, Thomas of Aquino, Adam of St. Victor, Thomas of Celano, and others, were indeed used in public worship long before, but only by the priests and choristers, and by the people, who could not understand them any more than the Latin psalms and the Latin masses.

The Reformed (as the non-Lutheran Protestant churches are called on the Continent) were long satisfied with metrical translations of the Psalter, and did not feel the necessity of original hymns, and some did not approve of the use of them in public worship.

The number of German hymns cannot fall short of one hundred thousand. Dean Georg Ludwig von Hardenberg of Halberstadt, in the year 1786, prepared a hymnological catalogue of the first lines of 72,738 hymns (in 5 vols., preserved in the library of Halberstadt). This number was not complete at that time, and has considerably increased since. About ten thousand have become more or less popular, and passed into different hymn-books. Fischer gives a selection of about 5000 of the best, many of which were overlooked by Von Hardenberg. We may safely say that nearly one thousand of these hymns are classical and immortal. This is a larger number than can be found in any other language.

To this treasury of German song several hundred men and women of all ranks and conditions—theologians and pastors, princes and princesses, generals and statesmen, physicians and jurists, merchants and travellers, labourers and private persons—have made contributions, laying them on the common altar of devotion. Many of these hymns, and just those possessed of the greatest vigour and unctious, full of the most exulting faith and the richest comfort, had their origin amid the conflicts and storms of the Reformation, or the fearful devastations and nameless miseries of the Thirty Years’ War; others belong to the revival period of the Saxon Pietism and the Moravian Brethren, and reflect its earnest struggle after holiness, the fire of the first love and the sweet enjoyment of the soul’s intercourse with her Heavenly Bridegroom; not a few of them sprang up even in the unbelieving age of rationalism, like flowers from dry ground, or Alpine roses on fields of snow; others again proclaim, in fresh and joyous tones, the dawn of reviving faith in the church where the Reformation had its birth. These hymns constitute a most graphic book of confession for the German evangelical Christians, a sacred band which encircles its various periods, an abiding memorial of its victories, its sorrows and its joys, a clear mirror showing its deepest experiences, and an eloquent witness for the all-conquering and invincible lifedoom of the evangelical Christian faith.

The treasures of German hymnody have enriched churches of other tongues and passed into Swedish, Norwegian, Danish, and modern English and American hymn-books. John Wesley was one of the first English divins who appreciated its value; and while his brother Charles produced an immense number of original hymns, John freely reproduced several hymns of Paul Gerhardt, Tersteegen, and Zinzendorf. The English Moravian hymn-book consists mostly of translations from the German. In more recent times, several accomplished writers, male and female, have vied with each other in translations and transcriptions of German hymns. Among the chief English translators are Frances Elizabeth Cox; Catherine Winkworth; H. L. Lees, i.e. Mrs. Fink and her sister, Miss Jane Borthwick; Richard Massie; Arthur Tozer Russell; James W. Alexander; H. Mills; Joan Kelly; not to mention many others who have furnished admirable translations of one or more hymns for church hymn-books, or private hymnological collections (as e.g. for Schaff's Christ in Song, N. York and London, 1876).

The history of German hymnody may be divided into six periods:—I. The Medieval Period, from the 8th to the 16th century; II. The Reformation Period, to the Peace of Westphalia, 1520-1648; III. The Congregational Period, from Paul Gerhardt to Spener, 1648-1680; IV. The Pietistic and Moravian Period, from Spener to Gellert, 1680-1757; V. The Rationalistic Period, from Gellert to Arnim, 1757-1817; VI. The Modern Evangelical Period, from 1817 to present date.

I. First Period.

The Christianization of the barbarians in western and northern Europe by Boniface, Ansgarius, and other missionaries, was accompanied with the introduction of the Latin language in theology and in public worship. This was an efficient means for preserving the unity of the church and facilitating literary intercourse among scholars, but prevented for a long time the free and full development of a vernacular hymnody. Nevertheless the German love for poetry and song produced a large number of sacred lyrics for private devotion, and versified translations of the Psalter and Latin hymns. Wackenagel gives, in the second volume of his great collection, no less than 1448 German hymns and sequences, from Otfrid to Hans Sachs (inclusive), or from A.D. 866 to A.D. 1518.

1. The oldest German poet is the Benedictine monk Otfrid of Reichenau; a pupil of Rabanus Maurus at Fulda. He prepared, in the middle of the ninth century, a versified Gospel history in the Alemannian dialect, four hymns, verses, each stanzas containing 1560 lines. This was the first German Bible, 860, and nineteen specimens in Wackenagel, ii, 3-21.

2. The Kyrie eleison and Christe eleison, which passed from the Greek church into the Latin, as a response of the people, to be repeated over and over again, especially on high festivals, was popularly enlarged, and some brief poems were called from the refrain Kirchen or Leichen, also Leichen. They were the first specimens of German hymnody which were sung by the people. The oldest dates from the end of the ninth century, and is called the Leich von hell Petrus. It has three stanzas, of which the first reads:

I. Unser treuhin hat fassalt santet Petre gawalt
Das er mag gersan

One of the best of these Kirchen, but of much later date, is the Easter hymn:

Christ ist erstanden,
von der marte all,
Christ sol man truster sein,

Some of the best Latin hymns, as the "Te Deum," the "Gloria in excelsis," the "Pange lingua gloriosi praeludium eucharisticum," the "Veni Creator Spiritus," the "Lauda Sion salvatorum," St. Bernard's "Jesu dulcis memoria," and "Salve caput erretum," were repeatedly translated. Not unfrequently words of the original were mixed with the vernacular, as in the Christmas hymn:

In dulci jubilo
Nun singet und sey der fro!
Und feuchtet in grüno
Unser Herzenn Wonne
alpha es et o.

A Benedictine monk, John of Salzburg, prepared a number of translations from the Latin at the request of his archbishop, Pilgrim, in 1366, and was rewarded by him with a parish. Wackenagel (ii, 409 seqq.) gives 43 of his hymns from 1388 in the imperial library of Vienna.

3. The "Minnesänger" of the thirteenth century—among whom Gottfried of Strassburg and Walther von der Vogelweide are the most eminent—glorified earthly and heavenly, sexual and spiritual love, after the model of Solomon's Song, and the Virgin Mary as the type of pure womanhood. The mystic school of Tauler, in the fourteenth century, produced a few hymns full of glowing love to God. Tauler is the author of the Christmas poem, "Uns kommt ein Schiff goladen," and the hymn of love to God:

Ich muss die Chickenle stehen
Und suche des Heizens Sinnigkeit,
Soll ich den Gießer an Gott zu ziehen,
Auf dass er bleiben in Rentigkeit.

4. The German hymnody of the Middle Ages, like the Latin, overflows with hagiology and Mariology. Mary is even clothed with divine attributes, and virtually put in the place of Christ as the fountain of all grace.

"Through all the centuries from Otfrid to Luther" (says Wackenagel, ii, p. 13), "we meet with the idolatrous veneration of the Virgin Mary. There are hymns which teach that she pre-existed with God at the creation, that all things are created in her and for her, and that God rested in her on the seventh day."

One of the favorite Mary hymns was "Die Frau vom Himmel, ruf ich an." Hans Sachs afterwards changed it into "Christum vom Himmel ruf ich an."

This change is characteristic of the effect which the Reformation exerted upon the worship of Mary. It substituted for it the worship of Christ as the only Mediatrix and Saviour through Whom men attain unto eternal life. The mediaval hymnody celebrates Mary as the "Ewig-Weibliche," which draws men irresistibly heavenward. It resembles theistine Madonnas of Raphael, who painted Christ as a child, even in heaven, on the arms of the Queen of Heaven.

ii. Second Period.

The Reformation of the sixteenth century taught or revived the primitive idea of the general priesthood of believers, and introduced the language of the people into public worship. It substituted a vernacular sermon for the Latin Mass, and congregational singing for the chanting of priests and choirs. The results were great and far-reaching, and of the utmost benefit to the Church of Christ.

1. The Lutheran Hymnody till about 1570.

The leader of the Reformation was also the first evangelical hymn-writer. To Luther belongs the extraordinary merit of having given to the German people in their own tongue the Bible, the Catechism, and the hymn-book, so that God might speak directly to them in His word, and that they might directly answer Him in their songs. He was also a musician and composed tunes to his best hymns. Some of them are immortal, most of all that triumphant war-cry of the Reformation which has so often been reproduced in other languages (the best English translation is Carlyle's), and which resounds with mighty effects on great occasions: "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott." Luther was a great lover of poetry and song, and availed himself of all existing helps for the benefit of public worship and private devotion. He began to write hymns in 1523, soon after he had completed his translation of the New Testament, and wrote his last two in 1543, three years before his death. He is the author of thirty-seven hymns; most of them (21) date from the year 1524.

He drew inspiration from the 4th Psalm for his "Ein feste Burg," composed in the year 1529; from the 130th Psalm for his "Aus tiefer Noth schreit ich zu dir" (1523); from the 12th Psalm for his "Ach Gott vom Himmel seid ohein" (1523). He reproduced some of the best Latin hymns in new or improved translations, as "Herr Gott, dich loben wir" (R. WULS var. medius); "Chrohm, mein Schöpf'er, heiliger Geist (Hymnus Spiritus); "Nun komm, der Heiden Herr" (Veni Redemptor gentium); "Mitten wir im Leben sind" (Medit. vita in morte sumus). He produced also strictly original hymns, as "Nun freut euch, lieben Christen g'mein" (1523); "Erhalt uns Herr bei deinem Wort" (against the Peas and the Turk, 1541); "Vom Himmel hoch da komm ich her" (for Christmas, 1538); and to an abridged form: "Vom Himmel kam der Geistschauer" (for Christmas, 1543), and the stirring song of the Calvinistic martyrs at Brussels in 1523, "Ein neues Lied wir haben an."

Luther is the Ambrose of German hymnody. His hymns are characterised by simplicity and strength, and a popular churchly tone. They breathe the bold, confident, joyful spirit of justifying faith which was the beating heart of his theology and piety. He had an extraordinary faculty of expressing profound thought in the clearest language. In this gift he is not surpassed by any uninspired writer: and herein lies the secret of his power.

He never leaves the reader in doubt of his meaning. He brings the truth home to the heart of the common people, and always hits the nail on the head. His style is racy, forcible, and thoroughly idiomatic. He is the father of the modern High German literature. His translation of the Bible may be greatly improved, but will never lose its hold upon the German-speaking people. Luther's hymns passed at once into popular use, and accompanied the Reformation in its triumphant march through German lands. Next to the German Bible they proved to be the most effective missionaries of evangelical doctrines and piety. How highly his contemporaries thought of them may be inferred from Spangenberg, likewise a hymn-writer, who said, in his preface to the Cathara Lutheri (1545):

"...The rhymes are easy and good, the words choice and proper, the meaning clear and intelligible, the melodies lovely and hearty, and, in summa, all is so rare and majestic, so full of path and power, so cheering and comforting that you will not find his equal, much less his master."

The first German evangelical hymn-book, the so-called Achtliederbuch, appeared in the year 1524 and contained eight hymns, four of them by Luther, three by Sparatus, one by an unknown author. The Erfurt Eucharistie, of the same year, numbered twenty-five hymns, of which eighteen were from Luther. The hymn-book of Walther, also of 1524, contained thirty-two; Klug's Gesangbuch, edited by Luther, Wittenberg, 1529, had fifty-four; Babli's of 1545, eighty-nine; and the fifth edition of 1558, one hundred and thirty-one hymns. (See Koch, l. 250 sqq.) This rapid increase of hymns and hymn-books continued after Luther's death.

We can only mention the names of the principal hymn-writers who were inspired by his example. J. Jonas, Luther's friend and colleague (1493-1555) wrote, "Wot, der Herrlich bist uns ans" (Ps. 124). Paul Eber, the faithful assistant of Melanchthon and Professor of Hebrew in Wittenberg (1503-1555), is the author of "Wenn wir in höchsten Nöthen sein," and "Herr Jesu Christ, wahr' Mensch und Gott." Burkhard Waldse, of Husum (1469-1557), poet of the Palatinate, was the author of "Angebot des bösen Teufels" (Dienst, 1542). The hymn-book of Martin Luther, of Mecklenburg, 1542, wrote twenty hymns which Herder and Gervinus thought almost equal to Luther's. "Christe, du bist der heil'ge Tag," is a tr. from the Latin "Christe qui populo tuo." (Lamnatz). Spengler, of Nürnberg (1478-1534) wrote, about 1523, an hymn on sin and redemption, which soon became very popular, "Durch Adams Fall ist ganz verdorren." Hans Sachs, the shoemaker-poet of Nürnberg (1496-1576), was the most fruitful "Meister-sänger" of that period, and wrote also some spiritual hymns. Paul Dietrich, pastor of St. Sebalte in Nürnberg (d. 1518), wrote "Benedik, o Mensch, die grosse Gnade." Markgraf Albrecht of Brandenburg (d. 1537): "Was mein Gott will, geschehe es mir." Paul Speratus, his court-chaplain at Königsberg (1481-1551), contributed three hymns to the first (German hymn-book (1524), of which the best is "Es ist der Herr aus Himmel kom." Schneck (d. 1567), pub. in 1548 a hymn still in use, "Allein zu dir, Herr Jesu Christ." J. Matthaeus, the pupil and biographer of Luther, and pastor at Jena and in Holstein, pastor at Wittenberg in 1504-1566, wrote a few; Nicolaus Herman, his cantor and friend (d. 1564), 176 hymns, especially for children, and composed popular tunes. A. Schöner, first a monk, then an evangelical pastor of Rottenburg (d. 1541), reproduced the Gloria in excelsis in his well-known "Allein ist in der Huth sei Ehr" (1525), and the agent bei in his eucharistic "O Lamm Gottes unschuldig" (1531).

The German hymnody of the Reformation period was enriched also by hymns of the Bohemian reformer, which were freely translated by Michael Witsch (Weyrs), and Johann Red (Horn) of Silesia. Witsch was a native
German Hymnody

GEORG WESSELS, who had joined the Bohemian Brethren, edited in 1621 their first German hymn-book, and was sent by them as a delegate to Luther in 1522. Luther at first favoured them, but afterwards they showed their preference for the Reformed doctrine of the Sacraments.

2. The Lutheran Hymnody from about 1570 to 1650. The productive period of the Lutheran church closed with the Formosa of Con- cord in 1577, which gave formal shape to the creed after the violent syncretistic, antinomian, ubi-quitarian, crypto-Calvinistic and adiaphatic controversies. The hymns from this time to the close of the Thirty Years' War are upon the whole the same character of objective churchly piety. But the untold misery which that fearful war entailed upon Germany stimulated the production of a more subjective and experimen- tal type of sacred poetry, and multiplied the hymns of the Cross (Kreuz-und Trostlieder).

The following are the chief hymnists from the close of the 16th cent. and the first half of the 17th cent.:

Nicolaus Pflug (1530-1597), a pupil of Melanchthon and one of the framers of the Formula Concordiae, is the author of nearly 150 hymns. Bartholomaeus Rheinhold (1530-1596), an equally fertile singer, is best known through his hymns for which association with the German Reformation, "Es ist vorgegeben und angeliebt" (Martin Linsen (1567-1604); Martin Behm (1556-1623); Martin Schelling (1542-1616); Johann Schmuck (1567-1623); Martin Linn (1564-1637), author of "Vater, ich will dir gebehen," 1612. Philipp Nicolai, Pastor at Ums in Westphalia, afterwards in Hamburg, where he died, 1680, was a very pietistic against the Calvinists, but two of his hymns, from the year 1614 or earlier, namely, "Wir sollen denklich der Morgenstern" (hymn 248), and "Wachet auf! ruft uns die Stimme" (Matt. 25), are truly classical and universal favorable in German churches, as well as in the sublime chorale which he adapted to them. Although he belongs to the churchly school, he introduced, by the sweet and tender tone of his "Morning Star," the unique series of German Jesus-hymns, in which the sentiment of the love of the soul and the heavenly Bridegroom is expressed in glowing language.

To the period of the Thirty Years' War (1618-1648) belong the following poets:

Martin Opitz (1596-1638), who founded the Silesian school of poetry, reformed the art of poetry and introduced a new variety of language and metrical regularity. Johann Hermann (1585-1647), a great sufferer of body and soul, contributed many hymns of permanent value, as "Einweihetest du unsern Thron," Goethe, "O Jesu Kind, deiner Mutter Schon," "O Jesu Christ, wie handlungs- freudig," "Mattathias Apollis von Leutenstein" (1634-1644) in the author of "Christus, du Herrscher der Kreuzertheife" and "Jesus, meine Freude und Wonne." Michael Alten- feier, famous battle hymn of Gustavus Adolphus, "Versage nicht, du Haendel klein," which that hero had sung by his army before the Battle of Littau (Nov. 19, 1632), 1632. Ludwig Heinsius (1590-1642) known by his New Te Deum Fleming (1609-1649) we owe the principal hymn, also of Altenfeier, "Stade hinan" (d. c. 1650); Goeze, "Israel, du hochgebote Stadt." In allen Gebieten Thaten," Mention must be made of Johann Heinrich von Schenck (1618-1632); Georg Weveld (1609-1633); Simon Stock e (1609-1633); Simon Stock (1609-1633); Simon Stock (1609-1633); Simon Stock (1609-1633); Simon Stock (1609-1633); Simon Stock (1609-1633); Simon Stock (1609-1633). After his war, 1646, gave classic expression to the grateful feeling of relief in the hymn "De Teum," "Sun danket allen Ge- mein." 3. The German Reformed Hymnody during the Reformation period. — The Reformed churches of Switzerland and Germany were far behind the Lutheran in original hymnody, but took the lead in psalmody. Zwingli and Calvin, the Swiss reformers, held the principle of the Word of God should have supreme domination in public worship, and that no produc- tions of man should be allowed to take its place.

This principle raised the Psalter to new dignity and power. Versified versions of the Psalms became the first hymn-books of the Reformed churches. Clement Marot, court poet to Francis I. of France, had between 1538 and 1539, translated several psalms into French metre. These circulated in ms. first in Paris, and then among the Huguenots, from whose use of them they assumed a party character. When Calvin was expelled from Geneva in 1538, he settled at Strasburg, and published there in the following year a small collection of 18 psalm versions and 3 other pieces with melodies attached. Of the psalms 12 are by Marot, 5 by Calvin himself, and 1 in prose. The melodies are mostly of German origin. Calvin returned to Geneva in Sept., 1541, and soon after that time another Psalter appeared at Strasburg, containing, besides the former 12, the 18 other psalms which Marot had already versified. Calvin then published at Geneva, in 1542, a new psalm-book, containing Marot's 30 psalms, his own 5, and some shorter pieces, such as the Song of Simeon, the Creed, and the Decalogue. When Marot fled to Geneva in 1542, he left these Psalms for Calvin, and wrote for him 19 others which were published in the edition of 1543. Soon afterwards Marot left Geneva and died in 1544. Some years later completed when Theodore de Boes (or Beza) completed the Psalter at Calvin's request. The first instalment was published in 1551, and the entire work in 1562. The musical editor of the Genevan Psalter was up to 1547 Louis Bourgeois. The additional 1547 (40 in number) were added by an unknown hand. After the completion of the Psalter the tunes were harmonized in 1565 by the celebrated Claude Goudimel, who published in 1572 the massacre at Lyons which followed the "Bartholomew" at Paris. Hence the melodies have often, but erroneously, been attributed to Goudimel, who had not even joined the Huguenot party, and did not even verse the Psalter until the middle of the century. The Psalter of Israel became the favorite Reformed hymn-book, and is used as such in many branches of Scottish and American Presbyterianism, even to the exclusion of "inspired" hymns. The first German Reformed hymn-book appeared at Zürich, 1540, edited by Johann Ziegler, of Constance. Ambrose Blarer (or Blauner), and his brother Thomas Blauner. It contained versified psalms and original hymns, with a preface in defence of con- gregational singing. But the most popular collection for a long time was the versified Psalter of Ambrosius Lobwasser, a Professor of Law at Königshoven (b. 1515, d. 1585). It is a rhymed translation of the French Psalter of Marot and Beza, written at first for private devotion, and pub. at Leipzig in 1578. The poetry is the poorest part of the translation, and is well characterized by the name of the author (Praise-sayer); but the pious contents made it a rich source of devotion for a hundred years. It is a parallel to Rons English version of the Psalter. [See Scottish Hymnody.] It is another interesting coincidence that Loh- wasser, who furnished the popular Psalter to the German Reformed or Calvinistic churches, was a Lutheran, and that Francis Hotz, who furnished the most popular Psalter to Scotland, was an English Puritan, and spent his whole life in the south of England. What gave to both such an authority was the belief that the Hebrew Psalter is a complete and the only inspired manual of praise for public worship.

iii. Third Period.

The third period extends from the middle to the end of the seventeenth century, or from Paul Gerhardt to Spencer (1648–1690). It is the transition from the churchly and confessional to the pietistic and devotional hymns, or, as the Germans say, from the Believers' Psalter to the Erbauungsbüchlein. The poets were mostly orthodox, but with a mystic vein, and possessed fervent experimental piety. They include:

Paul Gerhardt (1607–1676), a Lutheran pastor in Berlin, afterwards in Lübben, is the prince of German hymnists of the seventeenth century, and yields in popularity only to Luther, with whom he greatly surpassed in poetic fertility. His 3,333 hymns are among the noblest pearls in the treasury of sacred poetry. More than thirty of them are still in use, and some of them have been naturalised in English dress by John Wesley, James W. Alexander, Mrs Winkworth, A. T. Russell, John Newton, and others. We mention "Befrei dein Wege," "O Haupt voll Blut und Wunden," "Was soll ich dich empfangen." Next to him comes Johann Joachim David (1661–1727), burgomaster of his native town, Guben, in Lower Lusatia, not so popular and hearty, but superior in art and pathos. He characterised his poetry as "the music of piety, the herald of immortality, the founder of cheerfulness, the conquistador of sadness, and the elect of heavenly glory." He had a strong vein of mysticism, and began the series of the sweet pietistic Jesus-hymns. Among his best are: "Jesus, meine Freude," and the exhilarating "Schmach dich, o liebe Seele." The three brothers Franck (Sebastian, Michael, and Peter) occupy an inferior rank. Johann Rist (1607–1667), much praised and much censured by his contemporaries, crowned as poet laureate by the Emperor Ferdinand III. (1644), was the most fertile poet of his age, and produced or manufactured 410 hymns, published in ten collections between 1641 and 1664. Some are of a high order, but many only rhymed prose, and nearly all too prolix. One of his best is: "Der Engel de Bonnewort" (1661), greatly abridged in hymn-books. Georg Neumark (1621–1661), librarian at Weimar, is the author of the popular hymn of triumph, "Wer nur den lieben Gott lasst walten," which grew out of a providential deliverance from great distress. Michael Seckmann (1606–1673) wrote one of the best Pentecostal hymns, which, with its popular tune, is found in all German hymn-books: "O heliger Geist, kehr bei uns ein.

The following have also more or less enriched German hymnody:

Johann Georg Albinus (1624–1673); Johann Theobald (1611–1663); Christian F. Schenck (1646–1693); Christian K. von Böcklin (1610–1683); Christian Hoffmann (1610–1683); Christian Altmann (1608–1638); Christian F. Schenck (1634–1661); Christian Hoffmann (1610–1683); Christian Altmann (1608–1638); Christian F. Schenck (1634–1661); Christian Hoffmann (1610–1683); Christian Altmann (1608–1638); Christian F. Schenck (1634–1661); Christian Hoffmann (1610–1683); Christian Altmann (1608–1638); Christian F. Schenck (1634–1661); Christian Hoffmann (1610–1683); Christian Altmann (1608–1638); Christian F. Schenck (1634–1661); Christian Hoffmann (1610–1683); Christian Altmann (1608–1638); Christian F. Schenck (1634–1661); Christian Hoffmann (1610–1683); Christian Altmann (1608–1638); Christian F. Schenck (1634–1661); Christian Hoffmann (1610–1683); Christian Altmann (1608–1638); Christian F. Schenck (1634–1661); Christian Hoffmann (1610–1683); Christian Altmann (1608–1638);

iv. Fourth Period.

The Pietistic and Moravian period, from Spener to Gellert (1680 to 1757), produced a large number of hymns which breathe the spirit of a second Reformation or Revival in Germany. The Pietism of Philip Jacob Spener, and August Hermann Francke, was a reaction against the dry scholasticism and cold formalism of the Lutheran Church, and emphasised the importance of practical, personal, experimental piety. It corresponds in many respects to Puritanism, which preceded it, and to Methodism, which succeeded it, in England, but it remained within the state church. The Moravian movement resulted in a separate community, which Count Zinzendorf organised on the remnant of the Bohemian and Moravian Brethren or Unitas Fratrum. The Pietistic and Moravian hymns give expression to the various stages and shades of Christian experience, are fresh and lively, full of devotional fervor, but sometimes degenerate into a playful and irreverent sentimentalism.

It is a remarkable fact that some of the greatest religious revivals in the church—as the Reformation, Pietism, Moravianism, Methodistism—were sung as well as preached and written into the hearts of the people, and that the leaders of these revivals—Luther, Spener, Zinzendorf, Wesley—were themselves hymnists.

From the Pietistic and Moravian hymnody we must distinguish the hymnists of the German Reformed Church, which began to relax the exclusive use of the Psalms, and produced not a few hymns equal to the best in the Lutheran Church of this period. The chief Pietistic hymnist are:

Philipp Jacob Spener (1635–1705), an Abastian by birth, pastor of St. Nicolai in Berlin, was in word and example the leader of the Pietistic revival, and one of the best men in German church history, but he had no poetic genius, and his few hymns derive their value from his name and fame rather than from intrinsic merit. August Hermann Francke (1663–1727), the second leader of Pietism, a hero of faith in God, and founder of the famous Orphan House in Halle, where he was professor of theology and pastor of a church, wrote a few hymns, one of them, "Gott will's machen, Dam die Sache," "Er ist nicht schwer ein Christ zu sein," "Es kostet viel ein Christ zu sein," "Es ist nicht schwer ein Christ zu sein"

Johann Christoph Heymann (1675–1713), son-in-law and successor of Francke as director of the Orphan House, wrote a number of good hymns, and published the best hymn-book of the Pietistic school at Halle, 1704 and 1714. John Daniel Hermann (1673–1723), professor of theology in Halle and collegial of Francke in the management of the Orphan House: "Gott will's machen, Dam die Sache," "Lob deinen Herrn, o meine Seele," "Lob deinen Herrn, o meine Seele," "Lob deinen Herrn, o meine Seele," "Lob deinen Herrn, o meine Seele," "Lob deinen Herrn, o meine Seele," "Lob deinen Herrn, o meine Seele," "Lob deinen Herrn, o meine Seele," "Lob deinen Herrn, o meine Seele," "Lob deinen Herrn, o meine Seele." Christian Seeger (1629–1693), pastor in Magdeburg, court chaplain at Quedlinburg, author of the highly popular spiritual, "Seelenkrantz," wrote a few hymns, "Der lieben Sonne Licht und Pracht," "Jesus, meiner Seele Leben." Gotfried Arnold (1666–1714), the famous church histo-
The fifth period extends from 1757-1817, when Rationalism broke into the German churches and made havoc in the hymn-books and liturgies. It is the period of hymnological revolution. It began with the well-meaning zeal for improving old hymns in style and expression and adapting them to the taste of the age. This zeal had a sound foundation in the unchangeable language, the irregenerate rhymes, the antiquated words, and the Latinisms which disfigure many hymns of the 16th and 17th centuries. But it did not stop there. Klopstock, himself a great poet, published in 1758, along with his own spiritual odes, twenty-nine of the old hymns in altered form. He was followed by a swarm of hymnological tinkers and poets who had no sympathy with the theology and poetry of the grand old hymns of faith, weakened, diluted, mutilated and watered them, and introduced these misimprovements into the churches. The original hymns of rationalistic preachers, court chaplains and superintendents, now almost forgotten, were still worse, mostly prosy and tedious rhymes on moral duties. Conversion and sanctification were changed into self-improvement, piety into virtue, heaven into the better world, Christ into Christianity, God into Providence, Providence into fate. Instead of hymns of faith and salvation, the congregations were obliged to sing hymned sermons on the existence of God, the immortality of the soul, the delights of heaven, and the duty of self-improvement, the nurture of the body, and the care of animals and flowers.

And yet this was the classical period of German poetry and literature. But Goethe, Schiller, Wieland, Lessing, Herder, wrote no hymns, and had little or no sympathy with evangelical religion, except Herder, who knew how to appreciate the old hymns.
We pass by the would-be hymns of rationalistic compilers of hymn-books, which have mostly gone out of use again. But there were during this period of nearly a century. The works of whose names will be forgotten, though they were affected somewhat by the moralizing tone of their age. These include:

Christian Fürchtegott Gellert (1716-1769), professor of poetry, eloquence and moral philosophy in Leipsig, a noble, truly pious, and highly gifted man, wrote his Hymnen (1730), which are didactic rather than lyrical and emotional, but with great emotional power, warm, edifying, and justly popular, especially in North Germany: "aus Gott, und nicht auf meinen Reichtüm," "Es ist der Tag, den Gott gemacht," "Du, deine Gute reicht so weit," "Jesus lebt, mitt ihm auch ich," "Mein Gott, was ich dir verehre," "Wie gross ist der Almächtige Gottes." Friedrich Gottlieb Klopstock (1721-1803), the German Milton, too, wrote some hymns of high poetic merit, but lacking in popular simplicity. "Auferstehn, ja, auferstehn wird du" (Resurrection hymn), "Hallelujah, Amen, Amen" (funeral hymn), Johann Caspar Lavater (1741-1801), pastor at Zurich, once a friend of Goethe, and a noble Christian philanthropist, wrote, "(1) Jesus Christus, wache in mir," "Forst-kämpf' und forgerungen." "Jesu, Freund der Menschskinder." Matthias Flacius (1749-1812), pastor of the German Reformed church in the Hague, made one of the best poetic versions of the Psalms, Matthias Claudius (1749-1815), called "Ammen," of the "Wandsbecker Pate," a faithful witness to the truth in an age of unbelief, wrote a popular evening hymn, "Der Mond ist aufgegangen."

vi. Sixth Period.

This dates from about 1817, and is the period of the revival of evangelical theology, piety, and hymnody. It is rich in hymns which combine the old faith with classical elegance of form, sound doctrine with deep feeling. We have:

Friedrich Julius Riedberg (1776-1851), called Neuforts, was a youthful forerunner of the new epoch, a poetic genius of high order and burning love to Christ, connected with the Calvinarians, and also with the Reformed school. His hymns are among the very best, though somewhat sentimental. "Wann alle umtra werden," "Was wär ich ohne Dich gewesen," "Wenn ich ihn nur habe," "Je sind die Welt erblüht," "Ich erhebe meinen Herzen" (hymn of history in Bonn), and a noble German patriot, revived an interest in the old German hymns, 1819, and himself wrote a book which found its way into most hymn-books, "Ich weiss, was ich dich glaube." Friedrich Adolf Krummacher (1768-1845), pastor of St. Agneti at Heumen, and author of the popular "Pardon," "Ein Himmlisches Lied," "Dein König kommt, o Zion," "Mag auch die Liebe weinen." Friedrich Wilhelm Krummacher (d. 1845), son of the former, pastor in Elberfeld, afterwards court chaplain at Potsdam, a most eloquent pulpit orator (sermons on Elijah, Elisha, David, the Advent, the Passion, etc.). "Du Stern in allen Nächtern," "Behalte mich in Deinem Pflege." Johann Baptist von Altenburg (1769-1821), of a noble family of the Orlouns, in Switzerland, Moravian bishop at Breslau, fellow-student and friend of Schleiermacher, and a man of genius and piety: "Mit Deiner Güte entzündete mich," "Selig sind, die nicht setzen und doch thieben." Karl Bernhard Gerz (1763-1811), likewise a Moravian minister, and a gifted hymnist; he died at Herrnburg: "Deinem Friede gib uns Herz," "Der erste Urschuldiger mein Glück." Friedrich Riecker (1765-1820), one of the greatest masters of lyric poetry, wrote a beautiful Advent hymn: "Dein König kommt in Frieden huldigen." Albert Knapp (1778-1864), minister at Stefansgut, one of the most fruitful and gifted religious poets, and editor of the "Liederschatz." His best hymn is: "Eines wünsche ich mir vor allem andern, ich bin in Dir, und Du in mir," "Hein, Jesus Christus ist erschienen," "Nicht menschlicher Brauch und Erkenntniss," "Schöpfer meines Lebens." Christian Gottlob Neander (1709-1756), a friend of Knapp, and likewise a Swabian, reflected his indefatigable zeal for foreign missions in his hymns: "Der für in Todesmännern," "Hütter, bist die Nacht verschwunden." Christian Heinrich Schmoller (1757-1780), of Switzerland, called by Dr. Koch the most eminent and noble among all the female poets of our whole Evangelical Church. (1) Ich weiss, was ein Erlöser lebt," "Herz, du hast viel geweil." "Theuer ist der Tod der Deinern," "Willkommen, lieber Oster tag." Miss Jane Southwell has translated a number of her poems in Alpine Lyric. Carl Friedrich Begasen (1801-1874), professor of Church History in Basel, "Stille halten deinem Warten," "Wachtet auf! Erhebt die Blicke." Johann Peter Lange (1809-1844), professor of theology in Bonn, a most fruitful author, editor of the well-known "Dokument," and of a collection of hymns, wrote several volumes of poetry; "Was kein Auge hat gesehen," "Der Herr ist aufgestanden." Karl Johann Philipp Spitta (1801-1850), a Lutheran pastor and superintendent in the kingdom of Hannover, is upon the whole the most popular hymn-writer of the nineteenth century. His Psaltery and Harp passeases through a new edition every year (the 50th appeared with illustrations in 1856). His hymns are characterized by evangelical piety and simplicity, and have found an able translator in Richard Massie. "Bei Dein, Jesus, will ich bleiben," "Betracht wieder, betracht wieder," "Selig Haus, wo man Dich aufgenommen," "O wie freuen wir uns an Ihres Stund," "Stimm an das Lied vom Sterben," "Unser Wandel ist im Himmel." "Wenn meine letzte Stunde schlägt." Karl Griesel (born Jan. 30, 1815), later prelate and court chaplain in Stuttgart, the most fruitful and popular religious poet of Germany now living. His collections of poems bear the poet names: "Pfauendrucker, Fischertum, Blumen, Sterne." "Es ist in keinem andern Heil," "Selbst erdenken, Tag des Herrs."

The works chiefly used in this sketch are the following:

German Psalters, [Psalters, German.]

German, St. [634-734.] One of the Greek hymn-writers, and one of the grandest among the defenders of the Icons. He was born at Constantinople of a patrician family; was ordained there; and became subsequently bishop of Cyzicus. He was present at the Synod of Constantinople in 712, which restored the Monothelito heresy; but in after years he condemned it. He composed a work against Constantinople in 713. In 730 he was driven from the see, not without blow, for refusing to yield to the Iconoclast Emperor Leo the Isaurian. He died shortly afterwards, at the age of one hundred years. His hymns are few. Dr. Neale selects his canon on The Wonder-working Image of Edessa as his most poetical piece (see Neale's Hymn of the Eastern Church, 1852, and later editions). The earliest biographical account of Germanus is found in Gib deinen Frieden uns, o Herr der Stunde. [The Peace of the Countess]

Includes as No. 48 in Knapp's Ps. 1877, in 6 st., of 4 l., without name of author; but in the 1850 ed., No. 159, ascribed to C. B. Garve. We have failed to discover any authority for this ascription, and the hymn is certainly neither in Garve's Christliche Gesänge, Görlitz, 1825, nor in his Brüdergesänge, Grondau, 1827. The only tr. is:—

Give us Thy blessed peace, God of all might!

A full and good version by Mrs. Findlater in the 4th series, 1862, of the H. L. L., p. 87 (1884, p. 248); repeated as No. 141 in Jellicoe's Coll., 1887.

Gibbons, Thomas, was b. at Reak, near Newmarket, May 31, 1720; educated by Dr. Taylor, at Deptford; ordained in 1742, as assistant to the Rev. Mr. Bures, at Silvert Street Chapel, London; and in 1743 became minister of the Independent Church, at Haberdashers' Hall, where he remained till his death, Feb. 22, 1783. In addition to his ministerial office he became, in 1754, tutor of the Dissenting Academy at Mile End, London; and, in 1759, Sunday evening lecturer at Monkwell Street. In 1779 the College at New Jersey, U.S., gave him the degree of M.A., and in 1784 of D.D. His prose works were: (1) Calvinism and Nonconformity defended, 1740; (2) Sermons on various subjects 1762; (3) Sermons 1767; (4) Female Worthies, 2 vols. 1777. Three vols. of sermons were pub. after his death. His poetical works were:—

1. Juvenilia: Poems on various subjects of Devotion and Virtue. This was published by subscription. Among the subscribers is found the name of the Rev. Mr. George Whitefield, e.e. It was dedicated to the Countess of Huntingdon, and bears her coat of arms. In this volume are included versions of six of the Psalms, and a few hymns. (2) Hymns adapted to Divine worship in two books. Book I. Derived from select passages of the Holy Scriptures. Book II. Written on sacred subjects and particular occasions, partly collected from various authors, but principally composed by Thomas Gibbons, D. D., 1789. (3) Hymns adapted to Divine worship in two books. Book I. Derived from select passages of the Holy Scriptures. Book II. Written on sacred subjects and particular occasions by Thomas Gibbons, D. D., 1784.

2. (The Sermons, pub. in 1782, included fifteen hymns, one being appended to each sermon. (5) The Christian Minister in three poetical epistles to Philander, 1772. This volume included (1) poetical versions of several parts of Scripture. (6) Translations of poems from Greek and Latin writers. (7) Original pieces on various occasions. (8) An English version of the Latin Epitaphs on the Nonconformist's Monument, with a paraphrase of the memory of the 3000 ministers ejected in 1662. 1775. (9) Select Portions of Scripture, and Remarkable Occurrences, weighed for the instruction and entertainment of Youth of both Sexes, 1787. Reprinted in America, 1865.

Dr. Gibbons may be called a disciple in hymn-writing of Dr. Watts, whose life he wrote. His hymns are not unlike those of the second rank of Watts. He lacked "the vision and faculty divine," which gives life to hymns and renders them of permanent value. Hence, although he is in C. U. in America, they are dying out of use in C. Britain. The most popular are: "Now let our souls on wings sublime": Great God, the nations of the earth; Thy goodness, Lord, our souls confess"; "To Thee, my God, whose presence fills".

[W. G. H.]

The least important of Dr. Gibbons's hymns, which are still in C. U. are:—

1. And be it so that till this hour. Hope. In his Hymns adapted to Divine Worship, &c., 1789, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Encouragement against Dispair; or, Hope still set before us." Originally a Sacramental hymn, in Rippon's Sel., 1787, No. 230, it was altered to a general hymn, with special reference to "Hope." [J. M.]

2. Assist us, Lord, Thy Name to praise. Life, a race. In Rippon's Sel., 1787, No. 236, in 4 st. of 4 l.

3. Eternal life, how sweet the sound. Eternal Life. This is one of three hymns on Titus iii. 7, in his Hymns adapted to Divine Worship, &c., 1784, Bk. I., No. 156, in 5 st. of 4 l. In the American Dutch Reformed Hymns of the Church, 1839, No. 443 begins with st. 11. "Eternal life, how will it reign?"

4. Father, is not Thy promise pledged! Missions. This is in III. of his hymn, "Great God, the nations of the earth." (q. v.)

5. Forgiveness, 'tis a joyful sound. Pardon. From his Hymns adapted to Divine Worship, &c., 1789, Bk. I., No. 69, in 5 st. of 4 l. into several modern collections in Europe and America. It is based on St. Luke, vii. 47.

6. From winter's barren clods. [Spring.] Appeared in his Hymns, &c., 1784, Bk. II., No. 37, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed, "The Return of the Spring celebrated in the Powerful and Gracious Work of God." In 1787 it was repeated anonymously in Rippon's Sel., 1787, No. 499. The hymn, "Great God, the nations of the earth," begins with st. 11 of this hymn.

8. On Zion, his most holy mount. Gospel Hymn. From his Hymns adapted to Divine Worship, &c., 1789, Bk. I., No. 35, in 6 st. of 4 l. It was originally a Sacramental hymn, but in its abbreviated form, as in use in America, that element is eliminated.

10. Thy goodness, Lord, our souls confess. Providence and Grace. Appeared in the Gospel Magazine, 1784, and in his Hymns adapted to Divine Worship, &c., 1784, Bk. II., No. 11, in 7 st. of 4 l. In Dobell's Sel., 1786, st. 1, verse 1, and v. 4, were given with alterations, which were not improvements, as No. 9. This arrangement is repeated in modern hymn-books, including the Baptist Hymnal, 1879, and others.

11. When Jesus dwelt in mortal clay. Jesus our Example. From his Hymns adapted to Divine Worship, &c., 1784, Bk. I., No. 126, in 9 st. of 4 l. into a few American collections, including the Baptist Praise Book, 1871.

The more important of Dr. Gibbons's hymns are annotated under their respective first lines. [W. T. B.]

Gilbert, Ann. [Taylor, A. & J.]

Giles, John Eustace, was born at Dartmouth in 1805, and educated for the ministry at the Baptist College, Bristol. After preaching for a short time at Haverfordwest, he became, in 1830, pastor of the church at Salters' Hall, London. Leaving Salters' Hall in 1836, he ministered successively at Leeds, Bristol, Sheffield, Rathmines (Dublin), and Clapham Common, London. He d. at Clapham Common, June 24, 1875. His prose works include A Funeral Sermon on the Death of Robert Hall; Lectures on Socialism, &c. From childhood he composed hymns and poetical pieces. In 1834, at the request of the Baptist Missionary Committee, he composed a hymn in celebration of negro emancipation, and No. 9. 16, & 24 in their Jubilee Coll. 1842.
The hymn by which he is best known is:

Hast thou not heard that Jesus! Holy Baptism (Adult). It is a composition of special merit, and in English Baptist congregations is often sung on Baptismal occasions as well as any other hymn.
It was written "during a serious illness, in 1836, and in anticipation of having to baptize several persons at Salter's Hall, London, on his recovery." (Singers and Songsm. 1849, p. 482.)
It was printed in 1840 in the Baptist No. 765 with the omission of st. ii. The full original text is in the Baptist Hymnal, 1840, p. 429. It is also in several other collections. [W. B. B.]

Gill, Thomas Hornblower, was b. at Bristol Road, Birmingham, Feb. 10th, 1819.
His parents belonged to English Presbyterian families, which, like many others, had become Unitarian in their doctrine. He was educated at King Edward's Grammar School under
Dr. Jeune, afterwards Bishop of Peterborough.
He left the school in 1838, and would have proceeded to the University of Oxford, but was prevented by his hereditary Unitarianism (long since given up), which forbade subscription to the Articles of the Church of England then necessary for entrance to the University. This constrained him to lead the life of an isolated student, in which he found solace chiefly to historical and theological subjects. Hence his life has been singularly devoid of outward incident; and its interest centers about his hymns, and the seasons of overmastering thought and feeling which gave them birth. The only events that can be chronicled are the publications of his books (see below). It is in the singular combination of influences which has formed his character and determined his thinking that the real interest of his life consists. Here is to find the true key to the understanding of his hymns. To his Puritan ancestry may be traced their deep religiousness; to his Unitarian training their ethical earnestness; and to his poetic temperament their freshness from conventionalism. Delight in the divine songs of Watts was his earliest intellectual enjoyment; and in after years the contrast between their native force and fulness and their dwindled presentation in Unitarian hymn-books began to estrangement from his hereditary faith which gradually became complete. These various influences mingled in his own mind and have conspired to render him what Dr. Freeman Clarke calls him, "a more intellectual Charles Wesley."
He belongs to the small company of really original hymnists. His hymns are marked by a remarkable absence of, and even opposition to all antiquarian and ascetical ideas of Christianity, a keen discrimination of the spirit rather than the mere letter of the Gospel; and profound thought on Scripture themes, so that his style, some of his hymns are too subtle for use in the ordinary worship of the Church. Their style is characterized by a certain quaintness of expression reminding one of George Wither or John Mason, but modified by the influence of Watts's warmth of feeling.
They have a great sweetness of melody, purity of diction, and happy adaptation of metre and style to the subject of each hymn. They are almost exclusively used by Nonconformists.
Bard's English Hymn, 1849, contains 39; the Baptist Hymnal, 1840; 11; Mar-

lineau's Hymn of Praise & Prayer, 11; and the Congregational Church Hymnal, 11. The following are Mr. Gill's published works:

1. The Passing of Faith, 1841.
2. The Anniversaries (Poems in commemoration of great Men and Great Events), 1844.
3. The Papal Drama (an historical essay), 1845.
5. The Author's Birth, 1848.
6. The Triumph of Christ (Memorials of Franklin Howard), 1863.

Mr. Gill's hymn number nearly 200. Of these, over 80 are in C.U. in G. Britain and America. The most widely used of these:

"Eternal love, never ceasing love, "mean earth, Lord, doth Thy dear praise;" "Thou biddest, Lord, Thy step be bold;" are annotated under their respective first lines, the rest are noted below.

The 75 hymns which follow are all noted from the author's notes, kindly supplied for use in the work:

1. At Movers, fasting and forlorn. Eternal Youth. Written in 1849, and 1st pub. in his Golden Chain, 1849, p. 9, in 6 st. of 4 l. In 1849
Martinson gave it 1 st., in his English Hymns, 146, as "Young souls, so strong the race to run." These were repeated in the Baptist Hymnal, 1879, as No. 82.

2. A new scene in life. Consolation of the Heart. Contributed to G. Dawson's, F.'s & Hys, 1849, No. 121, in 7 st. of 4 l. It was inserted in the

GILL, THOMAS H.

Gill, Thomas H., 1807-1863, was a British poet and hymn writer. He wrote many hymns and devotional works that were widely used in English-speaking countries. His work includes hymns such as 'Blest the Man' and 'O Lord, How Excellent are Thy Deeds.' Gill is known for his use of Scriptural language and his emphasis on the importance of faith and devotion. His works have been included in many hymnals and collections, and his influence can be seen in the development of English devotional literature.

These hymns are usually abridged in the hymn-books, the length of most of them against their use in their full form. Although they are gradually growing in popular esteem, the extent of their use is much more limited than their merits deserve.

Gilman, Caroline, née Howard, daughter of Samuel Howard, and wife of
S. Gilman (q.v.), was b. at Boston, Mass., 1794, and married to Dr. Gilman in 1819. After Dr. Gilman's death in 1838, she resided for a time at Cambridge, Mass., and returned to Tiverton, R. Island.

Gilman is the author of several tides, ballads, and poems, and of the following hymns:

1. Is there a lone and dreary hour! Contributed to Sewall's Unitarian Coll., N. York, 1829, in 4 st. of 4 l. In 1867 Mrs.

Gilman added a stanza thereto for the Charlestown Services & Hymns. The original hymn is in extensive use amongst the Unitarians in G.

2. We bless Thee for this sacred day. Sunday. Also contributed to Sewall's Coll., 1829, in 4 st. of 4 l, to which another was added by Mrs.

Gilman, for the Charlestown Services & Hymns, 1867. In extensive use.

Gilman, Samuel, b. at Gloucester, Massachusetts, Feb. 16, 1791; graduated at Harvard, 1811, and was a tutor there from 1817 to 1819. In 1819 he became the pastor of a Unitarian congregation at Charlestown, South Carolina, and retained the same to his death. He d. at Kingston, Mass., Feb. 1838. His hymns include:

1. O God, accept the sacred hour. Holy Communion. Contributed to Dr. Harris's Hys. for the Lord's Supper, July, 1829, reprinted in of this version we give as an example of both the metre and the rendering:—

2. "Praise Him both moon and sun,
Which are so clear and bright;
The same of you to shine,
Ye glimmering stars of light;
And you no less,
Ye heavens fair,
And clouds of th' air,
His land express."

The full text is difficult to find except in the Psalters appended to old editions of the Bible and Prayer Book. [Old Version, § 18.] [J. J.]

Give me the wings of faith to rise. I. Watts. [Heaven: All Saints.] 1st pub. in his H. & Spiritual Songs, 2nd ed., 1709, Bk. ii., No. 140, in 5 st. of 4 l., and entitled, "The Examples of Christ and the Saints." It is in extensive use in all English-speaking countries, and generally in its original form as in the H. Comp., No. 357. In Kennedy, 1825, the opening line reads:—"He me the wings of faith to rise," No. 1379. There are also other slight alterations in the text. [J. J.]

Give thanks to God the Sovereign Lord. [King.] I. Watts. [Ps. cxviii.] This c. m. version of Ps. 136 was pub. in his Ps. of David, &c., 1719, in 10 st. of 4 l., with the following note:—

"In every stanza of this Psalm I have endeavoured to imitate the Chorus or Burden of the Song, For His mercy endureth for ever, and yet to maintain a perpetual variety."

The systematic way in which this end is accomplished is sketched out in the title which he gave to his Paraphrase. It reads:—"God's Wonders of Creation, Providence, Redemption of Israel, and Salvation of his People." The form in which it is found in most modern collections, as in N. Cong., 1859, No. 226, and others, eliminates the reference to the "Re-deption of Israel," thus reducing the hymn to 6 st. The first line sometimes reads:—"Give thanks to God, the Sovereign King." [J. J.

Give to our God immortal praise. I. Watts. [Ps. cxviii.] This c. m. version of Ps. 136 appeared in his Ps. of David in 1719, in 8 st. of 4 l. In modern collections we find it given thus:

1. The original in the N. Cong., No. 227; Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., No. 136, and others; and in the Ps. H. & Hymn., 1859-62, No. 8, with st. 3, l. 1, "Israel" for "The Jews" of the original.

2. A canto composed of st. 1, 4, vii. and viii. This was given in Cotterill's Sel., 1819-19, and from thence has passed into numerous collections, including Wesley, S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hymn., and Stevenson's Hymns, for ch. & Home, amongst modern hymnals, with slight variations in the refrain. This is the most popular form of the hymn.

3. A canto combining st. 2, 5, 7, vii. and viii. This appeared in Conger's Coll., 1857, No. 7, amongst late hymnals the Leoda H. Bk., 1853, the Islington Ps. & Hymn., and Kemble's New Church H. Bk., and other collections. This form is also in use in America. [See Psalters, English, § xv.]

Glad sight, the Holy Church. [Holy Baptism.] The Syriac original of this hymn is sometimes attributed to Ephrem the Syrian (d. 378), but without sufficient authority. It is found in the Office for Baptism of the Church at Jerusalem. Daniel, iii. 226, in the portion devoted to Syriac hymnology—Carmina Eclesiae Syriacae curavit Ludovicus Sphieht—gives the Syriac text, and a Latin tr. by Sphieht, which reads:—

"Expando alas tuae sancta Ecclesia et simulicen

In 1682 the Rev. F. Pott contributed an article on "Hymnology" to the Quarterly Revieue (April, 1862), and gave therein a paraphrase in metre of the two Greek hymns in the beginning, "Gladiolus, the holy Church," in 9 st. of 4. Although previously included in his Hymns, &c., 1861, No. 356, in 7 st. of 4., this publication brought it into fuller notice, and it was added, in one form or another, to several hymn-books, including the People's H., 1867; the Appendix to H. A. & M., 1868; the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871; the Hymnary, 1876; and other collections in G.
Britain and America. The greatest deviation from the original tr. is in the Church Hymns.
The changes, however, were made with the translator's permission.

Gloria in Excelsis. The simple and original form of this hymn is contained in the song of the angels, given by St. Luke ii. 14,
"To thee, O God, the only-begotten Son of Jesus Christ, and Holy Spirit." This concluding clause, in the form given in the Roman Missal, is "Dumne Fili unigenite Jesu Christe," and in the English Prayer Book, "O Lord
the only-begotten Son of Jesus Christ, and to Thee, O God, the Holy Ghost." Its English translation, in glory Dei Patrias," and in the Prayer Book, "with the Holy Ghost art most high in the glory of the Father." This translation is of unknown and, comparatively modern, translations into English verse are all from the prose translation in the Book of Common Prayer. They include the following:

1. All glory be to God on high and peace on earth likewise, old Version. In J. Plowdon.
   1677. It is thereby "Glory to God on high, and peace on the Supplement to the New Version, 1700, and continued until the N. V. gave way to modern hymn-books.

2. Let glory be to God on high. Appeared American Andover Sabbath H. Bk., 1839, No. 176. Its authorship is unknown.

3. Glory in the highest. By Dr. Bonar in the Sunday at Home, 1816, p. 92.

In addition Mr. Chatfield has rendered the Greek text as in the
   Greek text as in the
   Brown's Prayer, C. I. 1771, into prose in his Songs
   & H. W. of theof the Earliest Greek Christian Poets 1876, p. 101. See also "Glory to God in the highest, and

This hymn has also been rendered into English as follows:

it from the Roscommon G. B., 1526, and, in High 1539. The well-known melody set to it in 1539 (H. A. & M., No. 104) is also ascribed to Decius, probably partly adapted from the Latin plainsong. Text and melody speedily became favourites in Germany; were used on high festival days, at Holy Communion, &c.; and to this day are everywhere in use. Luxmann, in viii. 104-111, relates many edifying incidents regarding them. In the U. C., 1851,

[Translations not in G. U.:

Gloria laus et honor. St. Theodulph of Orleans. [Palm Sunday.] That this hymn was written by st. Theodulph seems beyond all reasonable doubt. That it was written by him while imprisoned in the cloister, at Angers, about 829 or 821, is highly probable. Regarding its origin Chloitecu, in his Elucidatorum, 1516, p. 313, tells a pretty story to the following effect:

On Palm Sunday, 821, Louis the Pious, King of France, was at Angers and took part in the usual procession of the clergy and laity. As the procession passed the place where st. Theodulph was incarcerated, he stood at the open window of his cell, and amid the silence of the people, sung this hymn which he had not composed. The king was so much delighted with the hymn that he at once ordered st. Theodulph to be set at liberty and restored to his see; and ordained that henceforth the hymn should always be used in processions on Palm Sunday.

The story is not, however, a contemporary one; and moreover it seems clear that Louis the Pious was never in Angers after 818. It is also almost certain that st. Theodulph was never really restored to his see, but that he died at Angers in 821.

The ritual use of this hymn was always as a Processional on Palm Sunday. According to the Sarum use the first four stanzas were to be sung before leaving the church by seven boys "in loco incunctorti," near the south door. In the use of York the boys of the choir seem to have gone up to a temporary gallery over the door of the church and there sang the first four stanzas. After each of the first three stanzas the rest of the choir, kneeling below, sang st. 1. as a refrain. At the end of st. 4. the boys began the refrain and the rest of the choir, standing up, sang it along with them. In the Hereford use the procession went to the gates of the town. These being shut seven boys of the choir went to the summit and there sang the hymn. In the use of Tours and Rouen it was also sung at the gate of the city. According to the modern Roman use it is sung when the procession returns to the church; two or four singers entering the church, and when the door has been closed, facing it and singing the hymn while the rest outside repeat the chorus.

The hymn is founded on Ps. xxv. 7-10; Ps. cxvii. 25, 26; St. Matt. xxv. 1-17; and St. Luke xix. 37, 38. E. L. Dümmel, in his Poesis Sancti Petro Carolini, Berlin, 1877, vol. i. p. 558, gives the full text in 78 lines. In the liturgical books II. 1-36 only are given (so in the Paris MS., 18557, of the 10th cent. cited by Dümmel; and in the British Museum MS. Add. 17678, f. 36 b, of the 11th cent.) while in the Graduals and Missals the almost universal use was to give only II. 1-12. This is the form in a St. Gall MS. (No. 899) of the 9th cent. cited by Dümmel, and it is the form in English C. U. as in H. A. & M. The text is also found in an 11th cent. MS. in the British Museum (Harl. 4591, f. 196 b); in two 11th cent. MSs. in the Bollean (Liturg. Misc. 320, f. 18 b.; Liturg. Misc. 366, f. 18); in Daniel, i. No. 190, with notes at iv. p. 153; in Blasser, No. 99; in Dr. J. Kayser's Beiträge zur Geschichte und Erklärung der alten Kirchenhymnen, vol. ii., 1886, pp. 313-322, &c.

Translators in C. U.:
1. Glory and praise to Thee, Redeemer blest. By E. Caswall. 1st pub. in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 232, in 5 st., with the repetition of the first two lines of the hymn as a refrain. It was also repeated in his Hymn. & Anthems, 1873, p. 121. It is found in several collections, including Kennedy, 1863, where it is altered and begins, "All glory be to Thee, Redeemer blest." The English Hymnal, 1865 text, is also considerably altered, although the first line is retained.

2. King and Redeemer! to Thee be the glory. By G. Rerson. 1st pub. in his Hymn. & Anthems, 1851.

4. Glory, and laud, and honour. By J. M. Neale. This is a second tr. By Dr. Neale, made for and pub. in the H. N-tol, 1853, in 8 st. of 4 l., but supplied a little earlier to the Salisbury H. Bk., 1857, in a slightly different form. In this form it is found in a few collections, but as:

5. All glory, laud, and honour, as altered by the compilers of H. A. & M. for their trial copy. 1859, No. 59, in 8 st. of 4 l., it is most widely known in all English-speaking countries. Dr. Neale approved of this arrangement, especially of the opening line, and adds in his note (Med. Hymns):

"Another verse was usually sung, till the 19th century, at the pious quintessence of which we can scarcely avoid a smile:"

* Be Thou, O Lord, the Rider,
And we the little sea;
That to God's holy city
Together we may pass."

6. Glory, laud, and honour be, Our Redeemer Christ to Thee. By W. J. Blew, in The Church Hymns & Tunes Bk., 1862-65, in 7 st. of 4 l., and in Rice's Select. therefrom, 1870, No. 46. In the Scottish Episco. Coll. of Hymns, &c., 1858, it was given in 4 st. as, "Glory, praise, and honour be.

7. To Thee be glory, honour, praise. Appeared in the Irvingite Hymns. For the Use of the Churchers, 1864, No. 35, as a "Tr. by C., 1861." It is repeated in the ed. of 1871, and in the American Dutch Reformed Hymns. of the Churchers, N. Y., 1899.

8. Glory, praise, and honour be, Jesus, Lord and King. Given anonymously in Dale's English H. Bk., 1874, No. 255, in 4 st. of 4 l. It is a paraphrase, and not a tr. of the original.

Another tr. is:

* Glory, praise, and honour be, Christ, Redeemer, &c.
J. W. Hewett. 1859.

GLORIA PATRI

Gloriosi Salvatoris. [Holy Name of Jesus] This anonymous hymn, possibly of the 13th cent., is given from the Meissen Breviary, cit. 1310, in Daniel, i. No. 449, in 6 st. of 3 double lines, and headed, "In festō S. Nominis Jesu." Dr. Neale's text, in 7 st. of 4 lines, is given in his Hymni Ecclesiae, 1851, p. 163, from the Liege Breviary. In his Mediaeval Hymns, 1851, he claims for his tr. that it was the first rendering into English, and says concerning the original, "A German hymn on the Feast of the Holy Name of Jesus." All that can be said of its date is, that it is clearly posterior to the Pange Lingua of St. Thomas, which it imitates." [W. A. S.]

Translations in C. U.:—
1. To the Name that brings salvation. By J. M. Neale. Appeared in his Mediaeval Hymns, 1st ed. 1851, p. 142, in 6 st. of 6 lines, and again in later editions. It is included, sometimes abbreviated, in the Scottish Ps. H. Bk., 1858; the Parish Ps. H. Bk., 1883-75; the People's H. Bk., 1867; the Hymnary, 1872, and others. In the American Hymns & Songs of Praise, New York, 1874, it is abridged 164 st. lines, and begins, "Jesus is the Name we treasure." Another arrangement, beginning, "Sure is the Name of Jesus," is in the Hymns for the Chapel of Harvard School, 1857.
2. To the Name of our triumphant Saviour. By R. C. Singleton, written and pub. in his Anglican H. Bk., 1868.
3. To the Name that speaks salvation. By J. Ellerton, made for and pub. in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymn, 1871.

The glory of the Saviour's Name. D. T. Morgan, 1836.

Gloriosum in Thalae saeptores. [Holiness desired.]. A cento in 2 st. of 4 st. lines, which appeared in Hodge & Huntington's Unitarian Hymns, for the Ch. of Christ, Boston, U.S.A., 1833, No. 64; H. W. Beecher's Plymouth Coll., 1834, No. 95, &c. It is from an anonymous hymn beginning "Abba Father, God of love," in 6 st. of 4 lines, in Hymns for Pub. Worship on the General Principles of Natural and Revealed Religion, Salisbury, 1778, and commences with st. 1, iii. This collection is known to the American Unitarian collections as the Salisbury Coll. [W. T. B.]

Glorious things of Thee are spoken.

J. Newton. [Church of Christ.] 1st pub. in 1774, and entitled, "Zion, or the City of great popularity."

T. N., 20. 21. It has attained to wide, and ranks in all English-speaking countries. It is used, however, in various forms as follows:
1. Original text in Spee's Holy Trinity, 16th cent., and v. 1 st. 1st. and v.

In Cotterill's Selection, 1810, from whence it has passed to a profusion of collections. It is by far the most popular arrangement of the hymn in use, and may be found in fifty or more hymnals, as in H. Comp., and sometimes with Cotterill's slight alterations, as in the Rev. F. Pott's Hymns, &c. 1837, p. 67.

3. A cento composed of st. 1, 3rd and v., given in N. S. C. K. Hymns, 1852, not popular.

4. A cento, in 4 st., of 4 lines, beginning, "Glorious things of old," is given in Isaac M. Smith's H. Bk., 1855-7? It is thus composed: st. 1, Newton altered; st. 2, 3rd, and v., Newton altered; st. 2, Newton altered; st. 2, Newton altered; st. 3, Newton altered; st. 4, Newton altered. This is the least successful arrangement.

6. The whole hymn revised by J. Keble for the St. Albans Ps. Bk., 1857, and included, as in st. 1., v., with the four-line doxology from Benson, with slight return to the original in two places (st. 3., v.), and the omission of the doxology, was repeated in the St. Alban's Hymnal (broken into two parts, pt. ii.), being thus: "Blessed is the holy nation, 1879; and cento therefrom again altered, in 8 st. of 4 lines, in T. Huxley's Hymns, &c., ed. note. Another cento, also with alterations, is given in the Hymnary, from which it passed into the New Milver Hymnal, 1875.

7. Cento of st. 1., ll, iv, v., unaltered as in the Praise Hymnal, Thriving's Coll. and others.
8. In the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, st. 1-4v., with slight alterations in st. 1., ii, and iii.

In the American collections the same diversity of use prevails as in G. Britain. Sometimes the hymn is broken into two parts, with pt. ii. beginning, "Beat inhabitants of Zion." In addition other arrangements of minor importance are given in collections of less importance; but in most cases the original text is maintained. Stanza 1., ii, v., have been rendered in by the Rev. R. Bingham, and included in his Hymns in the Church, Latin, 1871, "Dixit Deus et miranda."

Glory and thanks to God we give, C. Wesley. [Thanksgiving.] The circumstances which gave rise to this hymn are related in C. Wesley's Journal. On his third visit to he met the Society on March 14, 1744, in an old upper room, which was densely packed, and crowds could not gain admission. He removed near the door of those without might hear, and drew the people towards him. Instantly the rafters broke, the roof fell in and the people fell, amidst dust and ruins, into the room below. Several were severely injured, but none were killed. C. Wesley himself escaped with injuries. "I lifted up my head," he said, "and saw the people under me, leaped upon heaps. I cried out, 'Fear not, the Lord is with us; our lives are all secure,' and then gave out, 'Praise God from whom all blessings flow.'" (Stevenson's Methodist H. Bk., 1883, p. 65. and C. Wesley's Journal.)

The hymn, in 12 st. of 4 lines, was given in Hymns & Sacred Poems, 1749, vol. ii., No. 174, and headed, "After a deliverance from death and the fall of an house." In J. Wesley's corrected edition of the Hymns & Sacred Poems, he has changed "house" to horse, but Dr. Osborn (P. Workes, 1868-72, vol. p. 381), adds that "on the whole, the reading of the first and second editions [house] seems preferable." In its original form it was unsuitable for congregational use.

In 1780, in st. vi, iv, xii., were given in Wes. H. Bk., No. 56, as one of the hymns of the Church. "Describing Judgment": "The great day of the Lord is coming, a trumpet sound." It has passed into several collections in G. Britain and America. It forms a striking hymn for "Advent," and displays great power in word painting. [J. J.]

Glory be to God on high, God Whose glory fills the sky. C. Wesley. [Hymn Trinity.] This is a paraphrase of the Gloria in Excelsis of the Book of Common Prayer. The paraphrase is in J. & C. Wesley's Hymns. & Sacred Poems, 1739, p. 128. In 1761 it was republished by J. Wesley in his Coll. of 132 Select Hymns with Tunes Annexed, but was not added to the Ws. H. Bk. till sometime after his death, and probably in 1800-1, although it had long been in use in the collections of Whitefield, Madan, Toplady, and others. In 1826 Cotterill included an altered and abridged version of the text in his Selection. In this, st. i.-iii. are altered slightly, st. iv. greatly, and st. v. is new. This version, again altered, and abridged, is found in the S. F. C. E. P. & Hymn., and other collections. (Orig. text, P. Works, 1808-72, vol. i. p. 113.) Another hymn, sung with the first stanza of this hymn, with the repetition of lines 1, 2, as a refrain, and the addition of 4 stanzas with the same refrain to each, was given in Beard's Manchester Unitarian Coll. 1837, and repeated without the refrain in Hedge & Huntington's Hymns for the Ch. of Christ, Boston, U. S. A., 1853, No. 12, and also in other American collections. The additions to C. Wesley's opening stanza were by John Taylor of Norwich.

 Glory be to God high! Praise on earth, &c. J. S. B. Moncrief. [Christmas.] Appeared in his Hymns of Love and Praise, 1863, p. 23, as the second hymn for Christmas, in 4 st. of 8 l., and repeated in his Parish Hymn, 1873, No. 17. It is also given in Porter's Churchman's Hymn, 1876, and others. In Stepp's Songs of G. & G., 1872, it begins with st. ii., "We were lost, but we are found."

 Glory be to God the Father. H. Bonar. [Praise.] Pub. in his Hymns of Faith and Hope, 3rd series, 1867, in 4 st. of 6 l., and entitled "Praise." It is included in several collections in G. Britain and America, in its original form. In the Suppl. to the N. Cong. 1874, and that to the Bap. Ps. & Hymn. 1880, the stanzas are transposed, iii., iv., v., vi., and the hymn begins, "Glory be to Him Who loved us." The last stanza is sometimes used as a doxology distinct from the hymn itself.

 Glory to God, and praise and love. C. Wesley. [Praise for Salvation.] Written by C. Wesley on the first anniversary of the great spiritual change which he underwent on Sunday, May 21, 1738, details of which are given under that date in his Journal. In 1740 it was included in Hymns. & Sacred Poems, in 18 st. of 4 l., and headed, "For the Anniversary Day of one's Conversion." (P. Works, 1808-72, vol. i. p. 219.) One of the first to make use of the hymn for congregational purposes was R. Conyers, who gave a cento therefrom in his Ps. & Hymn., 1767, beginning, "O for a thousand tongues to sing," and consisting of st. vii., ix., xii. This was followed by other centos (all beginning with the same stanza), in the collections of De Gury, 1773; Toplady 1776; and many others. The most widely known cento is that by J. Wesley, in the Ws. H. Bk., 1780, No. 1, in 10 st., "O for a thousand tongues to sing." This is not only the opening hymn of the Ws. H. Bk., but also of most collections of the Methodist bodies in all English-speaking countries. To this cause much of its popularity may be traced. Stevenson's annotations thereon in his Methodist H.

The use of this hymn in various forms is very extensive in G. Britain and America. The forms of the text which are most popular are:

1. The original in an abbreviated form, and sometimes with slight verbal alterations as in Dr. Hatfield's Church H. Bk. N. Y. 1872, No. 257.

Glory to God on high, Let praises fill, &c. James Allen. [Praise to Jesus.] In the Appendix to the Kendal Hymn Book, pub. with the 2nd ed., in 1761, and of which Allen was the principal editor, this hymn appeared as follows:

"Worthy the Lamb."
"Glory to God on high."
Let praises fill the sky.
Praise ye his name.
Angels his name adore.
Who all our sorrows bore.
And saints cry evermore.
Worthy the Lamb.
All they around the throne
Cheerfully join in song.
Praising his name.
We who have felt his blood,
Sealing our peace with God,
Spread his dear name abroad—
Worthy the Lamb.
To Him our hearts we raise—
None else shall have our praise;
Praise ye his name.
Him our exalted Lord,
By us below adored,
We praise with one accord—
Worthy the Lamb.
If we should build our peace,
Stones would cry out space;
Praise ye his name.
Love does our souls inspire
With heavenly, pure desire,
And set us all on fire—
Worthy the Lamb.
Join all the human race,
Our Lord and God to bless;
Praise ye his name.
In Him we will rejoice,
Making a cheerful noise,
And say with heart and voice,
Worthy the Lamb.
Though we must change our place,
Our souls shall never cease
Praising his name.
To Him we'll give thanks,
Land Him, our gracious King,
And without ceasing sing,
Worthy the Lamb.
"Glory to God on high!"
Let hark's, and earth reply,
Praise ye his name!
Angels his love adore.
Who all our sorrows bore.
And saints cry evermore.
Worthy the Lamb!"
GLORY TO GOD, THE

This text, in 4 st., was repeated in Burder's Col. 1784, No. 4; in Williams & Boden, 1841, where it is attributed to Burder's Col.; in the Bapt. Ps. & Hym., 1856-60, and many others.

A version was given in Rippon's Sel., 1871, No. 367, in 4 st., beginning:

"Glorv to God on high!
Let earth and heaven reply;
Praise be his name;
His love and grace adore;
Worship the Lamb!

This version of the hymn is given in several modern collections, either abbreviated, or in full, as in Kemble's Church Bk. (Bk.), 1873; in the New young, 1868, etc.

The hymn is also found in the Oxford ed. of Mercer's Ch. Psalter & H. Bk., 1848 (Nos. 557-561) and given beginning separately as:

"Glorv to God on high!
Let earth to heaven reply;
Worship the Lamb!
Let mortal tongue awake," etc.

The glory of the Lord was given in this way, as it is in the text of many other hymns, and the last two lines are repeated in various forms:

"Worship the Lamb!"

Gmelin, Sigmund Christian, was b. March 15, 1679, at Pfuhlau in Wurttemberg. After studying at the University of Tübingen, where he graduated in 1687 and became licentiate in 1700, he was in 1703 appointed assistant pastor at Herrenberg. He was associated with the Separatists; denounced the Church as worldly and as retaining a mere outward profession; objected to infant baptism, and departed from the views of the Church on the intermediate state, on the resurrection of the millennial reign, and on the recognition of all things. For these teachings he was deposed in 1706. After living for a time at Dörnbach, near Calw, he retired to Wurzburg, and finally to Schwarzenau, near Berleberg.

He d. Oct. 12, 1707, probably at Schwarscau.
The only hymn by him in English is:

Auch treib aus meiner Bude! [Watchfulness.]

Included as No. 21 in the Annuthiger Blumenkrantz, 1712, in 21 st. of 6 lines, and repeated as No. 231 in the Herrnhut G. B., 1738, omitting st. xx. In full as No. 1101 in Schöber's Liederzygon, 1768. The only tr. in C. U. is:

O Thou who all things canst control, a tr. in L. M. of st. i. iv. by J. Wesley, in H. and Soc. Poems, 1739 (P. Works, 1688-72, vol. i. p. 12).

It was not included in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780; but was given, as No. 130, in Wesley's Pocket H. Bk., 1785. In England st. i. ii. were included as No. 323 in Ps. & Hys., 1854 (Colonial Ch. & S. Society), and st. i. ii. iii. as No. 467, in Martin's H. of Praise & Prayer, 1873. In America st. i. ii. iv. v. vi. as No. 148, in the Christian Lyre, 1830, and repeated in the Methodist Episcopal South Coll., 1847; the Unitarian Book of Hymns, 1846; and Boardman's Coll., 1861. Stanza i. v. were also included in the Met. Epis. Coll., 1849, and the Evangel. Association H. Bk., 1882; st. i. ii. in the Unitarian Unitarian H. Bk., 1889; and st. i. ii. iii. v. vi. with a st. from iii. ii. i. 3. 4. and v. ii. 3. 4, in the Pennsylvania Luth. Ch. Bk., 1888.

[ J. M.]

Go forward, Christian soldier. L. Tuttiett. [Confirmation.] 1st pub. in his Counsels of a Godfather, 1861, in 8 st. of 4 l. and based upon Exod. xiv. 15. In 1867 it was included in the Appendix to Morrell & How's Ps. & Hys., and from that date it has gradually increased in popularity until it has become in Great Britain and in America the most widely used of the author's hymns. Orig. text in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871. [J. J.]

Go forward in your course. H. Alford. [Confirmation.] Written in 1835, and 1st pub. in his Hymns for the Sundays and Festivals throughout the Year, 1836, in 7 st. of 4 l. (see his Life). In 1844 it was included in his Ps. & Hys., and in 1867, in his Year of Praise. In its full, or in an abbreviated form, it is given in numerous hymns in Great Britain, New Zealand, and America. [J. J.]

Go, labour on, spend and be spent. H. Bonar. [Missions.] "Written in 1845, and printed at Kelso in a small booklet of three or four hymns." In 1845 it was included in Dr. Bonar's Songs for the Wilderness, in 8 st. of 4 l., and entitled "Labour for Christ." In 1857 it was repeated in his Hys. of Faith & Hope, 1st series, in 8 st. of 4 l., and entitled "The Useful Life," with the motto "\(\psi \varphi \chi \psi \mu \nu \omega \ldots \mu \nu \omega \ldots \)." Ararath in Ith. 19. 198. Previous to this, however, it had been brought into C. U. through the Leeds H. Bk., 1853, No. 604. In the Suppl. to the New Cong., 1869, No. 1157, it is divided into two parts, Pt. ii. being st. viii-viiii, "Go, labour on while it is day." This arrangement is also found in other collections, sometimes as, "Go, labour on while yet 'tis day." This second part is in somewhat extensive use in America as a separate hymn. In the American Sabbath H. Bk., 1858, No. 789, st. iv. vii-viii. are given as, "Go, labour on; your hands are weak." and in Holy Song, 1869, No. 332, st. i. ii. vii. and viii. very much altered, as, "Go forth to toil; to spend, be spent." This last arrangement is too wretched to be associated with Dr. Bonar's name. [J. J.]

Go, messenger of peace and love. W. Balfour. [Departure of a Missionary.] This hymn appeared in the Bap. New Selection, 1828, No. 361, in 10 st. of 4 l., with the signature of "Balfour." In the revised and enlarged ed., 1858, it retained the same signature, but in the Bap. Ps. & Hys., revised ed., 1871 and 1880, it was reduced to 6 st. and the signature was expanded into "Alexander Balfour, 1828." Beyond this no definite information has been obtained. Its use is limited. [J. J.]

Go not far from me, O my [God] Strength. Anna L. Waring. [Resignation.] Appeared in her Hys. & Meditations, 4th ed., 1854, in 14 st. of 6 l. and based upon Ps. liii. 7, 8 (10th ed. 1870, No. 26). Various versions, mostly beginning with st. i., are in C. U. in Great Britain and America. The opening line in Martin's Hys. of Praise & Prayer, 1873, is, "Go not far from me, O my God." In Kennedy, 1833, No. 294, the cento begins with st. vii., "How blessed are the eyes that see." [J. J.]

Go to dark Gethsemane. J. Montgomery. [Passiontide.] Of this popular hymn there are two texts, differing widely from each other, and both by Montgomery. The first appeared in Cotterill's Selection, 1820, and subsequent editions. It reads thus:

1. "Go to dark Gethsemane,

Ye that feel the tempter's power;
Your Redeemer's conflict see;
Watch with Him one bitter hour;
Turn not from His grieve away;
Learn from Him to watch and pray.

2. "See Him at the judgment-hall,

Beaten, bound, reviled, arraigned;
See Him meekly bearing all,
Love to man His soul sustain'd;
Shun not suffering, shame or loss;
Learn of Christ to bear the cross.

3. "Calvary's mournful mountain view,

There the Lord of glory saw,
Made a sacrifice for you,
Dying on the accursed tree;
It is finished, hear Him cry;
Trust in Christ, and learn to die.

4. "Early to the tomb repair,

Where they laid His breathless clay;
Angels kept its vigil there;
Who hath taken Him away?
Christ is risen! He seeks the skies;
Saviour: teach us so to rise."

In 1825, Montgomery included this hymn in his second and revised form in his Christian Psalmist, No. 491, as follows:

1. "Go to dark Gethsemane,

Ye that feel the tempter's power;
Your Redeemer's conflict see;
Watch with Him one bitter hour;
Turn not from His grieve away;
Learn of Jesus Christ to pray.

2. "Follow to the judgment-hall,

View the Lord of glory's grief;
O the wormwood and the gall;
O the pangs His soul sustain'd;
Shun not suffering, shame or loss;
Learn of Jesus Christ to bear the cross.

3. "Calvary's mournful mountain climb;

There adoring at his feet,
Mark that miracle of time,
-God's own sacrifice complete;
It is finished, hear His cry;
Learn of Jesus Christ to die."
to bring this hymn into C. U. was Dr. Martineau, in his Hymns, &c., 1849. Its use in America is more extensive than in G. Britain.

Goadby, Frederic William, M.A., of the Rev. Joseph Goodby, General Baptist Minister, was b. at Leicester, Aug. 10, 1845, and educated for the Baptist Ministry at Regent's Park College. He also graduated M.A. at the London University in 1868. In 1868 he became pastor of the Baptist Church at Blintenham, Hunts, and in 1876, of that of Watford, where, after a brief ministry of great promise, he d. Oct. 15, 1880. Besides contributing to periodical literature, Mr. Goadby wrote the following hymns:

1. A crowd fills the court of the temple. Palm Sunday.

2. O Lord, the children come to Thee. A Child.

3. O Thou, Whose hand has brought us. Opening of Place of Worship.

Of these hymns Nos. 1, 2, are in a few collections, including Stevenson's School Hymnal, 1880, and No. 3 in the Baptist Hymnal, 1879.

Goadby, Thomas, an elder brother of the preceding, was b. at Leicester, Dec. 23, 1829. He studied for the ministry at the Baptist College, Leicester, and at Glasgow University, where he graduated B.A. in 1856; was successively pastor of Baptist churches in Coventry, London, and Derby. In 1873 he was appointed President of Chivewell College, now the "Nottingham Baptist College." Mr. Goadby has contributed many papers to newspapers, reviews, and other periodicals, has pub. several sermons and addresses delivered on public occasions from 1860 to 1881. In 1884 he pub. Revelation, Its Nature and First Record, translated from the German of Ewald. His compositions in verse are a short poem, entitled The Day of Death, 1863, and hymns, chiefly prepared for anniversary occasions. None of these are in Stevenson's School Hymnal, London, 1880. The most widely known is "When the day of life is dawning, come, come to Me." No. 140 is a fine centennial hymn, "O God, Who art through all the years, for evermore." No. 311, "Forward, Gospel heralds," is a stirring missionary hymn, its refrain being evidently suggested by Dean Alford's well-known verses, "Forward be our watchword." The 9 hymns and their subjects are :—

5. O God, Who art through all the years, Pray to the Father.
8. Shepherd of Israel, Jesus our Saviour. The Good Shepherd.
9. When the day of life is dawning. Invitation by Christ.

God and Father, great and holy. F. W. Farrar. [God is Love.] Written in 1853, and included in the Savoy Hymnary (Chapel Royal), about 1869, in 3 st. of 4 l., from whence it has passed into various collections, including the Westminster Abbey Bk., 1883, and others. In the American Unitarian Hymns. of the Spirit, 1864, it begins, "Lord and Father, great and holy."
God hath two families of love. J. M. Neate. [Evening.] 1st pub. as an “Evening Hymn” in his Hymns for Children, 1st series, 1812, No. xiv., in 7 st. of 4 l., the doxology being Bishop Ken’s “Praise God from whom,” &c. The form in which it appeared in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns has been adopted for “the correction of the popular error that the faithful departed are now reigning in heaven” (Ellerton’s Notes on Church Hymns, 1881). The alterations made on this account in the Church Hymn text are so many and important that practically the hymn in form and in doctrine, it is almost a new hymn. Most of these changes are due to the compilers of that collection. The original is also in C. U. in Great Britain and America.

God in heaven His glory hides. J. Gabb. [Praise in heaven and earth.] 1st pub. in his Steps to the Throne, &c., 1864, in 5 st. of 4 l., and entitled, “Grace and Glory.” In its original form it is unknown to the hymnals in common use, but it has been rewritten by the author in two forms:— (1) “God His perfect glory hides,” given in his Hymns and Songs, &c., 1877, p. 105, and repeated in the English Sacred Songster, 1873. (2) “God in heaven His glory hides,” in his Welborn Appendix, 1875, No. 106, to the author’s tune, “Trentham.”

God in His temple let us meet. J. Montgomery. [Ps. cxviii.] Appeared in Cotterill’s Selection, 1819, p. 74, in 4 st. of 8 l. In the revised ed. of 1820, lines 1-12 were given instead of the full text of the previous ed., thus making a hymn in 3 st. of 4 l. This was repeated in Montgomery’s Songs of Zion, 1822, as No. 1 of Ps. 132, and the rest of the Cotterill text of 1819 as No. 2, beginning “Lord, for Thy servant David’s sake.” Pt. 1 was also included in his Original Hymns, 1858, No. 101. Both parts are in C. U. as separate hymns, but the first is found in the greater number of hymn-books.

God, in the Gospel of His Son. R. Beddome. [The Gospel.] Appeared in Rippon’s Bap. Sel., 1787, No. 34, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed, “The Gospel of Christ.” It was also included in Robert Hall’s posthumous edition of Beddome’s Hymns, 1817. Its use, especially in America, is very extensive, but sometimes in an abbreviated form.

God is a [the] Name my soul adores. I. Watts. [God the Creator.] Appeared in his Hymn Lyric, 1706, in 8 st. of 4 l., and entitled, “The Creator and Creatures.” It is also in Watts’s Works of various dates. Two or three centers from this hymn are in C. U., all commencing with st. 1, one of which is that in Toplady’s Ps. & Hymns, 1776, No. 170. Dr. Martineau’s cento in his Hymns, &c., 1840, and Hymns of Praise & Prayer, 1873, is composed of st. 1, ii., iv., v., vi., vii., viii. In some of the American collections the opening line begins, “God is the Name,” &c., as in the Plymouth Coll., 1853, and others.

God is gone up with a merry noise. Bp. R. Heber. [Ascension.] Pub. in his posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, in 4 st. of 4 l., as the second of three hymns for Easter Day, its appropriateness to Ascension-tide, rather than Easter-day, has led to its adoption, in some cases, for the Ascension. It is one of the least known of Heber’s hymns, and is only adopted by Kennedy and a few others.

God is our refuge and strength. H. Alford. [Ps. xlvii.] 1st pub. in the British Magazine, Dec., 1832, in 7 st. of 4 l., and signed †. In 1833 it was reprinted in his anonymous Poems and Poetical Fragments. When given in his Ps. & Hymns, 1844, p. 75, st. iv.-vi. were omitted. The text of the Hymn is:
GOD IS OUR REFUGE, EVER

of the Spirit, Boston, U. S. A., 1864, No. 310, is from the original.

W. T. B.

GOD is our Refuge, ever near. J. Conder. [Ps. 31.] Appeared in his Cong. H. Bk., 1869, No. 408, in 8 of 71. When repeated in his work, The Choir and The Odeology, in the following year (Preface, Nov. 8, 1886), 16 lines were added thereto, but in another metre. These lines were omitted in his Hymns of Praise, Prayer, &c., 1886, p. 11, and also from all modern hymnals. Orig. text in New Cong., 1839, No. 61. [J. J.]

GOD is the Refuge of His saints. I. Watts [Ps. 91.] Appeared in his Ps. of David, &c., 1719, in 4 of 4, and headed, "The Church's Safety and Triumph over National Desolation." It has passed in full, in an abbreviated form, into numerous collections in all English-speaking countries. In the Unitarian Hymn [1st Tune] Bk., Boston, U.S.A., 1838, its v. vi. vi, are given as No. 345, "There is a stream, whose gentle flow." [J. J.]

God made all his creatures free. J. Montgomery. [Freedom.] This hymn is No. iv. of his "Songs on the Abolition of Negro Slavery, in the British Colonies, Aug. 1, 1831." It is in 6 of 4, and entitled, "Slavery that is not," which "Songs" were pub. in his Poets Portfolio, 1835. As given in Long's fellow and Johnson's Unitarian Bk. of Hymns, 1849, and other American collections, it is composed of st. i. ii. iii. vii. v., slightly altered. We do not in C. U. in G. Britain. [J. J.]

God moves in a mysterious way. W. Cooper. [Providence.] The commonly accepted history of this hymn is that it was composed by Cowper in 1773, after an attempt to commit suicide by drowning in the Ouse at Olney. In the Memoirs of Cowper by Hayley, and by Southey, it is also in that of J. Newton, by Bull, there are painful details of his insanity in 1773. In Southey there is a distinct statement to the effect that his mania was suicidal, and that he made an attempt upon his life in October, 1773. Southey says (1833, vol. i. p. 174):—

"In the new character which his delirium had assumed (that was the will of God that he should end his life) the same perfect spirit of submissiveness was manifested. Mr. Newton says: 'Even that attempt was a proof of it, for it was solely owing to the power the enemy had of controlling that imagination that it was the will of God he should act after the example of Abraham, perform an act of obedience, and offer, not a son, but himself' (May 25, 1774)."

This is conclusive as to the intended suicide; but there is no indication in the Memoirs that after his attack he wrote anything whatever until about April, 1774. Of this period Southey says:—

"His mind, though possessed by its fatal delusion, had recovered in some degree its activity, and in some degree of its own unhappiness, and the composition of his own unhappy state." (1833, vol. i. p. 171.)

To our mind it is evident that Cowper must have composed this hymn, either early in 1773, before his insanity became so intense as to lead him to attempt suicide in the October of that year, or else in April of 1774, when "he used to compose lines descriptive of his own unhappy state." Of those dates the latter is the more probable of the two, and neither will agree with the popular account of the origin of the hymn. In its publication appears with this date, as it appeared in J. Newton's Twenty-six Letters on Religious Subjects; to which are added Hymns, &c., by Omicron, London, 1774.

The actual date is fixed by Newton. He says:—

"In Omicron's Letters... it is in 6 of 4, I., entitled "Light shining out of Darkness," and is unsigned. It was also in the July number of the Gospel Magazine for 1774 (p. 307), in the same form and with the same title; but in this instance it is signed "J. W." I find it also in F. Cowper's Coll. of Hymns of the same year, in the same form and with the same title, but without signature. It appears again in the Gospel Magazine, Dec., 1777, p. 553, at the end of a letter "On Affliction." This is the title also in this case the st. ii. is omitted; the eight lines of st. iii. and iv. are rearranged; a slight change is made in st. vi., and the following is added:—

"When midnight shades are all withdrawn
The opening day shall rise
We are ever calm and cloudless morn
Shall know no lowering skies.""

This uncertainty about the authorship of this hymn was set at rest in 1779, when J. Newton gave the original text and title from Omicron's Letters in the Obey Hymn, Bk. iii., No. 15, and signed it "C." From the time it gradually grew in importance and interest, until it has become one of the most widely known hymns in English-speaking countries. It has also been translated into several languages, including Latin, by R. Bingham in his Hymno. Christi. Lut. 1771, as "Secretis miranda via operis omnium." And also Macgill in his Songs of the Christian Creed and Life, 1876, as "Deus mundum, etc. molitum." Montgomerie's estimate of this hymn is very high. He says of it, "It is a lyric of high tone and character, and rendered awfully interesting by the circumstances under which it was written—in the twilight of departing reason" (The Christian Poet, 1823, Preface).

Montgomerie evidently thought the hymn was composed before the fall of Jacob and behind of 1773.

[J. J.]

God of all consolation, take. C. Wesley. [Parting of Friends.] This is the last of his Hymns for those that Seek, and those that Have Redemption, &c., 1747, No. liti., in 8 double st. of 4 1. (P. Works, 1808-72, vol. iv. p. 238). In 1780, a cento in 12 st. beginning with st. i. was given in the Wes. H. Bk., an. No. 329 (new ed. 1875, 537), and has been repeated in most of the Methodist collections.

Several interesting "associations" of this hymn are given in Stevenson's Meth. H. Bk., Notes, 1883. In Cotterill's Sel., 6th ed., 1815, and subsequent editions, the hymn:

"NET unto us, but Thee, O Lord:
Be praise and glory given," &c., appeared in 4 st. of 4 1., and headed, "The Saints kept by the power of God."

God of all power, and truth, and grace. C. Wesley. [Holiness desired.] Pub. in Hgs. & Sac. Poems, 1742, in 28 st. of 4 l., based on Ezek. xxxvi. 13, &c., and headed, "Pleading the Promise of Sanctification" (P. Works, 1668-72 vol. ii. p. 319). It was also appended to J. Wesley's Sermon No. 19, and to J. Fletcher's Last Check to Antinomianism. It deals with the doctrine of Sanctification from the Methodist point of view. From the 1742 text the following cenoses have come into C. U.:—

1. God of all power, and truth, and grace. In the Wes. H. Bk., 1784, No. 369, Pt. ii. is composed of st. xix.—xxii. It is also in other collections.

2. Father, supply my every need. In the Wes. H. Bk., 1870, No. 360, Pt. ii. is composed of st. xix.—xxii. It is also in other collections.

3. Holy and true, and righteous Lord. In the Wes. H. Bk., 1789, No. 361 is composed of st. xlix.—xxviii. It is also in other collections.

All of these cenoses are in C. U. in G. Britain and America.

God of re-creating grace. C. Wesley. [Holy Communion.] No. 139 of his Hgs. on the Lord's Supper, 1745, in 4 st. of 4 l. In 1760 it was given in Madonna's Ps. & Hgs., No. 462, and later in other collections of the Church of England. It was also in the Wes. H. Bk., 1789, No. 415, and later editions, and in several collections in America. In the original st. iii. it reads, "Just is he, and good, and right."; but in the Wes. H. Bk., J. Wesley changed it to "Meet is he, and just and right," thereby bringing it into harmony with the Bk. of Common Prayer, "It is very meet, right, and our bounden duty," &c.

God of almighty love. C. Wesley. [Consecration to God.] Appeared in Hgs. & Sac. Poems, 1749, vol. i. No. 149, in 3 st. of 8 l., and entitled, "An hourly act of Oblation." In 1780 it was given in anthologies in the Wes. H. Bk., as No. 314, and repeated in several collections in G. Britain and America. The cenose, "Father, my lifted eye," in Hgs. for the Church of Christ, Boston, U.S.A., 1858, is composed with alterations from st. iii., iii., of this hymn.

God of eternal love. J. Watts. [Pr. crit.: God's love to Israel.] 1st pub. in his GOD OF LOVE, THAT

God of love, that [Who] hearest the prayer, C. Wesley. [None but Jesus.] Pub. in Hymns for those that seek, and those that have redemption, &c., 1747, p. 19, in 6 st. of 4 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. iv. p. 229). The form in which it is now generally adopted is given in the Ws. H. Bk., 1780, No. 494. P. Doddridge, 1785, No. 46, in 6 st. of 4 l., and again in later ed. of the same. It is used in the American hymn-books, and usually the original text is given as in Thring's Coll., 1882. [J. J.]

God of my life, through all its [my] days, P. Doddridge. [Psalms for unfruitful years.] This hymn is dated in the Baptist Ps. & Hs., revised ed. 1747. In the revised ed. 1780, "1751," the year of Doddridge's death, but upon what authority it is not stated. Miller (Singers and Songs, 1853, p. 172) evidently took this date as the foundation of his note which reads: "This hymn may be read autobiographically, especially verse 3, in reference to the peaceful and contemplative life which the author lived in his last years. The words are: "When death's own nature shall prevail, And all its powers of language fail, Joy through my swimming eyes shall break, And make me not to speak." No evidence beyond these unauthorized statements is forthcoming to show that this was the author's last hymn. The note (J. J. Oall.) says, "The date was a guess, and Miller's note would imply. It is used in Doddridge's posthumous Hymns, &c., by J. Oort, 1755, No. 1755, p. 71, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Praising God through the whole of our existence, Psalms exvii. 2." In 1839 it was reprinted by J. D. Humphreys in his ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., and accompanied by the following note:

"It is interesting to remember, that, when pressed down by the hand of disease and tattering on the brink of eternity, the pious author of this hymn realized the divine consolations it contains, and, in his own words, "...and found the solace of my spirit ..."" (P. J. Oall.)

This note seems to imply that the hymn was written during the author's illness at Lansdowne, in 1749, and possibly the date of 1749, given by J. J. Oall., is correct. In a few collections it is given as "God of my life, through all my days." Its use in all English-speaking countries is extensive. [J. J.]

God of my life, Thy constant care, P. Doddridge. [New Year.] 1st pub. in his posthumous Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 122, in 4 st. of 4 l., headed, "The possibility of dying this year, Jesus, xxviii. 7, For New Year's Day." In 1839 it was reprinted, with slight variations in the text, in J. D. Humphreys' ed. of the Hymns, &c., No. 154. In Dr. Dale's English H. Bk., 1874, No. 137, in 4 st. of 4 l., and in Common Praise, 1879, No. 325, st. i., iii., v., are given in each case as "God of my life, Thy constant care." An arrangement of st. ii., iv., also appeared in Cotterill's Sec., 1810, and in later editions, as: "How many kindred souls are tied." This is repeated in a few modern collections. [J. J.]

God of my life, to Thee I call, W. Cooper. [Divine aid imparted.] Pub. in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. iii., No. 19, in 6 st. of 4 l., headed, "Looking upwards in a storm," and signed "C." In the American P. & S. Hs., and Hys. for the Worship of God, Richmond, 1867, No. 373, st. ii., iv., are given as: "The friend of all in distress, and the friend of the foolish and the faint," but ascribed to "Newton," in error. In the Church Praxis, Bk. v., 1882, the same arrangement, with the addition of st. vi., is given as No. 467. The S. P. C. K. Hymns, 1852, "God of my life, to Thee we call," is composed of st. i., ii., of this hymn, somewhat altered, and a third stanza from another source. In the Apolcias Bk., 1868, this hymn is again altered to: "My God, my life, to Thee I call." [J. J.]

God of my life, to Thee My cheerful soul, &c. C. Wesley. [Birthday Hymn.] No. 10 of his Hys. for Believers, given in Hys. & Sac. Poems, 1749, vol. i., No. 223, in 8 st. of 6 l. and again in the Ws. H. Bk., 1780, No. 219, with the omission of st. v. In the revised ed. of 1875, No. 229, the original stanzas are given in this order: i., ii., iv., iii., vi., viii., thus making a hymn of 6 st. The last stanza contains the lines:

"Like Moses to Thyself convey, And kiss my raptured soul away."

These lines are based upon the Jewish tradition that God gave the soul of Moses to the body by a kiss. Watts has the same idea in his poem on the death of Moses:

"Softly his fainting head he lay Upon his Maker's breast; His Maker kissed his soul away, And laid his flesh to rest."

(See Horae Lyricae, 1706.) C. Wesley's original text is in P. Works, 1868-72, vol. iv. p. 15. [J. J.]

God of my life, Whose gracious power, C. Wesley. [Lent—In Temptation.] 1st pub. in Hys. & Sac. Poems, 1749, in 15 st. of 4 l., and headed, "At the Approach of Temptation." (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 322.) From it the following stanzas have come into C. U.:

1. The Ws. H. Bk., 1780, No. 240 (new ed. 1785, No. 260), which is composed of st. i., ii., iv., vi., ix., xi., xiv., xvi., this is in several Methodist collections.
4. The Leads H. Bk., 1853, No. 241, consisting of st. i., ii., iv., vi., ix., xii., this is repeated in the Hymns of Tune, Boston, U.S.A., 1854; the Unitarian H. Bk. (and other American collections).

Of these four stanzas the last is the most widely used. In his Meth. H. Bk. Notes, 1885.
GOD OF MY SALVATION

p. 218, Mr. Stevenson has an interesting anecdote on the Wes. H. Bk., cento. [J. J.]

God of my salvation, hear. C. Wesley. [Lent.] Pub. in Hym. & Sac. Poems, 1742, in 8 st. of 8 1., and headed, "After a relapse into sin," P. Works, 1868-72, vol. ii. p. 200. In its full form it is unknown to the collections, but the following centos are in C. U.:

1. In Madam's Ps. & Hymns, 1769, st. 1, iv., are given as No. 10. This is repeated with slight alterations in the S. P. C. K. Hymns, 1812, and other collections. It was also in R. Conyer's Coll., 1747, and several of the older hymn-books.

2. Toplady's cento in his Ps. & Hymns, 1774, No. 354, of which st. i., ii., and iii. are by Toplady, is not in modern use.

3. Beckerstein and Christian Palmody, 1833, No. 109, is composed of st. i., ii., iv., v., with slight alterations. This is repeated in the Hym. Comp. with a return to the original text.

5. Dr. Hatfield's Church H. Bk., N.Y., 1872, No. 629, embodies st. i., ii., iv.

6. The Wes. H. Bk., 1782, No. 104 (new ed. 1875, No. 173), is composed of st. i., ii., iv., vi., viii. This cento has passed into several Methodist collections.

This somewhat large number of centos (and the most important only have been named) indicate the extensive use which has been made of the hymn from Madam to the present. Of these centos that in the Wes. H. Bk. is the best known. [J. J.]

God of our health, our Life and Light. R. R. Mant. [Holy Baptism.] One of the original hymns added to his Ancient Hymns from the Roman Brevery, 1837, p. 96, in st. of 8 1., (col. 1871-p. 1293) and entitled, "Hymn of Thanksgiving for Holy Baptism." It was repeated in Kennedy, 1863; the S. P. C. K., Ps. & Hymns, Appx., &c. The hymn No. 498, in the Hymnary, 1872, for a "School Festival," "We thank Thee, Lord, our Life and Light," in L.M., is a cento from this hymn. [J. J.]

God of that glorious gift of grace. J. S. Mounsell. [Holy Baptism.] 1st pub. in his Hymns and Miscellaneous Poems, Dublin, 1837, p. 44, in st. of 4 1., and entitled, "Baptist Hymn." It was repeated in his Parish Musings, 1850, but omitted, strangely enough, from his Parish Hymnal, 1878, although ranking in popularity with the best of his hymns. It is found in many of the best collections, including the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, No. 222; Hym. Comp., 398; the Wes. H. Bk., No. 398, and others, and usually without alteration, as in Lord Selborne's Bk. of Prayers, 1862, and 1867. Its use has also extended to most English-speaking countries. [J. J.]

God of the living, in whose eyes. J. Ellerton. [Burial.] Written for and 1st pub. in his Hymns for Schools and Bible Classes (Brighton), 1858, in 3 st. of 4 1. On July 6, 1867, it was expanded by the author into 5 st. of 6 1., and in this form was pub. in the Brown-Borthwick Words of the Suppl. H. and Tune Bk., N.D.; and the Select Hymns for Church & Home, 1871. Also in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, No. 245. It is in somewhat extensive use, the longer form being that usually adopted. The two forms are in Dr. Martineau's Hymn of Prayer and Prayer, 1874, as Nos. 511 and 797. [J. J.]

God of the morning, at [Thy] Whose voice. I. Watts. [Morning.] 1st pub. in his Hymns & S. Songs, 1709, Bk., i., No. 79, in 6 st. of 4 1., as "A Morning Hymn." It is sometimes used in an abbreviated form, and as "God of the morning, at Thy voice." Its use in its full, or in an abridged form, is extensive in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

God of the prophet's power. J. Cennick. [After Sermon, or Missions.] Pub. in his Sacred Hymns for the Children of God, &c., 1741, No. 10, in 5 st. of 8 1. In its original form it is not in C. U. The hymn in many American collections, especially those of the Unitarians, beginning with the same line, is a cento from this hymn with alterations in the text. It came into use early in the present century, and is found in the Hymns of the Spirit, Boston, 1864; the Songs for the Sanctuary, N. Y., 1865, and many others. [J. J.]

God of the sea, Thy thundering voice. I. Watts. [God's Dominion over the Sea.] No. 70, Bk. ii., of his Hymns & S. Songs, 1709, in 9 st. of 4 1., and entitled "God's Dominion over the Sea." In this form its use is very limited. A more popular form was given in the American Prayer Bk. Coll., 1826, No. 118, in 3 st. beginning, "God of the sea, Thy thundering voice." It is an alteration of st. i., iii. and vii., and is found in several American collections. [J. J.]

God of the universe, to Thee. [Consecration of a Church.] Appeared in Beman's Sacred Lyrics, Troy, 1841, and signed "Mary O.—1841." It is in use in a few American collections, as Hatfield's Church H. Bk., 1872, No. 120, in 4 st., and the Songs for the Sanctuary, 1865, No. 1031, in 5 st. [J. J.]

God of truth, and power, and grace. C. Wesley. [Holy Communion.] "Pub. as a tract of four pages, without name or date, but probably before 1745," and included in the P. Works, 1808-72, vol. viii. p. 441. It is in 10 st. of 4 1. Of these st. i., vii., ix. and x., were given in the revised Wes. H. Bk., 1875, No. 910. [J. J.]

God of unexampled grace. C. Wesley. [Passion tide.] 1st pub. in his Hymns on the Lord's Supper, 1745, No. 21, in 9 st. of 8 1. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. iii. p. 229). From this the following centos have come into C. U.:

1. In M. Madam's Ps. & Hymns, 1760, No. 159 is composed of st. i.-iii. This was added to the Supp. to the Wes. H. Bk., 1830, and is retained in the revised ed., 1875.

2. In A. M. Toplady's Ps. & Hymns, 1776, No. 399 is composed of st. i.-iv., vi., viii., ix., with alterations.

3. In the Wes. H. Bk., 1800-1, st. iv.-ix., beginning "Jesus drinks the bitter cup." This is in a few Methodist collections, but is omitted from the revised ed. of the Wes. H. Bk., 1875.

The use of portions of this hymn is thus somewhat extensive, especially amongst the Methodist bodies. In common with Milton ("Hymn for the Morning of Christ's Nativity") and others, Wesley has pressed heathen mythology into the service of Christianity in this hymn. The fifth stanza reads:

"Dies the glorious cause of all
The true eternal Pan,
Falsely to raise us from the fall
To ransom sinful man.
"Well may Saul withdraw his sight,
With the Sufferer sympathize,
Leave the world in sudden night,
While his Creator dies." [J. J.]
God save the King. [National Anthem.]
The origin and authorship of the English national anthem have given rise to much controversy, and many theories respecting them have been advanced, often demonstrating little more than an assumption of the points really at issue. To enter at length into these discussions would be foreign to the purpose of this work, and it will therefore be sufficient to notice briefly the theories above referred to, and then to state the results attained by a careful examination of the facts, so far as we know them at present.

I. Theories respecting the Melody.—1. The melody has been attributed to Dr. John Bull, and supposed to have been performed by him on the organ at the Merchant Taylors' Hall, July 16, 1607, when King James I. dined there with the Company. Of the book by Richard Clark, in which this theory is propounded, all that is necessary to say here is that it is a valuable source of errors from beginning to end. Curiously enough, however, Clark afterwards became possessed of a MS. volume of compositions by Dr. Bull, in which is found a sort of organ voluntary, entitled merely an "Ayre," identical in rhythm with "God save the King," and bearing considerable resemblance to it in the form of its melody.

2. An old Christmas Carol ("Remember, O thou man"), which is found in Songs and Fancies, Aberdeen, 1682, bears in several of its phrases a marked likeness to "God save the King," and has been held to be the origin of the latter; but the theory is imperfect, and the Carol had already appeared in Ravenscroft's Melismata, 1611, from which it passed into the Scottish collection.

3. A similar, but even slighter, resemblance to a passage in one of Purcell's sonatas, led others to attribute the melody of "God save the King" with the name of that great composer.

4. Others, again, have referred its origin to an anthem or, more properly, hymn said to have been sung in the private chapel of James II. on the occasion of the apprehended invasion of England by the Prince of Orange.

5. Others have supposed it to be a Jacobite composition of later date.

6. Another story runs that it was composed by Lully in honour of a visit paid by Louis XIV. and Madame de Maintenon to the lately founded (1668) convent of St. Cyr. This myth is derived from the Souvenir de la Marquise de Créqui, a churlish and audacious forgery, the work, it is believed, of one Comte de St. Malo, published in Paris in 1834. The words therein given are the original French:

"Grand Dieu, sauve le Roy!
Vive le Roy!"

and are merely a poor translation of the English.

The addition to this section that Handel subsequently obtained the composition from the Sisters of St. Cyr, and introduced it into England as his own, is too absurd for further notice.

On the opposite page is an English version, but it is merely a literal translation of the Latin, and in prose. There is nothing to indicate any connection with the stanzas in Harmonia Anglicana. Mr. Cummings observes that:

"the words of the Latin Chorus are so evidently intended for the tune of our National Anthem, that they seem to some extent to support the notion that the tune might have been sung during the reign of James II."

We are of opinion that Mr. Cummings might justly have spoken still more decidedly, and that his fortunate discovery of the Latin chorus has restored to us the original text of the hymn sung in 1688.

3. On the 28th Sept., 1745, twelve days after the proclamation of the Pretender at Edinburgh, "God save the King" was sung..."
at Drury Lane Theatre, with harmonies and accompaniments by Dr. Arne. The words of the first three lines appear thus in Arne's autograph score:—

"God bless our noble King,
God save great George our King,
God save the King."

and B. Victor in a letter to Garrick quotes the beginning of the 2nd verse thus:—

"O Lord our God arise:
Confound the enemies
Of George our King!"

The performance was received with tumultuous applause, and the example of Drury Lane was soon followed by Goodman's Fields and Covent Garden.

4. In Oct., 1745, the music and words were printed in the Gentleman's Magazine "as sung at both playhouses," with the addition of a 3rd verse:—

"Thy choicest gifts in store
On George be pleased to pour,
Long may he reign;
May he defend our laws,
And give us cause,
To say with heart and voice
God save the King."

The 1st and 2nd verses are exactly as in Harmonia Anglicana, with the exception of v. 1, l. 1, which is changed to "God save great George our King;" and of v. 2, l. 6, where "we fix" is substituted for "are fixed." Still Carey's name was never mentioned in connection with either tune or words, and when Arne was subsequently questioned on the subject, he replied:—

"He had not the least knowledge, nor could be guess at all who was either the author or composer, but that it was voted as a received opinion that it was written for the Catholic Chapel of James II."

About the same time, a new edition of Theatrum Musicae was issued, with a second volume added. Here the heading is "A Loyal Song, Sung at the Theatres Royal, for two Voices"; the melody appears in almost its present shape; and the words are slightly changed as follows:—

St. I. 1, 1, "God save great George our King," as in the Gentleman's Magazine.
St. II. 1, 2, Scatter our enemies.
St. II. 6, 7, On thee our hope we fix,
God save us all.

Then follows the additional stanza as in the Gentleman's Magazine, but with the 6th line thus:—

"With heart and Voice to sing."

This curious alteration is probably due to the engraver, but the examples given above show the manner in which the words were adapted to the circumstances of the time. It is also worthy of remark that while in the later edition of Theatrum Musicae the words and melody were both revised, the index retains the first line as in Harmonia Anglicana, "God save our Lord the King."

The air now rapidly increased in popularity, and after a time took its present position as the National Anthem of England.

5. It was not until 1785 that the authorship was claimed for Carey by his youngest son, George Saville Carey, avowedly with the object of obtaining a pension as a reward for the public service rendered by his father in writing the "Loyal Song." George Carey, in his account of the matter in 1793, quotes "God save the King," in 4 stanzas, of which the 3rd is that given in the Gentleman's Magazine, and the 4th is:—

"Long grant that Marshal Wade
May by thy mighty aid Victory bring;
May he seduce hush,
And like a torrent rush,
Rebellious Scots to crush:
God save the King."

It need hardly be added that neither this stanza nor the 3rd could have been by Carey, who was dead when the Scottish rebellion broke out. George Carey, who was an infant at the time of his father's death, could have had no personal knowledge of the matter, but he states that he had often heard Mr. Pearce Galliard, a friend of his father, assert that the latter was the author of "God save the King," and, what is more important, he quotes a letter from Dr. Harington to himself stating that Mr. J. C. Smith (Handel's well-known amanuensis):—

"has often told me that your father came to him with the words and music, desiring him to correct the bass, which Mr. Smith told him was not proper; and at your father's request he wrote down another in correct harmony. Mr. Smith, to whom I read your letter again, this day repeated the same again."

The date of this letter is June 13, 1795, not long after which Smith died, aged 83. Dr. Harington adds:—

"My curiosity was often raised to enquire after the author before Mr. Smith related the above, and I was often misinformed. Mr. Smith says he understood your father intended this as part of a birthday Ode, or something of that kind."

Here Mr. Cummings's discovery of the "Latin Chorus" assumes a special importance. Either the two English stanzas of 1743-4 are translated from the Latin, or the Latin from them. The latter alternative is almost inconceivable. It is impossible to imagine that a Latin version was made for Travers's concert, or if it had been made, why the English stanzas, if they already published, were not printed on the opposite page instead of a prose translation. Travers, as organist of the Chapel Royal, was exactly in the position to become possessed of a ms. from the Chapel of James II. He might, perhaps, not have known its origin, but, if he had, he would assuredly have kept the knowledge to himself, when employing the Jacobite hymn as the concluding piece of his concert, immediately following his new Ode for the birthday (Nov. 19, 1743) of the Princess of Wales. If this be so, it is difficult to doubt that the "Latin Chorus" represents the occasional hymn of 1688, and thus justifies the opinion expressed by Dr. Arne, probably in accordance with a tradition to that effect. If some copies of the anthem were preserved, one was not unlikely to have descended to Travers, and another to have been seen by Carey, who translated the Latin words into English. If then, along with the words Carey obtained the melody only, he would have to put a bass to it, which agrees with the account given by J. C. Smith. Mr. Cummings remarks that the bass of the song in Harmonia Anglicana is not worthy of Smith, who was an excellent musician, but we have no means of knowing whose the bass printed in 1743 really is. It may indeed be that by Carey himself which he took to Smith for correction. If, then, Carey's share in the National Anthem is confined to the English translation of the Latin, and that, perhaps, only partially, it is easy to see why he never claimed the song as his own, and why his name was never publicly connected with it until many years afterwards.

As to the melody, Carey must in this case have obtained it with the Latin words, in the same form, or in one similar to it, as that printed in 1743, and its immediate authorship must once more be restored to the domain of speculation.

6. The likeness of the Anthem to such phrases as “Remember, O thou man,” is of no critical importance. In the compositions of the 16th and early part of the 17th century, we find the same or similar stock phrases continually recurring. Ingenuity of harmony must at that time more thought of than originality of melody: but, as Mr. Cummings points out, the similarity between “God save the King” and Bull’s “Ayre” (composed without a title and without words) extends also to its peculiar rhythm, and could hardly have been accidental, but is, in no way inconsistent with its being the basis on which “God save the King” was constructed.

7. An argument adduced in support of the claim for the song to a Jacobite origin, is the former existence at Fingask Castle of an old drinking cup, on which was inscribed the following stanzas:

“God save the King, I pray,
God bless the King, I pray,
God save the King, I pray,
Send him victories,
Happy and glorious,
Soon to reign over us,
God save the King.

“God bless the Prince of Wales,
The true-born Prince of Wales,
Spare us by Thee,
Grant us one favour more,
The King for to restore,
As Thou hast done before,
The Family, Amen.”

It is hardly necessary to point out that an inscription of this kind, unauthenticated, is usually worthless as evidence, but in the present instance the references to the King’s restoration and to the true-born Prince of Wales show that it must have been written before the death of James II. in 1701, after which there was no titular Prince of Wales until the birth of Charles Edward, in 1720. It has also been remarked that the somewhat peculiar expression “Send him victorious” is more applicable to the Stuart than to the Hanoverian family. These stanzas may then be considered as one of those adaptations of the original to special circumstances, of which many examples exist. It is to be observed that the verses in Harmonia Anglicana which otherwise conform closely to the “Latin Canon,” also contain the word “send,” for which there is no correlative in the latter. This may be taken to show that Carey was acquainted with the old Jacobite paraphrase and borrowed from it part of the 1st stanza, with the word “soon” in 1. 6, changed to “He.” Another indication that the English stanzas are translated from the Latin is found in st. ii., 1. 6, where, while “In Te” is, in accordance with the circumstances of the case, rendered by “On him,” the third person, in which the verb “sita est” is written, is copied as literally as to involve an imperfect rhyme, “are fixed,” corrected in 1743 to “we fix’d.”

Our want of knowledge of the exact date of the publication of Harmonia Anglicana leaves it uncertain whether “God save the King” appeared in it in Carey’s lifetime or after his death, which occurred in Oct., 1743; but the apparent ignorance of the English words on the part of Travers may incline us to believe they had not been printed when his concert was given.

iii. Conclusion.—The view of the case, of which the above is a sketch, reconciles many discrepancies, and on the whole it now seems more than probable that the occasional hymn or anthem, of which some tradition reached Arne and others, was really produced in 1688; that the composer may have been acquainted with Bull’s “Ayre,” and founded his melody upon it; that some copies of the anthem were current among the Jacobites, and that one imitation of it, at least, was made in English before the end of the 17th century; that the anthem became known to Carey in 1740, when he translated it (making some use, however, of the old adaptation); that he sang it in public, but never claimed it as an original composition; that about the same time he showed it to J. C. Smith; that another copy of the so-called anthem fell into the hands of Travers; and that almost immediately afterwards, through its performance at the theatres, “God save the King” attained the popularity which it has maintained to the present day.

iv. Imitations of the Anthem.—About 1766 the melody of “God save the King” became known on the Continent. It was set in Danish as a national air to the words “Heil dir dem liebenden,” a song in 8 st., written for the birthday of Christian VII. (a brother-in-law of George III. of England), by Heinrich Harries, editor of the Flensburger Wochenblatt, where it was pub. Jan. 27, 1790. Passing into Berlin, the words, recast by Ballhaus Gerhard Schumacher, and beginning “Heil Dir, im Siegerkrantz,” appeared in the Spandauer Zeitung, Dec. 17, 1793, and, with the tune, were afterwards adopted as the national air, first of Prussia, then of Saxony, and some other North German States. [For fuller details see the papers by Mr. Cummings referred to above, to which the present article is much indebted; to Grove’s Dict. of Music; and to Chappell’s Popular Music.]

2. A successful and popular imitation of the National Anthem is:

“God bless our native land!
Firm may she ever stand,
Through storm and night;”

which is in use in America. Full details of the composition of this hymn are given under Brooks, C. T. (q.v.).

3. In 1828 an imitation appeared in W. W. Hull’s Coll. of Prayers for Household Use, with a few Hymns and other Poems, p. 124:

“God save our King! O shed
All blessings o’er his head;
Comfort his heart!”

This was repeated in Hull’s Coll.. 1833, and in 1863 it was given in Kennedy’s, as:

“Lord God, to Thee we pray;
Save our Queen; bless her sway
Over our land.”
4. In the Havergal Life Echoes, 1883, there is a version of the Anthem adapted for the Marriage of the Prince of Wales, March 10, 1863, the adaptation beginning with st. ii., "God save the Prince of Wales." It is entitled "The New National Bridal Hymn." Another arrangement of the Anthem is in the same work, p. 140.

5. Numerous imitations of the metre of this Anthem are given in the hymn-books both old and new, one of the oldest being:

"Come, Thou Almighty King,
Help us to praise to Thee.
Help us to praise - the somewhat complicated history of which will be found under its first line. J. Marriott's "Thou Whose Almighty word," is another successful instance of the adaptation of the metre to sacred purposes.

6. During the Jubilee year, 1887, numerous alterations of the National Anthem, and additions thereto, were made to adapt it for the occasion. These alterations and additions from their special character cannot become permanent parts of the Anthem. Several hymns in the same metre, and others in varying metres, were also published; but the interest of these is mainly historical. (See Various.)

God that [Who] madest earth and heaven. [Evening.] This hymn is given in various forms as follows:

1. The original in one stanza. This was first pub. in Bp. Heber's posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 147.
2. The same with the addition of the stanza, "Guard us waking, guard us sleeping." This stanza is by Archdeacon Whately, and is a free rendering of the ancient Cyprianine Antiphon, "Salve nos, Domine, vigilantes, custodi nos dormientes, ut vigilantes in Christo, requiescamus in pace." It is found in T. Darley's Hymnus, &c., 1838, No. 6, as st. ii. of the hymn, and was appended to the Archdeacon's Lectures on Prayer, 1840. These two stanzas constitute the hymn in its most popular form, and are in use in all English-speaking countries, sometimes as, "God that madest," &c., as in H. N. & M., 1861-75. A rendering of these stanzas in Latin, as "Dias, terras qui pelagque," is given in R. Bingham's Hymnus, Christ. Latina, 1871, p. 175.
3. These two stanzas and a doxology by T. Wordsworth in Mercers' Hymns, &c., 1855, No. 18. This was repeated with alterations in the doxology in the Salisbury H. Bk., 1857; and in the Rev. F. Pott's Hymns, &c., 1861, and other hymn-books.
4. In the Oxford ed. of Mercer's Ch. Prater & H. Bk., 1864, No. 19, there is the following arrangement: i. "God, that madest," &c., (Heber); ii. "And when night again shall call us" (Mercer); iii. "Guard us waking," &c. (Whately); iv. "Holy Father, hallowed in heaven" (Mercer). This is repeated in Brown-Borthwick's select Hymns for Ch. & Home, 1871-75, with a transcription of st. i. and ii. much to the advantage of the hymn.
5. In Major's Book of Prayer, 1868, No. 291, is Mercer's arrangement without the doxology.

All these versions are in C. U. in G. Britain, America and the colonies. (J. J.)

God the all-terrible! King, Who ordoinest. H. F. Chorley. (In Time of War.) Written for a Russian air, and printed, in 4 st. of 4 l., in Hullah's Part Music, 1842. It is given in several collections either in its original or in a slightly altered form, as in Thring's Coll., 1882, &c. In the Universal H. Bk., 1885, No. 392, st. i.–iii. of this text, somewhat altered, are given as, "God, Lord of Sabaoth! King Who ordoinest." In Stryker's Christian Chorals, New York, 1885, it begins, "O God, all terrible," and in the American Hys. of the Spirit, Boston, 1864, No. 202, st. ii.–iv. are given in an altered form as, "God, the Omnipotent! Mighty Avenger!"

During the Franco-German war, on the 28th Aug., 1870, the Rev. J. Ellerton wrote an imitation of this hymn, beginning, "God the Almighty One, wisely ordaining." It was pub. in the Rev. R. Brown-Borthwick's Select Hymns for Ch. & Home, 1871, No. 84, in 4 st. of 4 l. In 1871 a cento from these two hymns was given in the 8. P. C. K. Church Hys., No. 262, of which st. i.–iii. are from Chorley's hymn, and st. iv.–vi. are st. ii.–iv. from that by Mr. Ellerton. (J. J.)

God the Creator bless'd. J. Montgomery. [Sunday.] Written in May, 1838, and pub. in a small pamphlet entitled, A Message from the Moon, and Other Poems. In 1839 it was also given in Venite Offerings; or a Help to Stannington Church. This was a small volume, and was sold for the benefit of the funds of Stannington Church, near Sheffield. In 1833 the hymn, somewhat altered (st. iii. 1–2, "Christian Day," for "Christian's Day," l. 3, "where (inset . . .)" for "when met . . ." st. iv. 1–2, "The Church below hath bless'd," for "The Church hath ever bless'd") was given in Montgomery's Original Hymns, No. 11, in 6 st. of 6 l., and entitled "The Sabbath." It is in several modern American hymn-books, but is almost unknown to the collections in G. Britain. (J. J.)

God the Father, God the Son, Holy Spirit, Three in one. G. Thring. [Close of Evening Service.] Written in 1871 and 1st pub. in Preb. Hutton's Supplement, Lincoln, 1871, No. 275, in 4 st. of 8 l. In 1872 it was repeated in H. H. Pierson's Hymn Tunes, No. 23, with a special tune by Pierson. Subsequently it was included in the author's Hymns and Sacred Lyrics, 1874, p. 184; and in his Coll., 1882, No. 94. It is also found in several other collections. (J. J.)

God the Father, Whose creation. J. M. Neale. [Harvest.] Pub. in the Appendix to the H. Noted, 2nd ed., 1864; and again in the author's posthumous Original Hymns, &c., 1866, p. 69, in 6 st. of 6 l. It has since appeared in the Appendix to H. A. & M., 1868; People's H., 1867; and several other collections. (J. J.)

God the heavens aloud proclaim. J. Merrick. [Ps. xlv.] 1st pub. in his Psalms Tr. and Paraphrased in English Verse, 1765, and repeated in W. D. Tattersall's rearranged ed. of the same, 1797. As a complete version of Ps. lxxi. it is not in C. U. A cento composed of st. xvi, xvi, xvi, xvi, from Tattersall's arrangement, is in several American collections, including The Springfield Coll., 1835; the Unitarian Hys. [& Tune] Bk., Boston, 1868, and several other hymn-books. It begins, "Blest Instructress, from Thy ways." This psalm version by Merrick as rewritten by Miss Amber in her Spirit of the Psalms, 1829, is given in Dale's English H. Bk., 1874, as "Heavenly Teacher, from Thy ways." (J. J.)

God the Lord a king remaineth. J. Keble. [Ps. xciv.] 1st pub. in his Psalter; or, Psalms of David, 1839, p. 241, in 5 st. of 6 l. It was given in the Sarum Hys., 1868, Kennedy, 1883, and in several Public School collections, but its use is not equal to its merits. It is one of Kble's finest renderings of the Psalms. [See Psalters, English, § xviii.]
GOD THE LORD, IN

[J. J.]

God the Lord, in mercy bellowing. [Holy Communion.] This hymn is a tr. by Dr. R. F. Littlefield of a cento from the Greek Liturgies of St. James and Mark, made for and first pub. in the People's H., 1867, No. 170, in 5 st. and 6 l. It is an "Invocation of the Holy Ghost, before the Consecration." The Greek begins, Εὐλογεῖτε τὸν Θεὸν ἐδώκας. [J. J.]

God, the omnipresent God. C. Wesley. [P.s. f.] 1st pub. in Hymns occasioned by the Earthquake, March 8, 1750, London. Printed in the year MDCCL. It is in 12 st. of 8 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. vii. p. 106). In its full form it is unknown to the collections, but st. iv., v., are given in the Bap. Ps. & Hymns, 1858, as No. 6432; and, in the Irvingian Hymns, for the Use of the Church, 2nd ed. 1871, No. 229, &c., as "From the throne of God there springs singular.

[J. J.]

God, who didst so dearly buy. C. Wesley. [Praise desired of Believers] There are two centos beginning with this first line as follows:

1. In the 1st ed. of the We. H. Bk., 1746, No. 498, and later editions to 1783, and also in other Methodist collections, the cento in compiled from C. Wesley's Short Hymns, &c., 1762, as follows: st. i., No. 554; st. ii., No. 8238; st. iii., iv., No. 82.

2. The second cento is No. 411, in the revised ed., We. H. Bk., 1783, and is thus compiled: st. i., No. 554; st. ii., No. 8238; st. iii., iv., No. 82.

[J. J.]

God's holy law transgressed. B. Bellas. [Hope in the Gospel.] Appeared in B. Hall's ed. of Bedell's (posthumous) Hymns, &c., 1817, No. 3652, in 4 st. of 4 l. and entitled, "Hope alone from the Gospel." Its use in the United States is limited; but in most cases either abbreviated or altered. Orig. text in the Hymnals of the Meth. Episcopal Church, 1878, No. 314, with "Convinced of guilt," &c., for "Burdened with guilt," &c., in st. i. 1. 3.

Goethe, Johann Wolfgang von, of Johann Caspar Goethe, a lawyer at Frankfurt, and d. at Weimar, March 22, 1832. The greatest German poet of his day, and one of the most famous literary men of his own or any age, his sympathies were Classical rather than distinctively Christian; and as he himself said (Conversations with Eckermann, January 4, 1827), he wrote no poems suited for use in public worship.

A few pieces, principally from his well-known dramatrical poem of Faust, pt. i. 1832, are found under his name in one or other of the Unitarian hymn-books. The two hymns in this class, by Sir Theodore Martin, Bayard, are included in the New Compendium of Church Music, 1850, and in the Hymns of the Church, under A. C. G. Co., No. 826. A free version is also

1. The Ethics of the new age. Praise. The Song of the three Archangels, in the Prologue in Heaven. Pr. as: "The sun is still for ever sounding," by Dr. F. H. Hodge, as above, 1853, No. 100.

iii. Verlassa den zarten. Written for the Free arson. Written for the Fremareschale, 1832, by Dr. F. H. Hodge, as above, 1853, No. 100.

Blackfriars, and subsequent - a vector of the latter parish, adding the to one or two lectureships; held April 15, 1816. Mr. God's interest in foreign mission work was very earnest, and took a practical turn in assisting to found the Church Missionary Society. His prose works include Sermons, 1812; and Essays on all the Scriptural Names and Titles of Christ, &c., which were reprinted from the Christian Guardian, 1813-1816. His Works, together with a Memor, were pub. in 1822 (6 vols.), and edited by his son. His version of the Psalms was pub. as—

An Entire New Version of the Book of Psalms, in which an attempt is made to accommodate them to the worship of the Christian Church, in a variety of measures, now in general use, with original Preface and Notes, critical and explanatory, by the Rev. William God, M.A., Rector of St. Andrew, Wardrobe, and St. Ann, Blackfriars; Lecturer of St. John of Wapping; and Lady Chatterley's Tuesday Evening Lecturer at the Church of St. Lawrence, Jewry. In two volumes. London: Printed for the Author by W. Wilson . . . and sold by Rivingtons, &c., 1811. 2nd ed., 1812; 3rd ed., 1816.

Pratt, in 1829; Bickersteth, in 1833; and Kemble in 1856, made extensive use of this version of the Psalms, the latter including nearly fifty pieces in his Col; Most of these have fallen out of use, one only being retained in Kemble's New Church H. Bk.. In modern hymnals in G. Britain and America about twenty of God's versions are still in C. U. These include, "Jesus, with Thy salvation blest"; "Lord, I delight to find my place"; Thou gracious God and kind"; "With songs of grateful praise," &c. [See Psalms, English, § xvi.] The following are still in C. U.:

2. "O God, be merciful to us." Ps. li.
4. "How blest the man with mercy crowned." Ps. cxvii.
5. "If the Lord had not heard, may Israel now say." Ps. cxviii.
6. "Jesus, with Thy salvation blest." Ps. xx.
7. "Let Thy grace, Lord, make me as holy." Ps. cxix.
8. "Lo in Gethsemane's dark shade." Ps. lxxix.
9. "Lo, the mighty God appearing." Ps. l.
10. "Lord, it is good for me to walk." Ps. xxxiv.
11. "Thou of mercy, just and kind." Ps. xi.
12. "Lord, Thy Church hath seen Thee rise." Ps. lxxix.
13. "Let all our songs arise." Ps. xcviii.
15. "Prepare a new song, Jovah, to praise." Ps. lxix.
17. "Thou gracious God and kind." Ps. lxxix.
18. "Though sinners boldly join." Ps. ii.

Goostly Psalms and Spiritual Songs, by Miles Coverdale. Written by Bishop Coverdale, the great translator of the Bible. Of this work an unique copy is at Queen's Coll., Oxford. In the 2nd edition of Foxe's Acts and Monuments it is quoted among a list of books prohibited in 1539. In subsequent editions this list is withdrawn. Townsend's edition of Foxe restores it under the date of 1546, on the authority of Bonner's Register (Acaed-my, June 28, 1844, Letter of Dr. A. F. Mitchell). A reprint of the book, without the tunes, has been published in Coversdale's Remains, 1846 (Parker Soc.). The Preface, in describing the motives that produced it, echoes the commonplace so frequent among translators of the Psalms. "Would God . . . our carter's and ploughmen (had none) other thing to whistle upon save psalms . . . and if women . . . spinning at the wheels had none other songs . . . they should be better occupied than with hey nony nony, hey troly loly." The Spiritual Songs are paraphrases of the "Ten Commandments," "Credo," "Pater Noster," "Mediti Vita," "Gloria in Excelsis," "Magnificat," "Nunc Dimittis," "Christe Qui Lux," "Veni Creator" (3), and twelve hymns. There are also fifteen renderings of psalms, two of them being duplicates. It is extremely probable that the whole book is translated from German origin. All the hymns and psalm-renderings save five have been identified by Mr. Meurs as German. It is thus a witness to the impression which the hymns and psalms of Germany made on the early Gosppers. [Psalms, English, § v.; English Hymnody, Early, iv.] [H. L. B.]

The following is a list of contents, the first lines of the German being given where the hymn is a translation:

1. "O Holy Spirit, hear my prayer." Ps. cxvi.
3. "Thou holy Spirit, we pray to thee." Nun bitten wir den heiligen Geist!
4. "God the Father, dwell with us." *Vater Unser, wohnt uns bei!
5. "These are the holy commandments ten." Diese sind dir heiligen zehn!

GOSPELS, HYMNS ON THE

GO. GUG GENGENWÄRTIG 443

1. "Jesus Christus won uns bey. "
2. "Hyeig geyst won uns bey."
3. "Heyig geyst won uns bey."
4. "Hyeig geyst won uns bey."

In the Erfurt Erwünschtd, 1526, it bears the title, "The hymn 'Gott der wahr won uns bey' improved and evangelically corrected." In Luther's form it spread to become popular, and Lauxmann, in Koch, vi, 102-104, relates many instances of its use at weddings, by the dying, in times of trouble, etc. It is given in Wackernagel, iii. p. 16, as quoted above; in Schircks ed. of Luther's Geistl. Lieder, 1854, p. 40, and in the Uran. L.S., 1851, No. 187. The tr. in C. U. ary:-

1. God the Father: with us be. Shield us all. A free. In 5 st. of 4 l., in J. Anderson's Hymns, from the German of Dr. M. L. 1847, p. 24 (1847, p. 46). From this, M. L. altered, and at st. iv. altered, were adopted as No. 450 in the Book of Hymns. 1853, and repeated in Kennedy, 1863.

2. God the Father. with us be. And, &c. In full, by T. R. Russel, as No. 1 in the App. to his Ps. & Hym., 1851.

3. O God, the Father! draw Thou nigh. In full, by Dr. M. Loy, in the Ohio Hym., 1880.

Translations not in C. U.-
(1) "God the Father, dwell with us," by L. K. (2) "O God, our Defence," by J. C. J. (3) "God and Christ, with us dwell," in the J. J. (4) "Our Father God! to Thee we pray," by J. J. (5) "Father, Thy dwelling be," by J. J. (6) "God the Father, with us," by J. J., etc.

Gott gegenwärtig, G. Tersteegen. [Public Worship.] Appears in his Geistliches Blumenärgeln, 1729, as No. 11, in Bk. III., in 8 st. of 10 l., entitled, "Remembrance of the glorious and delightful presence of God." It passed into Zinzendorf's Geistl. Lieder, 1731, No. 1150, has attained a use than any other of Tersteegen's hymns. It is found in most recent collections, as in the L. S. 1851, No. 359. It is a poetical reflex of his inner nature, a beautiful expression of the characteristics of his peculiar mystical piety. Lauxmann in Koch. viii, 355, calls it "A hymn of deepest adoration of the All Holy God, and a profound introduction to blessed fellowship with Him." Tr. as:-

1. O, God is here! Let us adore, by J. Wesley, in H. & Sacred Poems, 1749 (P. Works, 1848): vol. I., p. 167). 1, 2, tr. catching the spirit of the original, but rather free, in 6 st. of 11 l., in the W. Hb., 1780, No. 481 (1875, No. 494). The text is in Mercer's C. P. & H. Hb., 1857, 1862; but it is generally found in centos.

444 GOTT IST UND BLEIBT

Gott sei gelobet und gebenedeit. | M. Luther.
[Holy Communion.] St. t. dates from pre-Reformation times, was used at processions, during Mass as a post communion, and according to Bunsen (Versch., 1823, p. 583) was sung by the people after the Epistle on Corpus Christi Day. This form is given by Wackernagel, ii. p. 748, from Ludwig Trutbula’s Eucharistikon, 1524; and by Bunsen, i. p. 719, from the Cursus Scholasticus, 1546. Luther adopted this st., added a couplet, and pub. the hymn in Eucharistic, Erfurt, 1521 (tithen in Wackernagel, iii. p. 10), in 3 st. of 8 l., with two Kyrieleouss. Included in Schierke’s ed. of Luther’s Geistliche Lieder, 1851, p. 74, and as No. 271 in the Kehr. L. S., 1851. The tr. in C. U. are:

1. God be blessed, and God be praised. A paraphrase in 54 l., in Miss Fry’s Hymns of the Reformation, 1845, p. 93. Included, rewritten to 6 st. of 6 l., beginning, “Thou, who didst Thine Israel lead,” in J. Whittemore’s Suppl. to all H. Bk., 1860, and in Maurice’s Christl. H. Bk., 1861.

2. May God be praised henceforth, and best of ever! In full in Dr. Bassett’s M. Luther’s Spiritual Songs, 1854, p. 78, repeated in the Ohio Luth. Hym., 1880, No. 273, and in Dr. Bacon, 1884, p. 33.

Translation not in C. U.:

GOTT IST UND BLEIBT

W. Delamotte, as No. 134 in the Moraus. H. Bk., 1742, and repeated in later ed. (1836, No. 636, reading “The Lamb was slain”). Mainly taken from Wesley’s tr. Included in varying forms in J. A. Latrobe’s tr., 1841; in Walker’s Calvlns. H. Bk., 1855; and Reid’s Praise Bk., 1872.

God reveals his presence, by F. W. Porter and J. Miller, as No. 813 in the Moraus. H. Bk., 1789 (1866, No. 649), being a good tr. of st. i., ii., iii., vii., viii. The form in C. U. is that given to it by W. Mercer, in his C. P. & H. Bk., 1855, No. 297 (Or. ed., No. 426). He retained 13 lines as in the original tr., slightly altered 5, and rewrote the rest (with little regard to the German), omitting st. iv. altogether. This text is in J. L. Porter’s Colls., 1876; Ch. Praise, 1885; Free Ch. H. Bk., 1882; Irish Ch. Hym., 1873; New Zealand Hym., 1870; Lodges Union, N. Y., 1884; Canadian Praise. H. Bk., 1880, &c.

“The Lord is here; then let us bow before Him,” by Miss Dunn, 1887, p. 16.

Gott ist und bleibt getreu.  [Trust in God!] Founded on 1 Cor. x. 13. Included as No. 302 in J. H. Haukecker’s Kirchen-Echo, Helmstedt and Magdeburg, 1805, in 5 st. of 4 l., without much of author’s rendering. No. 55 in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1803. It has been ascribed to Dr. Johann Christian Wilhelm (sometimes advocate under the Hassian administration and syndic of Giessen), but is not included among the hymns in the Ein- und. B., 1721, given as by him in Witzel, iii. 428; and no trustworthy evidence of his authorship has been added. Tr. as:

God is for ever true! His loving. A tr. of st. i.-iv., by M. W. Strzyker, in his Hymn. Verses, 1883, p. 34, repeated as No. 167 in his Christn. Chorals, 1885.

Gott ruft noch, sollt ich nicht endlich hören. G. Tersteegen.  [Advent.] A beautiful hymn on God’s gracious call to turn to Him; and what our answer should be. Founded on Ps. cxv. 7. 1st pub. in the 2nd ed. 1785, of his Geistliches Blumen-spättelein, Bk. iii., No. 52, in 8 st. of 4 l., entitled, “Today if ye will hear His voice.” Included as No. 629 in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1803. Tr. as:

God calling yet! and shall I never hear Him! A tr. by Mrs. Franklin, in the 2nd Ser., 1855, of the L. L. p. 58 (1884, p. 116); and repeated as No. 553 in Holy Song, 1869. In America it has been somewhat widely used in the form given to it in the Andover Sabbath H. Bk., 1858, No. 556. Here the tr. of st. v. was omitted and the rest reduced to L.M., beginning, “God calling yet!—shall I not hear.” The text of 1858 has been adopted in full in the Dutch Ref. Hym. of the Church, 1869; Bapt. H. Bk., 1871; Presb. H. Bk., 1874; H. & Songs of Praise, N. Y., 1874; Meth. Episc. Coll., 1878; and others. Omitting st. iv. it appears in Hatfield’s Ch. H. Bk., 1872; Oberlin Manual, 1880; Ch. Praise Bk., 1882, &c.

In the Pennsylvania Luth. Ch. Bk., 1868, the full text of 1858 is included, with the addition of a recast of st. v.

J. M.

Gott verlässt die Seinen nicht!  [Cross and Consolation.] Included as No. 1251 in the Brethren G. B., 1743, in 3 st. of 6 l.; repeated in the ed. 1746, No. 128; in both cases without name of author. Tr. as:

God doth not leave His own. A full and good tr. by Miss Warner in her H. of the Ch. Militant, 1858 (1861, p. 480). Included in the Christian H. Bk., Cincinnati, 1865, No. 802; in Pruss’s Suppl. H. Bk., Lond., 1868, No. 11; and in Dale’s Englisht H. Bk., 1875, No. 597. [J. M.]

Gottor, Ludwig Andreas, s. of Johann Christian Gottor, Court preacher and Superintendent at Gotha, was b. at Gotha, May 26, 1661. He was at first privy secretary and then Hofrath at Gotha, where he d. Sept. 19, 1733. He was a pious, spiritual-minded man, with tendencies towards Pietism, and one of the best hymn-writers of the period. Of his printed hymns the earliest appeared in the Geistreiches G. B., Halle, 1697. Of the 23 included in Freylinghausen's Geistreiches G. B., 1704, and Neuer geistreiches G. B., 1714, seven have been tr. into English, besides his version of J. W. Petersen's "Salve, crux beata, salve" (q.v.). J. C. Wetzeli, who had become acquainted with him during a visit Gott made to Kornthul in 1733, mentions a compiled version of the Psalter (printed in his Library at Wernigerode) by him, and quotes from his tr. the first lines of 42 hymns still unprinted (Wetzeli's A H. ii. 22-30; Koch, iv. 400-402; Ally, Deutsche Begr. ix. 465). Of his hymns those tr. into English are:

i. In English C. U.:

ii. Erquick mich, du Heil der Sunder. [The Great Physician.] On the Gospel for the 3rd S. in Advent (St. Matt. xi.), turning it into a prayer for cures of our moral nature similar to the miracles of physical healing there recorded. In Freylinghausen, 1714, No. 771, in 10 st. of 6 l., and in Knapp's Er. L. & S. 1837, No. 196. The only tr. in C. U. is:

Saviour of sinners, now revive us, of st. i., lii., v., x., by Miss Borthwick, as No. 236, in Dr. Pagenstecher's Coll., 1864.

iii. Treuer Vater, deine Liebe. [True and False Christianity.] 1697, as above, p. 608, in 23 st. of 6 l., repeated in Freylinghausen, 1704; and in Porst's G. B., 1713 (1835, No. 324). The only tr. in C. U. is:

Father, Thine eternal kindness, omitting st. i., in J. C. Jacob's Ps. & Ger., 1720, p. 3, considerably altered in his ed., 1722, p. 50, and 1732, p. 78; and from this 8 st. were included as No. 542 in pt. i. of the Moravian H. Bk., 1754. The tr. of st. xii., xiii., altered from the 1732, and beginning "Has temptation well won me," were included in the Scottish Evangelical H. Bk., 1856, and in Dr. J. Petersen's Coll., Glasgow, 1867.

iv. Womit soll ich dich wohl leben. [Praise and Thanksgiving.] A beautiful hymn of Thanksgiving (founded on Ps. 91, 9), for the special ways by which God in his love and goodness had led us, and of trust in the continuance of His love to the end. 1697, as above, p. 577, in 14 st. of 6 l., and the refrain (altered from Homburg's "Jesus mein Lebens Leben.")

"Tannen, Lausen Mal sei dir, Grosse Kniele, dank dir."

v. Leutemann, in Koch, viii. 304-9, relates that st. iv. was adopted as a thanksgiving by the German Missionaries in Abyssinia on their deliverance by the capture of a narrow escape from one of his journeys in Abyssinia; and that the hymn, with its Swedish melody, was played by the trumpeters from the tower of St. George, on the 14th of July 1783, at the ceremony of the unveiling of the statue erected to his memory in Tanger.

The only tr. in C. U. is:

Lord of Hosts, how shall I render. A good and full tr. in Dr. J. Guthrie's Sacred Lyrics, 1899, p. 131; and from this st. i., ii., iv., x., xii., xiv., were included as No. 50 in the Hymn H. Bk., 1871.

Another tr. in "By J. C. Jacob, 1732, p. 157, with what favour of devotion," vi. Hymn 2 not in English C. U.:

vii. Gough, Benjamin

Gough, Benjamin, was b. at Southborough, Kent, in 1803, and d. Nov. 28, 1877. He was engaged in mercantile pursuits in London for some years. After retiring from business he resided at Mountfield, East Sussex. He was a member and lay preacher of the Wesleyan denomination. His poetical works include:

(1) Lyra Sabbatica, Lon. 1865; (2) Kentish Lyrics, Lon., 1867; (3) Hymns of Prayer and Praise, Lon., 1873; and several minor publications. He was the most important of (4) Protestant Hymns & Songs for Millton. Lon., 1878; (5) Songs from the Woodlands, and other Poems, Lon., 1872; and (6) Christmas Carols and New Year's Songs, Lon. (n.d.).

Of Mr. Gough's hymns, about 20 are in C. U. v. G. Britain and America, and of these the most popular and widely used is "Awake, Awake, O Zion," v.s. Although possessing many features of popularity, his hymns do not rank high as literary productions. His works are also marked by numerous and facile imitations of the great lyrics of the Church. Many of his earlier hymns were rewritten for his Hymns of Prayer & Praise, very much to their discredit. In addition to those which are annotated under their first lines the following are in C. U.:

1. Be thou faithful unto death. Faithfulness. Appeared in his Lyra Sabbatica, Lon., 1865, P. 77, in 3 st. of 4 l., and entitled "Christian Fidelity." It was transferred to the People's H. and again, in 1875, to the New M. Hymnal, No. 151.

2. Blessed are the dead who die. Burial. Appeared in his Lyra Sabbatica, 1865, p. 89, in 4 st. of 4 1., and entitled "For the dead in Christ." In H. Bk. H. Bk., N. Y., 1872, it is slightly altered.

3. Christ is risen from the dead. Easter. In Lyra Sabbatica, 1866, p. 96, in 4 st. of 4 l., as an Easter Hymn, but in his Hymns of Prayer & Praise, 1878, p. 49, this is changed to "An Easter Hymn.", in the New M. Hymnal, 1875, st. iv., v., are omitted.

5. Come to Bethlehem and see. Christmas. Appeared in his Christmas Carols, Lon., 1876, p. 21, in 5 st. of 4 l. In the New M. Hymnal, 1875, No. 26, it is dated 1873.

7. God the Father, full of grace. Holy Trinity, or Public Worship. Appeared in his Kentish Lyrics, 1867, p. 91, in 4 st. of 4 l.; and rewritten in a far less acceptable form in his Hymns of Prayer & Praise, 1875, in 4 st. of 4 l. No. 21 in the Meth. S. S. H. Bk., 1879, is from the 1867 text.

8. Ho, every one that thirsteth. Invitation. Pub. in his Lyra Sabbatica, 1865, p. 83, in 4 st. of 4 l. Ho, ye thirsting saints, altered to its disadvantage, in his Hymns of Prayer & Praise, 1875, p. 33, in 5 st. of 4 l. No. 201 in the Meth. S. S. H. Bk., 1879, is from the 1867 text.

10. In Thy temple we adore Thee, gentle, pure, and holy Child. Christmas. In his Christmas Carol, &c., 3rd ed., p. 30, in 3 st. of 4 double lines. In the New Metre-Hymnal, 1875, No. 20, it is dated 1873, and begins, "In Thy cradle we adore Thee.

11. Jesus, full of love divine. Face of Jesus. Written in 1874, and pub. in the New Metre-Hymnal, 1875, No. 84.

12. Lift the gospel banner. Missions. This is attributed to B. Gough, on the authority of Mrs. Gough. It is not in his published works, and its first appearance is unknown. In the Met. S. S. H. Rk., 1879, No. 394, it is in 4 st. of 4 l.

13. O Jesus, behold the lamb of Thy fold. Sunday. From his Lyra Sabbatica, 1865, p. 193, in 9 st. of 3 l. into the Met. S. S. H. Rk., 1879, No. 511, with the omission of st. 11.

14. Quicken, Lord, Thy Church and me. Whit-Sunday. Appeared in his Lyra Sabbatica, 1865, p. 16, in 6 st. of 4 l., and in his Hymns of Prayer & Praise, 1873, p. 65; and headed "For another Pentecost." It is No. 353, in Steeple's S. G. & G., 1872.

15. Sing we merrily to God. Praise. Appeared in his Lyra Sabbatica, 1865, p. 65, in 5 st. of 4 l., and his Hymns of Prayer & Praise, 1873, p. 27. In the New Metre-Hymnal, 1878, No. 128, st. III. is omitted.

16. There is a land of rest. Heaven. From his Lyra Sabbatica, 1865, p. 105, in 4 st. of 4 l. into the New Metre-Hymnal, 1875, No. 156, where it is appointed for St. Mark's Day.

17. There is no condemnation. Peace. In his Lyra Sabbatica, 1865, p. 28, and his Hymns of Prayer & Praise, 1873, p. 23, in 3 st. of 4 l., and is headed "No Condemnation." In Steeple's S. G. & G., 1872, it is No. 567.

18. Uplift the blood-red banner. Missions. In his Lyra Sabbatica, 1865, p. 155, and his Hymns of Prayer & Praise, 1875, p. 37, in 4 st. of 4 l., and is headed "For the Conversion of the World." It is No. 409 in the People's H., 1877; No. 88 in the New Metre-Hymnal, 1878, &c.

Gould, Sabine Baring. [Baring-Gould, Sabine.]

Grace, J. Frances, a nom de plume of Mrs. Van Alynne (q. v.)

Grace, 'tis a charming sound. P. Doddridge. [Salvation by Grace.] 1st pub. in his (posthumous) Hymns, &c., by J. Orton, in 1753, in 4 st. of 4 l., as follows:

1. Grace! 'tis a charming Sound, Harmonious to my Ear. heav'n with the Echo shall resound, And all the earth shall hear.
2. Grace first contriv'd a Way To save rebellious Man, And all the Spheres that Grace display, Which drew the world's Plan.
3. Grace taught my wandering Feet To tread the heavy Road, And new Supplies each Hour I meet, While pressing on to God.
4. Grace all the Work shall crown This everlasting Day, It shines in heav'n the topmost Stone, And well deserves the Praise.

This text was repeated in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the Hymns, &c., 1839, with the change in st. 1, l. 2, of "my ear," to "mine ear."

In his Ps. & Hymns, 1776, A. M. Toplady gave a cento as No. 134 which was thus composed:

1. Doddridge, st. 1., with l. 2, "the ear" for "my ear."
2. Doddridge, st. 2.
3. Toplady: -
4. "Twas grace that wrote my name In thy eternal book; "Twas grace that gave me to the Lamb, Who all my sorrows took."

Graces, Metrical. The Jewish and Early Christian "blessings" and "giving thanks" at meal-times were in prose, the metrical forms in use at the present time being of later origin. Our Lord's custom was evidence alike of what was a common practice in Jewish families, and of His sanction of the same. When He fed the multitude He "looked up to heaven and blessed and brake the loaves" (St. Matt. xiv. 19; St. Mark vi. 41; St. Luke ix. 16) "and gave thanks" (St. Matt. xv. 36; St. Mark viii. 6; St. John vi. 11). This practice was continued by the Apostles (see 1 Tim. iv. 3-6) and by their immediate successors. In the Apostolic Constitutions (c. 47) there is "A prayer at Dinner-time," which Mr. Chatfield has translated as:

"Thou art blessed, O Lord, Who nourishest me from my youth. Who givest food to all flesh, Fill our hearts with joy and gladness, That at all times having all sufficiency, We may abound to every good work In Christ Jesus our Lord: With Whom to Thee (be) glory, honour, and might For ever and ever, Amen."

2. The early Fathers, Clement of Alexandria, St. Cyprian, St. Basil, Tertullian, St. Chrysostom, and others, give evidence in their writings that the Grace was a common institution in the early Church. This fact is emphasised by the presence of short Graces in the Gelasian and Gallican Sacramentaries. In the "Additional Services," appended to the Modern Roman Breviary, the "Grace before and after Meat" has developed into a somewhat elaborate service, with special provision for certain days and seasons. This retention of the mediaval practice is also maintained in a more or less complete form in several Colleges and Grammar Schools throughout the country. A list of School Prayers and Graces is given in the Rev. J. W. Hewett's Bibliotheca Sacra Academica, Lond. Rivingtons, Pt. ii. Prose Graces are given in the A. B. C. catechisms and Prayers, in various editions from 1545 to 1779; and Prose and Metrical Graces in Latin by Melancthon and others in the Praelectiones Fines, 1588.

3. Metrical Graces, somewhat in the form of the modern Grace, does not seem to have come into general use until the Reformation. In Henry the Eighth's Primer, 1545, they come into prominence, and from that period they form part of every English Primer. Several of these are in Dr. Burton's Three Prayers of the Reign of Henry VIII, 1602; in Clay's Liturgies of 1549 and 1552, &c., 1844, and in his editions of the Elizabethan Liturgical Services, 1847; and Private Prayers, 1851 (Parker Society). As a specimen of these Graces we append two from some fragments in our possession of a last edition of the Elizabethan Primer. The first is the "Grace after Dinner," and reads:

"Now You have well refreshed your bodies, remember the lamentable affliction and miseries of ye thousands of your neighbours and brethren in Christ visited by the hand of God, some with mortal Plagues and diseases, some with imprisonment, and diseases, some with extreme poverty, and necessities, so that e'yer they cannot or they have not to feed or as you have done, remember therefore how much and how deeply ye presenters are bound to the goodness of God for your health, wealth, liturgy, and many other his beneficences given unto you.

"Take heed ye never abuse the same, Give thanks to God for everything, And alway praise his holy name. Who does not so is sore to blame. No outh example see that ye gone.

"To do the Lord's worde teach ye to lyere.

"It will be noted that the whole grace is really horatious, and this is characteristic of this edition of the Primer in which the daily confession and absolution are given for private use in the singular number, the penitent being self-absorbed.

The second, the "Grace before Supper," is unfortunately incomplete, but its rhymed portion, so far as preserved, runs thus:

"Give thanks to God with one accord.
For that which is set on this bower,
And be not careful what to sake,
But will you feed faster and cherish,
Take it in worth that he hath sent..."

4. The two Metrical Graces which have taken the greatest hold on the Church throughout all English-speaking countries are those by John Conwuy which appeared in his Sacred Hymns for the Children of God, In the Days of their Pilgrimage, London, 1741, p. 198, as follows:

"HYMN CXXX.
Before Meat.
Be present at our Table, Lord,
Be holy, and Evil Where abidest,
May feast in Paradise with Thee.

"HYMN CXXXI.
After Meat.
We bless thee, Lord, for this our Food,
For Jesus's Flesh and Blood;
The Living Bread sent down from Heaven;
With Life and Plenty we enjoy;
To worthy we adore thy Name.

The modern form of the second Grace dates from Bickerstaff's Christian Psalmody, 1833 (possibly earlier), where it reads:

"We bless thee, Lord, for this our food,
May Man's life for Jesus's blood.
The bread of life sent down from heaven,
This grace has undergone slight changes.

5. In William Hammond's (q.r.) Ps., Hymns, and Spiritual Songs, 1745, p. 310, there is a Grace for use "At Meals," in 3 st. of 8 l., which might be utilized with advantage. The opening stanza is:

"Thee let us taste in all our food,
And bless the tree grace,
Always confess that Thou art good.
And always sing Thy praise.
Jesus, Thou art the living Bread.
This grace which came from heaven.
For as Thy precious blood was shed,
For as Thy life was given."

"This grace would furnish a cento of more than usual merits.

6. The Wesleyan Graces are many, and of some importance. It is to the Nonjurors and other influences on the Wesley brothers that the development of the English Metrical Graces are mainly due. John Wesley taught the duty of "saying Grace," and Charles Wesley provided somewhat extensively for its observance. As early as 1739 Graces were given in their Hymns and Sacred Poems. Others appeared in their Hymns and Sacred Poems, 1742; the Hymns for Children, 1763; and the Hymns for Families, 1767. In addition a special tract of 26 Graces was published in 1746. The contents of this tract are:

i. Grace before Meat.
1. Praise Him Who by His word.
2. Thankful for our every blessing.
3. Thanks be to God, Whose truth we prove.
4. Thee, Father, Son, and Spirit, we.
5. When shall we see the day?

Several of these are given in whole or in part in the Wes. H. Bk., 1875. Other Graces, by C. Wesley, which have come into C. U. are:

i. From Hymns & Sacred Poems, 1739.
1. Beating of beings, God of love.
2. Father, accept our sacrifice.
3. Father, earth and heaven.
4. Jesus, to whom alone we give.
5. Jesus, we Thy promise plead.
6. Life of the world, come down.
7. Lord of all, Thy creation see.
8. O Father of all, Who brightest with good.
10. Perverse for hunger, L
11. Waiting for the Comforter.
12. At, or After Meat.
1. And can we forbear, In taking our food?
2. And can we forget, In tasting our meat?
3. Away with all our trouble.
4. Blessing to God, for ever blest.
5. Father, Friend of human race.
6. Father, through Thy Son receive.
7. Father, we render Thee Thine own.
8. Glory (land), love, and praise, and honour.
10. O God of all grace, Thy bounty we praise.
11. Praise Him Who by His word.
12. Thankful for our every blessing.
13. Thanks be to God, Whose truth we prove.
14. Thee, Father, Son, and Spirit, we.
15. When shall we see the day?

Several of these are given in whole or in part in the Wes. H. Bk., 1875. Other Graces, by C. Wesley, which have come into C. U. are:

i. From Hymns & Sacred Poems, 1739.
1. Being of beings, God of love.
2. Father, accept our sacrifice.
3. Father, earth and heaven.
4. Jesus, to whom alone we give.
5. Jesus, we Thy promise plead.
6. Life of the world, come down.
7. Lord of all, Thy creation see.
8. O Father of all, Who brightest with good.
10. Perverse for hunger, L
11. Waiting for the Comforter.

ii. From Hymns & Sacred Poems, 1742.
1. Father, His Thine each day to yield.
2. Father, His Thine each day to yield.
3. Father, His Thine each day to yield.
4. For my life, and clothes, and food.
5. Give Him then, and every grace.
6. Give Him then, and every grace.
7. O'erwhelm'd with blessings from above.

v. From the Poetical Works, 1863-72.
Gracious Lord, incline Thine ear.

W. Hammond. [Christ desired.] 1st pub. in his Ps. & Hymns, 1745, p. 258, in 10 st. of 4 lines, and headed “I am sick of love. Cant. ii. 5,” the opening stanza reading:

“I am sick of love. Cant. ii. 5,”

The form of the hymn is in use amongst the Baptists, both in England and America. Another form in 6 st. (omitting st. ii., vi., vii., ix.) was given in Bickersteth’s Christ. Psalmody, 1833, No. 614, with st. i. as:

“I am sick of love. Cant. ii. 5,”

This form of the hymn is in limited use in the Church of England. [J. J.]

Gracious Lord, our children see.

W. Cooper. [Prayer on behalf of Children.] 1st pub. in the Olney Hymns, 1719, Bk. ii., No. 12, in 3 st. of 8 l., entitled “A Prayer for Children,” and signed “C.” Its use in G. Britain is somewhat limited, but in America it is found in numerous collections. The reading of st. i.

“Gracious God, our children see.” dates from Bickersteth’s Christ. Psalmody, 1833. [J. J.]
GRACIOUS SOUL, TO WHOM

Jane E. Leson, 1842; J. Keble, 1857. [E. miss. and s. miss.]

The use of this cento in all English-speaking countries is very great. The opening line sometimes reads, “Gracious Saviour, holy Shepherd,” but this form is not received with general favour.

[J. J.]

Gracious soul, to whom are given. C. Wesley. [Resignation.] Appeared in the Hys. & Sac. Poems, 1740, in 11 st. of 4 l., and based on the words, “Blessed are they that mourn.” (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 330.) As given in A Select Collection of Hymns, Episco. Hymnal, 1875, No. 487, in the order named. The cento, “Gracious soul, to whom are given,” in the American Unitarian Hys. of the Spirit, 1864, is also from this hymn. [J. J.]

Gracious Spirit, Dove divine. J. Stocker. [Whitsuntide.] This hymn 1st appeared in the Gospel Magazine, July 1777, in 6 st. of 4 l., and entitled, “To God the Holy Ghost,” as follows:

1. Gracious Spirit, Dove divine,
   Thy sweet Light within me shine;
   All my guilty fears remove;
   Fill me full of heav’n and love.

2. Speak Thy pardoning Grace to me;
   Set the burden’d spirit free;
   Lead me to the Lamb of God;
   Wash me in His precious Blood.

3. Life and Peace to me impart;
   Seal Salvation on my Heart;
   Breathe thyself into my Breast;
   Earnest of immortal Rest.

4. Let me never from thee stray;
   Keep me in the narrow Way;
   Fill my soul with joy divine;
   Keep me, Lord, for ever thine.

5. Grant me round, o’er every side;
   Safe me from self-righteous pride;
   Me with Jesus’ Mind inspire;
   Meet me with celestial Fire.

6. Then my cross and sin consume;
   Let thy inward Kingdom come;
   All my Prayer and Praise suggest;
   Bless and reign within my breast.

This is also given in full in Sedgwick’s reprint of Stocker’s Hys. & Spiritual Poems, &c., 1861, p. 7. In Glazebrooke’s Coll., 1st 1-4 were given as “Gracious Spirit, power divine.” This was repeated as from “Glazebrooke’s C.” in the Williams & Boden Coll., 1851, No. 143. This was again repeated in J. Dobell’s New Selection, &c., 1865, and later collections, and has become the recognised form of the hymn, the only alteration of the original being that of “Dove” to “love divine,” in the opening line. Various alterations of the text are also in C. U., both in G. Britain and America, one, as “Gracious Spirit, power divine,” being No. 1540 in Kennedy, 1863, and a second, “Holy Spirit, love divine,” in Powell’s Hys. & Anthems, &c., 1881. These alterations may be ascertained by a collation with the original, as above. The hymn in its various forms is very popular, and is in extensive use in all English-speaking countries. [J. J.]

Gracious Spirit, dwell with me. T. Lynheh. [Whitsuntide.] 1st pub. in his work, The Rival, a Contribution to Sacred Song, 1833, p. 78, in 6 st. of 6 l. It was brought into congregational use through the Bapt. Ps. & Hys., 1858. From that date it has steadily increased in popularity in G. Britain and America, and is given in full or in part in numerous hymn-books, especially those in use by Nonconformists. [J. J.]

Gracious Spirit, Holy Ghost. Bp. C. Wordsworth of Lincoln. [Quintuplet.]—Love. 1st pub. in his Holy Year, 1st ed., 1862, in 8 st. of 4 l., and appointed for Quintuplet, being a metrical paraphrase of the Epistle for that day. It is found in full or in an abbreviated form in several collections, including some of the Public Schools, and a few in American C. U. In Martineau’s Hymns, 1873, it begins, “Mighty Spirit, Gracious Guide.” [J. J.]

Gradual. An anthem sung between the Epistle and Gospel with certain variations in form and use in Lent and Easter. which need not be described here. It is called the Gradual because it is sung either from one of the altar steps, or from one of the lower steps of the ambo into which the Deacon ascended to read the gospel. It was usually taken, with its verses, from the Book of Psalms, but occasionally from some other source. We subjoin a specimen of a metrical Gradual, for the Votive Mass of St. Sebastian, taken from the Sarum Missal.

O Sancte Sebastian, Christi martyr egregie, Cujus meritis tota Lombardia Fuit liberata a pestis mortiferis, Libera nos ab ipso et a maligno boste. Alleluia.
O Sancte Sebastian, Nos trentuus Ac fletus Impiorum tuum elemens auxilium Ut poetis mortiferis Per te postra mortiferas Apud Christum remedium.”

[Burnet and Ell., 1841, p. 894.]

Grant, James, b. probably in Edinburg, but date unknown, and d. there on Jan. 1st, 1785. An ironmonger by trade, he carried on his business in West Bow, Edinburgh. From 1746 to 1752 he held several offices of importance in the Town Council of Edinburgh. Amongst several works of benevolence which received his aid the Orphan Hospital in Edinburgh was specially favoured, and to it the profits of the 1st and 2nd. ed. of his Hymn, &c., were given. These hymns and poems were mainly written to popular Scottish melodies, and were pub. as:

original Hymns and Poems, written by a Private Citizen for his own use, and Published at the earnest desire of Friends. Edinburgh, 1741. (2nd ed., 1829, and a reprint by B. Sedgwick, Lond., 1862.)

Of the hymns the best known is “O Zion, afflicted with wave upon wave.” (God’s Unchangeable Love.) It appeared as Hymn xvi. in the Original Hymns, &c., 1741, in 7 st. of 4 l., and is found in several modern collections, including the New Cant., 1809, No. 610, and others.

Grant, Sir Robert, second s. of Mr. Charles Grant, sometime M.P. for Inverness, and a Director of the East India Company. was b. in 1783, and educated at Cambridge, where he graduated in 1806. Called to the English Bar in 1807, he became M.P. for Inverness in 1826; a Privy Councillor in 1831; and Governor of Bombay, 1834. He died at Dapoorie, in Western India, July 9, 1838. As a hymn-writer of great merit he is well and favourably known. His hymns, "O worship the King"; "Saviour, when in dust to Thee"; and "When gathering clouds around I view," are widely used in all English-speaking countries. Some of those which are least known are marked by the same graceful perfection and deep and tender feeling. The best of his hymns were contributed to the Christian Observer, 1806-1815, under the signature of "E.-y., D. R."; and to Elliott's Psalms & Hymns, Brightom, 1835. In the Ps. & Hys., those which were taken from the Christian Observer were rewritten by the author (see Preface). The year following his death his brother, Lord Glencig, gathered 12 of his hymns and poems together, and put them as:

Sacred Poems. By the late Right Hon. Sir Robert Grant. London, Saunders & Otley, Cornhill Street, 1839. It was reprinted in 1844 and in 1849.

This volume is accompanied by a short "Notice," dated "London, June 18, 1839." [J. J.]

Granted is the Saviour's prayer. C. Wesley. [Whitsuntide.] 1st pub. in the Hys. and Soc. Poems, 1739, in 10 st. of 4 l., as a "Hymn for Whitsunday." (P. Works, 1868-1872, vol. 1, p. 188.) It was repeated by A. M. Toplady in his Ps. & Hys., 1776, No. 351, and in a few modern collections, including the Hymnary, 1872, the Ps. & Hys., 1875, in an abridged form. The cento, "Come, divinly peaceful guest," in the Songs for the Sanctuary, N. Y., 1865, and others, is from this hymn, and begins with st. vi. Another cento, beginning with st. iii. "God, the ever last God," is No. 175 in The College Hymnal, N. Y., 1876. [J. J.]

Grateful notes and numbers bring. [Thanksgiving.] This hymn appeared in the Christian Magazine, Feb., 1766, as "A New Ode as sung by the Women at the Magdalen Chapel," in 7 st. of 4 l., without signature, and with many repetitions and choruses as the parts were divided between the "First and Second Galleries." The following, omitting repetitions, is the text:

Grates, peracto jam die. C. Coffin. [Evening.] Appeared in the Paris Breviary, 1736, as the hymn for the day after the Presentation to Ash Wednesday, at Compline on Sundays and Ferial days, except when the office of the B. V. M. is said. Also under the same rule from Trinity to Advent. In Coffin's Hymni Sacri, 1736, p. 97, it is given with the heading, "Ad Complorium post Trinitatem." Text in Card. Newman's Hymnal Ecclesiastic, 1838 (ed. 1865, p. 7). [W. A. S.]

Trans. in C U:

1. And now the day is past and gone. Holy God, &c. By L. Williams, in his Hymns tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839, p. 11, in 5 st. of 4 l. In 1852 it was given, with alterations, in the English Hymnal, No. 16. In the editions of 1856 and 1861, the text is again altered. Another altered text was given as "Another day is past and gone; O God," &c., in Kennedy's, 1863, No. 839, in 2 st. of 12 l. This text with the omission of st. 1, l. 12-13, and "Where golden harps," for "And golden harps," st. ii, l. 8, in the Irish Church Hymn, 1873, No. 18.
2. The day is past and gone. By W. J. Blew, 1st printed about 1850 for use in his church, and then included in his Church H. & T. Bk., 1852, "From Trinity to Advent," No. 8, in 6 st. of 4 l. It is partly from I. Williams's tr. above. In the Hymnary, 1872, No. 88, it is given with alterations and the omission of st. iv. The full text is No. 97 in Rice's Hymns, &c., 1870, Chope, 1864, repeats the text of 1 st. ed., 1857.

3. The day is past, and still we live. By R. Campbell, 1st pub. in his Hymns of Anthems, 1850, p. 33, in 5 st. of 4 l. This was given in the Scottish Episco. Coll., 1858, as No. 13.

4. Our thanks for this completed day. By J. D. Chambers, in his Lawful Spn., 1857, p. 33, in 5 st. of 4 l.; in Martinu'm's Hymns of Prayer & Praise, 1873, No. 573 is this tr. with slight alterations, and the omission of the doxology.

Translations not in C. U.:

And now the day is past and gone, We sing & c. J. Chambers, 1857.

Gray, Thomas

Gray, Thomas, jun., M.D., was b. at Jamaica Plain Roxbury, Massachusetts, F. b. 1808, and educated at Harvard College, where he graduated in 1823. After visiting England and the Continent he took his M.D. in 1827, and commenced the practice of medicine in Boston, U.S.A. He subsequently exchanged the practice of medicine for that of teaching, and was lectured at the Boston Medical Institution. March 6, 1849. His hymns were mainly written for children, and for occasional services. They are of more than ordinary merit, and are much used by the Unitarians, of which body Dr. Gray was a member. They include:—

1. Good-night, good-night, our song is said. Evening. Popular with children.

2. Jehovah! at Thine awful throne. Ordination. Written for the Ordination of Mr. George Whitney as Pastor of the Second Church and Society in Roxbury, June 15, 1831.

5. We come in childhood's innocence. Opening of a Sunday School. Given in Gray's Sunday School Coll., 1844.

For these details we are indebted to Putnam's Singers and Songs of the Liberal Faith, 1874, pp. 171-176. [J. J.]

Great and glorious Father, humbly we adore Thee. Bp. W. W. How, [Holy Communion.] The note to this hymn in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, folio ed., p. xli., is—"Written in 1660 with a view of setting forth each of the various aspects of the Holy Communion—Our unworthiness to draw near (1); the Memorial before God (2); the Memorial before Man (3); Christ pleading His Passion for us above, yet present in His Sacrament (4); the receiving of the Heavenly Food (5); the offering of ourselves (6); the Angelic worship (7); adoration of the glorified Saviour (8)."

In 1871 it was included in the Church Hymns, with the tune "Oswestry," composed for it by Dr. Dykes. Since 1871 it has passed into several hymn-books in G. Britain, and into one or two in America. [J. J.]

Great Author of my being. C. Wesley, [Death desired.] 1st pub. in his Hymns and Sac. Poems, 1749, vol. ii., in 8 st. of 8 l., as the third hymn of several on "Desiring Death." (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. v., p. 292.) In 1825 J. Montgomery included a cento therefrom in his Christian Psalmist, No. 388, but this has not come into C. U. Another cento is No. 574 in the American Sabbath H. Bk., 1858, and later editions. Both centos begin "Great Author," &c. [J. J.]

Great Creator, Who this day. Julia Anne Elliott, [Sunday.] Contributed to her husband's Ps. & Hymns, 1835, in 8 st. of 4 l., in the 1st ed. it was given without signature, but in later editions her initials "L. A. E." were added. It is in C. U. in G. Britain and America. In Kennedy, 1863, the original is given with one slight change as No. 898; and also in a much altered form beginning, "Father, Who the light this day," as No. 1437. [J. J.]

Great Father of each perfect gift. P. Doddridge, [Whitsun.] This hymn is No. 89 of the D. MSS., but is unlisted. It was 1st pub. in J. Orton's (posthumous) ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1765, No. 251, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed, "The descent of the Spirit, or His influence desired," Acts x. 41. It was also repeated in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 276. There are slight differences in the text of each, but that of Orton is commonly received as the original. The hymn is in several important collections in G. Britain and America. In the American Baptist Praise Bk., 1871, No. 522, it begins, "Great Father of our feeble race." [J. J.]

Great First of beings, Mighty Lord. S. Browne, [Creation.] 1st pub. in his Hymns and Spiritual Songs, 1720, and repeated in later editions, as No. 39, in 8 st. of 4 l., and headed, "All things made for God." In the American Baptist Praise Bk., 1826, 6 st. were given as No. 5, and this arrangement (sometimes with further omissions) is also found in other American collections. [J. J.]

Great Formor of this various frame. P. Doddridge, [N. Year.] This is No. 82 of the D. MSS., is dated, "Jan. 1, 1729," and headed, "The mutability of Creation, and the immutability of God." It was 1st pub. by J. Orton in his (posthumous) ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., No. 64, in 6 st. of 4 l., and with the same heading; and again, with slight variations, in the text, by J. D. Humphreys, in his ed. of the same, 1839, No. 67. Although in C. U. in G. Britain and America, it is not so popular as many of Doddridge's hymns. [J. J.]

Great God, and wilt Thou condescend? Ann Gilbert, [To God the Father.] 1st pub. in A. & J. Taylor's Hymns for Infant Minds, 1810, No. 5, in 5 st. of 4 l. (ed. 1886, p. 10). It is entitled, "Our Father, which art in heaven." For many years it was received as the production of Jane Taylor; but now, on the authority of Mrs. Gilbert's Memorials, it is rightly assigned to the latter. It is of this hymn that her biographer writes:

"It may not be too much to say that the manner of the Divine Teacher has been seldom more nearly approached. Such might have been the little child whom He set in the midst. In such words might the most mature Christian address his Father in heaven." Memorials, 1874, vol. i., p. 224.

This is the most popular of Mrs. Gilbert's hymns, and is in extensive use in all English-speaking countries. [J. J.]

Great God, as seasons disappear. E. Butcher, [Harvest.] This hymn is adapted to Sermon xvi., in 6 st. of 4 l., in his Sermons to which are added suitable Hymns, 1798. It is found in two forms, the first chiefly in the Nonconformist collections, including Bp. Ps. and Hymns, 1838; Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1866, No. 1033, and others; and the second in several hymn-books of the Church of England. The text in the latter, as found in Bp. Bickersteth's Ps. & Hymns, 1858; Harland's Ch. Psalter, &c., is much altered, and dates from Bickersteth's Christ. Psalmody, 1833. [J. J.]

Great God, indulge my humble claim. I. Watts, [Ps. Ex.,] 1st pub. in his Psalms of David, &c., 1719, in 8 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Longing after God; or, The love of God better than life." In modern hymn-books it is given as follows:

1. The original text in full to a limited number of collections.
2. The cento given in some of the Methodist hym-
GREAT GOD, NOW

Great God, now condescend. J. Fellows. [Holy Baptism.] Appeared in his Infant's Deed, to God, not Baptised, 1775, No. 22, in 7 st. of 4 l. In 1787, 5 stanzas were given in Rippon's Bap. Sel., as No. 336, and this has become the recognized form of the hymn. It is in extensive use, especially in America, and is one of the best known of Fellows' hymns.

[J. J.]

Great God of Abraham, hear our prayer. T. Cotterill. [For the Conversion of the Jews.] 1st pub. in Hall's Mitre H. Bk., 1836, No. 261, in 4 st. of 4 l, and entitled, "Men Stewards of God's bounties." In the June number of Oster's Church and King, 1837, it was repeated for the 2nd S. after Trinity, with the change in st. i., l. 3, of "We take," to "We have," in the 8. P. C. H. Hymn, 1852, No. 193, it was given as "Great God! in heaven and earth supreme," and repeated in later editions. The hymn No. 424, in the Irish Church Hymnal, 1873, and beginning with the same line, is a cento, in 4 st. of which st. i., l. 1., and st. ii. and iv. are from Oster altered, and the rest is from Doddridge's "Jesus, my Lord, how rich Thy grace" (q. v.), st. ii. and iv.

[J. J.]

Great God of heaven and nature, arise. P. Doddridge. [National Fast.] In the V. mss., No. 83, this hymn is called "An hymn for the Fast day, Jan. 3, 1768." The Fast day was appointed at the opening of the war with Spain. The hymn was pub. in J. Orton's (posthumous) ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1752, No. 368, in 6 st. of 4 l, and with the more general heading, "An An for a Fast-day in Time of War"; and again, ed. of the same, 1792, No. 365. In some collections it is abridged, and begins, "Great God of heaven and earth, arise." It is found in both forms in several modern collections.

[J. J.]

Great God, our Infant voices raise. Howland Hill's Hymn for the Use of S. Schools, as sung by children, the congregation taking st. iv. as a chorus. In the Bristol S. S. Bk., 1812, that st. was omitted, and has not since been restored. In Stowell's Manchester S., 1831, No. 156, the opening line of the hymn begins, "Great God, our voice to Thee we raise," and in one or two other hymn-books the first line is again altered to "Great God, our youthful voices raise!"

[W. T. B.]

GREAT GOD, TO ME

Great God, the nations of the earth. T. Gibbons. [Misss.] This poem was put pub. in his Hymn adapted to Divine Worship, &c., 1769, Bk. ii., No. 69, in 4 st. of 4 l., divided into 7 parts, and headed, "The universal diffusion of the Gospel promised by God and pleaded by His people." The 7 parts are:

From this poem the following hymns and centos have come into C. U.:

1. Great God, the nations of the earth. This was included in Rippon's Bap. Sel., 1787, No. 426, in 7 st. In the edition of 1800 it was increased to 16 st., of which st. vi. was not by Gibbons, and therefore was expelled in a note which reads:—Veres, &c., and 10 of this hymn, in substance, were written off Margate, by Mr. William Ward, one of the Baptist Missionaries, on their departure for India, May 23, 1799. It is the first part of this arrangement of the hymn which is usually in C. U.

2. Great God, is not Thy promise pledged! This is composed of st. i. and v. of Pt. iii. It is in C. U. in America.

3. Lord, send Thy word, and let it fly. This is compiled from Pt. ii., iv. and viii. st. 14, 14, 24, 26, 46 of Gibbons's numbering, with slight alterations, and is in American C. U., as Hatfield's Church H. Bk., 1872, No. 1236.

4. Father, is not Thy promise pledged? Included in Rippon's Sel., 1787, No. 419, and again in later editions, and in other collections.

[W. T. B.]

Great God, this [hallow'd] sacred day of Thine. Anne Steele. [Sund.] It was included in her Miscellaneous Poems, which were added to her Poems on Subjects chiefly Devotional (1st ed., 1769), as a third volume in 1780, p. 138, in 4 st. of 6 l. 1st pub. in 1769 in the Bristol Bap. Coll. of Asch & Evans, No. 308, and from that date it came into general and somewhat extensive use. In some collections it begins, "Great God, this hallow'd day of Thine," and in some its form is limited. Orig. text in D. Sedgwick's reprint of Miss Steele's Hymns, 1863, p. 151.

[J. J.]

Great God, to me the sight afford. C. Wesley. [God of Sinai.] The cento which is known by this opening line is compiled from C. Wesley's Short Hymns, &c., 1762, as follows:

The hymn given as the second part of the same, "Thy ceaseless, unexhausted love," is composed of:

These two centos were given in the W's, H. Bk., 1790, as Nos. 240, 251. They are re-
454 GREAT GOD, TO THEE

The only resemblance this stanza has to Jacobi's tr., or to the German from which he translates, is in the subject, and the metre common to them all. Strictly speaking, therefore, the history of "Great God, what do I see and hear?" begins with the anonymous stanza in the Sheffield Ps. & Hgs. of 1802. This stanza was repeated in J. Kemphorne's Sel. Portions of Ps. & Hgs., 1810; R. Aspan's Unitarian Sel. of Ps. & Hgs., 1810, and others.

4. In 1812, Dr. Collyer gave this stanza in his Hymns, partly Collected and partly Original, &c., No. 836, with the following additional stanzas:

2. "The dead in Christ are first to rise,
   And greet the archangel's warning;
   To meet the Saviour in the skies,
   On this auspicious morning:
   No gloomy fears their souls dismance,
   His presence sheds eternal day,
   On those prepared to meet Him."

3. "Far over space to distant spheres,
   The lightnings are prevailing;
   Th' ungodly rise, and all their tears
   Sighs are unavailing:
   The day of grace is past and gone,
   They shake before the Judgment throne,
   All unprepared to meet Him."

4. "Stay, fancy, stay, and close thy wings,
   Repress thy flight too daring;
   One wondrous sight my comfort brings,
   The Judge in thy upraised
   Beneath his cross I view the day,
   When heaven and earth shall pass away,
   And thus prepare to meet Him."

To the hymn as thus constituted, Dr. Collyer added the following note:

"This hymn, which is adapted to Luther's celebrated tune, is universally ascribed to that great man. As I never saw more than this first verse, I was obliged to lengthen it for the completion of the subject, and am responsible for the verses which follow."

5. The next stage in the history of the hymn is supplied by T. Cotterill. In the 8th ed. of his Sel., 1814, No. 190, the original stanza of 1802 was given unaltered; but in the 9th ed., 1820, No. 163, it was followed by the remaining stanzas being altered thus:

2. "The dead in Christ shall first arise,
   At the last trumpet's sounding,
   Caught up to meet Him, Hail! Hail,
   With joy their Lord surrounding:
   No gloomy fears their souls dismance;
   His presence sheds eternal day;
   On those prepared to meet Him."

3. "But sinners, filled with guilty fears,
   Behold the wrath prevailing;
   For they shall rise, and find their tears
   And sighs are unavailing:
   The day of grace is past and gone;
   Trembling they stand before the throne,
   All unprepared to meet Him."

4. "Great God! what do I see and hear!
   The end of things created
   The Judge of mankind doth appear
   In clouds of glory seated:
   Beneath His cross I view the day,
   When heaven and earth shall pass away,
   And thus prepare to meet Him."

6. From 1820 onwards the work of alteration has been carried on, Cotterill's text being more strictly adhered to than any other. More than twenty versions are found in hymn-books in C. U. at the present time, the most important being H. A. & M., 1875, from Cotterill, through Murray's Hymnal, 1852; the S.P.C.K. Church Hymnals, 1871, from Cotterill through Bickersteth's Christ. Psalmody, 1833; the Hymn. Comp., 1876, also through Bickersteth; Thring's Coll., 1882, from Cotterill, with alterations by the editor; and the Hymns, Great God, where'er we pitch our tent. B. Beddome. [Family Worship.] This hymn on "Going to a new habitation," appeared in Rippon's Sel., 1787, No. 333, in 2 st. of 4 l. and from thence it has passed into a few modern collections. In Beddome's (posthumous) Hymns, adapted to Public Worship, 1817, it is given as stanzas iii. and iv. of the hymn, "Blest Lord, thy wandering heart real. The text in Rippon and in Beddome's Hymns, is slightly different. The former is that in 1787.

Great God, Whose universal sway. I. Watts. [Ps. 89.]. 1st pub. in his Psalms of David, &c., 1719.; as the 1st part of his version of Ps. 89., in 6 st. of 4 l., and entitled "The Kingdom of Christ." It is followed by pt. ii., "Jesus shall reign where'er the sun rises," in 8 st. of 4 l., three hymns, all beginning with the same stanza, "Great God, Whose," &c., are in C. U. as follows:

1. The original as above. This is in a few modern collections in Britain. In America it is very popular.
2. A few of W. Ed. Eddison's Irvingite Hymns for the Use of the Churches, 1846, No. 14, is copied on st. 1. and vi. of this hymn, and st. iv. and v. of "Jesus shall reign," &c.
3. In Dr. M. D. Humphrey's Ps. and Hymns, 1842, in 4 st. of 4 l., and again in J. D. Humphrey's Ps. and Hymns, of the same, 1836, No. 108. Its use in G. Britain is limited, but in America it is extensive. The hymn, "Maker of all things, mighty Lord," by W. Esler, in Hall's Hymn H. Bk., 1836, No. 48, is composed of st. 1. ii. from this hymn (altered), and the rest by Esler.

Great Ruler of all nature's frame. P. Bodridge. [Providence.] In the "B. M.," this hymn is No. 31, is headed "God's mercy in moderating the storms of affliction, from Is. xxvii. 8," and is dated "Dec. 10, 1797." The same text was given in the posthumous ed. of Dr. B. Eddison's Hymns, &c., 1852, in 4 st. of 4 l., and again in J. D. Humphrey's Ps. and Hymns, of the same, 1836, No. 108. Its use in G. Britain is limited, but in America it is extensive. The hymn, "Master of all things, mighty Lord," by E. Esler, in Hall's Hymn H. Bk., 1836, No. 48, is composed of st. 1. ii. from this hymn (altered), and the rest by Esler.

Great Ruler of the earth and skies. A word of Thy, &c. Anne Steele. [National Thanksgiving for Peace.] 1st pub. in her Poems on subjects chiefly Devotional, 1760, vol. i. p. 38, in 6 st. of 4 l. and entitled, "Prize for National Peace." In 1787 it was given in Rippon's Bap. Sel., No. 531, and subsequently in a large number of hymn-books in G. Britain and America, including Cooke & Denton Hymnals, 1833; Stowell's Ps. and Hymns, 1831 (15th ed., 1877), &c. Orig. text in D. Sedgwick's reprint of her Hymns, &c., 1863.

Great Ruler of the earth and skies. In boundless deeps, &c. S. Browne. [Providence.] In 1731 John Clark's, of London, pub. The Error of them who derive Err." A Sermon Preach'd in the Old Jersey, Nov. 5, Great Saviour, Who didst descend. [Public Worship.] This children's hymn for use in Public Worship was given anonymously in Rowland Hill's Hymns for the Use of Schools, 1807, No. 177, in 5 st. of 4 l.; in 1812 it was repeated in a Bristol S. S. H. Bk.; in 1835 in the Cong. H. Bk.; and again in others to modern hymn-books in G. Britain and America, including the Meth. S. S. H. Bk., 1879, &c. [W. T. B.]

Great Shepherd of Thine Israel. I. Watts. [Ps. ixx.] Appeared in his Ps. of David, &c., 1719, in 12 st. of 4 l., and entitled, "The Church's Prayer under Affliction; or, The Vineyard of God wasted." It is usually given in modern hymn-books, both in G. Britain and America, in an abbreviated form, and sometimes as, "Great Leader of Thine Israel." In the Irvingite Hymns for the Use of the Churches, 1864, No. 68, st. v., slightly altered, are given as, "Lord, Thou hast planted with Thine hands." The opening lines of this version of Ps. ixx.:

"Great Shepherd of Thine Israel, Who didst between the cherubs dwell," are from Sir J. Denham's version of the same Psalm, 1714. [J. J.]

Great Source of being and of love. P. Doddridge. [River of Living Water.] 1st pub. in his (posthumous) Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 147, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed, "The waters of the Sanctuary healing the Dead Sea." To this is added, in order to explain the 5th stanza, "To the Dead Sea the waters flow," the note:

"The Sea or Lake, where Sodom, Gomorrah, &c., had stood, which was purged and made mountains; and ancient writers say that no Fish could Live in it."
The same text, but with the omission of the note, was repeated in J. D. Humphreys's edition of the Hymns, &c., 1839, No. 105. In some modern hymn-books st. v. is omitted, as in Martineau's Hymns, &c., 1873. [J. J.]

Great Source of life, our souls confess. P. Doddridge. [Thanksgiving for Personal Benefits.] This hymn is No. 10 in the "P. mss." but is mutilated. It is in 5 st. of 4 l., and entitled, "Of walking before the Lord in the land of the living," Ps. cxvi. 9. The same text was given in his (posthumous) Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 54, but the title was changed to: "Deliverance celebrated and good resolutions formed"; and again in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the Hymns, &c., 1839, No. 72. In some modern collections st. ii. is omitted, as in Mercer's Ch. P. & H. Bk., ed. 1864, No. 507. Usually, however, it is given in full. [J. J.]

Great Source of unexhausted good. [Providence Acknowledged.] Appeared in the Exeter Unitarian Coll., 1812, No. 186, in 5 st. of 4 l.; headed, "Grateful acknowledgement of God's constant Goodness"; and marked in the Index with an asterisk denoting that it was first published therein. In modern American Unitarian collections, as the Boston Hy. & Tune Bk., 1868, No. 148, it is abbreviated to 3 st. [W. T. B.]

Great was the day, the joy was great. I. Watts. [Whit satunide—Missions.] From his Hymns & S. Songs, 1709, Bk. ii., No. 144, in 6 st. of 4 l., into a few modern collections. In the Bapt. Ps. & Hymns, 1858, No. 287, the lines:

"Go, and assert your Saviour's cause; Go, spread the mystery of His Cross," are changed to:

"Go, and your Saviour's Cross proclaim;
   Go, teach all nations in my Name."

This change is not generally adopted. [J. J.]

Greding, Johann Ernst. [Bab, J. C., No. i.]

Greek Hymnody. § i. Introduction. The ancient Greek hymns range themselves under two radically distinct classes: those written in the decaying classical metres, with increasing disregard to the rules of quantity; and the far larger and more important class found in the Service Books of the Eastern Church, which is more oriental in character, with an affinity to the Hebrew modes; and which, issuing from the hymns of the Old Covenant and the Angelic hymn at Bethle-phem, develops itself into the elaborated canons of the eighth and ninth centuries.

A. Classical Metres.

§ ii. A copious selection of Christian hymns in classical measures, chiefly Alexandrine, may be seen in Daniel's Theocriticus, vol. iii., in Anthologia Graeca Carnarium Christianorum, by Crist and Parianas, and in Poetae Veteres Graeci, by La Roët. The latest of these includes hymns by Leo the Wise (886-912), and the Patriarch Photius (died 891). Some of the most important will be noted in the following sketch. Two remarks may be made on them of a general character. They afford constant evidence of that change which shows itself in Latin as well as Greek, an increasing disregard of the old laws of quantity. (Instances may be seen in Anthologia Graec. Car. Christ., Prolegomena, p. xxxvi. The interchange of α and 0 as equivalent sounds is a common illustration of the fact.) And secondly, none of these classical measures, except in three Hymn canons of St. John of Damascus (see below, §§. vii. 11, vii. 2), were ever, so far as can be gathered, admitted into the public worship of the Church.

§ iii. Clement of Alexandria. The earliest of these hymns, and the oldest of all Christian hymns, Στρατηγος νικηβ (Bride of streets untamed), is attached to the κατα-λυσεως of Clement of Alexandria (170-220). It has been disputed whether it is really by Clement himself, or has been added by another hand, as an act of devotion founded on the book to which it is annexed. "Though its phraseology is adapted to the perfect Gnostic of Alexandria in the second century" (Liddon), there is nothing in its bright verses—full of childlike trust in Christ, as the Shepherd, the Fisher of Souls, the Everlasting Word, the Eternal Light—that is not to be found in the pages of Holy Writ. It is written in The 10th hymn, in Mr. Chatfield's representation of it ("Lord Jesu, think on me") has been adopted in H. A. & M., and by Mr. Thring, but the Western form and expansion are the translator's. Though of great spirit, reality and beauty, the hymns of Synesius he confesses on the borderland of Christian and Neo-Platonic, and often it is the Platonic rather than the specially Christian thought that inspires his most refined passages. It has been doubt-ful, but perhaps erroneously, whether he believed in the Resurrection.

(See Anth. Grac. Carm. Christ., p. ix., and Chatfield's Introduction, p. i. seq.)

The three great chapters of St. John of Damascus in tritern stanzas are an apparent exception to the rule that classical metres are not found in the Greek Service-books. But they are in reality a link between the two classes of hymns, for while written in a metre, they are also confessed to the tri-syllabic accent, and acute, to which the Church hymns are subjected. See § xvi.

B. Hymns of the Greek Church.

Of more enduring importance is the distinctive Christian growth, which has its root in the poetry and worship of the Old Covenant, and culminates in the hymns of the Eastern Church. If we could recover a more nature of the strophes of Hebrew poetry, of the musical accents, the antipodal singing, the liturgical use of detached verses of the Psalms, and other characteristics of Hebrew psalmody, a strong light might be thrown on some of the obscure parallels presented by the Greek system. A few points may however be noted with tolerable certainty. It is scarcely worth stating that the songs of the Old Testament, together with other rhythmic passages, passed in their Greek forms into the Christian Services. The use of the Alleluia and the Hymn are equally obvious examples. The Ter Sanctus had been partially in previous use in the Jewish ritual: the Hymn which so constantly accompanies it was partly the echo of the Triumphal Entry, but partly also of the older refrain used at the Feast of Tabernacles (see Diet. of the Bible: Hymn). Antiphonal singing, introduced among the Greeks by Ignatius to Antioch, seems clearly traceable to a Hebrew origin, exemplified by the practice of the Therapeutae, as stated by Philo, and the far older practice of the Temple choir (I Chron. vi. 31, sqq. and xxv.). (See Diet. Christ. Ant.: Antiphon.) The refrain and short ejaculations of praise which are such a marked feature of Hebrew Psalms have analogies in the Psalms of the Church and the Eighteen Prayers of the synagogue. The use of broken strophes of the Psalms (στιχολογία) and Christian verses interwoven with them (ανάστισις, στιχοφράσιον), as well as the longer form Antiphon are probably derived from the Hebrew use. The Aenon, on which the strophes of the Canticum are threaded, resembles the system of the Alphabetical Aenon Psalms, and is occasionally itself alphabetical.

§ ix. Hymns of the New Testament. The inspired songs that ushered in the Nativity became probably at an early period canons of the church: the Angels' hymn Bithlehem is the germ of the Gloria in Excelsis (see § x. 4). There is no trace however of a similar use of the heavenly songs of the Book of Revelation, much less of the adoption of a few of the acclamations in the later Greek hymns. Beside these, Scriptural hymns others must have soon arisen. That the holy enthusiasm of the new life of Christianity would express itself in some similar forms to those of the Magníficum and Nunc Dimittis in itself almost inevitable; not withstanding a measure of doubt attaching to both expressions, the terms 'hymn' and 'spiritual song' (Eph. v. 19, 20; Col. iii. 16, 17) seem plainly to assert their existence.

[The word θαυμάσιον is found only in these two passages of the N. T., but the derivative verb is used of the hymn sung at the Last Supper, which was probably the series of Psalms called the Hymn (Περ. cali. invar.). St. Paul, however, plainly distinguishes 'hymn' and 'psalm.' Watts and the early English writers of hymns thought the Cantic and other passages of the New Testament suitable for singing were denoted by 'spiritual songs.' But it is more probable that they were new utterances inspired by the Holy Spirit, like those in the Christian Church.] The form and matter of these hymns may be suggested to us by the rhythmic passages in the epiistles of St. Paul, St. James and St. Peter. A disposition has shown itself to find in some of the most remarkable of these, where they are separable from the context, actual quotations of existing hymns (e.g. 1 Tim. vi. 15, 16; Titus iii. 4-7; James i. 17). The verse which bears the strongest evidence of being a fragment of a hymn,—'on penitence,' is θαυμάσιον ἐπὶ τὸν θεόν, καὶ ἀνίφοις ἐπὶ τῷ ἡμιχριστίῳ ("Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners") (1 Tim. i. 15) has been called part of a hymn "on redemption": ἔρχαται σωτηρία, καὶ σωτήρια τῶν ἱκανών, καὶ συμβαλλόμενοι κ.τ.α. ("If we die with Him, we shall also live with Him;" &c.) 2 Tim. ii. 11-13, a fragment "on the glories of martyrdom," and the short verses resembling one of the strophes of the Canons, ἠπεράγετο ἐπὶ τῷ θεόν, εἰκονικήτω τῷ πνεύματι, ἄγγελος θεοῦ, ἀποκάλυφται ἐπὶ τοὺς, εἰκονικῆς ἐπὶ τῷ θεόν, ἀνεχθέν ἐπὶ δικαίωσις. ("Manifested in the flesh, justified in the spirit," &c.) 1 Tim. iii. 16, part of a hymn "on Our Lord's Incarnation and Triumph." (See Addis's Bampton Lectures, p. 327.)

It is not easy to decide whether such hymns were then used in the worship of the Church. Pindar's letter to Trajan seems to refer to the use of hymns at the Eucharist at an early period (Carmen Christo post Deo cecinerem eccem). On the other hand it will be shown below that there was a scruple against the adoption of anything but psalms in the public devotions (see § xi.); and this context, in which St. Paul mentions "hymns" and "spiritual songs," is giving directions not for worship, but common life and social intercourse.

(See Diet. Christ. Ant.: Hymn.)

§ x. Primitive Greek Hymns. 1. The earliest hymn in this class is the Hymn of the New Testament. The earliest hymn in this class is the Thanksgiving at lamb-lighting (ημερίας εὐφροσύνης), by St. Basil calls it, which has been frequently translated both in prose and verse.—Φιλολόγος ἔχειν ἑλένιον (q. v.) It was old in St. Basil's day (570); but it is a misinterpretation of the words (De Spiritu Sancto, c. 29) to attribute it to Athenogenes (162).

2. Methodius. (died circa 311). A hymn found in "The Banquet of the Ten Virgins," beginning 'Ἄρωτας, θερινία, Βαπτίστης ἐκ παρθένου ἐξήκοντος ἡμέρας ("Up, maidens, the sound of the dawn that raiseth the dead"), by this early writer, though not found in the Greek Service Books, may be most fitly mentioned here on account of certain rhythmic features. Unlike all other extant early hymns, it is of great length—twenty-four strophes—and thus suggests the possibility that some of the longer 'hymns' found in the Greek Service Books may be of early date (see § x.). The initial letters of the strophes are, as in the Anaphoric hymn of Sophronius (see § vi.) on "The Holy Places," the letters of the alphabet in their order, thus supplying a link between the Hebrew Alphabetical Psalms and the acrostichs of Romanus and the canons (see §§ xii., xvi.). Each strophe is followed by the same refrain (ικανών) sung in chorus by The Ten Virgins, the strophes themselves being sung by Thecla alone. The rhythm is plainly lambrive, though loose and irregular. The piece is full of sustained spirit and elation, and Mr. Chatfield's translation of it, "The
3. The Ter Sanctum in its earliest form, as derived from the psalm in Isaias vi. 3, was used for liturgical purposes in the Jewish church. There is an ancient use in Christian liturgy (Apost. Const. 8, 12). It appears in the Clementine Liturgy (from this in the liturgical books of St. Mark, St. James, and St. Clement). The form varies slightly from that in the English Psalter, and the two latter the name is attached, "Hosanna to the name of the Lord; Hosanna in the highest." The form was followed in Edward VI. The same form is found in the Eastern Liturgy, following the First Prayer of the early West African Church. (See Diet. Christ. Ant. under Preface.)

4. The Greek form of the Gloria in Excelsis is of early date. The Angels' hymn of the East, called "Hosanna to the Son of God," was an extension of the name Hosanna found in the Codex Alexandrinus.

5. Te Deum. There can be little doubt that the Te Deum, or some elements of it, are originally Greek, although only a few clauses have been actually discovered. The first twenty-one verses of the Te Deum in Latin are found without variation in early MSS. But there are some known variations in the form of the last nine verses. Two of these variations differ from the one adopted in our Prayer-Book only in the omission of certain words. But the other two, besides omitting one or two clauses, insert, though each in a different place among the clauses, the words "Benedictus Domine Deus, et Rex Sion bennedictus." If we add these words to the familiar prayer, "Day by day we magnify Thee," "Te Deum," O Lord, to keep us this day without sin," we obtain precisely the following short Greek hymn, which is found in the Codex Alexandrinus immediately after the Greek form of the Gloria in Excelsis. (See above, 4.)

6. Early Vesper Hymn (Todis svis). Hymns before Meals. In the 7th book of the Apostolic Constitutions (c. 47) the Gloria in Excelsis is followed by two other short hymns. They are printed in Anth. Graec. Carm. Christ., p. 40, and translated by Mr. Childefield. The first is an Evening Hymn. The latter part of it is simply the Non Distinct, and the part begins with a verse of the Psalms. It repeats the phrase in the Gloria in Excelsis, "et in Christum, et in Spiritum Sanctum," and slightly varies the clause concerning the Lamb, that taketh away the sins of the world. The next phrases are well known in their Latin form, "Te Deum." The words are as follows: "Hodie etiam in honore Dei, Amen."

7. Trisagion. This name has of late been discontinued as an equivalent of Ter Sanctus, for good reasons. The Greek term trisagion indicates a short invocation found in the Greek liturgies, shortly after the Little Entrance, and sometimes accompanied by a prayer called "the prayer of the Trisagion." It is entirely distinct from the Ter Sanctus common to Greek and Latin liturgies, and runs thus:

"The Holy God, Hly and Mighty, etc."
Holy and Immortal, have mercy upon us." The legend of its origin relates that it was preternaturally communicated to the terrofamily population of Constantinople during an earthquake in the time of St. Proclus (431–7). (See Nicephorus Callistus, Lib. 14, cap. 46.) It is considered, however, by Neale and others to be probably far older. It is said to have been introduced into the Liturgy in the reign of the younger Theodosius (448–50). It is found in the Roman Missal in The Improperia used on Good Friday. The Greek words and the Latin are there sung in response to each other by the two sides of the choir. So also in the Sarum and York Uses. (See Dict. Christ. Ant.: Trinium.)

8. The first form of the Gloria Patri was perhaps founded on the Baptismal formula (Matt. xxi. 19). The three early varieties it may be seen under Doxologies. They were old in St. Basil's days (370).

9. The Cherubic Hymn. This hymn, so-called from its references to the Cherubim, is found in the chief Eastern Liturgies, except the Clementine, before the Great Entrance. It is not found in the hitherto liturgies except in the Armenian; and this fact is an argument against its antiquity. It is generally ascribed to the time of Justinian. Cedrenus says that Justinian first ordered it to be sung in churches. It runs thus: Οι τά χερουμβια μοστοιειαι εκοινοισατε, τι το ευστατοι Θεοδών παπανθετε, τασαν την βιοικτικαν καθαρωσμα εμφανια, τον Βασιλειαν των σωτητικων, τον αγιουλατον δορομενον δοροφορον ταξις, αλλαλοιαν. "Let us who mystically represent the Cherubim and sing the holy hymns of the Quickening Trinity, lay by at this time all worldly cares; that we may receive the King of Glory, invisibly attended by the angelical orders. Alleluia, Alleluia, Alleluia." (See Dict. Christ. Ant.: Cherubic Hymn.)

10. Hymn of Justinian. A short hymn is found in the Liturgies of St. Mark and St. James, which Neale declares from internal evidence to be later than the Council of Ephesus (431). It is generally considered the composition of the emperor Justinian (527–65). It runs thus: Ου μονογενος θεος και λαος του θεου, εθιστατον υπαρχον, και πανδειμονιον διε τημητεραν εστιν αρχην ανεκατον και ανεπαρθενον, ημερομενον επιλογιθεν, επιστρωσα φεροντα, υποτιθεντα και ευθειαν. "Only-begotten Son and Word of God, Immortal, unbegotten, all-glorious, we offer to your Majesty a hymn of thanksgiving, we glorify you, and adore you. (Anth. Greg. Carn. Christ., p. 52.)

11. If the materials of the Greek Servicebooks could be critically distinguished, several of the Anonymous pieces among the shorter hymns would doubtless be added to these early compositions. It is generally believed, that the Hirmoi, on which so many of the later odes are modelled, belong to the earlier centuries. The verse-lines which are attached to the psalms, either as antiphons or στοιχεια σωτητικα, are also probably among the earliest essays at hymns. Nor is there any reason why some of the anonymous Idiomela, which partake of the same natural spirited freshness as these should not be equally early. The elaborate canons of later times add very little original thought to these more artless pieces, and they are often inferior in force. Their prevailing type is a strophe asserting at the opening some Christian fact or doctrine; and then grounding on it an acclamation of praise or exultation in the utterance of some glorious title or consequence.

§ xi. Liturgical Use. Between these short and simple hymns, largely built up of joyous ejaculations, and the elaborate Odes and Canons of the 8th and 9th centuries there is a wide interval; and as the history of the development is obscure, it will be convenient to throw together here some account of the gradual introduction of hymns into the public worship of the church. Notwithstanding the very early mention of hymns as part of the Liturgy in Pliny's letter and by Justin Martyr, as well as the evidence of the Liturgies for the use of some of these already quoted, it was manifestly a certain reserve as to their general introduction; in some parts of the Church they were allowed earlier than in others. An extract from the Epistle of the Second Council of Antioch (269) against Paul of Samosata shows that they were then in use in the Church of Antioch (Dict. Christ. Ant.: Hymns). Yet as late as the 5th and 6th centuries there was a struggle against the use of anything but Psalms in the Eastern monasteries (Pitra, pp. 12, 43), and in Spain the Council of Braga (561) forbade the use of hymns. No doubt, they were originally of popular origin, and then from their own power of spiritual edification passed into the services. In three different centres of the life of the Church the use of hymns received a powerful impulse from their employment by heretics. The Gnostic hymns of Barbelo and Harmonia led Ephrem the Syrian (c. 360) to adopt their metres and rhythms in his hymns for the Syrian Church. The Arian hymns drew the attention of Athanasius at Alexandria (Pitra) and Chrysostom at Constantinople to the hold which hymns had on the maecenas. The use of processional hymns in the narthex, lighted by torches, may have originated in the processions with torches and torches which Chrysostom organized at Constantinople (Dict. Christ. Ant.: Hymns). How these movements developed the structure of the Greek hymns, it is impossible to say; the strophes of Ephrem, with the final invocation, or refrain, have great similarity to the troparia of the Greek odes. On the other hand the syllabic metres of Ephrem seem much more regular than the varied lengths of verse in the troparia, while the great number of tunes (275) in the Syrian Church contrasts strongly with the eight tones, to which the Greek hymns are confined, and probably points to deep-seated differences. See for Ephrem Syrian, Hymns and Homilies of E. S., translated by Dr. Burgess.

§ xii. Middle Period.—1. Romanus.—The principal link between the early hymns and the odes and canons discovered in the early 19th century. The very rare Liturgical pieces discovered in the early 19th century at Monza, and later in Rome, by Cardinal Pitra (published by a committee of the Congregation of Propaganda, edited by Lord Selborne in 1867, quoted in "Hymns," by the Rev. M. Brain.) Twenty-nine of these compositions are by Romanus; among the authors of others are found the names of Cosmas, Anaximander, and others, who must not be confused with later poets of the same names.

A specimen of the structure of one of these canons is the following:

Hymn of Romanus, which is composed of twenty-four strophes of considerable length, the initial of the first strophe being α: the strophes, with the exception of the first, all contain the same number of syllables, though of very different lengths, phrases in each strophe being composed of the names of various saints and others.

The first strophe has only one feature in the last line, containing the central idea of the poem, and this is repeated in every succeeding strophe, so as to lead the reader to anticipate it again as the close of each strophe.

The poem precedes with these personages in a dialogue which illuminates the poem with the light of the short poem of the same name found in the Greek Ode Books. It is known that in several odes, interspersed between the 6th and 7th Odes of the Canons, is a single strophe, the Copystaiotes, and that there are longer poems formed of the aeolic style, which are now buried in the Canons of the later ages, and are considered as having been the work of St. Dionysius of Alexandria.

There is some affinity between the hymns of Romanus in the celebrated blessing, composed by the patriarch Sergius as a thanksgiving to the Mother of God for her defence of the Church against the attack of the Turks, King of Persia. There is the same repetition of the opening line of the strophe, and the same vivid narrative; and the opening strophe has a separate form. On the other hand, there is no acrobatic adroitness, and the alternate ones follow by a long series of invocations, managed with great brilliancy and variety. There is also an occasional and unmistakable adoption of rhyme. The hymn was sung standing, in commemoration of the long watch of the Mother of God. Considered as a poem, the chief part of it is full of splendour; but the worship of the Virgin, which is its raison d'etre, scarcely admits of its adaptation even partially in England.

§ xiii. Period of the Odes and Canons. A change largely connected with the Iconoclastic controversy was wrought in Greek Service Books during the 7th, 8th, and 9th centuries. The names of the defenders of the sacred icons fill a large space in the calendar; and their elaborate doctrinal hymns display the more animated and pictorial poetry of Romanus. The new form which rises into view, and continues henceforward to be the highest mode of poetical expression, is the Canon, of which St. Andrew of Crete is the first known master.

Whether the Canon was a new invention at this time, or had been in existence previously, although no earlier specimens are extant, is uncertain. A quotation from Gerbert, given by Cardinal Pitra ("Hymns," p. 43) seems to prove its existence in the 5th century.

Christ, however ("Anth. Graec." xix.), considers the word an interpolation. At any rate it is not until the time of St. Andrew of Crete that the Canon takes its supreme place in the system.

§ xiv. Sources and Translations of the later Greek Hymns. I. Sources.-The hymns which follow are found in the Service Books of the Greek Church. These are:

(1) The Menaion, twelve volumes, one for each month (lesba), answering approximately to the Propria Sanctorum of the Western Litanyary ("Dict. Christ. Ant. s. v."

(2) The Paracleticæ, or Greater Octoechus, containing the Feasts arranged on a system for eight weeks.

(3) The Lesser Octoechus, containing the Sunday Services of the preceding volume. The name is derived from the eight Tones (άξονα) to which the Services of the eight weeks are respectively set. These Tones are the same, except in name, as the Gregorian Tones. The arrangement of the Octoechus is said to have been the work of St. John Damascene.

(4) The Triodion, containing the entire services for Lent, and those for the three preceding Sundays (Sunday of the Passion and the Publican; Sunday of Apostles), after which no flesh is eaten; Tyrophagia, after which even cheese is forbidden). The name Triodion originates in the prevalence of hymns of that name (three odes).

(5) The Pentecontastaurion Charmosynum, containing the office for the seasons of Easter and Pentecost.

(6) The Exudologion, containing the occasional offices.

(7) The Horologion, containing the Hours of prayer.

The number of hymns in these volumes, which contain (N. 84) 4000 closely-printed quarto pages at least, is very large. They are little known in England. The best selection from them is that published by M. Christ in "Anth. Graec. There is a more meagre one in Daniel. Cardinal Pitra has published a group of hymns connected with St. Peter and St. Paul. The great offices for Christmas, Easter, and Pentecost are printed in Dr. Littlecandle's "Office of the Holy Eastern Church."
2. Translations, &c. The difficulties in the way of studying the original services are almost removed for English classical scholars since the publication of Neale's Introduction to the History of the Holy Eastern Church, and Dr. Littledale's valuable book on The Offices of the Holy Eastern Church. The earliest, most spirited, and popular poetical translations are The Hymns of the Eastern Church by Dr. Neale (1862). Mr. Chattox's Dicks has turned a portion of the blank verse of Dr. Littledale's Offices into metre, and published the same, partly in the Church Times, and subsequently in the Life, etc., by Mr. Steeley. A few hymns have been translated in metrical form by Dr. Littledale, and appeared in the Church Times (1864), the People's Hymnal (1867), and the Priest's Prayer-book. There are also trs. by Dr. Macgill in his Songs of the Christian Creed and Life. Lond.: Pickering, 1876-79.

§ xv. Structure and Verificaion. A Greek hymn, as printed in the Service Books, looks like a paragraph, or a collection of paragraphs, in metrical prose. The rhetorical phrases of the paragraphs are divided by a system of commas, which are obviously unconnected with punctuation. If rearranged, so as to make each rhetorical phrase a line of poetry, the paragraph assumes a resemblance to a piece of a Greek chorus, and snatches of classic rhythm foster the delusion. But it has proved impossible to reduce it to any known metre, or to establish any consistency between the paragraphs of a hymn by rules of prosody. Cardinal Pitta, however, who has investigated this matter with great acuteness, discovered that in the odes (where we have hymns composed of several paragraphs), and in groups of hymns consisting of similar (σάτον) and modelled on the leading one (σωματικόν), the number of rhetorical phrases in each paragraph, and the number of syllables in each rhetorical phrase (short syllables being equivalent to long ones), is identical. M. Christ, who has also written a masterly essay on the subject in the Anthologia Graec., has further established the fact that a fixed proportion of the accents in the corresponding phrases is always uniform. The rhythm of the hymns probably depended on this uniformity of accent more than on the law of the syllables. "In the decline of the language accent was trampling down quantity." (Neale). This growing intension to quantity has been pointed out elsewhere (see § ii.). The increasing importance of accent is familiar in Latin hymns and in modrn Greek. The general rhetorical impression of Greek hymns is thus described by Carl. Pitta: "The system has no lack of flexibility, variety, or precision. The strophes are grave or spirited in turn, at one time possessing the solemn march of hendiads, at another precipitating themselves in a stream of impetuous versets, and most frequently blending both measures easily together." (Hym. Grec., p. 24).

§ xvi. 1. Names and Varieties of Hymns. The names of the minor Greek hymns are very numerous. The Antiphons (ἀντιφώνα) have the character familiar to us in the Latin Breviaries.

2. The ánavtikon derive their name not so much from their place near the close of the vesper office, as from the Song of Simeon then originally sung (Anth. Graec. Carm. Christ., p. lix.).

There is a group of hymns, which are most usually found as satellites of the Canons.

3. The καθημα, so called, apparently, because sung seated, an intercalation between the third and fourth, or the sixth and seventh odes.

4. The σωματικόν, intercalated after the sixth ode, which, as found at present, is a long single stanza, but which in many cases has been discovered by Pitta to be one of the long poems of the school of Romanus, the inventor of σωματικόν. (See § xii. and Romanus.) This discovery makes the derivation of the term from σώμα, the roller around which a roll of manuscript is bound, far more likely than that from σώμα, little, or that from the Latin Stanza, the cell which enshrines the thought.

6. The καθημα, which is very often a repetition of the Hymns of the odes, sung by the choir after coming down into the narthex.

7. The ἐναντιών, which follows the canon, a hymn first introduced by Constantine, son of Leo the Wise (Emperor 913-59). Eleven of them connected with the Resurrection from his pen are quoted in Anth. Graec. Carm. Christ. p. 110.

8. The ἔνασις, which occurs instead of the καθημα after the third ode. The derivation is doubtful. In the Virgin's Song of Methodius the ἔνασις is a refrain. (See § x. 2.) But not so in the Greek Service Books. Neither Coren's explanation, "an echo of what goes before" (Dict. Christ. Ant., s. v.), nor Gour's, that the Church listens (ἐνασις) to some recital of God's marvellous dealings (Neale), is satisfactory.

9. The Κιολον, sung at great Festivals, at matins (Dict. Christ. Ant., s. v.), but most of all during the quiet hours of the night in the narthex (western part of the church), "glowing with the processionals torches" (Neale), is much of the same character as other short hymns. But when several of them are combined under the name of Stichera (τερες) Κιολον, a hymn whose results, which exceeds in length many of the odes, and some of the freshest pieces in the Service Books in this class. Cardinal Pitta, following Leo Alatins, seems to think that the name arises from the fact that they have their own musical treatment attached to the words (ὅσον μου). More commonly, however, μοιος is taken to denote rhythm or metre. It is impossible to trace any uniformity of structure in successive Κιολον: each one seems a law to itself, or, as Neale expresses it, its own model. Thus Stichera Κιολον are, at any rate practically, Irregular Verses.
10. The Ode.

The Ode (ἐος) is composed of a variable number of short and vivid strophes, which have its highest expression of feeling thrown into its closing line. All the strophes are uniform in the number of syllables and lines and in certain leading accents (see above, § xxv.). The model on which the strophes are formed is sometimes the first stanza of the Ode, which in that case is always printed with inverted commas, often it is not printed, somewhat as we print the tune of a bass of the Ode. The name of (ὑπός), which is usually explained as denoting its drawing from the other stanzas after the revision is doubtful (see Anth. Carm., p. 18). The other troparia, a term which is again explained as denoting the turning of these strophes to the hymn (Neale). But the derivation is denied by M. Christ, and the fact that the term troparia is found attached to single stanzas independent of Hymnus is against it. Pitre considers the ancient Greek form of the Troadia a very special use of the Troadia in the nocturns, and follows the office. The Odes occur in groups: some (§ 217), but most frequently there is a series of three (οἰκίδες), or the full complement of eight, in the nine in order to the Lenten volume, the Triodion. The Odes are always connected with the Canons and often cramped and distorted by the necessity of allusion to them.

The Canons, which are the highest effect of Greek hymnody, are found principally on the Lauds, are found principally on the Canticles then (§ 218). 1. Song of Moses (Exod. xxiv. 13); 2. Song of Moses (Exod. xxiv. 13); 3. Song of Moses (Deut. xxi. 21); 4. Song of Moses (Exod. xxiv. 13); 5. Song of Moses (Exod. xxiv. 13); 6. Song of Moses (Exod. xxiv. 13); 7. Song of Moses (Exod. xxiv. 13); 8. Song of Moses (Exod. xxiv. 13); 9. Song of Moses (Exod. xxiv. 13). The Prayer of the Three Children (Benedict); 3. The Magnificat and Benedictus. In correspondence with the Canon these divisions are divided into two odes, but as from the character of the second ode corresponding to the first ode, only the majority of Canons consist of one ode, which is in Lent, the majority of Canons consist of eight odes only. The Canon as a whole has no greater unity, or elan, than parts of the group of Canons, on which it is founded; but it is threaded on an acrostic written in iambics, or sometimes hexameters or elegiacs, at the commencement of the first ode; the letters of the acrostic opening the several troparia, and sometimes hexameters or elegiacs, at the commencement of the first ode; the letters of the acrostic opening the several troparia, and sometimes hexameters or elegiacs, at the commencement of the first ode. See also Anth. Carm., Christ., p. 210; Pitre, Hym. Grecque, p. 20. The varieties of the troparia are also. The three Iambic Canons of St. John of Damascus are a link with the classical metres. (See above, § vii.) Besides conforming to the laws of syllables and accents and acrostic in its strictest form, they are imbued in quantity. The English reader will gain a good idea of the appearance of a Greek Canon from the reproduction of one given in Neale's Introduction to the History of the Holy Eastern Church, vol. ii. p. 883. In the Service Books the Odes of two Canons are found interlaced with one another.

Thus a splendid development of the Greek hymn is considered as arising in the middle of the 7th century, reaching its zenith in the close of the 8th, and dying with the exception of a few later pieces, and adding even to the 16th century, in the beginning of the 10th century. Its beginning is associated with Jerusalem in the person of St. Andrew of Crete, 660-732 (see § xvii. 1). There also, in the Laus of St. Sabas, lived its two greatest hymn-writers, Cosmas and St. John of Damascus (ibid. 2, 3), (founded c. 780); and the third great poet, Theophanes (§ xvii. 2), (c. 830). Another centre of hymnody was Sicily, and Italy. The elder Cosmas, tutor of St. John of Damascus, Joseph the Hymnographer (xvii. 3), and Methodius (d. 866), were of Sicily. There was a colony of Greek monks in the monastery of St. John of Damascus, at Tagouselle, which produced a school of hymn-writers in the 12th century, named after the great medallists of former days, the chief of whom was St. Bartholomew of Grotta Ferrata. But the most lasting though less eminent home of hymnody was naturally Constantinople. Poets from St. Sabas, such as Theophanes, or Sicily, such as Joseph and Methodius, the Patriarch of Constantinople, were drawn thereto by the circumstances of their lives, and continued their works there. At an earlier period (715-31), Germainus, one of the greatest of the defenders of the Icons, was a hymn-writer during his patriarchate.

The great monastery of the Studium was a home of hymnody (see § xviii.), and emperors, such as even theICONOCLAST THEOPHILUS AND LEO THE WISE, and CONSTANTINE PORPHYRIDES, its most celebrated writers will be noted in the following sections, the choice being greatly guided by the English translations in Neale which are the chief source of information to general readers.

1. St. Andrew of Crete. A considerable number of hymns by this early writer of Canons are contained in the Greek Service Books. The most celebrated is the Great Canon, of four 250 parts, and of the prodigious length of strophes. It is sung entire, "cum labore multo et pulmonum fatigations," on Thursday in Mid-Lent (Comm. deceased, quoted in Chrst. Brev., a. v.), as well as partially on other days of Lent. (Portions are published in Daniel, i. 47-54, and in Anth. Grace. Carm. Christ., 147-161.) The strophes of this Canon have not the point of those of St. John of Damascus, and make no use of refrains. The aim of it is penitential; a spirit of true penitence breathes through it; it has many beautiful passages, and is rich in allusion to the personages of the Bible, either as warnings or examples to the penitent; but its excellences are marred by repetition and prolixity. See Bομβείον και σαρκαρίτη. Besides this, his Canon on Mid-Pentecost (portions of which are given in Daniel, ii. 48-9), and several spirited Idiomela in the Triodion and Pentecostarion, and the Triodia in Holy Week (see translations, “O! the mystery passing wonder,” “Jesus hastening for the world to suffer,” Neale’s Hy. E. C., pp. 19-22), are specified by Neale as among his choicest pieces. His Idiomela for Christmas, suppressed Idiomela (“Rejoice, ye righteous”) (see Auth. Græc., 97; Daniel, iii. 47; Littledale’s Offices, p. 83) are full of spirit, setting forth in a few pointed verses the ideas of the longer canons.

2. St. John of Damascus. The Laura of St. Satars, between Jerusalem and Bethlehem, was famous in more ways than one. Its Typikon (book of rubrics) was the most venerable and elaborate of all, and is now preserved in the East (Pitra). The native hymns of Syria, in their own language, would be heard there as well as those of the Greeks. It became the centre of a school of hymn-writers, of whom the two chief—and also the foremost in the roll of the Greek ecclesiastical poets—were Cosmas and St. John of Damascus. The impress of the latter on the Greek Service Books is distinct and deep. It affected the music as well as the poetry. The arrangement of the Octoechos, according to the Eight Tones (see § xiv.), is attributed to St. John of Damascus. The epithet “Melodist,” which attached earlier times to Romans, is often given to St. John of Damascus, Theophanes, Theodore of the Studion, and especially Cosmas; and appears to denote those who were not merely hymn-writers (ομφοράσκοντι), but musicians. The style of the Odes and Canons also now began to exhibit certain features, which it never afterwards lost. The Troparia have a pointed brilliancy which contrasts not only with the long strophes of Romans, but with the heaviness of St. Andrew of Crete. It has been thought that certain rhythmical characteristics may have been borrowed from the Syrian hymns of St. Ephrem (see § xii.). One of these may be the constant use of refrains; though it must be borne in mind that the strain and the manner of the preceding lines, so as to lend up to it, are part of the tradition of Romans. At the same time the pictorial style of Romans gave way to that doctrinal expression, animated by living devotion, which pervades the great body of Greek hymnody. The appropriation of the last strophe of the Ode to an invocation or prayer of the B. V. M. (θεοτόκου, or, if at the foot of the cross, σαρκοσολωνον) dates also from this period. The Canons of St. John of Damascus are found in the Octoechos, the oldest nos. of which contained no other Canons than his (see Pitra, p. 59, Auth. Græc., p. xlvii.), in the Menaen and Pentecostarion. The latter are the more celebrated. They celebrate the grand themes of Christmas, the Theophany (Baptism of Christ), Pentecost, Easter, St. Thomas’s Sunday, and the Ascension. The first three are the Lambic Canons (see § xvi. 11), which, perhaps from the metrical shackles which he has imposed on himself, are often laboured, and somewhat turgid in language. The Canon for St. Thomas’s Sunday is a fine one, full of suggestion in regard to the unbelief of the Apostle. (See “Αποκάλυψεν πάντας λαος, and Auth. Græc., p. 221.) The Canon on the “Ascension” is very striking from its triumphant gladness and dramatic realization. The “Easter Canon,” known as “The Golden Canon,” or “King of Canons,” is the grandest piece in Greek sacred poetry. Nowhere are the best characteristics of the Greek Canon exhibited so splendidly. The formal allusions to the Canticles on which the several odes are founded (see § xvi. 11), and the introduction of types, which in later poets become often monotonous and irrelevant, are here in complete keeping, and give a fitting and natural enrichment; and the brilliant phrases, culminating in acclamation, the freedom of the thoughts, the ringing, victorious joy, and the lofty presence of earth’s joys above the Resurrection, compose a series of magnificent efforts of imaginative devotion. (See Αναστάσεας ὑπερα and Auth. Græc., p. 218; Littledale’s Offices, p. 211.) To these Canons are probably to be added others under the name of John Arkas, and perhaps (though this is more doubtful), John the Monk. There are also numerous Idiomela, two of which Neale has translated. One of these (ρας ήπιον χιλιαριας, q. v.) is very popular (“These eternal bowers,” Hy. E. C., p. 55). The other, which is not a hymn in the English sense, is one of the most beautiful pieces in Neale’s volume (“Take the last kiss,” Hy. E. C., p. 49), representing some lines of intense emotion in the Burial Office in the Euchologion. (See Δεητε γεννημένος δάσης, and Daniel, iii. 123.) From the Burial Office for Priests in the same volume is taken the beautiful translation of σωτία τοις διακρότων (“With pitiless eye” in The People’s Hymn by Dr. Littledale.

3. St. Cosmas (died circa 760). The great works of this poet are his Canons for the Festivals. Often, as in those for the Nativity, the Theophany (Baptism of Christ) and Pentecost, the Odes of the several Canons by himself and St. John of Damascus are interwoven, brother-wise, with each other. He has Canons on “The Purification,” “Transfiguration,” and Palm Sunday. His canon on his spiritual Father, Gregory of Nazianzus, is also mentioned by Neale. To these must be added a series of pieces (one a Diodon, two Triodia, and two Canons) dealing with the narrative in Holy Week. The ancient name of the poems of Cosmas was great, and commentaries were composed on them (Auth. Græc., Carn. Christ., p. 11). He is generally spoken of as the equal of St. John of Damascus. But it was only be in a doctrinal point of view that he can be deemed the rival of his foster-brother. Neale styles him the most learned of the Greek poets; and on account of his fondness for types, boldness in their application, and love of aggregating them, compares him with Adam of St. Victor. He speaks also of the “compressed fulness of meaning,” and “unusual harshness and contraction of his phrases.” The only piece which poetically approaches the best efforts of St. John of Damascus is the Christmas Canon, Χριστος γεννημενος. Σωτήρ (q. v.). It is pronounced by Neale to be superior to the Iambic Canon of St. John of Damascus, with which it interlaces. It is said to be suggested by a sermon of Gregory of Nazianzus, from whom the ring of gladness with which it opens is borrowed (Anth. Grace. Carm. Christ., p. 1; Liddell's, p. 281). In the other pieces there is seldom anything that answers to the force, spirit, and beauty of the exultation of St. John of Damascus. The joyfulness is confined chiefly to the refrains, and the general treatment follows the narrative manner of Romanus; but somewhat loaded by typology and doctrinal statement. (A full selection may be seen in Daniel, lib. iii. pp. 36, sqq., and Anth. Grace. Carm. Christ., 161, seq.; trs. of the Christmas Canon in Neale, Hy. E. C., pp. 36; Liddell's Offices, p. 187, seq.)

§ xviii. The Poets of the Studium. In the peaceful interval commencing with the restoration of the Icons by the Second Council of Nicaea (A.D. 787), and ending in the renewal of persecution by Leo the Armenian (A.D. 813), the great monastery of the Studium at Constantinople became the center of hymnography. Neale says that this period is marked by the commencement of decline in vigour and freshness and increase of "Byzantine bombast."

1. St. Theodore (died A.D. 826) was Hegumen of the monastery; a man of "rigid, unyielding, commanding character," in outward life, but revealed as penetrated with love and penitence in his Lent Canon in the Triodion (Neale). A triumphal Canon for the great festival that commemorates the victory of the Icons, Orthodoxy Sunday, is by him. (See Neale, E. C., p. 113. "A song, a song of gladness.") His Canon on the Judgment is pronounced by Neale, "the grandest judgment hymn of the Church," previous to the composition of the Dies Irae. (See the ἐνθαμμ. τῷ φωτίσκει, and Neale, Hy. E. C., p. 104. "That dreadful day, &c.") Certain Canons in the Triodion and Pentecostaries are by his younger brother Joseph, afterwards Bp. of Thessalonica. There is a Canon of much tenderness—the "Suppliant Canon by Theoctistus"—at the end of the Paraclete, which has been re-used by Neale. (See Hy. E. Ch., p. 153, and ιπνοί φυλάκται.)

2. St. Theophanes (circa 800-50). By the Greeks this poet is named with St. John of Damascus and Cosmas as in the highest rank of their hymn-writers. Like them, too, he is associated with Jerusalem, and possibly with St. Sabas (see Theophanes, St.). He is the most prolific of the Greek hymn-writers, with the exception of St. Joseph (Neale). The great bulk of his Canons and Idiomela are found in the Menaece, and the subjects to which he devotes them are the Martyrs and Confessors of the Greek Calendar. Neale points out the inevitable sameness and tedium which results from devoting a separate canon to each saint, when all the saints can and should, that they died for Christ; commending at the same time the wiser Latin practice in which "not even the Apostles have separate hymns, but supply themselves from the Common." Neither Neale nor the authors of the Anth. Grace. present anything of remarkable merit from these compositions. (See άπο τον Ἰδιομέλα τάδε και τών Μαρτύρων.)

This most voluminous of the Greek poets belonged by birth to the Sicilian school of hymnographers, but like Methodius of Syracuse, his life drew him to Constantinople. Neale's judgment of him is unfavourable. His canons in the Menaece, of the Martyrs, of the Saints, and of the Hours, are celebrated for saints and of the result is tautology, "common-place decked out in trite language," verbiage in which Scriptural simplicity is exchanged for Byzantine tawdriness. The best features however of this style he tries to reproduce in "Stars of the morning," in his Hy. E. C. The cento from the canon for SS. Timothy and Maura, "Let our choirs burst forth in new anthems," is one of Neale's best pieces, and it derives additional interest to us from Kingley's beautiful poem Santa Maura. (See τάντα των ἀνθρώπων.) But much of its excellence is Neale's. And in "O happy band of pilgrims," and "Safe home, safe home in port," Neale himself confesses how little is really due to the original. One piece of St. Joseph, however, the "Canon on the Ascension" (διαμήνυμα Πατρόκλου), though anticipated by the Canon of St. John of Damascus, is in doctrinal force and dramatic presentation, very majestic. It is probably the finest hymn extant on the Ascension.

§ xix. Subsequent Hymn-Writers (900-1400). These may be dismissed rapidly; neither in the amount or merit of their contributions, they rank with their predecessors. The enormous bulk of the service books is pointed to, rather than the introduction of new matter, and such a reversion was carried out after the schism between East and West. (See details Pitra, Hymn. Grec. p. 62.) Among the pieces of this later time Neale has chosen for translation a cento from one of the eight Canons of Metaphrastus (died 910) in honour of the Trinity, "O Unity of Threefold Light." (See τριουσανής Μορφής.) Another of them is published in Anth. Grace. Carm. Christ., pp. 354-7. In the same volume, pp. 110-12, are the Exapostelarion of Constantine Porphyrogennitus (913-959) on the Resurrection. Daniel has also two canons of John Mauropus (died 1060), one of which is very jubilant. They were not however incorporated in the Greek Service Books. One or two hymns however were admitted as late as Philotheus (1660), patriarch of Constantinople, and even in the 15th century. See Anth. Grace. Carm. Christ., p. xxxviii.

§ xx. Conclusion. The most remarkable characteristic of Greek hymnody is its objective- ness, with which is closely connected its faculty of sustained praise. Whatever the theme be the mystery of the Triune Godhead or the Incarnation, or the mighty periods of Christ's incarnate work in earth and heaven; or whether some life or narrative of Holy Writ, considered in its doctrinal or typical reference— The attitude of the poet is always one of self-forgetfulness, rapt, or ecstatic contemplation. While in the English hymn the Scriptural fact or type or doctrine is the text or motto, and the body of the hymn consists of the human blessings, warnings or enlightenments that flow from it, the mind of the Greek poet rests and delights in the Revelation itself, and leaves the human reference as in Goethe's "Werke," esthetic and moral contemplation.
subordinated, hinted, or even unexpressed. Visible everywhere, this contrast is most marked in the absorbed rapture with which the Greek poet hymns the Divine Perfections and the Incarnation, when compared with our self-regarding mode of praise. This habit of thought has however its disadvantages. By its discouragement of the development of human emotion, aspiration, and benefit, the range of subjects and reflection is narrowed; and in the later poets the repetition of the same types, epithets, and metaphors issues in sameness, conventional diction, and fossil thought. It is impossible to avoid the conviction, that the great bulk of Greek hymns would have had a richer value, if it had sought for inspiration in the deep spiritual analysis of St. Paul, or the interpretation of the changing moods of the soul, which are of such preciosity in the Psalms. The English translations omit one of the prevalent features of the original, the excessive honour and power ascribed to the Blessed Virgin. The place assigned to her is as high as in the Roman theology; the closing strophe of every ode is usually devoted to her (see § xvii.); and there are unnumbered canons on her scriptural and legendary history; the result being to lower that celebration of the Incarnation, which is intended to be guarded and enhanced. The difficulty of naturalizing the Greek hymns here arises from their wide divergence from English form. The sparkling Greek freezes in our metres, and the muty, proportion of parts, compactness, and selection of alluded ideas, which we demand, have no parallels in the loose, wandering, disconnected strophes. This is illustrated by the extant translations. With one exception ("Come, ye faithful, raise the strain") none of the successful translations in Neale are exact reproductions of the odes of a canon, but either excerpts from them selected with an eye to unity, or shorter, more pointed pieces, to which he has given his own individuality, either of construction or language. Three of the most popular ones ("Oh happy band of pilgrims," "Safe home, safe home in port") by Neale's confession, contain so little of the Greek, that they ought not to have been called translations. Dr. Littledale's renderings are more nervous and faithful, though less lyrical, than Neale's; but these, too, are taken from the shorter hymns. It seems probable that the most successful translations will be either excerpts from the long canons, or renderings of the shorter hymns, in which there is often greater freshness and sweetness, with a more terse expression of the ideas.

Littledale's offices, &c. This contains the most extensive and accurate Glossary of Greek Ecclesiastical terms available to the English reader. (16) Vizcarrondo, by La Roviere, 1814. (H. I. B.)

Greenwell, Dorothy, commonly known as "Dorothea Greenwell," was b. at Greenwell Ford, Durham, in 1821; resided at Ovingham Rectory, Northumberland (1848); Golborne Rectory, Lancashire; Durham (1854), and Clifton, near Bristol, where she d. in 1882. Her works include Poems, 1848: The Patience of Hope, 1851: The Life of Lacombe: A Present Heaven; Two Friends: Songs of Sa- ration, 1874, &c. Her Life, by W. Doring, was pub. in 1885. [J. J.]

Greenwood, John Brooke, b. at Huddersfield, Feb. 9, 1828, and educated at the Huddersfield College, is a merchant shipper of cotton yarn to the continental markets. In 1853 he pub. Recorda-Memorial of E. B. Cave. He has written many hymns, chiefly for Sunday-school anniversary services, and other special occasions. Of these the following, which appeared with others in an Appen- dize to the Leeds S. School H. Bk., pub. for the use of the Cheetham Hill (Manchester) S. School, are in C. U. outside that collection:

1. Grow with Thy benediction. *Holy Matrimoniy

4. There is no fold so fair as Thine. The Church of Christ.

5. What shall we render, Lord, to Thee! Holy Baptism.

The full text of No. 2 is 7 stanzas, lst-iv. from the original, and v.-vii. being a subsequent addition. Through a Roman Catholic relative of the author st. v.-vii. were given in the Catholic Progress, with her initial "S." From these it was taken by J. Orby Shiple, and included in his Annals of England, 1884, p. 101, with the same signature. The full text is in Horner's The Poet's Bible.

Mr. Greenwood's hymns possess great tenderness and refinement, and are worthy of attention than they have received.

Greg, Samuel, was b. in Manchester, Sept. 6, 1804, and educated by Dr. Lant Carpenter, at Bristol, and at the Edinburgh University. He subsequently became a millower at Bollington, near Macclesfield. He died May 14, 1877. The addresses given by him at services which he conducted for his workmen at Bollington were pub. posthumously as A Layman's Legacy, 1877, with a prefatory note by Dean Stanley. He was also author of Scenes from the Life of Jesus, 1854, 2nd ed. 1866. Some of his short poems were appended to his Layman's Legacy. He is known to hymnology as the author of:

1. My soul in death was sleeping. New Life in Christ. Appeared in his Scenes from the Life of Jesus, 1854, and included in the Lond. Hymnol. 1874, No. 639.

2. Slowly, slowly darkening. Old Age. Written in the midst of affliction, Sept. 1866, and pub. in his Layman's Legacy, 1877, in 11 st. of a poem entitled "The Mystery of Life." In 1864 it was given in W. G. Horner's Song Hymns, No. 537. In Martineau's Hymns, 1864, it reads, "Slowly, slowly, slowly, darkening." It is a hymn of great merit, and is well suited for Private Devotion.

3. Stay, Master, stay upon this heavenly hill. [Transfiguration.] 1st pub. in his Scenes from the Life of Jesus, 1854, at the close of a chapter on the Transfigure dow. It was reprinted in Macmillan's Magazine.
Gregor, Christian, a. of Georg Gregor, a pleasant living in the Silesian village of Dir-sdorf, near Pfeilau, was b. at Dirsdorf, Jan. 11, 1725. In 1742 he went to Herrnhut, where he was at first employed in tuition. He became leader of the music in the [Moravian] Brethren's congregation at Herrnhaus, in 1748, and in 1749 at Zeist; but in 1753 he returned to Herrnhut as leader of the Brethren's Board of Direction. He was in 1756, ordained diaconius, in 1767 presbyter, and in 1789 bishop of the Brethren's Church. On Nov. 6, 1801, he attended a meeting, held at Herrnhut, of the Board of Direction of which he had been a member from 1764. Just as he entered his house at Bernefeld, near Herrnhut, he was struck with paralysis, and d. that same day.
(Koch, vi, 436; Allg. Deutsche Biog., ix, 630.)

He was a man greatly beloved and respected, simple of heart, loving, earnest and hardworking; and was entrusted with many important missions and visits.
His hymns are characterized by childlike fervor of desire to a crucified Lord. A number appeared in Das kleine Brüder-Gesangbuch dritter Teil, Berlin, 1767; but they were mostly contributed to the Gesangbuch zum Gebrauch der evangelischen Brüder Gemeinnehmen Barby, 1778, of which he was the principal editor. He was also an excellent organist, and edited, in 1764, a collection of accompanying tunes for the hymn-book of 1774, contributing thereto various melodies by himself.
A little volume entitled Historische Nachricht vom
Brüder-Gesangbuch des Jahres 1778, und von den Ersetzungs-Verfassern, Genua, 1838 (2nd ed., 1851), occasionally referred to in these pages, is based on materials collected by Gregor.

His hymn in English C. U. are:

1. Dir dereinst mein Stundlein schlägt. [Love to Christ.] 1778, No. 660, in 5 st. of 4 l. Tr.:—
Till permitted hence to go, of st. 1, ii., iv., as
No. 565 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1801 (1886,
No. 1228). In 1826 an original st. by T. Bird was added, beginning, "Till the day when I shall tread." Repeated thus in 1886, No. 1228, and in J. A. Latrobe's Coll., 1841, No. 484.

II. Die Gottes Schramm. [The Angels.] Appeared as No. 1877 in Appendix xii. c., 1746, to the Herrnhut G. B. of 1735, thus:—

"Die Gottes Schramm
Erleben ihre Stimm, (Punksted von Bitts and Strahl).
Ihr Lied laßt, wenn ich lossagen darf,
Dann spielt mehr als eine Harf:
Ehre dem Seintheil!"

In 1778 it is included as No. 1600, beginning,
"Die Gottes Schramm," and expanded to three stanzas; of the "Angels," ii., of the Redeemed; iii.
of the Church on Earth. Here the song, "Ehre dem Seintheil," is given to the "Ehre dem Seintheil," in the "Angels," and a paraphrase of i., vi. 3, to the "Angels." The only tr. in C. U. is:—

"The Seraphim of God, in full from the 1778, by J. Miller and J. W. Foster, as No. 792 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1789 (1886, No. 1220), repeated in J. A. Latrobe's Coll., 1841, No. 424. Another tr. is "The Seraphim of God," from the original form, as No. 93 in pt. iii. of the Moravian H. Bk., 1748.

iii. Heilig, heilig, heilig, Herr Zeboath. [Public Worship.] The introductory hymn in 1778, in 4 st. of 8 l., as on "The Word of God."
The only tr. is:—

Holy Lord, Holy Lord, Holy and Almighty Lord,
by F. W. Foster, C. G. Clemens, and J. Swertner, as No. 1 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1789 (1886, No. 1), included from the text of 1801, as
No. 217 in Dr. Pagenstecher's Coll., 1864.

iv. Nach tausendfachen Pflegen. [Passional.]

1778, No. 128, in 8 l. It is tr. as:—
Behold, my soul, Thy Saviour, by P. H. Molther, as No. 352 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1789. See
No. vi.

v. O angenehme Augenblécke. [Eternal Life.]

Written in 1786. In 1778, No. 1749, in 2 st. of 8 l. The tr. are:—

1. What heavenly joy and consolation, by P. H.
Molther, of st. i., as No. 886 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1789 (1886, No. 1314, st. iii.). Included as No. 11 of No. 403 in the Irish Church Hyl., 1873.

vi. O susse Seelewieden. [Passional.]

1778, No. 167, in 11 st. of 8 l. Several versions are ascribed to Gregor; i., iv., xi., to Johann Prötiorius; and x.-xi. to C. R. von Zinzendorf (taken from Nos.
40 and 41 of the collected ed. of his hymns, 1754). The tr. is:—

How is my soul delighted, a tr. of st. i., ii., iv., vii., x., by F. W. Foster, and J. Miller, as No.
306 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1789. In the 1801 and later eds. (1866, No. 407), Molther's tr. of
No. iv. was prefixed as st. 1, new tr. of st. vii., and the rest altered. In the Book of Com. Praise, ed. 1872, No. 86, is st. i., ii., iv.,
vii., as the Irish Church Hyl., 1873.

vii. O Tage wahrer Seligkeit. [Joy of Forgiveness.]

1778, No. 398, in 6 st. of 8 l., included in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. Tr.:—

O days of solid happiness, in full as No. 340 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1801 (1886, No. 386). Two centos from the text of 1849 are in C. U.:

433 in the ed. of 1852 of Mercer's C. P. and H. Bk.

2. "Where'er we contemplate the grace," st. iv.-vi., as No. 396 in the Irish Church Hyl., 1873.

viii. Wenn schlägt die angenehme Stunde. [Ascension.] Written for Aug. 17, 1763, and included as No. 113 in 1767, as above, in 8 l. Tr.:—

When, 0 when shall I have the favour, by P. H.
Molther, c. 1774, included as No. 839 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1789, repeated as st. ii. of No.
403, in the Irish Church Hyl., 1873. In the 1866 ed. of the Moravian H. Bk., No. 1314.
It begins, "0 when shall I have that great favour."

ix. Wie wird mir eintoch sein. [Eternal Life.]

1778, No. 1743, in 10 st. of 8 l., as in the Historische Nachricht st. i., ii., are marked as by Gregor, and st. i., as by No.
117 of Zinzendorf, st. iv.-vi., as recast hymn beginning, "Die Bäume blickn ab, ten in the autumn of 1721, and included as No. 1245 in the 3rd ed. 1731, of his Sammlung geist- und lieblicher Lieder, in 46 st. of 4 l., the st.
of the original used being in order 39, 45, 22, 34, 18.

The only tr. in C. U. is:—

What shall I feel, when I am full from the 1778, by C. J. Latrobe, as No. 885 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1789 (1886, No. 1301). Two centos are in use:—

Gregory, John George, M.A., was b. in 1827 and educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge (b.a. 1853, M.A. 1856). In 1853 he took Holy Orders, and has held, besides various curacies, the incumbency of Nocton, and the rectory of Chorley, Isle of Wight, and the rectory of Park Chapel, Chelsea. In 1858 he became incumbent of Emmanuel Church, Hove, Brighton. Whilst at Chorley he published The Chorley Hymn Book, 1868. The 3rd ed. was published for the use of his congregation at Park Chapel, Chelsea, in 1875. It was finally rearranged as A Select Hymn for Use in Emmanuel Church, Hove, Brighton, in 1880. To the 1st ed. of this collection he contributed:

1. Almighty God, our King. Providence.
2. Blind us to Thee, Lord, we pray. Holiness desired.
4. Defer not, O our God. Missions.
5. Every hour is passing. The onward journey.
6. Father, we adore Thee. Holy Priestly.
7. Great God, we bless Thy name. Grace.
8. High above all the angels doth Jesus now reign. Amen.
10. In faith and hope we bring this child. Holy Baptism.
17. O God, we would raise. Praise.
19. We owe to Thee, O Lord. Called of God.
20. Zion's streets were thronging. Jerusalem desolate.

In the rearranged edition of his collection for Emmanuel Church, Hove, Mr. Gregory omitted Nos. 7, 8, 15, 18, 19, and 21 of the above, and added the following:

22. Exalted are angels doth Jesus now reign. Amen.
23. I would take me to the Cross. Good Friday.
24. Jesus, our Lord, we look to Thee. Amen.
plied his remaining years—probably about six —in writing poems, &c. He d. cir. 390.

St. Gregory's extant writings were pub. in two folio volumes, the first in 1770; and the second in 1842. This is commonly known as the Benedictine edition and is titled Sancti Patris nostri Gregorii Pontificis, Theologis eminentissimi, opusculorum et serm. pullatorum, &c., &c.
under the auspices of the Benedictine fathers, and published by their monks at Monte Cassino.

Gregory's Life and Works. His works were pub. in various forms, and his poems. The latter are in two volumes: Book I., (1) de valoribus, (2) moralis, &c. (I), and Book II., historical, (I) relating to himself, (2) relating to others, including Epistles, &c. The domestic poems are 38; the moral 40; those relating to his own life 91, and miscellaneous poems 60. Many of these are given in the Anth. Greg. of Chartres, and translated by Mr. Chisholm, in his Songs and Hymns of the Greek Christian Poets, 1815. For fuller details of St.
Gregory's Life and Works, see his works, and book forms of other matters relating thereto, see Hist. of Christian Religion, vol. I., pp. 341-346, and for criticism

[J. J.]

Gregory I., St. Pope. Surnamed The Great. Was b. at Rome about A.D. 540. His family was distinguished not only for its rank and social position, but for its piety and good works. His father, Gordianus, said to have been the grandson of Pope Felix II. or III., was a man of senatorial rank and great wealth; whilst his mother, Silvia, and her sisters-in-law, Tarullia and Aemilia, had obtained the distinction of canonization. Grea-try made the best use of his advantages in circumstances and surroundings, so far as his education went. "A saint among saints," he was considered second to none in Rome in grammar, rhetoric, and logic. In early life, before his father's death, he became a member of the Senate; and soon after he was thirty years of age, proctor of the city. But, though extremely popular amongst the countrymen, he had no mind to live "lapped in luxury," and accordingly, when his father died, he devoted the whole of the large fortune that he inherited to religious uses. He founded no less than six monasteries in Sicily, as well as one on the spot of his own house at Rome, with which latter he retired himself in the capacy of a Benedictine monk, in 575. In 579 he was made one of the seven Cardinal Deacons who presided over the seven principal divisions of Rome. The following year Benedict's successor, Pelagius II., sent him on an embassy of congratula-tion to the new emperor Tiberius, at Constanti-ople. After six years' residence at Constanti-ople, he returned to Rome. It was during this residence at Rome, before he was called unto the Church by the Papal court, that his interest was excited in the evangelization of Britain by seeing some beautiful children, natives of that country, exposed for sale in the slave-market there ("non Angli, non Angli"). He volunteered to head a mission to convert the British, and, having obtained the Pope's sanction for the enterprise, he got three days' journey on his way to England when he was peremptorily recalled by Pelagius, on the earnest demand of the Romopeople. In 590 he became Pope himself, and, as is well known, carried out his benevo-ent purpose towards Britain by the mission of St. Augustine, 596. His papacy, upon which he entered with genuine reluctance, and only after he had taken every step in his power to be relieved from the office, lasted until 604, when he d. at the age of eighty-five. His Pontificate was distinguished by his zeal, ability, and address in social and spiritual administration of his temporal and financial affairs, and his missionary work.

Their way into all parts of the known world. In Lombardy he subdued the Arianism; in Africa he greatly weakened the Church, and restored it to the ancient condition of the See of Rome. He advocated, rather than dictated to others, and strongly opposed the assumption of th title of "Universal Patriarch." By granting the title of Pope Constantine, on the ground that the Pope had been deprived of his name, he set the example of being called the "Servant of God's Servants." He exhibited entire toleration for Jews and heathens, and his disapproval of slavery by emancipating all his own slaves.

The one grave blot upon his otherwise upright and virtuous character was his gross hypocrisy in congratulating Philosophy his accession to the throne as emperor in 601; a position which the church had secured for the assistance of the imperial army in which he was a centurion, by the murder of his predecessor Mauricius (whose six sons had been slaughtered before their father's eyes), and that of the empress Constantina and her three daughters.

Gregory's great learning won him the distinction of being ranked as one of the four Latin doctors, and exhibited itself in many works of value, the most important of which are his Moralium Libri xxv, and his two books of hymns on Ezekiel and the Gospels. His influence was also great as a preacher and many of his sermons are still extant, and form indeed no inconsiderable portion of his works that have come down to us. But he is most famous, perhaps, for the services he rendered the liturgy and music of the Church, wherewith he gained for himself the

The Benedictine editors credit St. Gregory with hymns, viz. (1) "Primo dierum omnia" (2) "Nocte surgentibus vigilium" (3) "Ecce jam noctis lassitator umbra" (4) "Charum decus Jesum" (5) "Audie beatae Mariae, p. 1. 2. (b) "Magna salus gaudia" (7) "Rex Christe factor omnia" (8) "Laudis Creator Optime." Daniel in his vol. 1, assigns him three others. (9) "Ecce tempus idoneum" (10) "Summi tantum praeservata" (11) "Noctis tempus posternum." For the rest of these hymns see under their respective first lines. (For an elaborate account of St. Gregory, see Smith and Wace's Dictionary of Christian Biography.)

[D. S. W.]

Gretter, Matthias, was a monk and chorister of Strassburg Cathedral, but in 1524 espoused the cause of the Reformation. In 1528 he was appointed assistant pastor of St. Martin's Church, and afterwards at St. Stephen's. When the interminable Agricola was forced on Strassburg, he was the only one of the Lutheran pastors that sought to further it, a course which he afterwards deeply regretted. His death is dated by Wetzel, i. 319, as Dec. 20, 1550; by the Allg. Deutsche Bldg., ix. 598, as Nov. 20, 1550; while Koch, ii. 101, says he died of the pestilence in 1532.

Gretter was a distinguished musician, and with his friend Dachstein (q. v.) edited the Strassburg Kirchen-ampel, 1524-5. Four psalm tunes by gretter, and one by Dachstein were inserted by Calvin in his first Hymnbook published at Strassburg, 1539. All these were transferred to the first ed. of the French-Iessian Psalter in 1542, and two of them, both by gretter (the tunes to psalms 36 and 91), were retained in the final ed. of 1542. Of his 7 Psalms versions 4 have been tr. into English:

Greville, Robert Kaye, LL.D., was eldest son of Rev. Robert Greville, rector of Edistone, Derbyshire, and was b. at Bishop Auckland in 1794. He studied medicine at Edinburgh and London, and finally settled, though he did not practise, in Edinburgh. He was a distinguished botanist, and a well-known philanthropist. He edited and contributed to a number of the current annuals from 1830 to 1850. He was a member of the congregation of the Rev. D. T. K. Drummond, and joint editor with him of The Church of England Hymn-book, 1838, contributing three to nine hymns. He d. at Murrayfield, Edinburgh, June 1, 1866 (Miller's Singers & Songs, p. 438). [See Scotch Hymnody, § vi.]

His hymns, dating from the commencement of 1838, are:

1. A little while and every fear. Death anticipated.
2. A lost and sinful world to save. Christianity.
4. God of the world, we praise Thy name. Temporality.
5. O Ancient of eternal days. Praise to the Father.
6. O God, the judge of nations, hark. National Fast.
7. O God, we come before Thee. Happiness desired.

In addition to these hymns, some of which are still in C. U., and all are worthy of attention, the following is also by Dr. Greville:

1. O God, from Thee alone. Missions.

It appeared in The Church of England Magazine, Jan. 1, 1838, in 6 st. of 4 l. In 1842 it passed into the P. C. K. Hymn, No. 145, and was repeated in later editions and in other collections. [J. J.]

Griffiths, Ann, of Dolwar Fechan, Montgomeryshire, was b. in 1776, and d. in 1805. She composed many beautiful hymns, a collection of which was pub. (posthumously) in 1806, and also in 1808, under the title of "Hymns of the Deluge and Drem," ("Hymns of Praise to God and the Lamb"). Several of her hymns rank with the best in the Welsh language.

[W. G. T.]

Grigg, Joseph, was b. in 1728, according to the "s. mss.," but this date seems to be 6 or 8 years too late. He was the son of poor parents and was brought up to mechanical pursuits. In 1743 he took his trade and became assistant minister to the Rev. Thomas Bures, of the Presbyterian Church, Silver Street, London. On the death of Mr. Bures in 1747, he retired from the ministry, and, marrying a lady of property, took up his residence at St. Albans. He d. at Walthamstow, Essex, Oct. 29, 1758. As a hymn-writer Grigg is chiefly known by two of his hymns: "Behold a stranger at the door," and "Can it be ever?" His hymn-writing began, it is said, at 10 years of age. His published works of various kinds number over 40. Those in which his hymns are found are:

In 1861 D. Sedgwick collected his hymns and poems, and pub. them with a memoir of him:

Hymns on Divine Subjects, &c., London, 1861.

Grinfield, Thomas, M.A., b. Sept. 27th, 1788, and educated at Paul's Grey, Kenilworth, and Trinity College, Cambridge. Taking Holy Orders in 1813, he was preferred to the Rectory of Shirkland, Derbyshire, in 1827 (Lyra Brit. 1867, p. 256). He d. in 1870.

His published works include:

From Nos. 2 and 3 the following hymns have come into C. U.:

1. And is there a land far away from sin and woe! Heaven. No. 84 of his tr. of G. S. Song, 1836, in 4 st. of 4 l., and headed "The Heavenly Land.
2. O how kindly hast Thou set me asu. The Divine Guide. No. 85 of his tr. of G. S. Song, 1836, in 2 st. of 8 l.
GRISWOLD, ALEXANDER V.

and entitled "Remembrance of the Way." In 1838 it was given as No. 166 in J. H. Gurney's Lutterworth Calf, 1838; in his Magazine Ps. & Hym., 1841, No. 166; in Lord Selborne's Bk. of Prize, 1862, No. 209, and other editions.

3. It is true, the glorious view, Heaven, 1st pub. In his Osmantyre of God, 1829, in 5 st. of 14 li., and entitled "The New Jerusalem." It is given in S. Gurney's Songs of G. d. G., 1872, No. 1003.

4. They talked of Jesus as they went. The walk to In 5 st. of 14 li., in his Century, 1836, No. 32, was given in Lord Selborne's Bk. of Prize, 1862, No. 209, and in Lyra Eucharistica, 1863.

5. Though far from thy (your) country, unfriended, In 5 st. of 14 li., in his Lyra, 1829, No. 35, in 5 st. of 4 li., and entitled "Departure of Missionaries." In Dale's English H. Bk., 1875, No. 1031, it is somewhat altered, and it is No. 11, and iv. are omitted.

6. It came, the time so oft foretold. Christmas, No. 26, in his Lyra, 1829, in 10 st. of 6 li., and headed "Angels announcing to Shepherds the Birth of a Saviour. A Christmas Ode." In J. H. Gurney's Lutterworth Calf, 1836, No. 126, as No. 26, and in Lord Selborne's Bk. of Prize, 1862, as No. 32.

7. This not in circumstances. Psalms. In its original form this is not in C. U., except in The Comprehensive Rippon, 1844, but it appeared as No. 44 in his Century, 1836, as "All may be outwardly," in 4 st. of 12 li. in Dr. Dale's Exp. H. Bk., 1875, No. 982, in 16 st. of 16 li. of altered form.

8. When my heart begins to ache, Psalms. In his Century, 1836, No. 53, in 12 li., and headed "Remember me, O Christ, in thy request of his Saviour." In Dale's English H. Bk., 1875, No. 834. I. It is omitted.

9. Why art thou grieving? Psalms. In his Century, 1836, in 2 st. of 12 li., and headed "Why art thou distressed?" Hope then in God." In Dale's English H. Bk., 1875, No. 599, it begins "Why are we grieving?" and is divided into 6 st. of 4 li.

In addition to these hymns there are in the Lyra Brit., 1867, the following:

10. All may be outwardly. The Heart the seat of Peace or Pains, No. 44, but see No. 7 for this.

11. Grant me, Lord, to walk with Thee. Simplicity.

12. O could we, as pupils, raise our eyes. Walking by Faith.

Of these, No. 10 is in Sacred Melodies appended to some editions of the Comprehensive Rippon, together with the following:

13. Happy those who rest have found. Regain in Jesus. No. 56.

15. O do not forsake me, my Father, my Friend.

16. Sweetly let's join our evening hymn. For me at Sea.

17. Sweetly ye blow, celestial gale. For me at Sea.

18. Wake, my voice, O wake once more. Farewell.

These hymns all appeared in his Century, &c. 1836.

GRISWOLD, Alexander Viets, D.D., b. at Simsbury, Connecticut, in 1766. After being for some time rector at Bristol, Rhode Island, he was consecrated bishop of the Eastern Diocese, in 1811. He was subsequently Bishop of Massachusetts He d. in 1843, and his known hymn:

Holy Father, great Creator, Holy Trinity, was written probably in 1836. It appeared in that year in his Hymn Prayers, 1 st. of 4 li., and entitled "Hymn Fp. 1st, Afr. in Lyra Hymn. For Church and Home, &c.

Phila., 1860, No. 133. It was in the Lyra Hymn. of the Protestant Episcopal Church, 1871, No. 143.

GROSART, Alexander Balloch, D.D., LL.D., was b at Stirling, N.B., on 18th June, 1835, and educated at the Falkirk Parish School, and privately; the University of Edinburgh, and the Theological Hall of the United Presbyterian Church. His own alma mater conferred on him the degree of LL.D., and St. Andrew's University, D.D. On 29th October, 1859, he was ordained as the First United Presbyterian Church, Kinnaird during which pastorate he became an editor of the Works and Life and Letters of Michael Bruce, and nicknamed by the legend of Dr. Richard Sibbes, Thomas Brooks, and many others, in Nichol's Puritan Divines and Puritan Commentaries, and as author of the Life and Letters of Michael Bruce, and of Jesus Christ, for all the World and all the World for Christ; Small Sins; Lamb of all, or Salvation of Children; Prince of Light and Prince of Darkness, or the Temptation of Jesus, and various practical books. Perhaps in literature his name came most prominently forward as author of Lord Byron not the author of the Christian Paradoxes (1865)—a discovery accepted at once by Lord Byron, and universally, and so removing a shadow that had long lain on an illustrious name. This has since been followed up by a number of noticeable kindred discoveries, e.g. that Phineas Fletcher, the supposed author of Bring, was not the author of Britain's Ida (the name and family history of Spencer's wife, "Elizabeth"), the identification of the Phoenix as Q. Elizabeth and of the Turtle Dove as the Earl of Essex in Sir Robert Etching's Love's Martyr or Roxana's Complaint (1605)—the only known book to which Shakespeare contributed verses (New Shakespeare Society 1878); and unpublished use of George Herbert, Richard Crashaw, &c., From Kinross he was translated to Princess' Park United Presbyterian Church, Liverpool; and in 1868 to Blackburn, Lancashire, where he is present the minister of St. George's (Presbyterian Church of England).

Throughout his professional life, Dr. Grosart has been a voluminous author, biographer, editor, and scholar. The Fuller Worthen's Library, 39 vols. Chater's Worthen's Library, 14 vols. Occasional Essays of Unique and Very Rare Books, 38 vols. The Mth Library, 39 vols. editor of the Works of Spencer, 4 vols. Samuel Daniel, 5 vols. George Herbert, 16 vols. Townley MSS., 4 vols. Sir John Milton MSS., 6 vols. Lamor Papers, 10 vols. Poets Works of Wordsworth, 2 vols. The Spring Lecture, Representative, Numeral, and Numerical, 1872—are only some of the fruits of his critical, annotative, and bibliographical labours on our English literature and other early literature. As an editor his books have been abundantly helpful in our d. num. ment, and not a few of his authors belong to it. 9. as Spencer, Sidney, More, Beaumont, Bruce, &c. He was the first to print many poems of George Herbert, Richard Crashaw, and others, and to translate their Latin and Greek poems. Much of our richest, finest, and rarest English literature is only obtainable in Dr. Grosart's editions; these were nearly all privately printed, and limited. They are to be found in all our own great libraries, and in those of Europe and America. He has also contributed largely to the various literary and theological periodicals, Encyclopedia Britannica, New Review, &c. In 1867, he printed for private circulation a small vol. of 11 hymns, two of which have been introduced into Dr. Charles Rogers' Map of Christian Home (1875), viz., "The Living Way," and "Holiness." He has also printed a number of a year and Watch-night Hymns, which have had a large circulation in Watchword Cards and balls; also two "Teardrop lamp" and "God bless our Church and School." In Leisure Hour and Sunday at Home, &c., he has announced his intention of sooner or later collecting a Century or more of his gradually accumulated hymns.

GROSART, Alexander B. 471.
Grosi, Horace George, s. of Wm. H. Grosi (q.v.), was b. in North London, Dec. 22nd, 1833. He is a member of the Congregational Denomination, and is wholly employed in literary work as editor and author. In 1866 he pub. a religious story entitled "Betha Pemberty," but the greater part of his writings have been short poems contributed to the Sunday Magazine, The Girls' Own Paper, and other periodicals. He is the author of several hymns, a good specimen of which is in the Voice of Praise, 1866, "When my spirit pants for rest" (Lord, remember me.)

[W. R. S.]

Grosi, William, s. of a Baptist Minister, was b. in London in 1791. In 1813 he became pastor of a small Baptist church at Princes Risborough, Bucks; in 1820 he removed to Maidstone, and in 1829 to London, where he resided until his death, in 1856. For some years subsequently to 1830, he was editor of The Baptist Magazine, and for the last five years of his life Secretary of the Baptist Irish Society. Mr. Grosi also did good service to hymnody as an editor of hymn-books. The Baptist New Selection, prepared by Dr. Murch and others (see Bapt. Hymnals), was edited by him in 1828. At the request of the Baptist Missionary Society he also prepared and edited in 1832, A Sel. of Hymns adapted to Pub. Worship, and designed chiefly for the use of Baptist Churches in Jamaica. London, Hadden & Co. This selection was reprinted in 1890 with the addition of 57 hymns; but is no longer in use, having been superseded by the Bap. Ps. & Hymns, 1858. As a hymn-writer Mr. Grosi is known by one hymn only:—

Praise the Redeemer, almighty to save. Death conquered. It was composed during his residence in Maidstone, to the metre and tune of "Sound the loud Timbrel," and appeared in the enlarged Sel. of Hymns for the use of Baptist Congregations, London, 1841; again in Spurgeon's O. T. H. Bk., 1866, and in the 1890 Suppl. to Bap. Ps. & Hymns. [W. R. S.]

Grosi, William Howse, b.m.c., s. of Mr. W. Grosi (for many years Secretary of the London Sunday School Union, and a relative of the Rev. W. Grosi, noticed above), was b. in 1834, and educated at University College, London, and graduated b.a. at the London University, in 1862. Although engaged in mercantile pursuits Mr. Grosi devotes considerable time to natural science, and Christian work, especially in connection with Sunday schools. He was for twelve years editor of the Bible Class and Youth's Magazine; and subsequently of the Sunday School Teacher, and of the Excelsior. His publications, mainly of a Biblical and educational character, are numerous. In 1875, he edited:—

Praise the Way: A Hymnal for Young Christians and Inquirers, Lond. 8vo. .

He also contributed hymns to the S. S. Union hymn-books:—

1. Songs of the Way, 1856.
4. The Lord is our Shepherd: The Good Shepherd.
5. In Sunday Scholars' H. Bk., 1861.

Gruenwald, Georg, was an Anabaptist shoemaker, who suffered martyrdom for his principles, being in 1529 burnt at the stake at Kopfstein, or Kinstain, on the Lin below Linderburg. To him is ascribed, in a ms. Anabaptist Chronicle now in the Town Library at Hamburg, the hymn:—

[Comemstur mir, sagt Geteke Sohn. (crust's Pok.)] Founded on St. Matt. 26.38. Appeared as "Am schönstes neues christliche lied," in 1536. Wackernagel, iii. pp. 128-133, gives this in 16 st. and three later forms. The form in V. Babt's G. B., Leipzig, 1545, is that in C. U. as in the F. L. S., 1864, No. 421. It has been generally ascribed to Hans Wittstock of Wertheim, but Wackernagel in a long note decides in favour of Gruenwald. The two are (1) "Come, hear, says God's Son to me," in the Gender and Godly Ballates, ed. 1545, folio, 16 (1545, p. 83); (2) "Come, hear, says our blessed Lord," by J. C. Jacobis, 1725, No. 18 (1725, p. 131); repeated as No. 151 in p. l. of the Moravian H. Bk., 1794; (3) "Come, hear, says the Son of God," by dr. H. Mills; 1856, p. 47. (4) "Come, hear, says our blessed Lord," by Dr. G. Walker, 1860, p. 90. [J. M.]

Gruenwald, Esther, nee Magdalene Augusta Naverofsky, was b. at Gotha, Oct. 21, 1717, of a Polish-Jewish family who had become Christians. In 1734 she married Michael Gruenbeck, a sculptor in Gotha, and in 1738 with him became a Moravian; entering the Widows' Choir after his death in 1742. Married in 1746 David Kirchhof, a baptized Jew, she engaged with him for some time in mission work among the Jews in Prussia and Poland. After his death she became leader of the Widows' Choir at Zeist, near Utrecht, and d. there Oct. 13, 1796. In the Historische Nachrichten to the Brauer G. B., 1778 (ed. 1851, p. 203), 8 hymns and part of a ninth in that collection are ascribed to her. These in English use outside the Moravian hymn-books are:—

1. Dem blut'gen Lamme, Selbstdedikation. Founded on Rom. vi. 13. 1st pub. 1739, as No. 1365 in the Supplement to the Herrnuth G. B., 1735; in 10 st., 6 l., repeated as No. 755 in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. The two are in C. U. as:—

To the Lamb slain with Blood, tr. in full by C. Kinchen as No. 155 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1742. Four forms are in use:—

3. "Lord! bring me to resign," a cent. from st. vii., viii., as No. 437 in Dr. Maritain's Hymnals, 1840 (1873, No. 283), and as No. 668 in the American Baptist Pulpit, 1843.
4. "To Thee I wholly give," a cent. beginning with st. vii., in Lady Huntingdon's S., 1799. It was subsequently changed to "To Thee, my Lord, I give,"

Gundeb, Cyriacus, was b. Mar. 23, 1817, at Chard, Somerset, and educated at Milb Hill School, and at University College. He held several pastoresu, beginning with Hastingbore in 1841, and closing with Seven-Acre, in 1881. He d. May 21, 1886. He pub. various works, chiefly descriptive of the Nonconformist Churches and their principles. Besides translating some of the earlier Greek and Latin hymns for the Exeget, edited by the late Dr. James Hamilton, he wrote many hymns; including:

1. Higher, higher to the Cross. The Cross of Christ. Appended, in 5 st. of 4 l., in the 1665 Supplement to the collection used in the Redland Congregational Church, Bristol. It is also issued in sheet form.

2. Our fathers were high-minded men, Fidelity to principle. This was suggested by the disruption of the Church of Scotland in 1743. It was put in the Alton Sunday School Collection, No. 4, in 5 st. of 4 l. It is in several hymnbooks, including the Non-conformist Union Bk. of Praise for Children, 1891.

4. We want no priest but Jesus. Priesthood of the faithful. Printed for the annual meeting of the Willis Congregational Union, 1872. It is largely circulated as a broadsheet, and has been tr. into Italian for the use of the Evangelical Church of Italy. [W. G. H.]

Anon. has been frequently ascribed to Andreas Gypius, but we have failed to find either his works or the works of Christian Gypius. It is:
Gotha. He d. at Gotha in the beginning of Oct. 1704 (Koch, iv. 265-9; Bodl, p. 81). His son, who was clerk of St. George's Church at Gotha, possessed a ms. collection of some 300 hymns by his father; and from this he allowed Freylinghausen to select 10 for his Neues gesammeltes G. B., 1714. These are above the average in merit, and Scriptural and good in style. Two have passed into English:—

1. Bringt her dem heiligen Lob und Edle, Praise and Thanksgiving. 1714, No. 556, in 7 st. of 7 l., repeated as No. 993 in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. The only tr. in C. U. is:—

With joyful heart your praises sing, a good tr. of 1st st., by A. T. Russell, as No. 202 in his Ps. & Hwy., 1851.

2. Hail! Immanuel Jesum Christ. Love to Christ. Founded on 2 Tim. iii. 8. 1714, No. 765, in 6 st. of 7 l., repeated as No. 297 in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. On thankfulness of Christ's Incarnation (i.); Death (ii.); Resurrection (iii.); Ascension (iv.); Promised Second Advent (v.); ending with a prayer for faith (vi). The only tr. in C. U. is:—

O keep before thy thankful eyes. A good and full tr. by A. T. Russell, as No. 182 in his Ps. & Hwy., 1851.

Other trs. are: (1) "Remember Jesus, God's dear Son," by Dr. H. Mills, 1845 (1866, p. 125). (2) "Jesus beseet mit Dank." by Miss Cox, in Lyra Eucharistica, 1863, p. 215 (1864, p. 254), and in her H. from German, 1864, p. 111.

Gurney, Archer Thompson, was b. in 1820, and educated for the legal profession. He was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple, but in 1849 he entered Holy Orders. He held several appointments, including the Curacy of Buckingham, 1854-58; the Chaplaincy of the Courth Church, Paris, 1858-71, and other charges. He d. at Bath, March 21, 1890. His pub. works include:—

Spring, 1853; Songs of the Present, 1854; The Ode of Peace, 1855; Songs of Early Summer, 1844; and A Book of Praise, 1862.

To the Book of Praise he contributed 147 hymns. Very few of these are known beyond his own collection. He is widely known through his Easter hymn, "Christ is risen, Christ is risen." His "Memory of the best departed" (88 Philip and James) is in the People's H., 1867.

Gurney, John Hampden, M.A., eldest s. of Sir John Gurney, a Baron of the Exchequer, was b. in Serjeants' Inn, London, Aug. 15, 1806, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1824. On taking Holy Orders he became Curate of Lutterworth (1827-1844), and subsequently Rector of St. Mary's, Marylebone, and Prebending of St. Paul's Cathedral. He d. in London, March 8, 1890. The 8. P. C. K. and other religious societies had his cordial sympathy, and received his active support. His publications include several small volumes in prose, and the following:—

(1) Church Psalmsy: Hints for the improvement of a repository of Hymns published by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, 1853; (2) A Collection of Hymns for Public Worship, Lutterworth, 1858. This contains 300 hymns, and is known as his Lutterworth collection; (3) Psalms and Hymns for Public Worship, selected for some of the Churches of Marylebone, London, 1858. This collection of 300 hymns and psalm versions is known as his Marylebone Collection. The Guthrie, John, D.D., s. of John Guthrie, Minnathort, Kinross-shire, was b. at Minnathort, May 30, 1814, and after studying at the University of Edinburgh, where he graduated M.A. in 1835, was in 1840 ordained minister of the United Secession Church in Kendal.

Guyet, Charles.

Guyon, Madame (1648-1717) Jeanne Marie Beurville de la Mothe was the leader of the Quietist movement in France. The foundation of her Quietism was laid in her study of St. Francis de Sales, Madame de Chantal, and Thomas à Kempis, in the conventional establishments of her native place, Montargis (Dep. Loiret), where she was educated as a child. There she also first learned the sentiment of espousal of Christ, to which later years gave a very marked development. She was married at sixteen to M. Guyon, a wealthy man of weak health, twenty-two years her senior; and her life, until his death, in 1676, was, partly from dissipation of years, partly from the tyranny of her mother-in-law, partly from her own quick temper, an unhappy one. Her public career as an evangelist of Quietism began soon after her widowhood. Her first labours were spent in the Diocese of Geneva, at Annecy, Genx, and Thonon, and in Grenoble. In 1686 she came to Paris, where she was at first imprisoned for her opinions in the Convention of St. Mari in the Faubourg St. Antoine, but released after eight months at the instance of Madame de Maintenon. She then rose to the zenith of her fame. Her life at all times greatly fascinates those around her; and the court, Madame de Maintenon, Fénelon (who ardently sympathised with her doctrine of pure and disinterested love of God), Madame de Maintenon's College of Ladies at Versailles, etc., under the spell of her enthusiasm and the alliance of her doctrine with those of Molière, who was condemned in her by her opponents. Her opinions were condemned by a commission, which Bossuet was president. She then incurred Bossuet's displeasure by breaking the promised promises she had made to him to maintain a quiet attitude and not return to Paris. She was imprisoned at Vincennes, Dec. 1688, and in the following year removed to Vaugirard, under a promise to avoid all receptions and correspondence, except by special permission. In 1688 she was imprisoned in the Bastille, and not released until 1702. The Quietist controversy had meanwhile risen the saintly Fénelon in the favour of Louis XIV., and obtained the condemnation by the Pope (1690) of his book (Maximes des Saints) written in defence of the doctrine of disinterested love. The husband of Madame Guyon's life was spent in retirement with her daughter, the Marquise de Vaux, at Blois. She was visited there by persons of all ranks, some of them from foreign countries; and she had a considerable correspondence. She heard Mass daily, and died in full communion with the Roman Church. Madame Guyon's works fill 4 vols. The principal ones are: (1) Les Torréfactions (1683), a description of God's dealings with souls, founded on her own spiritual history. (2) Le Cantique des Cantiques interprété selon le sens mystique. (3) Le Moyen d'être heureux (1684). (4) Autobiography. (5) Poèmes (pub. 1722). The Cantiques Spirituels comprise nearly 5000 pages. The dates of composition are uncertain, but it to be gathered from internal evidence must appear to have been written in the country; many were certainly written in her imprisonments at the Convent of Marle and Vincennes; many may apparently last sickness at Blois. They were composed to ballad tunes, and with an effortless facility, five or six hymns written in a day, while confined to her bed. She believed them to originate from the Divine impulse more from herself. The cantiques are at once prosaic and interpreted by her autobiography (which is one of the most remarkable books in the delineation of spiritual enthusiasm) and by her commentary on the Song of Solomon, which applies its passionate love to the union of Christ with the soul. The leading tenets are: (1) the absorption of the soul, utterly emptied of itself, into the Infinite Being of God; which is expressed as the whole life, as the entire occupation of the soul, reduced to nothingness ("le neant, le rien"), and deprived of all independent will, by the Personality of the object of devotion. The perfect state of the soul is one of complete passivity; its energy is the energy of God directing and wielding the human powers; prayer becomes not the expression of desire, but the expression of love, wordless intercourse, and reception of the Divine Voice by the soul. (2) Pure and disinterested love of God as Himself. The Perfect Love, unimpaired by any contamination of the favour and blessing of the holy soul, if it be His will to cast the soul into itself, even this to be accepted without fear or despondency. The essential prerogative of the soul to be loved by God is not impaired. (3) The Love of God is constant with the soul, often unutterable, or apparently capricious, through the sufferings and sorrows which are the subject of the cantiques and the selection of these poems was from the poet Coquer, in 1722 (pub. by his friend William Buill, in 1683). It has introduced the poems to the learned and has recommended them to translation. Whether Buill or Coquer selected the pieces for translation is uncertain. The leading theme is that of Love unaltered.

Habert, Isaac, was a native of Paris, where he became Doctor of the Sorbonne. Canon and Lecturer in Divinity to the Chaplains of the Cathedral, and Preacher to the King. On Dec. 17, 1615, he was consecrated Bp. of Valence (Aveyron), a post which he held with esteem for over twenty years. He d. of apoplexy while on a visit to Pont-de-Salers, near Rodez, Sept. 15, 1668, and was buried in the Cathedral at Valence.

He is best known as a writer against Jansenism; and as the editor of the Liber Pontificalis, Paris, 1641, which contains the Greek service with a Latin version by himself. He contributed a number of Latin hymns to the Paris Romani of 1643. Those which are repeated in the Paris Romani of 1736 are marked there H. Vab. Ep. or H. Vab. Ep. [J. M.]

aciou Domini," in 6 st. of 4 l. It was repeated in the revised Paris Brev., 1730, as the hymn for the 1st and 2nd Vespers of Feast of Annunciation. Also in Carol. Newman's Hymns Ecclesiæ, 1838 and 1865. Tr.
as:

O joyous was the morn. By R. Campbell in his Hymns and Anthems, &c., 1850, p. 2. This, in a rewritten form, is given in the Hymnary, 1872, as "O joyous rose this sacred morn."

Other tr. are:
1. This is the day, the solemn day. J. Chandler, 1837; sometimes given as "O day of glad solemnity," as in Murray's Hymnal, 1842.
2. This is the festal light. J. Williams, 1839.
3. Hail, festal morn, whose sacred ray. J. D. Chambers. 1846.

Hail, holy, holy Lord

angels, &c. E. Perringt. [Holy Trinity.
Appeared in his Occasional Verses, &c., p. 23, in 9 st. of 4 l., and entitled, "The is King." It is a companion hymn to author's. All hail the power of Jesus' Name and in common with it repeats the last line
st. 1. in each stanza with the change in st.
vi and ix of "And shout, The Lord is King," to "O shout," "High shout," and "Loud shout." In Hatfield's Church Bk., N. Y., 1872, No. 295 is composed of st. 1-ii., v. and ix.

[J. J.]

Hail, holy martyrs, glorious names.

C. Wesley. [For Martyrs.] 1st pub. in Hys. & Soc. Poems, 1738, in 12 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Written after walking over Smithfield." (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 343.) A cento in the Leeds H. Bk., 1833, No. 606, beginning with the same first line, is thus composed: st. i., ii., iv.-vi. are from this hymn, with alterations; and st. iii. and v. vi. are by another hand. From this cento another was taken for the Bpt. Ps. & Hys., 1858. It begins, "Father, though storm on storm appear," and includes st. iii.-v. and vii. [J. J.]

Hail, Name of Jesus, glorious Name.

[Ascension.] This hymn is based upon E. Perronet's "All hail the power of Jesus' Name," and several lines are taken from that hymn. It appeared in Jane E. Leeson's Paraphrases of Hys., 1853, in 2 st. of 8 l., and was repeated in the Irvingite Hys. for the Use of the Churches, 1864. Its ascription is "E. Perronet, 1779; Jane E. Leeson, 1853." [J. J.]

Hail, sacred day of earthly rest.

G. Thring. [Sunday.] Written in 1793, and 1st pub. in his Hys. Congregational and Others, 1866, p. 82, in 13 st. of 4 l. In the Appendix to the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hys., 1869, No. 314, it was given in 9 st. with st. i. 1-3 changed from "Hail, quiet spirit bringinge peace," to "Hail, day of light, that bringest light," by R. W. W. How. This text was repeated in Thring's Coll., 1882, No. 65, and is the authorised form of the hymn. In Laudes Domini, N. Y., 1884, No. 92, st. i.-iii. and xii. are altered from the original 8, 6, 8, 4 to 8, 8, 8, 4, very much to the injury of the hymn. Full authorised text in the author's Hys. & Soc. Lyrics, 1874, p. 21. [J. J.]

Hail, sovereign love, that first began.

J. Brewer. [Christ the Hiding Place.] 1st appeared in the English Magazine, Oct. 1776, in 9 st. of 4 l., and signed "Sylvester." It was given in full in J. Medlynton's Hymns, 1793, No. 279; in Williams and Boden, 1801, No. 226; in unedited editions of the Lady Huntington Coll., No. 328, and others. Rippon, in the 27th ed. of his Sel., 1827, No. 172, Pt. ii., set the example of abbreviation, and this addition has been followed in almost all modern collections in G. Britain and America. In addition to abbreviated text there are also three altered forms of the hymn:

1. Hail, sovereign love, that first began. No. 645 in the 1st ed. of Bickersteth's Christ. Psalmody, 1833; this had undergone considerable alteration, and further changes were made in the enlarged ed., 1841.
2. Hail, sovereign love, that form'd the plan. This is in somewhat extensive use in America, including Beecher's Plymouth Hys., 1845, No. 548; Songs for the Sanctuary, 1845, No. 450, and others.

Full original text in Lyra Brit., 1867, p. 87. [J. J.]

Hail the day that sees Him rise.

C. Wesley. [Ascension.] 1st pub. in Hys. & Soc. Poems, 1738, p. 211, in 10 st. of 4 l., and entitled, "Hymn for Ascension Day." (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 187.) It has come into C. U. in various forms, of which the following are the most popular:

1. The original. This was given in the Suppl. to the Wes. H. Bk., 1830, No. 69; in the revised ed., 1875, No. 718; and several other collections. The first stanza reads:

"Hail the day that sees Him rise, \nChrist while to mortals given, \nHails now the highest heaven."

2. The full text, with slight alterations, appeared in Whitefield's Coll., 1733, No. 43. This form of the hymn may be known by st. vii. ii., 1-2, which read:

"Still for us He intercedes, \nPrevent His death He pleads." 3. An abbreviated text, given in Madoz's Ps. & Hys., 1760, No. 23, in 4 st. of 8 l. In this st. ii. and v. are omitted, and the alterations as in Whitefield are adopted. This has been repeated in several collections, both old and new, including the Dutch Reformed Hys. of the Church, N. Y., 1839, No. 187. In this last case the original reading (altered as Whitefield) is restored.
4. The most popular form of the hymn dates from 1820. In that year it was given in the 9th ed. of Cotterill's Sel., No. 106, as follows (the italics being Cotterill's alterations):

1. "Hail the day that sees Him rise, \nChrist while to mortals given, \nHails now the highest heaven." 2. "Still for us He intercedes, \nPrevent His death He pleads; \nNear Himself prepare our place, \nHarbinger of human race." 3. "O thou who partook from our sight \nFrom above you are above, \nGrant our hearts may thither rise, \nSeeking You above the skies." This text was repeated almost verbatim in Bickersteth's Christ. Psalmody, 1833; Elliott's Ps. & Hys., 1835; and others down to 1852, when, in the Rev. G. C. White's Introtus and Hys., the "Hallelujah" refrain was added to each verse. This form of the text, with the addition in some cases, as in H. A. & M. of st. v. of the original ("See! He lifts His hands above"), is very popular, and is found in the Hymnary, 1872; H. A. & M., 1861 & 1875; Thring's Coll., 1882; the Universal H. Bk., 1885; and others. It is By C. Wesley, 1739; G. Whitefield, 1753; T. Cotterill, 1820; and G. C. White, 1852. 5. The text of the H. Comp., 1870 and 1876, is from the original with the "Hallelujah" refrain, and the change in st. ii., 1. 1. of "pompous" to "glorious" and st. vi., 1-1. of "Grant" to "Lord." 6. In the Salisbury H. Bk., 1857, No. 106. A cento from the original, the Cotterill-White text, and others, together with a doxology, was given as "Hail the day that sees Him go." This was replaced by the original, in the Sarum Hymnal, 1868.
HAIL THE SIGN, THE SIGN

7. The S. P. C. K. Church Hymn, 1871, omits st. iii. and vi. of the original, and gives variations from Cotterill and others.

8. In the 1863 ed. of the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hys., No. 230, there is a cento of which st. i.-v. are altered from Wesley, and v., vi. are new to the hymn. It begins, "Master, Lord, to Thee we cry."

9. The American collections usually follow those of G. Britain in its various forms, and the source of each text can be determined by the preceding annotations. In the Church Peculiar, Boston, 1864, No. 76, as "Master, may we ever say," is composed of st. viii.-x.

I. Several hymn-books also present slight variations either from the original, or from one of the altered forms, but these are too minute and numerous to give in detail.

When all its various forms are taken into account, this hymn ranks as one of the three hymns by C. Wesley which of his compositions have attained to the greatest popularity. The other two are, "Hark! the herald angels sing," and "Jesus, lover of my soul."

Hail the sign, the sign of Jesus, S. Haring-Gould. [Missions.] Written in 1866, and last printed in the Church Times, 1866. In 1867 it was included in the People's H., and subsequently in other collections.

Hail, thou bright and sacred morn. James A. Elliott. [Sunday Morning.] 1st pub. anonymously in her husband's Ps. & Hys., 1st ed., 1835, No. 226, in 2 st. of 61, but acknowledged in the "Third Thousand," 1839, by the addition of her initials "J. A. E." in the Index. It is given in several modern collections in G. Britain and America, including Whiting's Hys. for the Ch. Catholic, 1882, and Songs for the Sanctuary, N. Y., 1885, &c.

Hail, Thou God of grace and glory. T. W. Arling. [Prosperity of the Church desired.] "One of the best hymns sung on the occasion of the jubilee of the Old Congregational Chapel, Kingsland, which was held on June 16, 1844." (Miller's Singers & Songs, 1868, p. 521.) It was given in the New Cong., 1859, No. 816, in 3 st. of 81. It has passed into several American collections, including Hatfield's Church H. Hk., 1872, No. 1201; the Ladies Domini, 1884, No. 947, for "Christian Union"; and others.

[J. J.]

Hail, Thou once despised Jesus. J. Bakewell. [Reunion.] In a volume of Poetical Tracts, 1757-74, in the Bodleian Library, Oxford. [Hymn G. Pasch. 1276 (1)], there is, bound up with others, a small pamphlet of 72 pages with the following title.

At page 40 of this pamphlet the following hymn is found:

"Hymn XLVI.

1. Hail, thou once despised Jesus,
Who didst suffer to release us,
Who didst free salvation bring!

2. Hail, thou universal Saviour,
Who hast born our sin and shame;
By whose merits we find favour,
Life is given through thy Name!

3. Jesus, hail! hush'd in glory,
There for ever to abide,
All the heavenly host adore thee,
Seated at thy Father's side.
Worship, honour, pow'r, and blessing,
Thou art worthy to receive—
Lowest praises without ceasing
Meet it is for us to give."

In M. Madan's Coll. of Ps. & Hys., 1760, this hymn reappeared in the following expanded form, the added portions being italics:

"Hymn CX.

Praise to Christ.

1. Hail thou once despised Jesus:
Hail thou Galilean King!
Who didst suffer to release us,
Who didst free salvation bring!
Hail thou universal Saviour,
Who hast borne our sin and shame,
By whose merits we find favour,
Life is given through thy Name!

2. Paschal Lamb by God appointed,
All our sins were on Thee laid!
By an Almighty Love appointed,
Thou hast full atonement made.
By Thy Sin may be forgotten
That the Virtue of Thy Blood,
Open'd is the Gate of Heaven,
Peace is made 'twixt Man and God.

3. Jesus hail! enthrone'd in glory,
There for ever to abide;
All the heavenly Hosts adore Thee,
Seated at thy Father's side.
There for Saints Thou art pleasing
Spare them yet another tear—
There for Saints art interesting
Till in glory they appear.

4. Worship, Honour, Pow'r, and Blessing,
Christ is worthy to receive—
Lowest praises without ceasing
Meet it is for us to give;
Help, ye bright angelic Spirits,
Bring your sweetest, noblest Lays,
Help to sing our Jesus' Merits,
Help to chant Emmanuel's Praise!"

This text was repeated with slight alterations (especially in st. ii., 1, 3, "love appointed," in R. Conyers' Coll. of Ps. & Hys., 1774, No. 70; in the Lady Huntingdon Coll. of Hys., Edinburgh, c. 1777, and others. The next important change in the hymn was made by A. M. Toplady, with the object of making it subservient to his Calvinistic views. His text in his Ps. & Hys., 1776, No. 118, is:

1. Hail, thou once despised Jesus!
Hail, thou Galilean King!
Who didst suffer to release us,
Who didst free salvation bring.
Hail, thou universal Saviour,
Bosom of our sin and shame—
By whose merits we find favour,
Life is given through thy Name.

["Paschal Lamb," acc. omitted on doctrinal grounds.

II. Jesus, hail, enthroned in glory,
There for ever to abide:
All the heavenly Hosts adore Thee,
Seated at thy Father's side.
There for saints Thou art pleasing
Spare them yet another tear—
There for saints art interesting
Till in glory they appear.

Worship, Honour, Pow'r, and Blessing,
Thou art worthy to receive—
Lowest praises without ceasing
Meet it is for us to give.]

This hymn is not found in the first edition of the Church Hymn Book of 1866, but was included in the second edition of 1871.
HAIL, THOU SOURCE OF
January, 1822, in ms. to Mr. George Bennett, thence on a mission tour in the South Seas (M's Memoirs, vol. iii. p. 277). In April of the same year it was repeated by Montgomery himself at a missionary meeting in Pitt Street Chapel, Liverpool (M's Memoirs, vol. iii. p. 284), and in the following month was printed in the Evangelical Magazine, and entitled "Imitation of the 72nd Psalm (T. Calstock)." To it was appended a note alluding to Montgomery's forthcoming Songs of Zion. Later in the same year it was included in that work; again in Montgomery's Poetical Works, 1828, vol. iii. p. 59; and in 1841, vol. iii. p. 287; and finally in the Original Hymns, 1853, No. 267. It consists of 8 st. of 8 l. The text is slightly varied in each of Montgomery's works, the authorised being that in his Original Hymns.

Of all Montgomery's renderings and imitation of the Psalms this is the finest. It forms a rich and splendid Messianic hymn. Its success has been great, partly due to the first metre and the simplicity of the metre, which in 1822 with a special note. It is found in all modern hymnals of note, in all English-speaking countries, and has been translated into several languages. In common with most of Montgomery's hymns, it has undergone but little change at the hands of compilers. Two changes are given in H. J. & M., in 1861, which are attributed to the Rev. J. Keble. They are: st. ii., l. 7–8:

"From hill to vale the fountains yield a flow of righteousness overflow;"

for Montgomery's:

"And righteousness, in fountains, From hill to valley flow;"

and st. iv., l. 8:

"Him shall stand for ever, His changeless name of love."

This last line of the hymn appears as follows in Montgomery's works, and elsewhere:

Original. "His Name—what is it? LOVE."

P.W. 1828. "That Name to us is Love."

Orig. Hymn. 1853. "That Name to us is Love."

In addition to these alterations by Montgomery and Keble, we find also the following:

Adams's (ed.), 1854. "His holiest Name in love."

Mercer's (ed.), 1855. "His great, best Name of Love."

Hyman, 1879. "Jesus, sweet Name of Love."

Monsell's Parish Hymnal, 1873. "The One great Name of Love."

Of these changes Montgomery's revised text of 1828 is in the most extensive use; Mercer's text ranks next, and then that by Keble; very few, if any, reprints of the Hymnary or of Monsell being found. The Hymnary text throughout is very much altered. In Wilson's Service of Praise, 1885, it is divided into two parts, pt. II., being, "Kings shall fall down before Him." A connoisseur of receiving "Messianic gladness, is in Martineau's Hymns, 1810, and "Arabia's desert ranger," is found in a few collections. The opening line in the Anglican Bk., 1868, is "All hail to the Lord's Anointed:" and to the usual canto of 4 st. Harland has added in his Ch. Psalter, &c., a doxology. Orig. text, Eng. Mag., May, 1822, authorised text, "m. mss." and his Orig. Hymns, 1853. [Psalters, Eng. § xvii.] [J. J.]
Hale, Edward Everett, M.A., was b. at Boston, 1822, and graduated at Harvard. From 1846 to 1856 he was pastor of an Unitarian Church at Worcester; and from 1856 he has been the charge of South Church, Boston. He has published several prose works of merit.

Hale, Mary Whitwell, daughter of Eliphalet Hale of Boston, U.S.A., was b. at Boston, Jan. 29, 1810. After receiving a good education she devoted herself to educational work in Boston, Taunton, Keene, N.H., and elsewhere. She d. Nov. 17, 1862. Her hymn-writing was brought into notice by two hymns, one on "Home," and the second on "Music," which were written for a juvenile concert at the Unitarian Church in Taunton, April 1834. Several of the hymns and poetical pieces which she subsequently wrote were contributed to the Christian Register under the initials "Y. L. E.," the concluding letters of her name. Her Poems were pub. at Boston in 1840. A few of her hymns also appeared in the Unitarian Christian Hymn, for Public and Private Worship, commonly known as the Cheshire Collection, in 1844. [American Hymnody, § vii.] Putnam (to whom we are indebted for these details) gives the following of her hymns, with others, in full in his Singers and Songs of the Liberal Faith, 1874; 1. "Praise for the glorious sight," Temperance Anniversary. 2. "This day let grateful praise ascend." Sunday. 3. "Whatever dims the sense of truth." A Mother's Counsel. 4. "When in silence o'er the deep." Christmas.

These hymns were given in the Cheshire Coll., 1844. Nos. 1, 2, and 3 were taken from her Poems. Some of the other pieces given by Putnam are worthy of attention. (J. J.)

Hale, Sarah Josepha, née Buell, b. at Newport, New Hampshire, 1795, and married to David Hale, a lawyer, who died in 1822. Mrs. Hale edited The Ladies' Magazine, Boston, 1828; and Godey's Ladies' Book, Phila., from 1837, besides publishing several works. Her hymn, "Our Father in heaven, we hallow Thy name" (The Lord's Prayer), appeared in Mason & Green's Church Hymnody, 1831, No. 353, in 2 st. of 8 l. Mrs. Hale, who was a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church, d. in 1879. (F. M. B.)

Hall, Christopher Newman, LL.D., s. of J. Vine Hall, was b. at Maidstone, May 22, 1816, and educated at Totteridge School, and Highbury College, London. In 1841 he graduated LL.B. at the University of London, and minster of Albion Church, Hull, and was in charge of the charge of Albania, Church, Hull, and from and its continuation, minister. He was also chairman of the Christ Church, Westminster Union of England, and was chairman of the Council and Wales in and numerous tracts of Jesus, has been translated into 30 languages and has reached a circulation of two millions), he published:—

In the Christ Church Hymnal, 1876, there are 82 original hymns by Mr. Hall, 10 of which previously appeared in his Hymns composed at Bolton Abbey, &c., 1858. All the 82 hymns are signed "N. H." Of his hymns the most popular are, "Accepting, Lord, Thy gracious call;" "Friend of sinners, Lord of glory;" and "Hallelujah, joyful raise." In addition the following are also in C. U. outside of his Hymnal:—

2. Day again is dawning (1876). Morning.
3. Friend of sinners, hear my cry (1876). Lent.
5. I know who makes the dales we hold (1876). Providence.
6. Lord, we do not ask to know (1876). Mission.

(W. G. H.)

Hall, William John, M.A., was b. in London, Dec. 31, 1793, and graduated at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. Taking Holy Orders, he held several important appointments, including a Minor Canonyry in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, 1829; Priest in Ordinary of H.M. Chapel Royal, St. James's, 1829, and the Vicarage of Tottenham, Middlesex, 1851. He d. at Tottenham, Dec. 16, 1851. He pub. various Sermons, a volume of Prayers for the Use of Families; and a valuable treatise on the Purification and Prayers for the Dead. He is known to hymnology as the editor of Psalms and Hymns adapted to the Services of the Church of England, London, commonly known as the Mitre Hymn-Book, from the impression of a Mitre on the cover.

He was assisted in this work by E. Osler, and others, who supplied original compositions. Many of the hymns were previously printed in the Christian Remembrancer, in which he was sometime the editor, and then the editor and sole proprietor. The Mitre H. B., in 1836, with a dedication to H. B., Blount, and 250,000 copies, attained to a circulation of four million copies. It introduced numerous hymns to modern compositions, and had a marked influence on the hymnology of the Church of England. In his Dictionary all notes on hymns specially were determined with the Mitre H. Bk. from Hall's notes, and distinguished as "H. Bk." His son, the Rev. William John Hall, also supplied original compositions, and was sometime the editor of the Mitre Hymn-Book, and the Mitre Hymn-Book, adapted to the Services of the Church of England, London, 1875. (Preface, Advent, 1874.)

Hallelujah = Alleluia. Hymns beginning with this word are arranged in this work according to the mode of spelling adopted by the authors and translators.
Hallelujah! Hallelujah! Hearts to heaven and voices raise. C. Wordsworth, Bp. of Lincoln. [Easter.] 1st pub. in his Holy Year, &c., 1802, p. 81, as the first of two hymns for Easter-day, in 5 st. of 4 double lines. Its use in all English-speaking countries is most extensive, and it ranks with the best of the author’s hymns. [J. J.]

Hallelujah! He cometh with clouds and with light. H. E. Hickeyth. [Advent.] Written in 1850, and 1st printed in a magazine, in 4 st. of 4 l. In 1858 it was given in the author’s Psalms & Hymns, &c., No. 71; and again in The Two Brothers, &c., 1871. Its use is limited. [J. J.]

Hallelujah! Joyful raise. C. Newman Hall. [Pentecost.] Dated “Surrey Chapel, November 19, 1857,” and pub. in the author’s Psalms composed at Bolton Abbey, &c., 1858, in 2 st. of 4 l. It is in C. U. in G. Britain and America, and is one of the most popular of the author’s hymns. In his Christ Church Hymnal, 1876, it is No. 158. [J. J.]

Hallelujah! Lob, Preis und Ehr. [Trinity Sunday.] The earliest text known to be known of this hymn is entitled Ganzlichen. &c. [Dulce Libriy, Gotth.] Printed at Drachen, 1655, in memory of a Dresden lawyer called Johann Schaffer. The dedication is “at Dresden, M. Martinus von Deger,” but no clear indication is given as to the authorship of the hymn. It is founded on Rev. xxii. 21, and is in 3 st. of 8 l. A full notice of this broadsheet is given in the Blätter für Hymnologie, 1884, pp. 77-79. The form in use is given at p. 482 of the Geistlichen Lieder in G. B., Darmschat, 1858, in 4 st. entitled “The Marriage Hymn,” and is based on st. i., xxvi., xxxvi., of the longer form. It passed through Freylinghausen’s G. B., 1704, into many later collections (Berlin G. L. &c., ed. 1863, No. 1008), and has been a special favorite in Germany as a “Swansong” for the dying. It is sometimes erroneously ascribed to B. Crusellus.

Hallelujah! Raise, O raise. J. Conder. [Ps. cxvi.] A vigorous and successful paraphrase of the 113th Psalm, given in the Cong. H. Bk., 1836, No. 23, in 6 st. of 4 l.; in his work, The Choir and the Oratory, 1837, p. 106; and in his Hymn of Praise, Prayer, &c., 1856, p. 29. It is found in most of the leading Nonconformist collections, including the Leeds H. Bk., 1853, No. 152; Baptist Psalms & Hymns, 1856, No. 793; the New Cong. 1859, No. 178, and others. It is also in somewhat extensive use in America. From this hymn the following three centos have also been compiled:

1. “All His servants join to bless” In The Songs for the Sanctuary, N. Y., 1863, No. 131.
2. “Blessed be for evermore.” In The Hymns of the Temple, Boston, 1844, No. 185.

Although in C. U. in these various forms, it has not received the attention which it merits. [Psalms, English, § xix.] [J. J.]

Halt an, mein Herz, in deiner Glauben. B. Schmoller. [Cross and Consolation] 1st pub. in his Heilige Blumen der himmlisch gesinnten Seele, and apparently in the 2nd ed. 1705 (ed. 1707, p. 61; Görlitz, 1709, p. 488), in 3 st. of 6 l., entitled “Steadfastness conquers.” Included in Burg’s G. B., Breislaw, 1746, No. 103, and other collections.

Tr. as:—

Hold on, my heart, with faith relying. A good and full tr. by A. T. Russell, as No. 235 in his Psalms & Hymns, 1851, and repeated, omitting st. ii., in F. Maurice’s Choral H. Bk., 1861, No. 983.

Another tr. is: “Hold on, my heart, in thy believing.” In the Christian Examiner, Boston, Mass. Sept. 1865, p. 392. [J. M.]

Hamilton, James, D.D., F.R.S., eldest s. of the Rev. William Hamilton, D.D., parish minister of Struthblane, Stirlingshire, was b. at Lonend, Paisley, Nov. 27, 1814. After studying at the Universities of Glasgow and Edinburgh, he became, in 1839, assistant in the parish of Abernethy, Perthshire. On Jan. 19, 1841, he was ordained minister of Roxburgh Place Church, Edinburgh, and on July 23, 1851, he became minister of Regent Square Presbyterian Church, London, where he remained till his death. He d. in London, Nov. 24, 1867. He was a well-known preacher, and a popular and useful writer. He took great interest in hymnology, contributed several hymnological articles to the British and Foreign Evangelical Review, and was a leading member of the committee which compiled the English Psalms. Psalms & Hymns, 1867.

In his Life, by the late Rev. W. Arnot, mention is made of his having written some Communion hymns, in 1831, but the only verses given in the Life are a tr. of Two dozen, wohn zu Am letzten Gang (see Sachs). [J. M.]

Hamilton, James, M.A., was b. at Glenfiddich, Scotland, April 18, 1819, and educated at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. Taking Holy Orders in 1845, he held various charges until 1866, when he became Incumbent of St. Barnabus’s, Bristol. In 1867 he was preferred to the Vicarage of Doulting, diocese of Bath and Wells. Mr. Hamilton is the author of a few hymns of great merit. Of these the following are in C. U.:

1. Across the sky the shades of night. New Year’s Eve. Written to the old chorale introduced by Mendelssohn into his St. Paul, “To God on High be thanks and praise.” (H. A. & M., tune to 104 by Deems. See p. 925, II.) It is in Thrift’s coll., 1892, &c.
2. O Jesus! Lord most merciful. Passiontide. Contributed to the People’s Hymn, 1867. In the Hymnary, 1872, it was altered to “O Jesus, our Salvation.” (H. A. & M.) It is in Thrift’s coll., 1892, &c.
3. Praise o praise the Lord of harvest. Harvest. Appears in Thrift’s coll., 1881 and 1892. [J. J.]

Hamilton, Richard Winter, LL.D., b. in London, July 6, 1794, and educated at Mill Hill School, and Hoxton College. In 1815 he became the minister of the Albem Street Chapel, Leeds, and then of Belgrave in the same town in 1836. He remained pastor of that congregation to his death, on July 18, 1848. His prose works were numerous, and, at the time of their publication, exceedingly popular. He was joint editor of A Select of Hymns, &c., 1822, [Congregational Hymnody.] This is a collection of hymns by William C. Hankey. It was published by J. W. & S. Union Press, London, and includes 88 hymns. The collection has been reprinted in various forms and translations, including a version translated into Spanish and a collection of Sacred Psalms.

4. Tell me that the old, old story. This Life of Jesus in verse was written in two parts. Pt. I., "The Story of Jesus in verse," written by J. W. and S. Union Press, London, 1822, 1823. It has since been published in several forms, and sometimes with expressive music by the author. It has also been translated into various languages, including Italian, French, and German. The following is an example of the form in which it is usually known:

Miss Hankey's works contain many suitable hymns for Mission Services and Sunday Schools, and may be consulted both for words and music with advantage.

Hankinson, Thomas Edwards, M.A., who was educated at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, won an important prize in 1823, and was awarded a First in the examination for the degree of Bachelor of Arts. In 1827 he published a volume of Sacred Poems. These were reprinted in an enlarged form by his brother as a Memorial volume in 1844 (5th ed. 1860). The 1844 ed. included the following hymns which have come into C. U.:—

1. Come, see the place where Jesus lies. [Easter Eve.]
2. Let Thy Spirit, Lord, descending. [For Sunday Schools.]
3. Mighty God, may we address Thee? [For Sunday Schools.]
4. Our Father, if indeed Thou art. [Holy Trinity.]
5. We are a young and happy crew. [6th ed. 1844.]
6. Who shall ascend the holy place? [For Sunday Schools.]

Happiness, thou lovely name. [Christian Unity desired.] From his Hymns, &c., 1822, vol. 1, No. 195, slightly altered into the Wes. A. B., 1870, but omitted in the revised ed., 1875, in favour of "True and Faithful Witness, Thou." His latter is a separate version thus composed:

Happy man who fears the Lord. [Ps. cxxi.] An alphabetical list of hymns in his Hymns, &c., 1822, vol. 1, No. 195, slightly altered into the Wes. A. B., 1870, but omitted in the revised ed., 1875, in favour of "True and Faithful Witness, Thou."

Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will towards men. [Ps. lxxii.] From his Hymns, &c., 1822, vol. 1, No. 195, slightly altered into the Wes. A. B., 1870, but omitted in the revised ed., 1875, in favour of "True and Faithful Witness, Thou."
Harcourt, William Vernon, M.A., B. of Arch Bishop Harcourt of York, was b. at Sudbury Hall, Derbyshire, in 1789, and edu-
Hardenberg, Georg Friedrich Philipp von, was b. of Baron Heinrich Ulrich Erasmus von Hardenberg, director of the Saxon Saltworks at Weissenfels. He was b. May 2, 1772, at his father’s estate of Wildeck or Ober-Wildeck, near Eisleben. In the autumn of 1790 he entered the University of Jena, then went to Leipzig, and finally to Berlin. After concluding his studies, he went in the end of 1794, to Tannen, near Erfurt, in order to learn administrative business under Kreissammtmann Just. In the autumn of 1797 he entered the Schloss-Mines at Freiberg in Saxony, and in the autumn of 1799 went to Artern, at the foot of the Kyppler-Berg, to be employed in the saltworks there. Soon after he began to smite blood, and while on a visit to Dresden, to hear the news of the sudden death of a younger brother, in Nov. 1800, brought on a hemorhage which destroyed all hopes of his recovery. In January, 1801, he was removed to the house of his parents at Weissenfels, and d. there March 25, 1801. (Koch, v. 4-5; Allg. Deutscher Biogr., x. 592-570; Blätter für Hymnologie, 1884, 3-6, &c.)

Hardenberg’s various writings appeared under the name of Novella (apparently taken from the name of one of the family estates), which he first adopted in his Hütensammlung, pub. in the Athenäum, Brunswick, 1794.; and it is so Novella that he is best known. He was one of the leaders of the Romantic School which of which his friends F. and A. W. Schlegel, Fouquet and Tieck are the best known members. It is, however, by hymns that he will probably be best remembered. They arose in the time of deep sorrow into which he was cast on the death of his brother-in-law von Kähn, and they were published in 1800. They are most beautiful, and deeply spiritual poems, of them are not altogether suited for public worship. Some of them are purely religious, and others are more like a love poem, but they are all attractive. Hardenberg’s hymns (i.e. the hymns to the B. V. M. by himself) were not intended by himself to be published among his hymns, but were meant to be published in his poem to the B. V. M. Not all of his poems, however, were written with the same intention. Hardenberg’s hymns were published in the Bülthoff’s Hymnologie, 1802. The rest of his poems were published in his Hütensammlung, 1802.

Hardenberg’s hymns, all of which have been rendered into English, are as follows:

1. Hymnus in English C. V.

1. I. In the Garden of Thee, in thy shoes,
2. II. Thee I equal to,
3. III. Thee I follow,
4. IV. Thee I fear,
5. V. Thee I trust,
6. VI. Thee I love,
7. VII. Thee I praise,
8. VIII. Thee I adore.

Hardenberg’s hymns in English C. V. are:

1. What have I been if Thou wert not, a free tr.
2. What have I been if Thou wert not, a free tr.
3. What have I been if Thou wert not, a free tr.
4. What have I been if Thou wert not, a free tr.
5. What have I been if Thou wert not, a free tr.
6. What have I been if Thou wert not, a free tr.
7. What have I been if Thou wert not, a free tr.
8. What have I been if Thou wert not, a free tr.

II. Wenn alle untreu werden. Love to Christ. Morgenblatt, 1802, 200, his Schriften, 1802, pt. ii. p. 136, in 4 st. of 8 l.

HARK, HARK, MY SOUL

Besides the above he had previously pub. a series of poems entitled "Hymnen an die Nacht" in the Athenaeum, a magazine edited by A. W. Schlegel and F. Schlegel, where they appear in vol. ii., pt. i. p. 188-214, Berlin, 1800. They are a wonderful picture of the "night" of sorrow into which he was plunged at the death of his betrothed on March 19, 1797. There are five poems in prose, with interspersed verse, the sixth being in verse. The longer poems in verse-form are:

1. Das fürchterbar in den frischen Tschachen.
2. Ich hoffen der Stein.

There is a complete Tr. by Henry Morley in his Dream of the Lillybells, &c., London, 1843. No. 2 has also been Tr. by Dr. G. Macdonald in his Threefold Cord, 1885, p. 256; and No. 4 by Helen Lowe in her Prophecy of Balaam, 1841, p. 226, (Lyra Mystica, 1864, p. 229).

[J. M.]

Hark, a voice divides the sky. C. Wesley. [Burial.] Pub. in Hymns & S. Poems, 1742, in 6 st. of 8 8. (P. Works, 1869-72, vol. ii. p. 189.) In 1780 it was given with slight alterations in the Wes. H. Bk. as No. 50, and repeated in the revised ed. 1875, No. 51. This is the text which is usually followed in G. Britain and America. It is sometimes found in an abbreviated form, as in Martinus' Hymnus, 1840 and 1873.

[J. J.]

Hark, for 'tis God's own Son that calls. F. Doddridge. [Freedom in Christ] 1st pub. by J. Orton in his posthumous ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1753, No. 226, in 6 st. of 4 4, and headed, "True Liberty given by Christ Jesus, John viii. 36," and again, with slight alterations, in J. D. Humphreys' ed. of the same, 1839, No. 250. In C. U. st. ii. is usually omitted. In the Leeds H. Bk., 1853, No. 613, it begins, "Hark, for the Son of God now calls," and is reduced to 3 stanzas.

[J. J.]

Hark, from the tombs a doleful [warning] sound. I. Watts. [Burial.] 1st pub. in his Hymns & S. Songs, 1707 ed. 1709, Bk. ii., No. 63), in 4 st. of 4 4, and entitled, "A Funeral Thought." Its use is usually confined to America, where it is sometimes given as, "Hark from the tombs a warning sound," as in the Bapt. Prayers Bk., 1871.

[J. J.]

Hark, hark, my soul: Angelic songs are swelling. F. W. Faber. [Evening.] Pub. in his Ordinar Hymns, 1854, and in his Hymns, 1862, p. 385, in 7 st. of 4 4, and entitled, "The Pilgrims of the Night." Five stanzas in an altered form were given in the Appendix to H. A. & M., 1868, No. 325. By this means the hymn was brought prominently before the public, and became exceedingly popular for a time. Its unreality, however, has excluded it from many of the best modern collections. In the Bk. of Prayer & Praise for use in Sir Josiah Mason's Orphanage, Enlington, 1833, No. 293, beginning, "Hark, hark, my soul, thy Father's voice is calling," is an imitation of this hymn. It is also in Alton's
HARK, HARK, THE ORGAN

Children's Worship, 1878, No. 234. [J. J.]

Hark, hark, the organ loudly peals,
G. Thring. [Professional]. Written in 1862, and 1st pub. in his Hymns Congregational, and Others, 1866, p. 43, in 5 st. of 9 l., and given for "Trinity Sunday." It has passed into several modern hymn-books in G. Britain and America, and is often used at Choral Festivals, for which it is admirably adapted. Authorized text in Mr. Thring's Coll., 1882, No. 302.

[H. J.]

Hark, how all the welkin rings.
C. Wesley. [Christmas] 1st pub. in *Hymns &
Sac. Poems*, 1739, and again, in a revised form, in a new ed. of the same, 1743, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Hymn for Christmas Day.
"The form in which it is known to modern hymn-books has a somewhat intricate history.
In G. Whitefield's Coll., 1739, No. 31, it was given with the omission of st. viii. and x, as:

"Hark, the herald angels sing,
Glory to the new-born King."

This text, with additional changes, was repeated in M. Madan's Ps & Hymns, 1760, No. 8, in B. Cowper's Coll., 1774, No. 353, in 4 st. of 8 l.; in De Courcy's Coll., 1775, No. 30, in 6 st.; in Rowland Hill's Coll., 1783, No. 201, in 5 st.; and in Hymns added to the New Version (q.v.), in 3 st. of 8 l., with the first two lines added as a refrain to each stanza.
As this is the popular form of the hymn and is in G. U. in all English-speaking countries, and a comparison with C. Wesley's revised text of 1743 will be of value—

C. Wesley, 1743.
1. "Hark! how all the welkin rings,
   Glory to the King of kings,
   Peace on earth and mercy mild,
   God and sinners reconciled.

2. "Joyful, all ye nations, rise,
   Join the triumphs of the skies,
   Universal nature say,
   Christ, the Lord, is born to day.

3. "Christ, by highest heaven adored,
   Christ, the everlasting Lord,
   Late in time behold him come,
   Offering of a Virgin's womb.

4. "Veil'd in flesh, the Godhead see,
   Hail the incarnate Deity,
   Pleased as man with men to dwell,
   Jesus our Emmanuel.

Book of C. Prayer.
1. "Hark! the herald angels sing,
   Glory to the new-born King;
   Peace on earth, and mercy mild,
   God and sinners reconciled.

2. "Christ, by highest heaven adored,
   Christ, the everlasting Lord,
   Late in time behold him come,
   Offering of a Virgin's womb.

3. "Veil'd in flesh, the Godhead see,
   Hail the incarnate Deity,
   Pleased as man with men to dwell,
   Jesus our Emmanuel.

H. J.

5. "Hail the heavenly Prince of Peace!
   Hail the Sun of righteousness;
   Light and life to all he brings,
   Hymn with healing in His wings.

6. "Bid God's ancient Saviour rise,
   Born that man no more may die;
   Born to raise the sons of earth,
   Born to give them second birth.

From this point Wesley's hymn proceeds as follows:—

1. "Come, Desire of Nations, come,
   Fix in us Thy humble home;
   Rise, the woman's conquering Seed.
   Bruise in us the serpent's head.

2. "Now display Thy saving power,
   Ruin'd nature now restore:
   Now in mystical union join
   Thine in ours, and ours to Thine.

The alterations indicated by the italics in the Hymns to the New Version are—Whitefield, 1759; Madan, 1760; added to the New Version [§ ii.] This text has been repeated in numerous collections to the present time; and, without the refrain, in the most popular form of the hymn. In H. A. & M., 1861 and 1875; The Hymnary, 1872; Thring, 1882, and many others, st. ii. 5-8, reads:—

"Veil'd in flesh, the Godhead see,
   Hail the incarnate Deity,
   Pleased as man with man to dwell,
   Jesus, our Emmanuel." (here omitted)

These alterations, now generally accepted, were given in J. Kemphorne's Select Ports of Paulus, &c., 1810, No. 27, but they are possibly older than that collection.

After years after the hymn was adopted by M. Madan, the Wesleyan Conference em-body'd it in the Suppl. to the Rev. H. G.
1850, No. 602; and repeated it in the revised coll., 1875, No. 688. This is Madan's text with the omission of st. ii. of Wesley's original, which was also st. ii. of Madan's arrangement.

Other forms of the hymn are in C. U., the charter of which may be determined by a comparison of the text with the original as above.

One of several attempts which have been made to improve upon Wesley, and have failed, is that of T. Cotterill, in the various editions of his Select Stanzas—

"Hark! the herald angels sing,
   Glory to the new-born King;
   Peace on earth and mercy mild;
   God and sinners reconciled.

In this stanza, lines 1, 2 are Whitefield's alterations; and 3, 4 are by Cotterill.  In a limited number of hymn-books st. vii.,— given as a separate hymn, beginning, "Come,

The use of this hymn in its various forms has extended to all English-speaking countries. It is found in a greater number of hymn-books, both old and new, and in almost every collection of English hymns, it is equalled in popularity only by Toplady's "Rock of Ages" and Bishop Ken's Morning and Evening hymn, and is excelled by none. In literary merit it fails little, if anything, short of this honour. [J. J.]

Hark, how the watchmen cry. C. Wesley. [Old and New Year.] This is No. 8 of 19 "Hymns for the Watchnight," pub. in Hymns & Sacred Poems, 1749, vol. ii., No. 91, in 12 st. of 8 l. (P. Works, 1860-62, vol. v, p. 273.) From this hymn the following versions are in C. U.:

1. Hark, how the watchmen cry. This is composed of st. i., iv., and vi., and was given in the West. Bk., 1780, No. 390 (ed. 1778, No. 314). It is found in several modern collections.

2. Angels your march oppose. This embodies st. ii., and was given as the 2nd part of "Hark, how the watchmen cry," in the West. Bk., 1786, No. 308 (ed. 1778, No. 315). It is in several modern collections.

3. Angels your march oppose. This is given in a few American hymn-books in 2 st. of 8 l., or 4 st. of 4 l. It is compiled from st. vii., viii., ix., in the order named.

4. Our Captain leads us on. In Hymns and Songs of Praise, N. Y., 1874. [J. J.]

Hark, in the presence of our God. A. midpoint. [Angels' joy over repenting Sinners.] Written in September, 1842, and pub. in the Youth's Magazine, Nov. 1842, in 6 st. of 4 l., and entitled "The Returning Sinner." In 1853, it was included in the author's Gospel Echoes, No. 157, and in a limited number of Mission hymn-books. It has the special interest of being the author's first printed hymn. [J. J.]

Hark, my soul! soul, how everything. J. Austin. [Praise of Creation.] Pub. in his Devotions in the Ancient Way of Offices, &c., 1668, p. 83, No. vi., as the hymn for Monday at Lauds. [See reprint of the 5th ed., 1717, pub. by Masters in 1856.] It is in C. U. in three forms:

1. The original in 7's metre in Horder's Conf. Hymna, 1854, No. 96; the American Baptist. Praise Bk., 1871, No. 247, and others.

2. Hark, my soul! soul, how everything. This was rewritten in i.m. probably by J. Wesley, and was given in his Charles'town, South Carolina, 1753, p. 60, in 7 st. of 4 l. It is seldom found in modern collections.

3. Hark, my soul! soul, how everything. This was given in the original metre, in G. Whitefield's coll., 1753, No. 3, in 4 st.; in M. Adidas's Ps. & Hymn, 1760, No. 181, in 7 st., and in other old hymn-books. It is rarely met with in modern collections. [J. J.]

Hark, my soul, it is the Lord. W. Cowper. [Divine Love.] Pub. in Maxfield's New Appendix, 1768, and again in the Gospel Magazine, August, 1771, in 6 st. of 4 l., and signed "Omegas." In 1774 it was included in R. Cowper's *Coll., No. 53; and in 1779 in the Olney Hymns, Bk. 1, No. 118. It rapidly attained great popularity with hymn-book compilers; and is found at the present time in most of the high-class hymnals in all English-speaking countries. It is a lyric of great tenderness and beauty, and ranks as one of Cowper's best hymns. [See Cowper, W.]

In Kennedy, 1863, No. 503, the opening line is mutilated into "Hearken, soul, it is the Lord." This is not repeated elsewhere. The original has been tr. into several languages, including Latin: "Audin? Adest Dominus," by John W. Hales, in the Academy, Nov. 2nd, 1803; and Italian: "Senti, senti, anima mea," by W. E. Gladstone, in the Nineteenth Century, 1863. [J. J.]

Hark, round the God of love. H. P. Lyte. [Worship of Children acceptable to God.] Printed anonymously in W. Carus Wilson's Magazine, The Children's Friend, 1838, in 4 st. of 4 l. It was reprinted in the "Memoir" prefixed to Lyte's Remains, 1850, as a specimen of his Sunday School hymns. It is found in W. F. Stevenson's Hymns for the Church & Home, 1873, c. 45: Allen's Children's Worship, 1878, No. 29; the Meth. & S. B. Bk., 1879, No. 543 (orig. text), and others. Although peculiar in metre and defective in rhyme, it is admirably adapted to Sunday Schools. [W. T. B.]

Hark, she bids all her friends adieu. J. Watts. [Death and Heaven.] Pub. in his Hymns, 1706, Bk. iii., in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed, "On the Sudden Death of Mrs. Mary Peacock. An Elegiac Song sent in a Letter of Condolence to Mr. N. P. Merchant at Amsterdam." In its full form it is not in C. U.; but, with the omission of st. i. and viii., it was included in H. W. Beecher's Plymouth Coll., 1855, No. 1221, as "Farewell, bright soul, a short farewell." [J. J.]

Hark, ten thousand harps and voices. T. Kelly. [Praise to Jesus.] 1st pub. in his Hymns, &c., 2nd ed., 1806, in 7 st. of 6 l., and headed with the text "Let all the angels of God worship Him." In 1812 it was included in his Hymns adapted for Social Worship, No. 7, but subsequently it was restored to the original work (ed. 1853, No. 42). Its use is mainly confined to America, where it is given in several collections, including Songs for the Sanctuary, 1865, &c. In most cases it is abbreviated. [J. J.]

Hark, ten thousand voices cry. T. Kelly. [Easter, or Ascensiontide.] 1st pub. in the 2nd ed. of his Hymns, &c., 1806, in 1 st. of 4 l. in 7's metre; 4 st. of 4 l. in 87, 87 metre, and the chorus:

"Then haste, ye saints, your tribute bring.
And crown Him everlasting King." (Ed. 1853, No. 27.) This peculiarity of construction was overlooked by Elliott, who gave it with the omission of the chorus in his *Ps. & Hymn, 1835, as a complete hymn in 7's; and the Editors of the Leeds H. Bk., 1883, as 87, 5. In the Irish Church Hymnal, 1873, No. 199, the first stanza is rewritten:

"Hark, ten thousand voices sounding Praise and wide throughout the sky.
'Tis the voice of joy abounding, Jesus lives, no more to die."

and the irregularity of metre is thereby overcome. In some collections, including Kennedy, 1863, No. 964, it begins with st. ii.: "Jesus comes, His conflict over." [J. J.]
HARK! THE GLAD SOUND

Hark! the glad sound, the Saviour comes - F. Doddridge. [Advent.] Dr. Doddridge's original ms. of this hymn, now preserved in the Book "D. ms." gives the following as the text:—

xiv. Christ's Message,

Hark the glad sound! The Saviour comes

The Saviour promised long

Let every heart prepare a throne

And every voice a song.

On him the Spirit largely poured

Exerts its sacred Fire

Wisdom and Might and Zeal and Love

His holy Breast inspire.

He comes the Prince to release

In Satan's bondage held

The gates of Brass before him burst

The iron fetters yield.

He comes from the thick films of Vice

To clear the neural ray

And on the eye-balls of the Blind

To pour celestial day.

He comes the broken Heart to bind

The bleeding soul to cure

And with the Treasures of his Grace

To enrich the humble Poor.

His silver trumpets publish loud

The Jacob of the Law

Our debts are all remitted now

Our Heritage restored.

Our glad Revolutions, Prince of Peace

Thy Welcome shall proclaim

And Heav'n's eternal Arches ring

With thy beloved Name.

"Dec. 20, 1735."

From this point the hymn has a twofold history. the first Scottish, and the second English.

1. Scottish History.—1. A copy of this ms. passed through Robert Blair (q. v.) [see Doddridge in Various] into the possession of the Committee appointed to prepare the Trans. and Paraphrases of the Church of Scotland, and by them it was included therein as No. iv., in 1745, or 10 years after its composition, as follows:

St. i. As above, with 1. 2 "Let every heart a throne prepare."

St. ii. As above, with 1. 1 "lately shed, for "poured out."

St. iii. As above, with 1. 1 "to receive" for "to receive."

St. iv. As above, with 1. 1 "thick scales" for "thick films."

St. v. As above, with 2. 2 "souls" for "soul."

St. vi. As above.

St. vii. As above.

2. In 1781, the new Trans. and Paraphrases of the Church of Scotland were published, and, as No. xxxii., it appeared thus:—

St. i. ii. 2. 2. As above.

St. ii. 4. 4. "Let every heart a throne prepare."

St. iii. As above, with 1. 1 "lately shed, for "poured out."

St. iv. "He comes from darkening scales of vice to clear the inward light."

St. v. As above, with 1. 1 "thick scales" for "thick films."

St. vi. "He comes from darkening scales of vice to clear the inward light."

St. vii. 2. 4. "Let every heart a throne prepare."

This form of the hymn received the official sanction of the Church of Scotland, and has been more than a hundred years in her communion for the rest of the hymn embodies its train of thought in another form.

HARK, THE SONG OF

HARK, the song of jubilee. J. Montgomery. [Misellaneous.] Pub. in the Evangelical Magazine, July, 1818, in 3 st. of 8 l., in the author's Greenlaned and other poems, 1819, p. 183; Cotterill's Sel., 8th ed., 1819, No. 235; Montgomery's Christian Psalmsody, 1822, No. 551; and his Original Hys., 1833, No. 98. It was made from the first Montgomery had some difficulty with the second line of st. ii. His readings were:

This last is Montgomery's authorized text, and is usually followed by modern compilers. The hymn is in extenive use in all English-speaking countries, and has been translated into several languages. [J. J.]

HARK, the sound of holy voices, chanting at the crystal sea. Bp. C. Wordsworth of Lincoln. [All Saints' Days.] 1st pub. in his Holy Year, 1862, No. 166, in 6 st. of 8 l. 3 double lines (5th ed. 1858, No. 100). In 1863 it was given in the Parish H. Bk., No. 140, and subsequently in other collections, until it has become throughout all English-speaking countries one of the most widely known and popular of the Bishop's hymns. In some collections st. ii, 1, 2 is given as in the original:

"King, Apostle, Saint, and Martyr, Confessor, Evangelist, and in others:

"King, Apostle, Saint, Confessor, Martyr, and Evangelist."

The reason for this change is twofold: first, because of the division of the original line into two, and second, possibly because the old distinction between Confessor—i.e. one who witnesses for the faith by a good confession—short of actual martyrdom; and Confessor, i.e. one who receives confessions—was beyond the comprehension of ordinary congregations. One of the first, if not the first collection in which this change was made, was the Appendix to H. A. & M., 1868.

In the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, No. 199, st. vi. is bracketed for omission in singing if desired. This stanza reads:

"Now they reign in heavenly glory, now they walk in golden light; Now they rest as from a river, holy bliss and infinite Love and Peace they taste for ever; and all truth and knowledge see In the beatific vision of the Blessed Trinity."

The Rev. J. Ellerton's note on this hymn in his Notes, &c., on Church Hymns, folio ed. p. xliii. explains this arrangement as follows:

"In the earlier editions of Church Hymns the fifth stanza of this hymn, 'Now they reign in heavenly glory,' &c., was omitted in deference to the judgment of one of the Episcopal Bishops of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, who held that the verse was liable to be misunderstood as countenancing the palpable error that the Blessed are already in the full fruition of their future and everlasting glory—the 'Beatific Vision.' It is scarcely needful to say that so accurate a theologian as the Bishop of Lincoln had no sympathy with this view. His Lordship, while pressing for the restoration of this verse, explained that the whole hymn, from beginning to end, was to be regarded as the utterance in triumphant song of a vision of the final gathering of the saints, not as an exposition of their present condition in the Intermediate State. The Tract Committee of the Society therefore desired that the verse should in subsequent editions be restored; but should, in deference to those who might still think it liable to misconception, be bracketed for optional use."

In a Ms. note on this hymn, and this special stanza, Bp. Wordsworth adds that:

"The whole hymn from beginning to end is in harmony with the Epistle for the festival of the day (Rev. vii. 2, &c.), and like it is the utterance in triumphant song of a vision of the final gathering of the Saints." [J. J.]

It may be added that, with the exception of the alteration noted above, the original text of this hymn is usually given in an unaltered form. [J. J.]

HARK, the voice of Jesus calling. Come ye laden, &c. A. Midlane. [The Invitation of Jesus.] Written in August, 1869, and 1st pub. in the Ambassador's H. Bk., 1861, No. 45, in 4 st. of 6 l. It was repeated in Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1866, No. 497; again in many collections for Evangelical Meetings and Home Mission Services; and also in the author's Gospel Echoes, 1865, No. 41. It is also in C. U. in America and Canada. [J. J.]

HARK, the voice of love and mercy. [Good Friday—Holy Communion.] The authorship of this popular hymn has long been a matter of dispute. On the one hand it has been claimed for the Rev. Jonathan Evans, and on the other for the Rev. Benjamin Francis. The evidence on behalf of each is as follows.

i. For Jonathan Evans.

1. In 1860 the hymn appeared in the Rev. G. Barber's Coll. of Hys., &c., No. 126, in 4 st. of 6 l., but in the index of authors it had no signature.
2. Thirty-three years later, viz. in the 29th ed. of his Coll., 1873, Barber filled the blank in with the name of J. Evans.
3. In J. Styles, who succeeded J. Evans as Pastor of the Foleshill congregation (see Evans, J.), published from Evans's was several hymns in the Evangelical Magazine; and in the same Magazine, in March, 1847, he claimed this hymn for his predecessor.

ii. For Benjamin Francis.

1. Francis contributed to Rippon's Baptist Sel., 1787, five hymns, each of which was signed "B. Francis"; and one hymn altered from Greg (see Francis, B.) In the same Sel. there were two hymns which were signed "F.—" The first of these was "Hark, the voice of love and mercy:" and the second, "Lord, hast thou made me know Thy ways?"
2. During Dr. Rippon's lifetime there were no changes made in this signature. At his death the copyright of the Sel. expired, and some interested persons published it as "A New Edition."
3. In this "New Edition," the "F.—" was expanded into "Francis." In the case of "Hark, the voice of love and mercy:" but the signature of "Lord, hast Thou made me know Thy ways?" remained as before.
4. On these grounds it is claimed for R. Francis.

These claims are not so satisfactory as could be desired, either for Evans or for Francis; and this is still more evident when we find that the second hymn with the signature "F.—" in Rippon ("Lord, hast Thou made me know Thy ways") is a cento from Dr. John Fawcett's hymn in 6 st. pub. in his Hymns, &c., 1782, No. 123, and composed of st. i. v. and vi. The "F.—" in Rippon, in this instance,
HARK, THROUGH THE COURTS
is John Fawcett (q.v.) of Yorkshire. "Hark, the voice of love and mercy," however, is not found in Fawcett's Hymns, 1782, and cannot be claimed for him. The evidence is in favor of Jonathan Edwards; and the fact that Burder J. Evans in full in his Coll. of 1827 gives it great weight.
In America this hymn is as extensively used as in G. Britain, and in common with the hymn-books of G. Britain it is attributed in the American collections, now to "B.
Francis," and again to "J. Evans." The hymn in its original form was intended for personal use if st. iv. were omitted, and for Hymn Communion, when it was used. It reads:
"Happy souls, approach the table,
Taste the soul-saving food,
Nothing half so sweet and pleasant
As the Saviour's fresh and blood.
"It is finished!
Christ hath borne the heavy load."
The original text in Burder's Coll. was repeated in Rippon's Sel. with the single change in st. iv. "Do those precious words afford," to "Do those charming words afford."
Rippon's full text is in the Lyra Brit., 1867,
p. 652, accompanied by two notes on its authenticity. The Editor, however, was unaware that the hymn appeared in Burder's Coll.
three years before it was given in Rippon's Sel., 1787, and falls into the error of attributing its first appearance to Rippon's Sel.
The text, with the omission of st. iv. is tr.
into Latin in R. Bingham's Hymno. Christ.
Latina, 1871, p. 221, as "Amaui! clara vox amoris."

in his Year of Praise, 1867, No. 156. It is in limited use in G. Britain and America.

Hark! what mean those holy voices.
J. Caswood. [Christmas] This popular hymn appeared in 1819 in the 8th ed. of Cotterill's
Sel., No. 259, in 6 st. of 4 l., with the refrain, "Hallelujah." In common with all the hymns in that Sel. it was unaccounted for; but when it was published by J. Montgomery in his Christian Poetist, 1825, it was attributed to "Cawood." In some works, and collections, it is dated 1816; but in J. Caswood's own correspondence with further information, it must remain as 1819. Of all Cawood's hymns this is the most popular. It is in extensive use in G.
Britain and America. Orig. text in Sneepp's
S. of G. O., 1872, No. 203, with "glory singing" for "praises singing" in st. iv. 1, 2

19. O come, all ye faithful; Come, see
the place. (1864.)
20. O come, all ye faithful; Come, see
the place. (1864.)
21. O for a humble walk with God. (1865.)
22. O Heavenly Jerusalem, Thou city of the Lord. (1863.)
23. O Thou by Whom the healing art
Lived. (1863.)
24. Peace be still. (1863.)
25. The church and the world were saved.
(1863.)
26. The heavens declare the glory of God.
(1863.)
27. This day in Thy holy place.
(1863.)
28. With joyful heart, with willing mind.
(1863.)

In addition to these the Suppl. of 1863 contained his "And now this holy day," for Sunday. The majority of Prebendary Har-

HART, JOSEPH

Harms, Samuel Young, s. of Samuel Harms, a member of the Society of Friends, was b. at Germantown, Pennsylvania, Dec. 9, 1809. In 1827 he joined the American Methodist Episcopal Church, and was engaged for several years as a Sunday School teacher and superintendent. In 1842 he became a local preacher of that body, and, in 1847, was admitted into the ministry. He has held appointments in Philadelphia and Iowa. His well-known hymn "In the Christian's home in glory" (Heaven) was written in 1856 for a camp-meeting collection which the Rev. John Gladding was then compiling. It has been slightly altered, and set to music by the Rev. W. McDonald of Boston, Massachusetts. (For these details we are indebted to Dr. Hatfield's Poets of the Church, N. Y., 1884.)

Harp and voice Thy praises telling,
J. D. Burns. [Spiritual Worship] 1st pub. in his little book of prayers and hymns, The Evening Hymn, 1857, in 3 st. of 8 l., and entitled "Spiritual Worship." It was repeated with slight alterations in W. F. Stevenson's Hymns for Church & Home, 1873, No. 341, and other collections.

Harp, awake! Tell out the story,
H. D. Douton. [New Year] Appeared in Hymns for the London German Hospital, Dalston, 1848, No. 91; A. T. Russell's Ps. & Hys., 1851, No. 64, in 4 st. of 8 l.; and again in the author's Hymns & Verses, 1873, p. 9. It is in several collections, including the S. C. Church Hymns, 1871; the Westminster Abbey H. Bk., 1883, and others. In Kennedy, 1863, No. 141, it begins with st. 1, 1, 5, "Sing we, brethren, faithful hearted." This in Dowie's English Hymnal, 1874, is altered to "Join we, brethren, faithful hearted." [J. J.]

Harris, John, d.d., was b. at Upham, Devon, March 8, 1802, and educated for the Congregational Ministry at Hoxton Academy. He was Minister of the Congregational Church, Epsom, 1825-38; President of the Countess of Huntingdon's College at Cheshunt, 1838-50; and Principal of New College, London, 1850, to his death, Dec. 21, 1856. He received the degree of d.d. from Brown University in 1838. His works were numerous, including The Great Teacher, 1835; Union; or, the Divided Church made one, 1837; The Pre-Adamite Earth, 1846; two prize essays; a volume of poems, The Incarnate One, &c. He was of more than usual merit. [W. G. H.]

Harsdörffer, Georg Philipp, was b. at Nürnberg apparently on Nov. 1, 1607. He studied law at the Universities of Altdorf and Strassburg; and after five years spent in travelling in France, Holland, England and Italy, returned to Nürnberg in 1630. In 1637 he was appointed assessor of the Lower Court, and in 1635 senator (Rathskeller). He d. at Nürnberg, Sept. 19 or 20, 1638. He was joint founder with J. Klaud of the Pogaltz Shepherd and Flower Order in 1641, of which he became the President. His hymn, appeared mostly in his Hymnalische Sammlung menschlicher Liebe, 1649 [Werkgerechter]; in his Nürnberger Liederbuch, 1650-51 [2nd ed. 1651-59 in Berlin]; and in the works of his friend J. M. Dilherr. Few of his hymns are still in German use, and only two appear to have passed into English, viz.:

1. Der sich auf seine Schwerehe stürzt. Low. Conciliation. In J. M. Dilherr's Geistliche Lieder-, and in other German and Swiss hymn-books. It is in the author's Hymns & Verses, 1873, p. 9. It is also in several collections, including the S. C. Church Hymns, 1871; the Westminster Abbey H. Bk., 1883, and others. In Kennedy, 1863, No. 141, it begins with st. 1, 1, 5, "Sing we, brethren, faithful hearted." This in Dowie's English Hymnal, 1874, is altered to "Join we, brethren, faithful hearted." [J. J.]

Hart, Joseph, was b. in London in 1712. His early life is involved in obscurity. His education was fairly good; and from the testimony of his brother-in-law, and successor in the ministry in Jewin Street, the Rev. John Hughes, "his civil calling was" for some time "that of a teacher of the learned languages." His early life, according to his own experience which he prefaced to the Hymns, was a curious mixture of loose conduct, serious conviction of sin, and endeavours after amendment of life, and not until WhitSunday, 1757, did he realize a permanent change, which was brought about mainly through his attending divine service at the Moravian Chapel, in Fetter Lane, London, and hearing a sermon on Rev. iii. 10. During the next two years many of his most earnest and impassioned hymns were written. These appear as:—Hymns composed on Various Subjects, with the Author's Experience, London, 1759. During this year he became the Minister of the Independent Chapel, Jewin Street, London. In 1763 he added a Supplement to his Hymns; and in 1765 an Appendix. In modern editions of his Hymns these three are embodied in one volume as:—Hymns composed on Various Subjects: With the Author's Experience, The Supplement and Appendix. By the Rev. Joseph Hart, late Minister of the Chapel in Jewin Street, London. Allott & Co. (no date).

Hart d. on May 24, 1768. At one time his hymns were widely used, especially by Calvinistic Nonconformists. Many of them are of merit, and are marked by great earnestness, and passionate love of the Redeemer. The best known are: "Come, Holy Spirit, come"; "Come, ye sinners, poor and wretched"; "This God is the God we adore"; and "Lord, look on all as minded here." Those which are more limited in their use include:

1. From his Hymns, &c., 1759.
2. Great High Priest, we view Thee stooping.
3. Great High Priest, we view Thee stooping.
4. Great High Priest, we view Thee stooping.

HARTMANN VON DER AUE seems to have been b. about 1170, apparently of the parochial family Von Owe of Au or Niedernau, near Rottenburg on the Necka. He took part in one of the Crusades, most likely that of 1197, and was still living in 1207, but had died before 1220 (Allg. Deutsche Biog., 1, 674-696; Goedecke's Grundriss, 1884, 59-93, &c.). The facts of his life have been considerably contended. Some have sought to connect him with all of Au, or even with Einhard, or Gero, or the Knight with the Lion, written about 924-940, based on Christian of Troy. A third, "Gerebrans, (a setting of the legendary early life of St. Gregory the Great)," was written about 1200 on the basis of a French version. A fourth, the "Arme Heinrich," written by H. W. L. Galilee, in his well-known "Golden Legend, 1861," was his latest work. The remainder of his poems are love songs and songs of the Crusades, and were previously printed in 1183-1199. Various eds. of his individual works have been pub. during the last 52 years, and a collected ed. in 3 vols. by F. Scoble appeared at Leipzig, 1867-89.

The only piece which can be called a hymn and has been tr. into English is "Dicht und worter stolen... Crusader's Hymn.

This is in Bech's ed., pt. ii., p. 17, as a tr. of 13 l.; also in Wackernagel, ii., p. 66. For "My joy was never unmixed with care," by Miss Winchcomb, 1849, p. 42. (J. M.)

Haste, traveller, haste! the night comes on. W. H. Cloley. [Hasten, to be.] In Rippon's Bap. Sel., 27th ed. 1827, No. 581, Pt. ii., in 7 st. of 4 l., with the refrain "Haste, traveller, haste," to st. i-ii., and "Haste to Him, haste," to st. iii. It is in use in G. Britain and America. Its original title is "Fleeing from the wrath to come by flying to Christ." (J. J.)

Hasten, O sinner, to be wise. T. Scott. [Exhortation to Repentance.] In Rippon's Bap. Sel., 27th ed. 1827, No. 581, Pt. ii., in 7 st. of 4 l., with the refrain "Haste, sinner, to be wise." The L. M. version of this hymn, "Hasten, O sinner, to be wise," appeared in Rippon's Sel., 1787, No. 116, st. ii., with the additional stanza, "O Lord, do Thou the sinner turn." Both forms are in C. U. in G. Britain and America; the original is in Snell's Songs of G. & G., 1872, No. 478, with Rippon's additional stanza reduced to 7 ½ metre; and Rippon's text is in the L. p. P. & H., 1858, No. 373. In the Oberlin Manual of Prayer, 1880, No. 219, 3 st. are given in 7½ metre as "Haste, O sinner, now be wise." [W. T. B.]

Hastings, Horace Lorenzo, was b. at Blandford, Mass., Nov. 26, 1831; commenced writing hymns, and preaching, in his 17th year, and laboured as an evangelist in various parts of the U. S. In 1865 he established The Christian, a monthly paper, in which many of his hymns have appeared, and in 1865 the Scriptural Tract Repository in Boston. He pub. Social Hymns, Original and Selected, Boston, 1865; Songs of Pilgrimage, a Hymnal for the Churches of Christ, Part i., 1868; and in August, 1868, the same completed, to the extent of 1533 hymns, 450 of which are original and signed "H." The best known of these is "Shall we meet beyond the river," written in N. Y. city, 1858, and lately pub. as a leaflet in 14 st. of 8 l. The text in Gospel Hymns and elsewhere consists of the 1st half of st. i., iv., xi. and ix. The Hastings Birthday Book, extracts from his prose writings, appeared 1886. [F. M. B.]

Hastings, Lady Flora, daughter of the Marquess of Hastings, was b. at Edinburgh, Feb. 11, 1806, and d. July 5, 1839. Her hymns appeared in her posthumous Poems by the Lady Flora Hastings, Edited by her Sister [the Marchioness of Bute], 1841. The best known of her hymns is "O Thou, Who for our fallen race." (The humility and love of Christ.) This is usually given in an abbreviated form, as in W. F. Stevenson's Hymns for Church and Home, 1873. [J. J.]

Hastings, Thomas, mrs. doc. a. of Dr. Seth Hastings, was b. at Washington, Litchfield County, Connecticut, October 15, 1784. He was a graduate of Yale College, 1802, and he migrated to Clinton, Oneida Co., N. Y. There, amid rough frontier life, his opportunities for education were slight, but at an early age he developed a taste for music, and began teaching it in 1806. Seeking a wider field, he went, in 1817, to Troy, then to Albany, and in 1823 to Utica, where he conducted a religious journal, in which he advocated his special views on church music. In 1832 he was called to New York to assume the charge of several Church Chorals, and there his last forty years were spent in great and increasing usefulness and repute. He d. at New York, May 15, 1872. His aim was the greater glory of God through better musical worship; and to this end he was always training choirs, compiling works, and composing music. His hymn-work was a corollary to the proposition of his music-work; he wrote hymns for certain tunes; the one activity seemed to imply the other. Although not a great poet, he yet attained considerable success. If we take the aggregate of American hymnals published during the last fifty years or for any portion of that time, more hymns by him are found in C. U. than by any other native writer. Not one of his hymns is of the highest merit, but many of them have become popular and useful. In addition to editing many books of tunes, Hastings also pub. the following hymn-books:—

1. Spiritual Songs for Social Worship: Adapted to the use of Families and Private Circles in Seasons of Revival, to Missionary Meetings, &c., Utica, 1831-2, in which he was assisted by Lowell Mason; (2) The Mother's Hymn-book, 1834; (3) The Christian Psalmist or, Watt's Psalms and Hymns, with various Selections from other Sources, &c., N. Y., 1836, in connection with William Pattson; (4) Church Melodies, N. Y., 1844, assisted by his son, the Rev. T. S. Hastings; (5) Devotional Hymns and Poems, N. Y., 1855. The last contains many, but not all, of his original hymns. (b) Mother's Hymn-book, enlarged 1858.

The authorship of several of Hastings's hymns has been somewhat difficult to determine. All the hymns given in the Spiritual Songs were without signatures. In the Christian Psalmist some of his contributions were signed "Anon," others "M. S.," whilst others bore the names of the tune books in which they had previously appeared; and in the Church Melodies some were signed with his name, and others were left blank. His Psalms and Devotional Hymns, etc., enable us to fix the authorship of over 50 which are still in C. U. These, following the chronological order of his lending work, are:—

1. From the Spiritual Songs, 1831:—

1. Before Thy footstool bowing, In sickness. No. 352, in 2 st. of 8 l.
3. Child in sin and sorrow, Filled with dismay. Lent. No. 318, in 2 st. of 8 l. It is sometimes given as "Child of sin and sorrow, Where wilt thou now set?" It is in extensive use.
4. Delay not, delay not, O sinner draw near. Exhortation to Repentance. No. 145, in 3 st. of 8 l. Given in several important collections.
5. Forgive us, Lord, to Thee we cry. Forgiveness desired. No. 165, in 3 st. of 8 l.
6. Gently, Lord, O gently lead us. Pilgrimage of Life. No. 291, in 2 st. of 8 l. It is given in several collections. The first two lines are taken from a hymn which appeared in the Christian Lyre, 1838.
7. Go forth on wings of fervent prayer. For a blessing on the distribution of Books and Tracts. No. 256, in 4 st. of 8 l. It is sometimes given as "Go forth on wings of faith and prayer." as in the Hymn. Praises, &c., or the Sabbath; but the allusions are so great as almost to constitute it a new hymn.
8. Hail to the brightness of Zion's glad morning. Missionary Success. No. 239, in 4 st. of 8 l. In several hymn-books in G. Britain and America.
10. In this calm, impressing hour. Early Morning. No. 239, in 3 st. of 8 l. In several collections.
12. Now be the gospel banner. Missions. No. 176, in 2 st. of 8 l. In several collections (see below).
13. Now from labour, and from care. Evening. No. 235, in 3 st. of 8 l. This hymn is No. 10 above, "In this calm," &c., constitute one hymn of 6 st. in the Spiritual Songs, but divided into two parts, one for Morning and the other for Evening. Both parts are popular as separate hymns.
15. O tell me, Thou Life and delight of my soul. Following the Good Shepherd. No. 141, in 5 st. of 4 l., see below.
16. Return, 0 wanderer, to thy home. The Prodigal recalled. No. 163, in 3 st. of 4 l., with refrain. "Return, return" (see below).
17. Soft and holy is the place. Public Worship. No. 351, in 4 st. of 4 l. In Dr. Hatfield's Church H. Rk., N. Y., 1772, and some other collections, the opening line is altered to "Sweet and holy is the place."
18. That warning voice, O sinner, hear. Rev. 23:1, in 4 st. of 4 l.
19. To-day the Saviour calls. Cant. No. 176, in 4 st. of 4 l. Dr. Hastings says, in a communication to Dr. Stevenson (Hymns for Church and Home, 1873), this hymn "was offered me in a hasty sketch which I returned," the sketch was by the Rev. J. F. Smith.

Concerning the two hymns, No. 12, "Now be the gospel banner," and No. 16, "Return, O wanderer, to thy home," Dr. Stevenson has the following note in his Hymns for Church and Home, London, 1873:

"In a letter to the Editor, Dr. Hastings wrote, not more than a fortnight before his death, 'These two hymns of mine were earlier compositions, the former, ['Now be," &c.,] for a Union Sunday School celebration, the latter ["Return, O wanderer," &c.] after hearing a stirring revival sermon on the Propigal Son, by the Rev. Mr. Kent, at a large Union meeting in the Presbyterian Church, where two hundred converts were present. The preacher at the close eloquently exclaimed with tender emphasis, 'Sinner, come home! home home home! it was easy afterwards to write, 'Return, O wanderer.'"

Several additional hymns in the Spiritual Songs, 1831, have been ascribed to Dr. Hastings, but without confirmation. The sum of what can be said on his behalf is that the hymns are in his style, and that they have not been claimed by others. They are:

22. Drooping souls, no longer mourn. Pardon promised. No. 40, in 3 st. of 4 l., is much altered from J. H. Hurd's Public, Pardon, and Pottage Hymns, Baltimore, 1833, that is, 9 years before the Spiritual Songs were published.
23. Dying souls, fast bound in sin. Pardon offered. No. 41, in 5 st. of 4 l. It is usually given in an abridged form.

ii. From His Mother's Hymn Book, 1834:
24. Forbid them not, the Saviour cried. Holy Baptism. No. 44.
25. God of mercy, hear our prayer. On behalf of Children. No. 48, in 5 st. of 4 l. It was included in James Campbell's Comprehensive H. Bk., Lond., 1837, and subsequently in several collections.
26. God of the nations, bow Thine ear. Missions. No. 115, in 5 st. of 4 l. In several collections.
27. How tender is Thy hand. Aection. No. 99, in 5 st. of 4 l.
28. Jesus, while our hearts are bleeding. Death. Repose. No. 95, in 5 st. of 4 l. This is in extensive use, and is one of his best and most popular hymns.
29. Lord, I would come to Thee. Change of a Child. No. 72, in 4 st. of 4 l.
30. O Lord, behold us at Thy feet. Consolation. No. 59, in 4 st. of 4 l. It is doubtful if this is by Hastings. It is sometimes signed "Mrs. T."
31. The very light is dawning. Morning. No. 61, in 3 st. of 4 l.
33. Thou God of sovereign grace. On behalf of Children. No. 68, in 6 st. of 4 l.
34. Wherever two or three may meet. Divine Service. No. 56.
35. Within these quiet walls. O Lord, Mother! Reflections. No. 16, in 5 st. of 4 l. In Spurgeon's O. O., H. Bk., 1856, No. 1018, it begins, "Within these peaceful walls." This reading is from J. Campbell's Comprehensive H. Bk., Lond., 1837. It is very doubtful if this is by Hastings.

iii. From the Christian Psalmist, 1836:
36. Children, hear the melting story. On the life of Christ. No. 436, in 3 st. of 4 l. It is given as from the Union Minister, and the statement that it is by Hastings is very doubtful, as there is no evidence to that effect being in the possession of his family. Dr. Hatfield, in his Church H. Bk., dates it 1836, and gives it as "A.D."

37. So come thy voice to sacred song. Praise. No. 196, in 5 st. of 4 l., and given as from "A.D."
38. Now that goeth forth with weeping. Missions. No. 213, in 2 st. of 4 l., and given as from "A.D." It is in several collections.
39. I love the Lord, Whose gracious ear. Ps. cxvi. Page 186, in 4 st. of 4 l., as from "A.D."
40. Lord of the harvest, bend Thine ear. For the Increase of the Ministry. No. 461, in 8 st. of 4 l., as from "A.D." This hymn Dr. Hastings altered for his Devotional Hymns and Poems, 1850, but it has failed to replace the original in the hymn-books.
43. O Saviour, lend a listening ear. Lament. No. 175, in 4 st. of 4 l., altered.
44. The Lord Jehovah lives. Ps. xvii. No. 26, in 4 st. of 4 l.

These three hymns, together with many others, are given in the Dutch Reformed Hymns of the Church, N. Y., 1849. In the 1847 Ps. & Hymns there were, including these, 38 hymns by Hastings, and 2 which are doubtful.
45. In time of fear, when trouble's near. Encouragement in Trial. No. 395, in 3 st. of 4 l. In use in U. S.
46. For those in bonds as bound with them. Missions. No. 416, in 5 st. of 4 l., on Heb. xiii. 3.
47. Forget thyself, Christ hath done thee good. Holy Communion. No. 523, in 3 st. of 4 l.
49. Pilgrims in this vale of sorrow. Self-denial. No. 397, in 4 st. of 4 l.
50. Saviour, I look to Thee. Lament. No. 129, in 4 st. of 7 l.
52. Why that soul's commission! Lament. No. 211, in 3 st. of 4 l. It is doubtful if this is by Hastings.
54. Peace, peace, I leave with you. Peace, the benediction of Christ. No. 264, in 3 st. of 7 l.
55. Saviour, Thy gentle voice. Christ All in All. No. 492, in 3 st. of 7 l.
56. In Robinson's Songs for the Sanctuary, 1865:
57. God of the morning ray. Morning. No. 53, in 2 st. of 4 l.

Of Hastings's hymns about 40 are in the Reformed Dutch Ps. & Hymns, 1847; 39 in Robinson's Songs for the Sanctuary, 1865; 15 in Hatfield's Church H. Bk., 1872; and 13 in the Lyra Sacra Americana, 1868. They are largely represented in other collections. Many of his compositions are found in collections now or recently in G. U., but these are not of the highest merit. [F. M. B.]

Hatfield, Edwin Francis, D.D., was b. at Elizabeth-town, New Jersey, Jan. 9, 1807, and educated at Middlebury College, Vermont, and at Andover. From 1832 to 1835 he was pastor of the 2nd Presbyterian Church, St. Louis. In 1835 he removed to New York, where he was at first pastor of 7th Presbyterian Church, and then of the North Presbyterian Church (1836-63) in the same city; and in 1864 he was appointed special agent to the Union Theological Seminary, New York. He also held from 1846 the appointment of Stated Clerk of the Presbyterian General Assembly. He d. at Summit, New Jersey, Sept. 22, 1885. His hymnological knowledge was extensive.

His publications include:

1. Freedom's Lyre: or, Psalms, Hymns, and Sacred Songs, for the Nave and his Friends, N. Y., 1840, to which are contributed 24 hymns under the signatures of “E. F. H.”
2. The Church Hymn Book for the Worship of God, N. Y., 1872, in which are 10 of his hymns; and “Clerk,” “The Church,” in New Hymns, N. Y., 1872.
3. The Poets of the Church: Biographical Sketches of Hymn Writers, with Notes on their Hymns, New York, 1884. This was a posthumous publication, and is far from being accurate.

His hymns and psalm versions in C. U. include:

1. Come, bless Jehovah's name. (1837) Ps. 134. 6. Thy Shepherd's name is love. (1837) Ps. 23.
2. Come, let us gladly sing. (1837) Ps. 96. 7. O sing hallelujah, praise ye the Lord. (1837) Ps. 146.
3. Hallelujah, the Lord is my light. (1837) Ps. 180. 8. Thee, Thee, we praise, O God, and now. (1871) A paraphrase of the 36th Ps.
4. How perfect is Thy law. (1837) Ps. 10. 9. 'Tis Thine alone, Almighty Name. (1872)

11. To God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, in Freedom's Lyre, 1840. It is widely used. These hymns and psalm versions are all in his Church H. Bk., 1872, and the dates appended above are from that collection. No. 10 was pub. in his Freedom's Lyre, 1810, No. 25.

Have faith in truth. H. Bonar. [Faithfulness to truth.] Appeared in the 2nd series of his Hymn Book, 1840. In 10 st. of 4 l. In Dale's English H. Bk., 1875, it begins with st. ii., “Make sure of truth,” and st. x. is also omitted. It is a beautiful hymn, and should be more widely known. [J. J.]

Have mercy, Lord, on me. Tate & Brady. (Ps. Ix.) This st. rendering of Ps. 61 was given in the New Version, 1869 (q.v.), in 17 st. of 4 l., divided into two parts, and is a good example of the renderings therein in meter. [Psalmist's English, § 13, γ.] As found in modern hymn-books in G. Britain and America, it is given in an abbreviated form of three or more stanzas, and often with a doxology also from the N. Version. Few collections agree, however, in their selection of stanzas. The arrangement of stanzas is in H. A. & M., 1875, in more extensive use than any other.

Have mercy on us, God Most High. F. W. Faber. [Holy Trinity.] 1st pub. in his Jesus and Mary, &c., 1810, in 11 st. of 4 l., and entitled, “In the Most Holy Trinity.” In addition to its being given in an abbreviated form in Roman Catholic collections, it is also in H. A. & M., 1861 and 1875, and other hymn-books. The arrangement in most extensive use is that of H. A. & M., which is composed of st. i–iii. v., and xi. In Allen's Supplemental Hymn Book, 1868, No. 3, is a cento by G. Rawson, part of which is from this hymn (specially st. i–iii.), and the rest is by him, some of the lines being from his hymn.

“Transcendent mystery unknown,” subsequently pub. in his Hymnary, &c., 1876, p. 39 (see note on p. 40). The cento in Horder's Cong. Hymn., 1884, and others, begin with st. ii. of the original, “Most ancient of all mysteries.” [J. J.]

HAVERGAL, FRANCES R.

Have you ever brought a penny to the missionary box? Emily E. S. Elliott. [Children's Missionary Hymn.] 1st pub. 1853, in the Church Missionary Jubilee Instructor. Included, slightly altered, as No. 19 of the Children's Hymns in Wilson's Service of Praise, 1865, in 6 st. of 4 l. In 1873, Dr. W. F. Stevenson included st. ii–vii., beginning, “O how joyous is the music of the missionary song,” in his H. for Church and Home; and this was repeated in Wilson's Songs of Zion, 1878, and in Allon's Children's Worship, 1878. In the latter it begins, “O joyous is the music.” [J. M.]

Havergal, Frances Ridley, daughter of the Rev. W. H. Havergal, was b. at Astley, Worcestershire, Dec. 14, 1836, and two years later her father removed to the Rectory of St. Nicholas, Worcester. In August, 1850, she entered Mrs. Teele's school, whose influence over her was most beneficial. In the following year she says, “I committed my soul to the Saviour, and earth and heaven seemed brighter from that moment.” A short sojourn in Germany followed, and on her return she was confirmed in Worcester Cathedral, July 17, 1853. In 1860 she left Worcester and her father resigning the Rectory of St. Nicholas, and resided at different periods in Leamington, and at Caswall Bay, Swansea, broken by visits to Switzerland, Scotland, and North Wales. She d. at Caswall Bay, Swansea, June 3, 1879.

Miss Havergal's scholastic acquirements were extensive, embracing several modern languages, together with Greek and Hebrew. She does not occupy, and did not claim for herself, a prominent place as a poet, but by her distinct individuality she carved out a niche which she alone could fill. Simply and sweetly she sings the love of God, and His way of salvation. To this end, and for this object, her whole life and all her powers were consecrated. She lives and speaks in every line of her poetry. Her poems are permeated with the fragrance of her passionate love of Jesus.

her religious views and theological bias are distinctly set forth in her poems, and may be described as mildly Calvinistic, without the severe dogmatic tenets of reprobation. The burden of her writings is a free and full salvation, through the Redeemer's merits, for every sinner who will receive it, and her life was devoted to the proclamation of this truth by personal labours, literary efforts, and earnest interest in Foreign Missions.

[J. D.]

Miss Havergal's hymns were frequently printed, by J. & R. Parlane as leaflets, and by Caswall & Co. as ornamental cards. They were gathered together from time to time and published in her works as follows:

(1) Ministry of Song, 1869; (2) Twelve Sacred Songs for Little Singers, 1870; (3) Under the Surface, 1874; (4) Legal Responses, 1875; (5) Life Chords, 1878; (6) Life Chords, 1880; (7) Life Chords, 1883.

About 15 of the more important of Miss Havergal's hymns, including "Golden harps are sounding," "I gave my life for thee," "Jesus, Master, Whose I am," "Lord, speak to me," "O Master, at Thy feet," "Take my life and let it be," "Tell it out among the heathen," &c., are annotated under their respective first lines. The rest, which are in C. U., number neearly 50. These we give, together with dates and places of composition, from the Havergal uses, and the works in which they were published.
These are many, which were printed in Fanlire's Series of Leaflets are distinglshed as (P., 1872, &c.), and those in Crawall's series (C. 1873, &c.).

9. How vast the field of souls. Missions. Written in 1837, and pub. in W. C. Wilson's Bk. of General Psalms, 1840; the Worcester Ps. & Hs., 1849; and The Life Echoes, 1863.

10. In doubt and dread dismay. Missions. Written in 1837, and pub. in W. C. Wilson's Bk. of General Psalms, 1840; the Worcester Ps. & Hs., 1849; and The Life Echoes, 1863.

16. To praise our Shepherd's (Saviour's) care. The Good shepherd. Written after witnessing the death of Elizabeth Edwards, aged 12, of St. Nicholas, Worcester, and printed as a leaflet. Pub. in W. C. Wilson's Bk. of General Psalms, 1840; the Worcester Ps. & Hs., 1849; and The Life Echoes, 1863. The author also pub. a Memoir of the child.

In addition to these hymns, his carols, "How grand, and how bright," "Our festal morn is come," and "other" carols were annotated under their respective first lines. Most of these carols and hymns were reprinted in Christmas Carols & Sacred Songs, Chiefly by the Rev. W. H. Havergal, Lond., Nisbet, 1869. [J. J.]

Haweis, Thomas, LL.D., M.D., b. at Truro, Cornwall, 1732. After practising for a time as a Physician, he entered Christ's College, Cambridge, where he graduated. Taking Holy Orders, he became Assistant Preacher to M. Madan at the Lock Hospital, London, and subsequently Rector of All Saints, Aldwincle, Northamptonshire. He was also Chaplain to Lady Huntingdon, and for several years officiated at her Chapel in Bath. He died at Bath, Feb. 11, 1820. He published several prose works, including A History of the Church, A Translation of the New Testament, and A Commentary on the Holy Bible. His hymns, a few of which are of more than ordinary merit, were pub. in his祠

Carmina Christi; or, Hymns to the Saviour. Designed for the Use and Comfort of Those who worship the Lamb that was slain. Bath, B. Hayward, 1792 (399 Hawker, Robert, M.D., was b. at Exeter in 1853, and educated for the medical profession. In 1778 he took Holy Orders, and in 1784 became Incumbent of Charles the Martyr Church in Plymouth, where he remained until his death, on April 6, 1827. Dr. Hawker was well known as a controversial and theological writer. His name is also associated with hymns, especially "Lord dismis us with Thy blessing," and a few others. He pub.:

Psalms and Hymns sung by the Children of the Sunday School, in the Parish Church of Plymouth, at the Sabbath Evening Lecture, c. (c. 1787)

This collection is noticeable as having been one of the first hymn-books published in connection with the Sunday School movement.

It had some slight influence on later collections [Children's Hymns]. (1787). He also pub. in pamphlet form:

These hymns, which are accompanied by passages of Holy Scripture, are:

1. Aba Father! Lord we call Thee, Christ the Father.
2. Amen. We bless Thee, O Thou great Amen! Amen.

[H. J.]

Hawker, Robert Stephen, M.A., grandson of Dr. Robert Hawker, was b. at Plymouth, Dec. 3, 1804, and educated at Pembroke College, Oxford (1824, M.A. 1830). On taking Holy Orders in 1828, he became Curate of Winkleham, Devon, and in 1834 Vicar of Moretonhampstead, Cornwall. He d. at Moretonhampstead, Aug. 13, 1873, having been received into the Roman Catholic communion the previous evening. He pub. several poetical works, including Ecclesia, 1840, in which some of his hymns appeared. Hymns by him were also pub. in Lyra Vaticana, 1864. His "Child Jesus, a Cornish Carol," beginning, "Welcome, that star in Judah's sky," appeared in both these works. Very few of his hymns are in C. U.

Hawkesworth, John, LL.D. (b. 1715, and d. Nov. 1773), a writer in the Gentleman's Magazine, proprietor and editor of the Adventurer, and friend of Johnson, Warton, and other literary men of note, pub. in 1760, Poems and Translations, and was the author of the well-known Morning hymn "In sleep's serene oblivion laid." This hymn was composed in 1773, "about a month before his death, in a wakeful hour of the night," and dedicated to his wife on rising. It appeared in the Universal Theological Magazine for March, 1802, (Miller's Singers & Songs, &c. p. 210.) It was again given in Collin's Sel., 1812, the Leeds H. Br., 1853, and others; and is in somewhat extenssive use in America. It sometimes begins, as in the American Unitarian Hymn Book, for the Church of Christ, 1835, with the line, "New born, I bless the waking hour." (J. J.)

Hawkins, Ernest, B.D., s. of Major Hawkins, b. Jan. 23, 1802, at Hitchen, and educated at Balliol College, Oxford (1832). He was for sometime a Fellow of Exeter College. On taking Holy Orders he became Curate of Burwash, sub-librarian of the Bodleian Library, Curate of St. George's, Bloomsbury, Minister of Curzon Chapel, Mayfair, London, Prebendary of St. Paul's, and Canon of Westminster. From 1838 to his death, Oct. 5, 1868, he also acted as secretary to the S.P.G. Besides his prose works, which were not numerous but well, Verses in commemoration of the Third Jubilee of the S.P.G., 1851-2. To this little collection his hymns were contributed. The most extensively used of these, "Lord, a Saviour's love displaying" (Mission), has been adopted by many collections.

[J. J.]

Hawks, Annie Sherwood, Mrs. Hawks was b. in Horsick, N. Y., May 28, 1835, and has resided for many years at Brooklyn. Her hymns were contributed to Bright Day, Poems, Juvenile, Royal Diamond, Brightness and Best, Temple Anthems, Tintel Water, and other popular Sunday School hymn-books. They include: "I need Thee every hour" (written April, 1872), "Thine, most gracious Lord!" "Why wert thou? Whom seekst thou?" and others of the same type. (J. J.)

Hayn, Henriette Luise von, dau. of Georg Heinrich von Hayn, master of the hounds to the Duke of Nassau, was b. at Idstein, Nassau, May 22, 1724. In 1746 she was formally received into the Moravian community at Herrnhut. There, and after the dissolution of this community, at Grosswepersdorff, and, after 1751 at Herrnhut, she was engaged as teacher in the Girls' School; and after 1766 in caring for the invalid sisters of the community. She d. at Herrnhut, Aug. 27, 1782. (Koch, vii. 443-447; Allg. Deutsche Biog., xi. 158, &c.) She was a gifted hymn-writer. A fervent love to Christ pervades her productions; and they are remarkably free from the unpleasant sentimentality and that dwelling on the physical details of our Lord's Passion which mars so many of the Moravian hymns of that period. Over 40 hymns or portions of hymns by her are included in the Brüder G. B. of 1778. Only one has come into English use outside the Moravian hymn-books, viz.:

Well is Jesus on the Cross. (Children. This beautiful hymn for children, regarded as Lamb's of the Good Shepherd, first appeared in the Brüder G. B., 1778, No. 1179, in 2 st. of 6 l. It has been included in many recent German collections, as the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 120. Tr. as:

2 K 2
He cometh, on yon hallowed Board.
Cecil F. Alexander. [Holy Communion.]
Appeared in Lyra Anglicana, 1863, p. 149, in two parts, pt. i. beginning as above, and pt. ii. as "O Jesus, how now, armed and wounded more!"

Another tr. is: "Since I'm Jesus' sheep I am," by R. Massie, in The Day of Rest, 1866, p. 622. [J. M.]

He dyes! the Heavenly Lover dies.
1. Watts. [Passiontide.] 1st pub. in his Hymns Lyricall, 2nd ed., 1708, in 6th of 4 l., and headed, "Christ Dying, Rising, and Reigning." In 1783, J. Wesley reprinted it in full, and without alteration, in his Select Hymns for the Use of Christians of all Denominations, 1783; and it was also adopted by others. The popular form of the text is that given to it by M. Madan in his Ps. & Hys., 1769, No. 114, which reads (the italics being Madan's alterations):—

He dies! the Friend of Sinners dies!
Lo! Saviour's daughters weep around!
A solemn darkness veils the skies;
A sudden trembling shakes the ground;
Come saints and drop a tear or two,
For Him who groaned beneath your load;
He shed a thousand drops for you,
A thousand drops of richer blood!
Here's love and grief beyond degree,
The Lord of glory dies for men!
But lo! what sudden joys we see!
Jesus, the dead, revives again!
The rising God forakes the tomb!
(Th' tomb in vain forbids His rise!)
Cherubic legions guard Him home,
And shout Him welcome to the skies!
Break off your tears ye saints, and tell
How high our great Deliverer reigns!
Sing how He spelt the house of hell,
And led the monarchs of death in chains!
Say "Live for ever, wondrous King!
Born to redeem: and strong to save!"
Then ask the monster, "Where's thy sting,
And where thy victory, boasting grave!"

The text was repeated, with slight variations, by A. M. Toplady, in his Ps. & Hys., 1776, No. 185, and also by other and later editors, and is, with the change of a word here and there, the received text of the hymn in G. Britain and America.

Miller (Singers & Songs of the Ch., 1869), Stevenson (Methodist H. Bk. Notes, 1888), and others state that the foregoing alterations were made by J. Wesley. Wesley, however, did not include the hymn in his Ps. & Hys. in 1780, in any form whatever. It was added, as above, by M. Madan, to the New H. Bk. by the Wesleyan Conference in 1800 (i.e. nine years after Wesley's death), and must have been taken from Madan's Ps. & Hys. of 1769, or some other collections which had copied from Madan. Wesley made use of the original text in 1734 (as above); but there is no evidence to show that he ever countenanced Madan's alterations, much less claimed them as his own.

Another altered version of this hymn appeared as, "He dies! the Man of Sorrows dies," in Hall's Mitre, 1836, and is repeated in several modern collections. [J. J.]

He filled the cup with wine, and said. H. M. Bickersteth. [Holy Communion.]
Written in 1850, and pub. in his Ps. & Hys., 1858, in 6th of 4 l. In 1853 it was pub. in Kennedy, and later in the New Cong. and other collections. In the author's Two Brothers and other Poems, 1872, it appeared in a new form as, "The hour is come; the feast is spread." This revision was made for the H. Comm., 1870. In the annotated ed. of the same, p. 119, Bickersteth says:—

"This hymn for the Holy Communion, by the Editor, has been revised for this work. He ventured to include it, as touching on one aspect of the Lord's Supper, not usually alluded to in sacramental hymns, viz., Matt. xxvii. 28." [J. J.]

He has come! the Christ of God.
H. Bowr. [Christmas.]
Appeared in the 1st series of his Hys. of Faith and Hope, 1857, in 6th of 4 l., and headed "A Bethlehem Hymn," with the motto "Mundum impulsm in pace—io jacens," Augustine. In its full, or in an abridged form, it is in several collections in G. Britain and America, and is increasing in popularity. [J. J.]

He is coming, He is coming, Not as once, &c. Cecil F. Alexander, née Humphreys. [Advent.] 1st pub. in her Hys. Descriptive and Devotional, 1858, No. v., in 8th of 4 l. It has passed into several collections in G. Britain and America.

He is gone—Beyond the skies. A. P. Stanley. [Ascension.] In a note to this hymn given in his Christ in Song, 1870, p. 261, Dr. Schaff says concerning it:—

"It is here given complete from a ms. copy kindly furnished by the author to the editor, on Ascension Day, May 6, 1869. The Dean informs me that this hymn was written about ten years ago (1859), at the request of a friend, whose children had complained to him that there was no suitable hymn for Ascension Day, and who were eagerly asking what had been the feelings of the disciples after that event."

It first appeared in Macmillan’s Magazine for June, 1862 (vol. vi. p. 158), and was signed "A. P. S." In the Westminster Abbey H. Bk., 1888, it is given in full in 7th of 8 i. It has also furnished the following conclusion which are in C. U.:—

2. He is gone—A cloud of light. This revised and abbreviated version was given with the author’s consent, in the Chapel Royal, Savoy, Hymnary App. 1870, and repeated in the Scottish Church Hys. and other collections.
3. He is gone—and we remain. In Allen’s Year of Praise, 1867, and also several American hymn-books.
4. He is gone—Towards their goal. In the Wellington Coll. Chapel Hys., 1860.
5. He is gone—We heard Him say. In the Oberlin Manual of Praise, 1890.

Taken in these various forms, the use of this hymn is extensive. [J. J.]
He is risen! He is risen! Tell it with a joyful sound.

Cecil F. Alexander, nee Humphreys. [Easter.] 1st pub. in her Verses for Holy Seasons, 1846, in 5 st. of 6 l. It is given in several collections, and sometimes as "Christ is risen! Christ is risen!"

He lives! the great Redeemer lives.

Anne Steele. [Easter.] 1st pub. in her Poems on Subjects chiefly Devotional, 1790, vol. i. p. 64, in 5 st. of 4 l. and entitled, "The Incarnation of Christ," and in Sedgwick's reprint of her Hymns, 1863, p. 49. It passed into the Nonconformist collections through Rippon's Sel., 1787; and into those of the Ch. of England through Toplady's Ps. & Hymns, 2nd ed. 1787. It is one of the most popular of the author's hymns, and is in extensive use, especially in America.

He sendeth sun, He sendeth shower.

Sarah Adams, nee Flower. [Resignation.] Contributed to and 1st pub. in W. J. Fox's Hymns and Anthems, 1841, No. 101, in 3 st. of 6 l. It is in extensive use, especially in America. Sometimes it is given as "God sendeth sun, He sendeth shower," as in the Leeds H. Bk., 1833, and other collections.

He that doeth nothing fails not.

J. Bunyan. [Humility.] This hymn was given in Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, 1684. Pt. ii., as the Shepherd's Boy's song heard by Great-heart, Christiana, and the rest of the pilgrims in the Valley of Humiliation. It is thus introduced:

"Now, as they were going along, and talking, they espied a boy feeding his father's sheep. The boy was in very mean clothes, but of a very fresh and wellfavoured countenance; and as he sat by himself, he sang. Hark! said Mr. Great-heart, to what the shepherd's boy saith. So they hearkened, and he said:

- He that doeth nothing fails not;
- He that is low, has pride;
- He that is humble, ever shall
- Have God to be his Guide.
- I am content with what I have;
- Little be it or much;
- And, Lord, contentment still I crave,
- Because Thou savest such.
- Fullness to such a burden is,
- That go on pilgrimage;
- Here little, there larger, lies,
- In best from age to age."

"Then said the Guide, Do you hear him? I will dare to say, that this boy lives a merrier life, and wears more of that heart called heart's ease in his bosom, than he that is clad in silk and velvet; but we will proceed in our discourse."

This hymn was frequently included in the older hymn-books, but is seldom found in modern collections.

He was there alone, when even.

Sir J. Bowring. [Retirement and Devotion.] Appeared in his Hymns, 1823, in 4 st. of 4 l. in 1684 it was given in Longfellow and Johnson's Book of Hymns, Boston, in 3 st. In this form it has been repeated in a few modern Unitarian collections.

[C. J.]

He who walks in virtue's (God's true) way.

Sir J. Bowring. [Peace.] 1st pub. in the 2nd ed. of his Matins and Vespers, &c., 1824, in 3 st. of 8 l. and again in the 3rd ed., 1841. In its original form it is not often found in C. U. An altered text is given in Kennedy, 1863, as "He who walks in God's true way."

He wills that I should holy be.

C. Wesley. [Holiness.] A cento from his Short Hymns, &c., 1762, thus: -

Head of Thy [the] Church triumphant.

C. Wesley. [In time of Trouble.] 1st pub. in his Hymns for Times of Trouble for the Year 1745, No. xvi., in 4 st. of 10 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. iv. p. 79). The special Trouble was the threatened attack on England by Charles Edward Stuart, the young Pretender, in consequence of which, together with foreign wars, a National Fast was proclaimed. This Wesley tract, composed on that occasion, contained 15 hymns. This hymn was included in Whitefield's Coll., 1753; Madan's Ps. & Hymns, 1790; Toplady's Ps. & Hymns, 1778; the early editions of the Lady Huntingdon Coll., and others of the older hymn-books. Gradually it became very popular, and its use extended to most English-speaking countries. Notwithstanding this success it was excluded from the Wes. H. Bk. until the revised ed., 1875. It has been and still is often attributed to De Courcy. The mistake began with Bickersteth in his Christ. Psalmody, 1833. He copied from De Courcy's Coll., in which authors' names were not given, and was thus led into the error. In the last stanza of the hymn there is a reference to the death of Stephen, which has led in a few instances to the adoption of the hymn for St. Stephen's day.

In Archdeacon Robinson's Last Days of Bishop Heber, pp. 179-180, quoted in Heber's Life, 1830, vol. ii. pp. 433-6, the Archdeacon says, under date 'Trichinopoly, April 2, 1826' (the day before the Bishop's sudden death at that place):

"On returning from church in the morning, I was so ill as to be obliged to go to bed, and with his [the Bishop's] usual affectionate consideration, he came and sat the greater part of the afternoon with me. Our conversation this afternoon turned chiefly on the blessedness of Heaven, and the best means of preparing for its enjoyment. He repeated several lines of an old hymn which he said, in spite of one or two expressions which familiar and injudicious use had tended to vulgarize, he admired as one of the most beautiful in our language, for rich and elevated tone of devotional feeling."

"Head of the Church triumphant:
- We joyfully adore Thee," &c.

This is great praise. The hymn, however, lacks the refinement which is so marked a feature in the finest of C. Wesley's compositions. Its use is extensive.

Headlam, Margaret Ann, daughter of Ven. John Headlam, Archdeacon of Richmond, b. Jan. 4, 1817, is the author of:

1. Holy is the seed-time, when the buried grain.

Harvest. Written, c. 1862, for a Harvest Festival in the parish of Whorlton, Durham, and pub. in a privately printed "Supp. to Pott's Hymns, &c." It was also given in the 8. P. A. H. Church Hymns, 1871. In his note thereon (J. A. J., vol. ed. p. i.) Mr. Ellerton gives these details, and adds an omitted stanza, and an original tune (Whorlton) composed for it by Dr. Dykes.

3. The fourth. O Lord, are open. Re-opening of a church. Written for the re-opening of St. Oswald's Church, Durham, Aug. 1, 1893, and printed as a leaflet.

Heal us, Emmanuel, here we are.
W. Cooper. [Lev. 1] 1st pub. in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. ii., No. 14, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Jehovah Rophi,—I am the Lord that healeth thee." It is often found in the older collections in its original form, and it still retains its place in a few modern hymnals.
Taken in its original, and the following altered forms of the text, its use is somewhat extensive:—

1. Heal us, Emmanuel! heal our prayer.
This was given in the Salisbury H., Bk. 1851, and was reprinted in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, and others.

2. Heal us, Emmanuel, here we stand.
In the Amer. Tract Society's Songs of Zion, 1854, &c.

3. Heal us, Emmanuel, we are here.
In the New Church, 1858, and others.

4. Divine Physician of the Soul. In Kennedy, 1863.

5. Healer Divine, O hear our prayer. In a few American hymnals, including the Episcopal Hymn, for Ch. of Rest, Phila., 1860.

The references in this hymn to the father of the deaf and dumb child (St. Mark ix. 24), and to the woman healed of the issue of blood (St. Mark r. 34), render it most appropriate for use when those portions of Holy Scriptures are read in public worship, e.g.
March 2, and 9

Hear, Lord, the songs of praise and prayer. W. Cooper. [Sunday School Anniversary.] This hymn was pub. in Rowland
Hill's Divine Hymns, attempted in Easy
Language for Children, &c., 1790, p. 38,
No. 37, in 6 st. of 4 l. and headed, "A hymn for Sunday School Children. 'Better is a poor and vile child than an old and foolish king.'
Eccl. iv. 13." In his Preface, p. viii., Hill says, Hymns 24 ("How happy are those little ones") and 37 were added by the gentleman that compiled the publication. It was also given in the Christian Observer, Oct. 1808, with the following letter as an introduction:—

"The following hymn, composed by the poet Cooper for the anniversary of the establishment of the Sunday Schools at Olney, and, perhaps, not ill calculated for general use on such anniversaries in other parishes, has never, I believe, been printed. If you agree with me in thinking the publication of it desirable, it is very much at your service. Its tendency is, certainly, the same with that of other productions of his pen. And in internal evidence, as to authorship, is so strong, that it is perhaps unnecessary for me to say I transcribe a copy sent to Mrs. Unwin, in her own handwriting, to her daughter, Mrs. Powley... E. Kittington, Ottersh, Aug. 16."

The hymn is in 6 st. of 4 l., the opening stanza being:—

"Hear, Lord, the songs of praise and prayer.
In heaven, Thy dwelling-place,
For children made the public care,
And taught to seek Thy face."

In the Leeds S. S. H. Bk., 1833, it is abbreviated and in this form it is known to modern collections. One or two of the remaining stanzas might be added with advantage.

Heavenly Father. William Beadon. R.C.D., was educated at New College, Oxford (B.C.L.
1840). He was for some time Fellow and Tutor of his College; Precentor of Salisbury and Select Preacher at Oxford. He was author of The Psalter pointed to the Gregorian Tunes, and of Prayers for Children especially in Parochial Schools, with a Morning and is given in two forms, one for Morning

HEAVENLY FATHER, TO

Heber, Reginald.

His last act, for immediately on taking off his clothes, he went into a large cold bath, where he had bathed the two preceding mornings, but which was now the destined agent of his removal to Paradise. Half an hour after, his servant, alarmed at his long absence, entered the room and found him a lifeless corpse.” Life, &c., 1830, vol. ii. p. 437.

Heber’s hymns were all written during the Hodnet period. Even the great missionary hymn, “From Greenland’s icy mountains” notwithstanding the Indian allusions (“India’s coral strand,” “Ceylon’s isle”), was written before he received the offer of Calcutta. The touching funeral hymn, “Thou art gone to the grave;” was written on the loss of his first babe, which was a deep grief to him. Some of the hymns were published (1811–16) in the Christian Observer; the rest were not published till after his death. They formed part of a ms. collection made for Hodnet (but not published), which contained, besides a few hymns from older and special sources, contributions by Milman. The first idea of the collection appears in a letter in 1809 asking for a copy of the Oney Hymns, which he “admired very much.” The plan was to compose hymns connected with the Epistles and Gospels, to be sung after the Nicene Creed. He was the first to publish sermons on the Sunday services (1822), and a writer in The Guardian has pointed out that these efforts of Heber were the germ of the new familiar practice, developed through the Christian Year (perhaps following Ken’s Hymns on the Festivals), and by Augustus Hare, of welding together sermon, hymn, and liturgy. Heber tried to obtain from Abp. Manners Sutton and the Bp. of London (1820) authorization of his ms. collection of hymns by the Church, enlarging on the “powerful engine which hymns were among Disciples, and the irregular use of them in the church, which it was impossible to suppress, and better to regulate. The authorization was not granted.” The lyric spirit of Scott and Byron passed into our hymns in Heber’s verse; imparting a fuller rhythm to the older measures, as illustrated by “Oh, Saviour, is Thy promise fled,” or the martial hymn, “The Son of God goes forth to war,” pressing into sacred service the freer rhythms of contemporary poetry (e.g. “Hymn of the best and of the sons of the morning”; “God that madest earth and heaven”); and aiming at consistent grace of literary expression. Their beauties and faults spring from this modern spirit. They have not the scriptural strength of our best early hymns, nor the dogmatic force of the best Latin ones. They are too flowing and florid, and the conditions of hymn composition are not sufficiently understood. But as pure and graceful devotional poetry, always true and reverent, they are an unfailing pleasure. The finest of them is that majestic anthem, founded on the rhythm of the English Bible, “Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty.” The greatest evidence of Heber’s popularity as a hymn-writer, and his refined taste as a composer, is found in the fact that the local contents of his ms. collection which were given in his posthumous Hymns written and adapted to the Weekly Church Service of the Year, London, J. Murray. 1827; which included 57 hymns by Heber, 12 by Milman, and 29 by other Heavenly Father, to Whose eye. J. Conder. (In Temptation.) Pub. in the Cong. H. Bk., 1835, No. 53, in 8 st. of 4 lines, as a paraphrase of the clause, “And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil,” in the Lord’s Prayer. In The Choir and the Oratory, 1837, it is repeated as one of a series of hymns on the Lord’s Prayer, and again in his Hymns of Prayer and Praise, 1856. It is usually given in an abbreviated form, and sometimes with the addition of a doxology. The last three stanzas, beginning, “Lord, uphold me day by day,” are often used as a separate hymn.

Heber, Reginald, b. d. Born at Malpas, April 21, 1783, educated at Brasenose College, Oxford; Vicar of Hodnet, 1807; Bp. of Calcutta, 1822; d. at Trichinopoly, India, April 3, 1826. The gift of versification showed itself in Heber’s childhood; and his Newdigate prize poem Palestine, which was read to Scott at breakfast in his rooms at Brasenose, Oxford, and owed one of its most striking passages to Scott’s suggestion, is almost the only prize poem that has won a permanent place in poetical literature. His sixteen years at Hodnet, where he held a half-way position between a person and a squire, were marked not only by his devoted care of his people, as a parish priest, but by literary work. He was the friend of Milman, Gifford, Southey, and others, in the world of letters, endeared to them by his candour, gentleness, “salient playfulness,” as well as learning and culture. He was on the original staff of The Quarterly Review; Hamiton Lecturer (1815); and Preacher at Lincoln’s Inn (1822). His edition of Jeremy Taylor is still the classic edition. During this portion of his life he had often had a lurking fondness for India, had traced on the map Indian journeys, and had been tempted to wish himself Bishop of Calcutta. When he was forty years old the literary life was closed by his call to the Episcopate. No memory of Indian annals is holier than that of the three years of ceaseless toil, splendid administration, and saintly enthusiasm, of his tenure of the see of Calcutta. He ordained the first Christian native—Christian David. His first visitation ranged through Bengal, Bombay, and Ceylon; and at Delhi and Lucknow he was prostrated with fever. His second visitation took him through the scenes of Schwartz’s labours in Madras Presidency to Trichinopoly, where on April 3, 1826, he confirmed forty-two persons, and he was deeply moved by the impression of the struggling mission. He was much so that he showed no appearance of bodily exhaustion. On his return from the service he retired into his own room, and according to his invariable custom, wrote on the back of the address on Confirmation—Trichinopoly, April 3, 1826. This was with drought,” in Martinneau’s Hymns, &c., 1873, and a few American collections, is composed of st. xi, xii, iii., v. (in the order named), very much altered. In the Wes. H. Bk., 1789, No. 539, the original hymn was given in two parts, Pt. ii. beginning:—"Where the ancient dragon lay." In this form it is retained in the revised ed., 1875, and is also found in other collections. [J. J.] writers, are in C. U. in G. Britain and America at the present time:—

[Dr. Hedge's hymns, about one half are annulled under their respective first lines. Those given below were pub. in Dr. Hedge's Posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827. Some of them are in extensive use in G. Britain and America; but as they possess no special histories they are grouped together as from the Hymns, &c., 1827:—]

1. Beneath our feet, and o'er our head. Burial.
3. Lo, the little of the field. Teachings of Nature, or, Gospel for 15th S. after Trinity.
4. O God, by whom the seed is given. Nzapasina.
5. O God, my sins are manifold. Forgiveness, or, Gospel for 22d S. after Trinity.
7. O King of earth, and air, and sea. Feeding the Multitude, or, Gospel for 4th S. in Lent.
8. O more than merciful. Whose bounty gave. Good Friday.
10. O Thou, Whom neither time nor space. God unsearchable, or, Gospel for 5th S. in Lent.
12. Room for the proud! Ye sons of clay. Lives and Labors, or, Gospel for 1st S. after Trinity.
13. Sit thou on my right hand, my Son, saith the Lord. Ascension.
14. Spirit of truth, on this thy day. Whitsunday.
15. The feeble pulse, the grapping breath. Burial, or, Gospel for 1st S. after Trinity.
16. The God of glory walks His round. Septuaginta, or, the Labours on the Market-place.
17. The sound of war in earth and air. Wrestling against Principalities and Powers, or, Epistle for 21st S. after Trinity.
18. The world is grown old, her pleasures are past. Adven; or, Epistle for 4th S. in Advent.
19. There was joy in heaven. The Lost Sheep; or, Gospel for 3rd S. after Trinity.
21. To conquer and to save. The Son of God. Christ the Victor.
22. Virgin-born, we bow before Thee. The Virgin Mary. Or, Gospel for 3rd S. in Lent.
23. Wake not, O mother, sounds of lamentation. Raising the Widow's Son, or, Gospel for 5th S. after Trinity.
24. When on her Maker's bosom. Holy Matrimony, or, Gospel for 2d S. after Epiphany.
25. When through the torn sail the wild tempest is streaming. Sailing the Sea, or, Gospel for 4th S. after Epiphany.

This list is a good index of the subjects treated of in those of Dr. Hedge's hymns which are given under their first lines, and shows that he used the Gospels far more than the Epistles in his work. [J. J.]

Hedge, Frederick Henry, d. d., a. of Professor Hedge of Harvard College, was b. at Cambridge, Massachusetts, 1805, and educated in Germany and at Harvard. In 1829 he became pastor of the Unitarian Church, West Cambridge. In 1835 he removed to Bangor, Maine; in 1850 to Providence, and in 1851 to Brockline, Mass. He was appointed in 1857, Professor of Ecclesiastical History at Cambridge (U.S.), and in 1872, Professor of German Literature at Harvard. Dr. Hedge is one of the editors of the Christian Examiner, and the author of The Prose Writers of Germany and their works. In 1852 he edited, with Dr. F. D. Huntington, the Unitarian Hymns for the Church of Christ, Boston Crosby.

Nichols & Co. To that collection and the supplement (1858) he contributed the following trio, from the German:—

1. A mighty fortress is our God. (Ein feste Burg.)
2. Christ hath arisen, joy to, &c. (Gesche's Praise.)
3. The sun is set for ever sounding. (Goethe's Praise.) For 2 and 3 see Goethe.

There is also in the Unitarian Hymn [Tune] Bk. for the Church & Home, Boston, 1865, a tr. from the Latin.

4. Holy Spirit, Fire divine. ("Ver Sacrum Spiritus")

Dr. Hedge's original hymns, given in the Hymn, for the Church, 1858, are:—

7. Twas in the East, the mystic East. Christmas.
8. Twas the day when God's anointed. Good Friday. Written originally for a Confirmation at Bangor, Maine, held on Good Friday, 1843. The hymn "It is finished, Man of Sorrows! From Thy cross, &c." in a few collections, including Martinsee's Hymns, &c., 1873, is composed of st. 4th - vi. of this hymn. [F. M. B]

Heermann, Johann, s. of Johannes Heermann, furrier at Raudten, near Wolfen, Silesia, was b. at Raudten, Oct. 11, 1585. He was the fifth but only surviving child of his parents, and during a severe illness in his childhood his mother vowed that if her recovered she would educate him for the ministry, even though she had to beg the necessary money. He passed through the schools at Wolfen; at Fraustadt (where he lived in the house of Valerius Herberger, q.v., who took a great interest in him); the St. Elizabeth gymnasium at Breslau; and the gymnasium at Brieg. At Easter, 1609, he accompanied two young noblemen (sons of Baron Wenzel von Rothkirch), to whom he had been tutor at Brieg, to the University of Strasburg; but an affection of the eye caused him to return to Raudten in 1610. At the recommendation of Baron Wenzel he was appointed diaconus of Köben, a small town on the Oder, not far from Raudten, and entered on his duties on Ascension Day, 1611, and on St. Martin's Day, 1611, was promoted to the pastorate there. After 1623 he suffered much from an affection of the throat, which compelled him to cease preaching in 1633, his place being supplied by associates. In October, 1638, he retired to Lissa in Posen, and on Sept. 1647 (Feb. 17, 1647. (Koch, ii. 16-36; Allg. Deutsche Biog., xi. 247-249, &c.)

Much of Heermann's manhood was spent amid the distressing scenes of the Thirty Years' War; and by his own ill-health and his domestic trials he was trained to write his beautiful hymns of "Cross and Consecration." Between 1629 and 1634, Köben was plundered four times by the Lichtenstein dragoons and the rough bands under Wallenstein sent against Silesia by the King of Austria in order to bring about the Counter-Reformation and restore the Roman Catholic faith and practice, while in 1616 the town was devastated by fire, and in 1631 by pestilence. In these troublous years Heermann several times lost all his movable goods, once he had to keep away from Köben for fourteen weeks; twice he was nearly starved; and once, while crossing the Oder in a frail boat loaded almost to sinking, he heard the bullets of the pursuing soldiers whistle just over his head. He bore all with courage and patience, and he and his were wonderfully preserved from death and dishonour. He was thus well grounded in the school of affliction, and in his House and Heart lies in the words of one of his finest hymns is: "Songs of Tears. In the time of the persecution and distress of pious Christians."
As a hymn-writer, Heermann ranks with the best of his century, some indeed regarding him as second only to Gerhards. He began writing Latin poems about 1605, and was crowned as a poet at Brug on Oct. 8, 1608. He marks the transition from the objective standpoint of the hymn-writers of the Reformation period to the more subjective and experimental school that followed him. His hymns are distinguished by depth and tenderness of feeling; by firm faith and confidence in face of trial; by deep love to Christ, and humble submission to the will of God. Many of them became at once popular, passed into the hymn-books, and still hold their place among the classics of German hymnody. They appeared principally in—

(1) Dorothea Cursch. Haus- und Herz-Musicae. Leipzig and Brauns, 1636, with 49 hymns (2nd ed. 1639, with 54; 3rd ed. 1644, with 80). The first section is entitled "Hymns of Penance and Consolation from the words of the Ancient Fathers of the Church." Seven of these, however, have no mention in their individual titles of the sources from which they are derived; and the remainder are mostly based on Latin hymns, but on the prose meditations in Martin Moller's Medicinalia sanctorum patrum, or on the mediaval compilations known as the Meditations and the Missale of St. Augustine. (2) Sonntag- und Fast-Evangelien. Leipzig and Brauns 1636, being hymns on the scriptures for Sundays and festivals. (3) Portae Erseckstunden. Nürnberg, 1639; and its Fröhere Fortzierung, also Nürnberg, 1646 [both in Wernsperge], are poems rather than hymns. The hymns of the Haus- und Herz-Musicae, with a representative selection from Heermann's other poetic works, were edited by C. F. V. Wackernagel, prefixed by a long biographical and critical introduction, and published at Stuttgart, 1646.

Six of the most important of Heermann's hymns are annotated under their respective first lines. The other hymns by Heermann which have passed into English are—:

1. Hymns in English C. U.

11. We call Ich sieben hin. Lent. 1636, p. 28, in 11 st. entitled: "A hymn of consolation in which a troubled heart lays all its sins in true faith upon Christ. From Tauler." (Based on M. Muller's Meditationen.)

HEINRICH ERNST

8. Mark, the loud trumpet of our God. National Hymn.

9. Mark, 'tis your heavenly Father's call. A Prayer to be used by the Young.

10. I ask not (honest) wealth, nor pomp, nor power. Wisdom and Knowledge desired. Brief Instruction.

14. To Thee, my Shepherd, and my Lord. The Good Shepherd.

15. Unhappy city, hast thou known. Christ weeping over Jerusalem. From this the cento, "And can mine eyes weep without a tear?" is taken.

17. Yes, I will bless Thee, O my God. Praise of the Father. The text is often altered. The cento: "My soul shall praise Thee, O my God," in 1744, is from this hymn.

Most of these hymns are in Collyer's Collection, 1812. There are also 8 in Hatfield's Church H. Bk., N.Y., 1872, and 7 in the Songs for the Sanctuary, N.Y., 1865. [W. T. B.]

Hehli, Matthias Gottfried, was b. April 30, 1703, at Ebersbach, near Gießen, Würtemberg, and studied at the University of Tübingen (M.A. 1723). He was assistant clergyman in a village near Tübingen when Zinzendorf visited Tübingen in 1733. Thereafter he became a Moravian, was ordained in 1744 a presbyter, and in 1751 was consecrated in London as coadjutor bishop for America. He arrived at Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, Dec. 10, 1753, and in Nov., 1756, removed to Lititz. On account of advancing years he resigned his office in 1781, and d. at Lititz, Dec. 4, 1787 (Koch, v. 348-350). His hymns were written during his stay at Herrnhut, and appeared in the Herrnhut G. B., 1785, and its Appendices. One has passed into English non-Moravian use, viz.:

Goethe, erbert the Majestad. Suppliance. This is No. 1564 in Appendix iii. to the Herrnhut G. B., 1770, in 4 m. of 10 l. In the Brüder G. B., 1770, it is No. 1698, and in the Historische Nachricht thereof 2. ii. is entitled to Hehli, and is, in the analogue to "Rise exalt the Majesty," is entitled, "Lamm und Haupts, das selige gesalt," are included in Knapp's ed., 1845, of Zinzendorf's Geistliche Lieder, p. 210, and dated 1753. "Tr. as:"

Rise, exalt the Majesty, to full, by P. H. Molter, as No. 116, in the Moravian H. Bk., 1742, with an added st. iii. from "Lamm und Haupts, das selige gesalt," by N. L. von Zinzendorf (No. 1899 in Appendix iv. to the Herrnhut G. B., 1738, in 1 m. of 10 l. and this ed. of Knapp, 1845, p. 121, dated May 26, 1738). In the 1789 and later eds. of the Moravian H. Bk. (1830, No. 164), it is greatly altered, and begins, "Rise, exalt our Head and King." Included in Montgomery's Christian Psalms, 1835, and J. S. Larke's ed., 1841. [J. M.]

HEINRICH ERNST, eldest s. of Christian Ernst, Count of Stolberg Wernigerode, was b. at Wernigerode, Dec. 7, 1716. During the lifetime of his father (who was one of the best hymnologists of his day, and founder of the Ducal Library at Wernigerode), he was Canon of Halberstadt. He succeeded to the estates in 1771, and d. at Halberstadt, Oct. 24, 1778.

He contributed four hymns to the Wernigerode G. B., 1735. A selection from his Geistliche Gesänge was pub. at Halle, 1745-52. The rest of his printed hymns appeared in his Befrachtungen der Sonn- und Festtage in Lüneburg, Wernigerode, 1750 (all original) and in the Neue Sammlung geistlicher Lieder, Wernigerode, 1752, which includes his hymns.
Heinrich of Laufenburg was a native of Laufenburg, Aargau, Switzerland. The earliest notice of him is that in 1434 he was dean of the Collegiate Church of St. Maurice at Zoltingen in Aargau. He afterwards held a similar post at Freiburg, in Baden; but in 1443 became a monk in the monastery of the Knights of St. John at Strassburg ("Zum grünen Werde"). He was living there in 1458, but probably died in that year or soon after (Koch, i. 213-214; Allg. Deutsche Bis., xix. 810-813, &c.).

He was the most important and most prolific hymn-writer of the 15th cent., and a number of his productions are of sweetness and acidity. Most of them are in honour of the B.V.M. Many are in metres, while others are written to song tunes, or are recitations, or translations from the Latin. A large number are included by Wackernagel in his second volume, principally taken from a paper of his, the 15th cent., which he found in the town library at Strassburg.

Two of the best of his original hymns are:

1. Ash holier Herre Jesu Christ. Cradle Hymn. This beautiful prayer of a mother for her infant child is given by Wackernagel, ii. p. 534, in E. of St. John, May 6, from the Strassburg MS., where it is entitled "Benedictio pueroer." In his Kleine u. B., 1860, Wackernagel gives it as No. 114 (omitting st. ii.) with the original melody, dating both 1429. The text is also in Hoffmann von Fallersleben, ed. 1861, No. 125. Tr. as:

Ah! Jesu Christ, my Lord most dear. A full and very good tr. by Miss Winkworth in her Christian Songs, &c., 1869, p. 93. The address to the B. V. M. in st. ii.

"Maria, mother Jesu Christ, sit auf deins kindes gos altig blus," is translated as:

"Since to Thy heavenly kingdom, Lord, All things obey Thy lightest word."

Her tr. was adopted with alterations by the Rev. H. White in the Savoy Hymnary (Chapel Royal, Savoy), 1870, No. 35, beginning, "Lord Jesu Christ, our Lord most dear." Instead of taking the very good original melody, Mr. White altered the hymn to 6-8 metre, and omitted st. iv., v. This form has been repeated in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871; Mrs. Brock's Children's H. Bk., 1881, and others.

2. Ich wollte dass ich dahin wär. Eternal Life. A beautiful hymn of spiritual homesickness. Wackernagel, ii. p. 540, includes a version in 13 st. of 2 l. from the Strassburg MS.; and another in 2 st. of 2 l. from a 15th cent. MS. at Berlin. Hoffmann von Fallersleben, 1861, gives the Strassburg text as No. 54; and a form in 9 st. from a ms. at Inziken, near Singauingen, dating 1470-1498, as No. 55. In his Kleine u. B., 1860, Wackernagel gives as No. 74 a slightly altered form of the Strassburg text, along with the original melody. Tr. as "I would I were at last at home," by Miss Winkworth, 1869, p. 92.

Heinrich of Meissen, better known by his title of Frauenlob or Frauenlob [some have regarded Frauenlob as his surname], was b. at Meissen, in Saxony, c. 1250, and educated at the Cathedral school there. Of Humble origin, but the early Minnesingers, he adopted the profession of wandering minstrel as a means of livelihood. After residing for longer or shorter periods at the courts of many South and North German princes, he settled at Mainz about 1311; where he, the most important of the later Minnesingers, is said to have founded the first school of the Mastersingers. He d. at Mainz, Nov. 29, 1318 (Allg. Deutsche Bis., vii. 281-292, &c.). His poems (edited by Ludwig Ettmüller, at Quellenburg, 1433, as his Leichte, Sprüche, Streitgedichte und Lieder) are voluminous, overburdened by a display of learning, and often in intricate and artificial metrical forms. Two of his religious poems have passed into English, viz.:

1. Geregt sei Dank durch alle Welt. Advent. Mützel, 1858, No. 263, quotes this in 9 st. of 4 l. from a defective ed. of Crüger's Pfraxis, c. 1659. In the ed. of 1661 it is No. 85, marked Henrik. Heit. Since then it has appeared in almost all German hymn-books (in the Berlin G. L. B, ed. 1863, No. 132), and takes rank as one of the finest Advent Hymns. Tr. as:

1. All the world exult the Lord, omitting st. vi.

2. Be our God with thanks adored. A tr. of st. i.-iv. by A. T. Russell in his Ps. & Hymns, 1851.

3. Let the earth now praise the Lord. A good tr., omitting st. vii., by Miss Winkworth in her C. B. for England, 1863. Repeated in full in Schaff's Christ in Song, 1869, and, abridged, in
HELMOLD, LUDWIG

University (M.A. 1554) as lecturer till his appointment in 1561 as co-rector of the St. Augustine Gymnasium at Erfurt. When the University was reconstituted in 1563, after the dreadful pestilence in 1563-64, he was appointed dean of the Philosophical Faculty, and in 1569 had the honour of being crowned as a poet by the Emperor Maximilian II., but on account of his determined Protestantism he had to resign in 1570. Returning to Mühlhausen, he was appointed, in 1571, deacon of the St. Mary's Church, and in 1586, pastor of St. Blasius's Church and Superintendent of Mühlhausen. He died at Mühlhausen, April 8, 1588. (Kock, ii. 234-241; Allg. Deutsche Biog., xi. 701-702; Bode, pp. 87-88, &c.)

Helmold wrote many Latin hymns and odes, and numerous German hymns for school use, including a complete metrical version of the Augsburg Confession. His hymns for church use are mostly clear and concise paraphrases of Scripture histories and doctrines, simple and earnest in style. Lists of the works in which his hymns appeared (to the number of some 400) are given by Kock and Bode.

His hymns tr. into English are:

1. Herr Gott, erhalt uns fur und fur. Children. On the value of catechetical instruction as conveyed in Luther's Catechism for Children. 1st pub. in Helmbold's Druckausgebi. Lieder auf die Fest dadurch won. Mühlhausen, 1594 (preface to tenor, March 21, 1585), and thence in Warburg, iv. p. 677, and Müllert, No. 314, in 4 st. of 4 l. In Porta's C. B., ed. 1855, No. 977. The only tr. in C. U. is:

   O God, may we ever pure remain, in full, by Dr. M. Loy, in the Ohio Luth. Hymn., 1890.

2. Nun lasst uns Gott dem Herrn. Grace after Meal. Included in his Geistliche Lieder, 1575, in 8 st. of 4 l. and thence in Warburg, iv. p. 647, and the Unr. L. S., 1851, No. 500. The trs. are: (1) "To God the Lord be rendered," as No. 326 in pt. i. of the Moravian H. Bk., 1754. (2) "Now let us praise with fervour," in the Suppl. to Ger. Psalmody, ed. 1755, p. 75. (3) "To God the Lord be praised," as No. 778 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1789 (1849, No. 1153).

3. Von Gott will ich nicht lassen. Trust in God. Lausmann in Koch, viii. 363-370, thus relates the origin of this the best known hymn by Helmbold:

In 1563, while Helmbold was preacher of the Gymnasium at Erfurt, a pestilence broke out, during which about 400 of the inhabitants died. As all wise could fly from the place, Dr. Paulusius Helbig, Rector of the University (with whom Helmbold had formed a special friendship, and whose wife was grandmother of his eldest daughter), was about to do so, leaving behind him Helmbold and his family. A hymn for-bodings filled the hearts of the parting mothers. To console them and nerve them for parting, Helmbold composed this hymn on Psalm xxxiii. v. 23.

The hymn seems to have been first printed as a broadsheet in 1563-64, and dedicated to Regina, wife of Dr. Helbig, and then in the Hamburgh Christliche Hausepsang, Hamburg, 1569, in 9 st. of 8 l. Warburg, iv. pp. 630-633, gives both these forms and a third in 7 st. from a ms. at Dresden. Included in most subsequent hymn-books, e.g. as No. 680 in the Unr. L. S., 1851. The trs. in C. U. are:

1. From God the Lord my Saviour, by J. C. Jacob, in his Post. Ger., 1722, p. 139, omitting st. vii. (1732, p. 134), repeated slightly altered (and with st. vi., ll. 1-4 from vii., ll. 1-4 of the German) as No. 329 in pt. l. of the Moravian

2. Never be my God forsaken. A good tr. of st. i, ii., iv., by A. T. Russell in his Ps. & Hymns., 1851, No. 229.

Other trs. are: (1) "God to my soul benign," by D. H. Mills, 1838 (1856, No. 119). (2) "From God I will not sever," by Dr. N. L. Frothingham, 1876, p. 202. [J. M.]

Help, Lord, for men of virtue fail. J. Watts. [Ps. 92.] Appeared in his Ps. of David, 1719, in 8 st. of 4 l. In addition to its use in its original form, st. viii., are used as a separate hymn in Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk. 1866, as "Lord, when iniquities abound." [J. J.]

Help, Lord, for the busy foe. C. Wesley. [Prayer during business.] Pub. in his Hymns & Sacred Poems, 1749, vol. ii., in 3 st. of 8 l. (P. Works, 1868–72, vol. v. p. 51.) In the Wes. H. Bk., 1789, No. 287, st. ii., were given as "The praying Spirit breathe," but in the revised ed., 1873, the opening stanza was restored. It is in 8 st. of 4 l. Its 4th line reads "the abridgment form that it is usually known. [J. D.]

Hemans, Felicia Dorothea, née Brownes, was b. in Liverpool, Sep. 25, 1799. In 1808, her father having suffered severe losses in business, removed with his family near to Abergale, N. Wales, where he died not long after. In 1812 she was married to Captain Hemans, who, on retiring from the army some time after, removed to Bronnyla near St. Asaph. Some years after he left his wife and children and proceeded to Italy, where he died. In 1828 Mrs. Hemans returned to Waverley, near Liverpool, and in 1831 to Dublin, where she died May 16, 1835, and was buried in St. Ann's Church, Dawson Street, in that city. From 1808, when at 15 she pub. Poems, to 1834, when her Scenes & Hymns of Life appeared, she produced a great number of poems and other works, including:

(1) The Domestic Affections and Other Poems, 1812;
(2) The Spirit, 1826;
(3) The Spirit of the Pastoral, 1827;
(4) Prayer of Sion, 1833;
(5) The Poems of a Poet, 1834;
(6) The Poems of the Occasion of the Revival of the Christian Church, 1835 (British edition, 1836; and American ed. 1836);
(7) The Poems of the Occasion of the Revival of the Christian Church, 1835 (British edition, 1836; and American ed. 1836);
(8) Hymns for Childhood, 1837 (English edition, 1838; first pub. in America in 1836);
(9) The Poems of the Occasion of the Revival of the Christian Church, 1835 (British edition, 1836; and American ed. 1836), 1836 (British edition, 1836; and American ed. 1836);
(10) Songs of the Affections, 1838;
(11) Scenes and Hymns of Life (dedicated to the poet Wordsworth), 1834. Then appeared (12) The Poems of Mrs. Hemans; with a Memoir of her Life by her friend (Mrs. Hughes), Edinburgh. W. Blackwood & Sons, 1828, 7 vols. Her Poems were collected and published by Blackwood in 1849, and again as one of the Chantry Classics, 1866.

Three distinct ideas pervade Mrs. Hemans's poetry, the Fatherhood of God, Heaven as our home, and mutual recognition when there. The work of the Abolitionist has a very subordinate place; and the Holy Spirit is scarcely recognised. The rhythm, even in her most popular pieces, is often disappointing, and a deep tone of sadness prevails most of her work. The gloom of disappointment and the traces of shadowed memories run like black threads through the web and woof of her productions. As a writer of hymns she holds a subordinate place. The best are "Answer me, burning stars of light," "Calm on the bosom of thy God," "Come to the land of peace," and "Fear was within the tossing bark." [J. D.]

Mrs. Hemans's hymns which have come into C. U. include:

1. Answer me, burning stars of light. Trust in God. Written after the death of a sister-in-law, and pub. in her Records of Woman, 1826, p. 242, in 4 st. of 1 l. (P. Works, 1829, vol. ii. p. 144.)

2. Calm on the bosom of thy God. Death and Burial. This hymn appears in the closing scene of her dramatic poem, The Siege of Valencia, 1824, p. 243, in 6 st. of 4 l. (P. Works, 1829, vol. iii. p. 320.) It is to be sung over the bier of Amaelia, daughter of Tennessee, the Governor of Pennsylvania, during the final struggle of the siege. Mrs. Hemans subsequently added a third stanza ("Lone are the paths, and sad the bowers,") and in the form it is published separately as "A Hymn" in her Works, vol. iv. p. 330. It is one of the best known of her hymns.

3. Child, amidst the flowers at play. Hymn of Prayer. This is given in her P. Works, 1829, vol. ii. p. 25, amongst the "Miscellaneous Pieces," in 3 st. of 8 l., as a hymn for The Hymn of Prayer, Dr. Martineau in his Hymns, 1829, p. 22.

7. Father! that in the olive shade. Gethsemane. Written at the death-bed of her mother in Jan., 1827, and pub. in her Hymns for Childhood, in 4 st. of 4 l., as a Hymn by the sick-bed of a Mother. (P. Works, 1829, vol. vi. p. 141.) Sometimes as "O Thou, Who in the olive shade,"

8. Father, Who art on high. Prayer. This is part of her "Cathedral Hymn," pub. in her Scenes and Hymns of Life, 1834. (P. Works, 1839, vol. ii. p. 142.)

9. Fear was within the tossing bark. Sailing the Tempest. This hymn appeared in her Hymns for Childhood, 1827; her P. Works, N. Y., 1828, ii. p. 124; and her Works, 1839, vol. iv. p. 326.

10. He kneels, the Saviour kneels and prayed. Gethsemane. This hymn appeared in The Annual (an annual) in 1825, and pub. in her P. Works, N. Y., 1828, ii. p. 125. It is also introduced in her dramatic poem, The English Martyrs: a Scene of the Days of Queen Mary, pub. in her Scenes and Hymns of Life, 1834, p. 16. A faithful couple are here described as at death's door, but are allowed a short intercourse before execution. They employ in prayer the words and singing of this hymn, which is based upon the sacred scene in Gethsemane. "The English Martyrs" is the opening piece of the Scenes and Hymns of Life, 1834. (P. Works, vii. p. 130.)

12. Leaves have their time to fall. The Hour of Death. Pub. in her P. Works, N. Y., 1828, ii. p. 114, and in her Poetical Publications, 2nd ed., 1839, p. 276, in 10 st. of 4 l. (P. Works, 1829, iv. p. 177.) It is usually given in an abbreviated form.

13. Lovingly and solemnly, be Thy children's cry to Thee. Burial. This hymn, in 3 st. of 4 l. forms the closing portion of her poem on The Funeral Day of Sir Walter Scott. (He died Sep. 21, 1832.) The poem was given in her Scenes and Hymns of Life, 1834, p. 89. (P. Works, vii. p. 128.) In an abbreviated form this funeral hymn is in extenso used in Great Britain and America, and is found in more hymn-books than all the rest of Mrs. Hemans's hymns put together.

14. No cloud obscures the summer's sky. The life. Appeared in her Hymns for Childhood, in 8 st. of 4 l. and entitled "The Stars." (P. Works, 1829, iv. p. 253.) It is usually given in an abbreviated form, beginning with st. ii., "Child of the earth, this is thy glory,"

15. Now autumn strews on every plain. Harvest. One of her juvenile pieces, pub. in her Poems, Liverpool, 1838, p. 94, as "A Harvest Hymn.

17. Praise ye the Lord on every height. Ps. 68:3. Pub. in her Hymns for Christian, in 7 st. of 4 l. (Works, 1859, iv. p. 264.)

20. The Church of our fathers so dear to our souls. The Holy Church. This hymn has not been traced to date. See, in E. G. & G., says 1834.

Hence, vain intruding world, depart. Anne Steele. [Retirement and Reflection.] 1st pub. in her Poems on Subjects chiefly Devotional. 1760, vol. i. p. 124, in 8 st. of 4 l., again in the new ed., 1780; and again in Seygwick’s reprint of her Hymns, 1863.

In its full form it is not in C. U., but an abridged form beginning with st. iv., “Eternity is just at hand,” appeared in the 2nd ed. of Trigalda’s Ps. & Hymns, 1797, No. 410, and is repeated in several modern collections; but mainly in America.

Henley, John, b. at Torquay, March 18, 1800; engaged for some years in circuit work as a Wesleyan minister; and d. at Weymouth, May 2, 1842. His well-known and popular children’s hymn for Palm Sunday, “Children of Jerusalem,” appeared in the Wes. S. School Tune Bk., in J. Curwen’s Hymns & Chants, 1844, and in many modern collections for children. Orig. text in the Meth. S. S. H. Bk., 1879.

Henry, Matthew, an eminent Nonconformist divine and commentator, was b. in Flintshire, Oct. 18, 1862, and educated for the Bar. Leaving his legal studies he became a Dissenting minister at Chester, where he resided for many years, and subsequently removed to Hackney. He d. whilst travelling between Chester and London, June 22, 1713. His Exposition of the Old and New Testament is well known. His connection with Hymnology lay in his having published a volume of Family Hymns in 1695. (See English Hymney, Early, vii. 2.)

Hensel, Luise, dau. of J. J. L. Hensel, Lutheran pastor at Linum, near Erfurt, Brandenburg, was b. at Linum, March 30, 1798. Though confirmed as a Lutheran in her fifteenth year, she gradually approximated to Roman Catholicism, and was formally received into that communion, Dec. 7, 1818. During the remaining years of her life, she devoted herself mainly to the education of the young and the care of the sick. In 1874 she entered the Union of Daughters of Christian Love at Paderborn, and d. at Paderborn, Dec. 18, 1876. (O. Kroh, 1879, pp. 204–211; Allg. Deutsche Biog., xii. 1–3, &c.) Her best hymns were written before she was 23, and in proportion as she became an Ultranuntaine the poetical value of her productions declined. Her finest productions are distinguished by childlike simplicity, humility, resignation, and deep Christian love. They have won wide acceptance in Germany. The first two of those noted may be regarded as nursery classics.

A number of her hymns came into Clements’ Brethren’s hands as early as 1816, and were by mistake included as his in his posthumous works. A few were printed in F. Forster’s Säuglingsfreund, 1816, and a good many more in M. Dippel’s Der heilige Geist, Berlin, 1839. A complete ed. of her hymns was pub. by Professor C. Schlotter of Münster as her Lieder at Paderborn, 1878 (4th ed., 1879).

i. Hymns in English C. U.

1. Immer muss ich wieder lesen. [Holy Scripture.] This beautiful children’s hymn on the Life of Christ as narrated in the Gospels, appeared in Dippel’s, 1829, p. 263, in 7 st. of 4 l. (entitled “On the reading of Holy Scripture ”); and in her Lieder, 1878, is dated Berlin, 1815. It is repeated in Klop’s Er. L. S., 1837, the Württemberg G. R., 1842, &c. Tr. as:

Ever would I fain be reading. A good and full tr. by Miss Winkworth in her Lyra G. R., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 24. It has been included in full in Ps. & Hym. at Bedford, 1859; Kenedy, 1863; Bk. of Praise for Children, 1881; and in America in Hattfield’s Church H. Bk., 1872, and others. In some collections it is abridged; and in the Unitarian South Place Collection, Lond., 1875, it begins, “Ever find I joy in reading.”

Other trs. are:

ii. Kinder bin ich, geh’ zur Ruhe. [Evening.] This beautiful child’s evening prayer, the most popular of all her hymns, appeared in Dippel’s, 1829, p. 270, in 4 st. of 4 l. In her Lieder, 1870, p. 54, dated Berlin, Autumn, 1816. Included in the Un. L. S., 1851, No. 528. Tr. as:

1. Now that over each weary head. A free tr. of st. i.–iii. as No. 22 in C. H. Bateman’s Children’s Hymns, 1872.

3. Specky now I go to rest. A good tr. of st. i.–iii. by E. Cronenwett as No. 324 in the Ohio Luth. Hymn., 1880.

Other trs. are:

ii. Hymns not in English C. U.

iv. O Sonne, wenn du deinem Lichte. [Love to Christ.] In Dippel’s, 1829, p. 257, in 8 st., and in her Lieder, 1870, p. 126, dated Sondermühl, 1823. Tr. as “O Sun, if thy light a ray,” in J. D. Burns’s Memoriam and Remains, 1849, p. 239.

vi. Was verlangt du, warum bangst du. [Peace and Consolation.] In Dippel’s, 1829, p. 261, in 8 st.,
HENSLEY, LEWIS

Hensley, Lewis, M.A., b. May 28, 1838, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was graduated as Senior Wrangler, and first Smith's Prizeman. From 1846 to 1852 he was a Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College. Taking Holy Orders in 1851, he held the cure of the Curacy of Upton-with-Chadley, Bucks; the Vicarage of Ilpoldishall, Great Wymondly, Hertfordshire, and the living of Hitchen, in the same county; Rylstone, 1867. His works include Household Devotions; Shorter Household Devotions, &c.

Herberger, Valerius, a. of Martin Her- was, father and poet at Poen, who was b. at Fransfort, April 21, 1502. He taught theology at the University of Frankfort a. Oder and Leipzig, and became in 1584 Professor of the lower classes in the school of St. Mary's Church, Fransfort, and in 1599 rector of the church but in 1601 he his family and moved toolland, for the sake of the few Hunsen Catholicks in the place. Out of two made a meeting-place, to which, as the first of the "Kripplein Churck," was given. N. of Poen, 1602.

Herber in Allg. Deutsche Biogr., xii. 29-31, &c.

Herberger's two sets of sermons, the Evangelische Dogmatisches, his "Kripplein Churck," and the famous "Epotheologische Herpetischer," his "Kripplein Churck," and his "Epotheologische Herpetischer," are remarkable for their ability, but in his later days he is only remembered in the church of Poen. As a favorite of his people, to 1603, during the troubles of the early part of the Thirty Years' War.

Herberger wrote only a few hymns, and of these the best known is:—

Walter ich dir selig.

For the Dying. 1st pub. on a broadsheet entitled:

"A dorn prayer with which the Evangelical citizens of the heart read in the Church of the Lord in which the heart of the author, while he meditated on the subject of death, is composed by the Rev. W. Herberger. Published at Fransfort, 1614."

The hymn was in the "Mitteil," 1858, No. 6, "the title of the hymn itself;—

He gave this (Valentia) of Valerius Herberger that he might be buried there with the three engraved in the inscription: 318. He was buried at Fransfort, but not dead. The hymn is an acrostic on his name formed by the beginnings of the stanzas—Vale (i.), Vale (ii), u (iii.); s (iv.); r (v.); it is one of the finest German hymns for the dying. It speedily passed into the hymn-books, and is still a favourite. In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 152. Sometimes given beginning "A new Saint will take the Name of Lewisohn will live.

The beautiful melody which accompanied the hymn in the 16th is by Herberger's son, Heinrich Teichroth, and is now well known in England, being included, e.g., in H. A. M., in St. Theophyl.

The trs. in C. U. are:

1. O world so vain, I leave thee, a good fr., omitting st. iv., by A. T. Russell, as No. 248 in his Ps. & Hym., 1851.

2. Farewell to thy spirit biddeth, in the Family Treasury, 1874, p. 496. [J. J.]

Hans, Daniel, for many years a Congregational Minister at Sudbury, Suffolk (b. 1751, d. Aug. 29, 1833), pub.:—

"Hymns & Poems, Devotional and Sentimental, for the Christian Church in England, who are longing to know the doctrine of God, and who love Evangelical Truths. These were pub. in 3 vols. (1, 1812; 2, 1831; 3, 1837). Two hymns and poems are very different in quality, and strongly Calvinistic in doctrine." (Singers & Songs, by J. Miller, 1849.)

HERBERT, GEORGE, M.A., the fifth s. of Richard Herbert and Margaret, the daughter of Sir Richard Newport, was b. at his father's seat, Montgomery Castle, April 3, 1598. He was educated at Westminster School, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, graduating M.A. in 1611. On March 15, 1615, he became Mayor Fellow of the College, M.A. the same year, and in 1619 Ordained for the University. Favoured by James I., intimate friend of Lord Bacon, Bishop Andrews, and other men of influence, and encouraged in other ways, his hopes of Court preferment were somewhat bright until they were dispelled by the deaths of the Duke of Richmond, the Marquis of Hamilton, and then of King James himself. Retiring into Kent, he formed the resolution of taking Holy Orders. He was appointed by the Bishop of Lincoln to the Prebend of Leighton-Eccles, and to the living of Leighton-Bromswold, Hunts, July 15, 1626. He remained until 1629, when an attack ofague obliged him to remove to his brother's house at Woodford, Essex. Not improving in health, he removed to Bourn, in Hertfordshire, and then as Rector of Bemerton, to which he was inducted, April 26, 1630, where he d. Feb. 1632. The entry in the register of Bemerton is "Mr. George Herbert, b.p. of Foulsthe and Bemerton, was buried 3 day of March 1632."

His life, by Isaac Walton, is well known; another Memoir, by Barnaby Oly, is forgotten. Herbert's prose work, Prison to the Temple, appeared several years after his death: but The Temple, by which he is best known, he delivered to Nicholas Ferrar (q.v.), about three weeks before his death, and authorized him to publish it if he thought fit. This was done in 1633.
HERBERT, PETRUS

The work became popular, and the 13th ed. was issued in 1769. It is meditative rather than hymnic in character, and was never intended for use in public worship. In 1697 a selection from The Temple appears under the title Select Hymns Taken out of Mr. Herbert's Temple that entered into The Common Pray'me To Be Sung in The Temples ordinarily said in Churches. London, Parkhurst, 1697. In 1739, J. & C. Wesley made a much more successful attempt to introduce his hymns into public worship by inserting over 40 in a much-altered form in their Hymns & Sacred Poems. As some few of these came into their collection of Pr. & Hymn, 1744, revised 1743, they were long sung by the Methodists, but do not now form part of the Wes. H. Bk. No further attempt seems to have been made to use the Temple poems as hymns until 1853, when some altered and revised by G. Rawson were given in the Leeds H. Bk. of that year. From that time onward more attention was paid to Herbert alike by Churton, 1854, and Nunns, and some of his hymns are now widely accepted. Many editions of his works have been published, the most popular being that of Robert Aris Wilmott, Lond., Geo. Routledge & Son, 1857; but Dr. Grosart's privately printed edition issued in his Fuller Worthies Library in 1874, in three volumes, is not only the most complete and correct but included also his psalms not before reprinted, and several poems from a ms. in the Williams Library, and not before published. The Temple has also been published in facsimile by Elliott Stock, 1854, with preface by Dr. Grosart; and in ordinary type, 1892, by Wells Gardner, with preface by J. A. Shorthouse. [Eng. Hymnody. Early, § vii.]

The quaintness of Herbert's lyrics and the peculiarity of several of their metres have been against their adoption for congregational purposes. The best known are: "Let all the world in every corner sing"; "My stock lies dead, and no increase"; "Throw away Thy rod"; "Sweet day, so cool, so calm"; and "Teach me, my God, and King." [W. T. B.]

Herbert, Petrus, seems to have been a native of or resident at Fulnek in Moravia. He was ordained priest of the Brethren's Unity in 1562, became a member of the Select Council in 1567, and was latterly Consensor of the Unity. By the Unity he was entrusted with many important missions. He was sent as a deputy to confer with Calvin: and again in 1562 to arrange with Duke Christoph of Württemberg for the education at Tübingen of young men from the Bohemian Brethren. He was also one of the deputies sent to Vienna to present the revised form of the Brethren's Confession of Faith to the Emperor Maximilian II. in 1561, and in 1566 to present their new German Hymn Book. He d. at Ebenhausen in 1571 (Koch, ii. 114, Altd. Deutsche Bsp., xii. 263-264, &c.). Herbert was one of the principal compilers of the enlarged ed. of the Brethren's German H. Bk. pub. in 1566 as their Kirchengesang, and contributed to it some 90 hymns. In the ed. of 1639 there are 500 hymns marked as his. His hymns are distinguished by simplicity and beauty of style. A number are trs. from the Bohemian. [See Bohemian Hymnody: Augustan J., and Cervenka.]

His hymns tr. in English include:—

i. Die Nacht ist kommen dein wir ruhen sollen: [Wacher.] Written probably under the pressure of persecution and oppression. In the G. B., 1566, as above, in 5 st. of 7 l. (the last st. being a versification of the Lord's Prayer), and thence in Wackernagel, iv. p. 442, and the Univ. L. S. 1851, No. 515. In J. H. Schein's Cantional, 1627, it appears as No. 99, with an additional st. not by Herbert, which reads:—

"Denn wir sehr seheucht haben,
Als wir, Herr, dein Himmel dröhen,
Du verliert geben Aufs auff die deinen,
Dich recht meynen."

This st. is included as st. v. in the version in Bunsen's Versuch, 1833, No. 43. Trs. as:—

1. The night is come, wherein at last we rest, in full from Bunsen by Miss Winkworth in her Lyra Eccl., 2nd ser., 1858, p. 77, repeated as No. 105 in R. Minton Taylor's Coll., 1872.

2. Now God be with us, for the night is closing, a good tr. from Bunsen, in the original metre, by Miss Winkworth, as No. 170 in her C. B. for England, 1863, and repeated in her Christian Songs of Germany, 1869, p. 139. This version has been included in various recent collections, though generally abridged or altered, as in the Hymnary, 1872; Thring's Coll., 1882, and in America in the Sing. Hym., 1881.

In Laudem Domini, N. Y., 1884, it is in two parts (Nos. 209-210), the second beginning, "Father, Thy name be praised, Thy kingdom given." This is st. vi. with an added doxology, as in the Hymnary, 1872.

Other trs. are:—

(1) "The night comes space," as No. 293 in pt. i. of the Moravian H. Bk., 1566. (2) "To evening's shades to sleep invite," by H. J. Braddock, 1843, p. 44. (3) O Christenmensch, merk wie sieh' bist. [Faith.] 1566, as above, in 18 st. of 4 l., repeated in Wackernagel, iv. p. 453. In Bunsen's Versuch, 1833, No. 390 (Allg. G. B., 1846, No. 130), the hymn begins with st. iii., altered to "Der Glaub' ist ein lebend' Kraft," and consists of st. iv., v., vii., xi., xii., xvi., xviii. Bunsen calls it "a noble confession of the true Christian faith." Trs. as:—

Faith is a living power from heaven. A good tr. from Bunsen by Miss Winkworth in her Lyra Eccl., 2nd ser., 1858, p. 160, and thence in her C. B. for England, 1863. It is repeated, more or less altered and abridged, in Kennedy, 1867; and in America in the Presh. Hym., 1874, Baptist Service of Song, 1871, &c.

ii. Hymna not in English C. U.:—

iii. Die Herren Wort bleibt in Ewigkeit. [Holy Scripture.] 1566, as above, in 25 st., and in Wackernagel, iv. p. 432. Tr. as "God's holy Word, which ne'er shall cease," by J. Sweetner, as No. 3 in the Moravian H. Bk. 1789 (1849, No. 2).

v. Lust was mit lust und Freud aus Glänen singen. [Eternal Life.] A fine hymn on the joys of heaven. 1566, as above, 12 st., and in Wackernagel, iv. p. 447, Tr. as "In faith we sing this song of thankfulness," by Mrs. Bunsen, 1869, p. 54.

Besides the above a number of hymns by Herbert (all of which appeared in the Kirchengesang, 1566, and are included in Wackernagel's vol. iv.) were trs. in pt. i. of the Moravian H. Bk., 1754. The numbers in the 1754 are 166, 259, 263, 264, 265, 266, 274, 277, 281, 287, and 284.

Here at Thy Cross, my dying God.

I. Watts. [Salvation in the Cross.] 1st pub. in his Hym. & S. Songs, 1708, Bk. ii., No. 4, in 5 st. of 4 l. It is in C. U. in its original form, and as: "Here at Thy Cross, my dying Lord": "Here at Thy Cross, incarnate God": and HERE, O MY LORD, I SEE

"Here at Thy Cross, my Saviour God," in various American hymn-books, the aim of these alterations being to remove the objection that might be made to the clause my dying God, in the opening line.

[J. J.]

HERE, O my Lord, I see Thee face to face, H. Bonar. [Holy Communion.] Dr. H. Bonar's elder brother, Dr. John James Bonar, of St. Andrew's Free Church, Greenock, is wont after each Communion, to print a memorandum of the various services, and a suitable hymn. After the Communion on the Sunday of October, 1855, he asked his brother, Dr. H. Bonar, to furnish a hymn, and in the course of a few days two received this hymn (possibly composed before), and it was then printed, and was the commencement, for the first time, of the 1857 in Hymns of Faith and Hope, 1st series, in 10 st. of 4. L. and headed, "This do in remembrance of me." In addition to being a more expensive use in its original, or in an abridged but unaltered form, it is also given as:

1. Here would I, Lord, behold Thee face to face,

2. Plate 37, Lord, by faith I see Thee face to face, in

T. 3. Here, Lord, by faith I see Thee face to face, in

4. And now we rise, the symbols disappear. Composed, &c., x. in the American Bapt. Service of 1871.

In literary merit, earnestness, pathos, and Dr. Bonar's compositions.

[H. M.]

Hermann, Nicolaus, is always associated with Joachimsthal in Bohemia, just over the mountains from Saxony. The town was not of importance till the mines began to be extensively worked about 1516. Whether Hermann was a native of this place is not known, but he was apparently there in 1518, and was certainly in office there in 1524. For many years he held the post of Master in the Latin School, and Cantor or Organist and Choir-master in the church. Towards the end of his life he suffered greatly from gout, and had to resign his post as Cantor, number of years before his death. He d. at Joachimsthal, Mar 1561. (Koch, i. 300-308; Allg. Deutche Bldg., xlii. 180-188, &c.)

He was a great friend and helper of J. Mathesius (q.v.) (who in 1532 became rector of the school, but in 1541 diocesan, and in 1546 pastor of the church), and it was said that whenever Mathesius preached specially good sermon Hermann straight-way embellished his leading ideas in a hymn. His hymns, however, were not primarily written for use in church, but were intended for the boys and girls in the school, to supplement profane songs in the mouths of the young men and women, or for the daily life of the "home-fathers and house-mothers" in Joachimsthal, at home, and in their work in the mines. He is a poet of the people, homely, earnest, and picturesque in style; by his native reminding us of Hans Sachs. He was an ardent lover of music and a very good organist. The chorales which he published with his hymns are apparently all of his own composition, and are among the best of the Reformaton period.

Many of Hermann's hymns soon passed into church use in Germany, and a number are found in almost all books in present use. About 100 in all, they appeared principally in:

(1) Die Sammlung Evangelia über das ganze Jahr, in

(2) Das Liederbuch der evangelischen Gemeinschaft, &c. Wittenberg, 1586, in 7 st. of 4 L. and 1 st. of 8 L. This was repeated in the Appendix to H. A. & M., 1868, with st. viii. reduced to 6 L.; and in the Appendix to the H. Noted, 1882, and others in its original form.

One of Herman's hymns is noted under "Wenn mein Ständlein vorhanden ist." The others which have passed into English are:

1. Beschwer uns, Herr, das täglichen Brot, Grace before Meat, 1582, as above, and hence in

2. Thou art our Father and our God. This, by

P. H. Moltner, a fr. of the Last, as No. 180 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1789 (1849, No. 226, st. v.).

Herman, Clara Frances, nee Ibotson, dau. of W. H. Ibotson, sometime Vicar of Edwinstowe, Notts, was b. at Addlestone, Surrey, Oct. 19, 1838, and married Sept. 1858, to the Rev. W. D. Herman, one of the H. M. Inspectors of Schools. Mrs. Herman has composed more than 150 hymns, a great proportion of which are for children, and also some trs. from the Latin. Her publications include:

In addition to these original publications Mrs. Herman contributed hymns to the Church Times, to various magazines, and to

1. In her Child's Book of Praise, 1873.
2. In Holy Jesus, we adore Thee, 1876.
3. In How can we serve Thee, Lord, for Choristers, 1874.
5. In Lord, I have esteemed, but pardon me, 1876.
6. In Lord, Who throughout these forty days, Lent, 1878.
7. In Hymns for the Children of the Church, 1878.

Mrs. Herman's hymns in C. U. appeared as follows:

1. In her Child's Book of Praise, 1873.
2. In Holy Jesus, we adore Thee, 1876.
3. In How can we serve Thee, Lord, for Choristers, 1874.
5. In Lord, I have esteemed, but pardon me, 1876.
6. In Lord, Who throughout these forty days, Lent, 1878.
7. In Hymns for the Children of the Church, 1878.

v. In her Appendiz to The Child's Book of Praise, 1874, and Hymn for Little Ones, 1884.

Hosannah, they were crying. Advent.

iii. In her Christmas Carol, 1875.
iv. In Angels singing, Church bells ringing. Christmas Carol.

v. In Hymns for the Children of the Church, 1878.

Herrick, Robert, s. of Nicholas Herrick, goldsmith in Cheapside, London, was b. in London in 1591, and educated at St. John's College, and Trinity Hall, Cambridge. Taking Holy Orders in 1629, he was presented to the living of Dean-Prior, Devon. During Cromwell's Government he was ejected, but was reinstated at the Restoration. He d. in 1674.
His Noble Numbers was pub. in 1647; and his Hesperides, or the Works bothe Humane and Divine, of Robert Herrick, in 1648. Various collections have followed, including that by Dr.
Gr. umart, in 3 vols., in his Early English Poets, 1689. A Selection, with Memoir by Dr. Nott, was also published at Bristol, 1810; and another Selection, by F. T. Palgrave, in the Golden Treasury Series, 1877. Herrick's Hesperides is also included in the Universal Library Series, edited by H. Morley, 1884. [English Hymnody, Early, Herrmann, Johann Gottfried, D.D., s.

of Gottfried Herrmann, pastor at Altlesnitz, better Biflex, Saxony, was b. at Altlesnitz, Oct. 12, 1707. After studying at the University of Leipzig (m.a. in 1731), he was appointed in 1731 diocesan at Ratis, near Neustadt on the Ora; in 1734 diocesan at Pegau, near Leipzig; in 1738 superintendent at Plauen;
and in 1746 chief Court preacher at Dresden, and oberconsistorialth. He d. at Dresden, July 30, 1791 (Koch, v. 503-505). The only hymn by him tr. into English appeared in the Privilegierte neue und vollständige Voigtlländische Gesang Buch, Plauen, 1742, which he directed while Superintendent at Plauen. It is:

in the 1st Ser. of her Lyra Ger., 1855, p. 121.
her tr. of ll. 1-4 of st. v., xii., xiii., beginning
"Ah! happy hours! where'er upsprings," with a 5th st. not from Herrmann, added to complete the hymn, were included as No. 464 in the Amer.
Sabbath H. Bk., 1858. Another arrangement, consisting of ll. 1-4 of st. ii.-iv., vii., xii., appeared as No. 233 in the Sabbath H. Bk., 1858, and is repeated in several American collections.
It begins: "Ere earth's foundations yet were where his father, G. A. Hermanschmidt, was from 1673-1702 diaconus, and 1702-1714 Town preacher. He entered the University of Aldorf in 1696 (M.A. 1698), and in the autumn of 1698 went to Halle. In the spring of 1702 he became assistant to his father, and in July, 1702, Helfer at the Town church. In 1712 he became superintendent, court preacher and consistorial reader, and in the same year graduated D.P. at Halle. He was finally, in 1715, appointed professor of theology at Halle, and in 1716 also sub-director of the orphanage and the Paedagogium there. He d. at Halle, Feb. 5, 1723 (Kock, iv. 319-354, 569, &c.). He was one of the best hymn-writers of the older Pietistic school. His hymns are Scriptural, and mirror his inner life, but do not possess much poetic force. They were almost all written during his first residence at Halle, 1698-1702, and appeared mostly in Freylinghausen's Geistreiche G. B., 1704. Three have passed into English, viz.:

1. Gott wille machen, dass die Sache [Trust in God].
2. Ihre treuere Hulfe [Their true help].
3. Und auch dann wird er zu sich selbst [And also when he returns to himself].

The two remaining hymns (iii., iv.) are annotated under Various.

Hertzog, Johann Friedrich, LL.D., D.D., of Johann Hertzog, diaconus of the Church of the Holy Cross, in Dresden, was b. at Dresden, June 6, 1647. After the completion of his legal studies at the University of Wittenberg, he was, from 1671 to 1674, tutor to the sons of General-Lieutenant von Armin. In 1674 he returned to Dresden to practice as an advocate, where he d. March 21, 1689 (Koch, ii. 361-63; Alte Deutsche Biographie, xii. 251). The only hymn by him which has been tr. into English is:

Nun sich der Tag geendet hat, Und keine Sonn mehr scheint. [Evening.]

Fischer, ii. 129, says that, according to the testimony of Hertzog's brother, this hymn was written one evening in 1670 while the author was still a student at Wittenberg. St. i. and the melody appear as No. 8 in the 1 Zehn of A. P. Krieger's Neue Arien. In 6 Zehn, Dresden, 1667 [Leipzig Town Library].

Hertzog seems to have adopted this st. and added 7 others, the form in 8 st. being found in Lupinus's Anleitung zum Singen (Christus Mundus, Wiesbaden, 1692, p. 123, in 9 st. included as No. 652). In Freylinghausen's Geistreiche G. B., 1714, with a 10th st., which, according to Fischer, first appeared in the Leipzig, i. 1693. Also in the Ueber L. S., 1851, No. 380. It speedily became popular, was often imitated, and still holds its place as one of the best German evening hymns. The tra. in C. U. are:

1. And now another day is gone. A good tr. omitting st. vii., by J. C. Jacobi in his Paul. Gen., 1722, p. 111 (ed. 1732, p. 174, altered). St. vii., "With cheerful heart I close my eyes, while parallel with the German is really st. iv. of Watts's "And now another day is gone," in his Divine and Moral Songs. HEU! HEU! MALA MUNDI VITA

[Advent.] This poem was 1st pub. at length by E. Levis in his Anecdotata Sacra, Turin, 1789, p. 119, and ascribed to the Franciscan Peter Gonella, of Tortona. A slightly fuller form in 384 lines, beginning, "Heu! Heu! mala mundi vita," was pub. by E. du Meril in his Poésies Populaires Latines du Moyen Age, Paris, 1847, p. 108, from a ms. of the 13th cent. in the National Library at Paris. In 1849 Archbishop Trench pub. a portion of the poem in his Sacred Latin Poetry, beginning "Eheu! Eheu! mala mundi vita," with the following note:

"The ms. is of the twelfth century, and the poem itself can scarcely be of an earlier date. Three or four stanzas of it had already got abroad. Thus two are quoted (ibid. LXXI. 17; and see Leyser, Hist. Poen. Med. Ari., p. 423). The attribution of these fragments of the poem, and thus implicitly of the whole, to St. Bernard, rests on no authority whatever: it is merely a part of that general ascription to him of any poems of merit belonging to that period, whereas the authorship was uncertain."

Mone, Nos. 298, 299, included it in two parts (i. "Heu! Heu! mala mundi vita," ii. "Cum revolve tota corda"). and held that it was made up of two poems, though possibly by the same Italian author. The first part (ll. 1-200) he gives from a Reichenau ms. of the 14th cent., &c.; and the second part (ll. 201-384) from a ms. of the 13th cent. at Trier, &c. His notes and renderings are extensive. In Daniel, iv. p. 194, the text of both parts is quoted from Mone. It is also in a ms. of the 11th cent. at Bern (No. 424).

The full text of this poem has not been rendered into English. The following are citations therefrom:

vii. Hör dich noch wieder, ihr Töne des Frühlings erklingen. Spring. This noble hymn was written in March, 1822 (1821), after many troublous days and nights, during a journey from the snow-capped heights of Hirzel to the neighbouring Lake of Zug, where Spring had already begun. (Arch., v., 398.) 1st pub. in Knapp’s Christoterpe, 1836, p. 234, in 21 st., entitled “Hymn of Praise. In early spring amid the first songs of the birds.” In the hymnal the second part, “Lamb, sel, und getötet, und Löwen, der reißend geworden” (st.
4.), is given as Ascensiontide. The tr. are: (1) Voices of Spring, with what goodness I hear again,” by Miss Borthwick, in H. L. L., 1862, p. 8. (2) Lamb, that hast suffered, and Lion of Judah victorious,” by Dr. H. Harbaugh, in the German Reformation Church,

Song. Written 1835, and 1st pub. in Knapp’s Christoterpe, 1835, p. 244, in 5 st.
Tr. as “A few more conflicts, toils, and trials,” by Miss Borthwick, 1875.

iv. O Jesus Christ, mein Leben. Love to Christ.
Written as No. 182 in Dr. Zürcher’s Deutsches O. G., 1863, in 5 st.
Weller, in his Das Zürcher Gesangbuch, Zürich, 1792, p. 257, quotes from a letter of the author, by which it appears that about the year 1864, he composed a hymn to the fine old melody, “Es ist ein’ uns entsprungen.” She came upon No. 182 in Knapp’s Er. L. S., 1837. “Jesus, du mein Leben,” recast, and adapted it to the required metres. As the hymn is thus only partly original, she did not include it in her published works. Tr. as "O Christ, my Life, my Saviour," by Miss Borthwick, 1875, p. 69.

Besides the above, many pieces have been tr. by Miss Borthwick, Miss Burlingham, Rev. J. Kelly and others. Being poems rather than hymns, they are omitted from this list.

Exeter Cathedral; and another of Ely. His original hymns and translations appeared in his Verses by a Country Curate, 1859. From this work the following hymns have come into C. U.:

1. In the Name of God the Father. H. Communion. The 2nd stanza begins, "Lo! in wondrous expectation," and the 3rd, "Here in figure represented."

There are also two trs. in H. A. & M. "Jesus, our Lenten fast to Thee," and "O Thou Who dost to man accord," &c. His Verses contain several good hymns in addition to those named. In addition he contributed a few hymns (all signed by him) to the Lyra Messianica, 1864; and "Jesus, Thy presence we adore" (H. Communion) to The Eucharistic Hymnal, 1877.

Hey, Johann Wilhelm, a. of H. A. Hey, pastor at Leina, near Gotta, was b. at Leina, March 26, 1789. He studied at the Universities of Jena and Göttingen, became in 1811 licentiate in theology, and, after varied tutorial work, was appointed in 1818 pastor at Töettelstädt, near Gotta. In 1827 he became curate preacher at Gotta, where his preaching attracted large audiences, but being regarded as a Pietist, was in 1832 suspended and transferred to Ichternhausen. He d. at Ichternhausen, May 19, 1854 (Koch, vii. 262-265: Allg. Deutsche Biog., xii. 344-345; ms. from Pfarrer Ortol of Leina).

Hey's poems were mostly written for children. The best known are his Lieder für Kinder, with illustrations by Otto Speckter, of which the 5th ed. appeared at Hamburg, 1833, the second 60 in 1837. Since then they have passed through a large number of editions in Germany, and have been several times tr. into English. At the end of each series is a "Serious Appendix," containing religious and moral songs. The whole of these two Appendices have been tr. into English as Hymns and Poems for Little Children. Translated from the German. London, 1853. Also in the Fifty Pindars, 1857, and Other Fifty Pindars, 1869, tr. by Sophie Klingemann, and pub. by F. A. Perthes at Gotta.

Very few of Hey's hymns are suited for Church use. Those which we have to note are:

I. Hymns for Church Use.

1. Wenn auch vor deiner Thron einmal. Christian Charity. 1st pub. in Knapp's Christodarpe, 1830, p. 80. In 9 st. of 4 1. as the 4th st. of a series on the words "Behold I stand at the door and knock," Rev. iii. 20. In Knapp's Av. L. S., 1857, No. 2415, it was altered to "Christ! when we in armament stand," and this form passed into the Wirtemberg G. B., 1843, and other recent collections. The only tr. is, "Ah! Christian! if the needy call," by Mrs. Toddaker, in H. L. L., 3rd Ser., 1864, p. 10 (1844, p. 152).

2. Wenn ich zu dir auf mich legte. Passion at Christ in the Garden of Gethsemane. 1st pub. in Seitenstätten's Jugendorchfor hauussliche Andacht, Rottweil, 1824, p. 173, as No. 9 of the "Reminiscences of the sufferings of Jesus; for the Quiet Days of the week before Easter," in 9 st. of 1., with the words "Not my will, but Thine be done," Included in Rümker's Vesperw. 1833; Knapp's Av. L. S., 1850 and 1865, &c.

Where'er again thou sinkest. A good and full tr. by Miss Winkworth in her Lyra Sera, 2nd Ser., 1856, p. 24, and repeated, abridged, tr. in Ps. & Hym., Bedfor, 1844, and in Holy Song, 1849.

II. Hymns for Children.

All these to be noted appeared in the Appendix to the 2nd Series of his Pfarrer für Kinder, Hamburg, 1837.
HIGH PRIEST FOR SINNERS 521

being included (omitting Wesley's st. viii., but greatly altered) in the Moravian H. Bk., 1760, and later editions (1866, No. 511). A century partly from Wesley and partly from the Moravian H. Bk., 1801, is to be found in Martin's Hymns, 1840 and 1873. The st. most frequently employed in making new stanzas are Wesley's st. vii., viii., ix. Selections in this stanza are found in Montgomery's Christ. Psalmist, 1822, &c., Mercer's C. P. & H. Bk., 1857; and in America in the Meth. Epis. H. Bk. of 1849, and their Hymnal of 1878; the Andover Sabbath H. Bk., 1858; Bapt. Service of Song, 1871, &c.

Higginson, Thomas Wentworth, M.A., was b. at Cambridge, U.S.A., Dec. 22, 1823, and educated at Harvard. From 1847 to 1850 he was Pastor of an Unitarian Church at Newburyport, and from 1852 to 1856 at Worcester. In 1856 he retired from the Ministry, and devoted himself to literature. During the Rebellion he was colonel of the first negro regiment raised in South Carolina. In addition to being for some time a leading contributor to the Atlantic Monthly, he pub. Outdoor Papers, 1863; Malbone, 1869: and other works. During his residence at the Harvard Divinity School he contributed the following hymn to Longfellow and Johnson's H. Bk. of Hymns, 1846:

1. No human eyes Thy face may see. God known through love.
2. The land our fathers left us. American Slavery.
3. The poet is dark with sin and shame. Hope.
4. To Thee eternal arms, O God. Love.

In the Bk. of Hymns these hymns are all marked with an asterisk. They, together with others by Mr. Higginson, are given in Putnam's Singers and Songs of the Liberal Faith, 1875.

High Priest for sinners. J. Montgomery. [Our Savioirs' Prayers.] This poem appeared in his Original Hymns, 1828, p. 75, with a preface of 6 l., followed by pt. i. in 6 st. of 6 l., and pt. ii. of 7 st. of 6 l. It is a metrical setting of a running account of the prayers offered by our Blessed Lord as recorded in the Gospels. A cento beginning with st. ii. of pt. i.: “Early Christ
HILDEBERT

Hilbert, Hilarius Pictaviensis, Saint, Bishop, and, according to St. Augustine, "the Illustrious Doctor of all the Churches," was the heathen family of an illustrious and great wealth, at Poitiers early in the 4th century. He received, as a heathen, an excellent classical education, so that St. Jerome says of him that he "was brought up in the pious school of Gaul, yet had culled the flower of Greek science, and became the Rhone of Latin eloquence." Early in life he married, and had a daughter named Abra, Afra, or Apra. About 350 he renounced, in company with his wife and daughter, the Pagan religion of his family, and became a devout and devoted Christian. After his baptism he so gained the respect and love of his fellow Christians, that in 353, upon a vacancy occurring in the see of his native town, he was, although married and a layman, elected to fill it, and received ordination as Deacon and Priest, and consecration as Bishop, "by accumulation," no uncommon occurrence in those days. From that time he was virtuously, though not formally, separated from his wife, and lived a very ascetic life.

Soon after his consecration he received a visit from St. Martin of Tours (who became henceforward his devoted disciple), and distinguished himself by his unswerving opposition to the Arians heresy, which had gained many powerful adherents in Gaul at that time, obtaining for himself thereby the title in after years of "Malleus Arianorum," the "hammer of the Arians." In 356 he was sent by the Emperor Constantius to Phrygia in exile, in consequence of a report made against his moral character by the Arian Council held at Bzizia in Languedoc, over which the Arian leader, Saturninus, Bishop of Arles, presided, whose representative a heresy, Hilary had some time before secured. His exile lasted until 362, when he returned to Poitiers by the Emperor's direction, though without his sentence of banishment being formally annulled. In spite of his consequent want of permission to do so, he left Poitiers towards the end of the same year, and spent two years in Italy, whence he was again sent back to Gaul in 364 by the new Emperor Valentinian, in consequence of his denouncing Auxentius, the Bishop of Milan, where Hilary was at that time resident, as having been insincere in his acceptance of the creed of Nicea. Hilary lived for some three years after his final return to Poitiers, and d. Jan. 13, 368, though his Saint's Day (which gives his name to the Hilary term in our Law Court) is celebrated on the following day, in order, possibly, not to trench upon the octave of the Epiphany.

Hilary's writings, of which a large number are still extant though many have been lost, travel over a vast field of exegetical, dogmatic, and controversial theology. His principal work in importance and elaboration is his "Libri vini de Trinitate," directed against the Arian heresy, while in his "Commentarium in Maththarum" we have the earliest commentary on that gospel. The best edition of his works is that of Conant, originally pub. by the Benedictines, at Paris, in 1853, and reprinted, with some additions, at Verona, in 2 vol., by Siccolo, in 1739. St. Hilary was a sacred poet as well as a theologian, though most of his writings of this character perished, probably, in his Liber Hymnorum, which was a part of his books that has not come down to us. It seems to have consisted of hymns upon Apostles and Martyrs, and is highly spoken of by Isidore of Seville in his Etymologiae. All that we have remaining are some titles of considerable beauty on our Lord's childhood (from Pitra's Speculum S. S. Olearia, Paris, 1623), which are attributed, probably with justice, to hymns, and about 8 hymns, the attribution of which to him is more or less certainly correct. Daniel gives 7, 4 of which: - "Lucas Longior splendide"; "Jesu Paer debel"; "In malam grati"; and "Jam meta noscumoltransitum," are morning hymns; one, "Jesus refusat sanctam," for the Epiphany; one, "Jesu quondam," for Lent; and one, "Braves nobles gaudies," for Whitmas- tide. Thomasius gives another as Hilary's, "Hymnum duality turba fraternum" (for fuller details see under their respective first lines). Written as these were in the infancy of Latin hymnody, and before the metres of the old heathen Latin poets had been wholly banished from the Christian service of song, or the rhyming metres, which afterwards became so general and so effective, had been introduced into such compositions, they can scarcely be expected to take a very high rank. At the same time they are not without a certain rugged grandeur, well befitting the liturgical purposes they were intended to serve. Containing as they do the first germs of Latin rhymes, they have great interest for all students of hymnody, as thus inaugurating that treatment of sacred subjects in a form which was to culminate presently in the beautiful Church poetry of the 12th cent.

[D. S. W.]

Hildebert, who sprang from a family of no great position, was b. at Lavardin, near Montoire, in France, 1057. Brought up at the seat of Berengarius of Tours (a pupil of Frugell) he so profited by the opportunities thus afforded him of acquiring learning, as to become one of the most cultivated scholars of his age. Having for some years been a Professor of Theology at Mainz, he became at the age of forty (1089) Bp. of that see. He was translated, in 1123, to the Archdiocese of Tours, and d. 1124.

Hildebert's character as an individual has been very differently drawn by different writers, for while French describes him as "a wise and gentle prelate, although not wanting in courage to dare and fortitude to endure, when the cause of truth required it," who "must ever be esteemed one of the fairest ornaments of the Church," Bayle, in his Hist. & Crit. Dict., represents him as having "led a very scandalous life," even after his promotion to an archdeaconry. As a writer of Latin verse, the evidence is clearer and less contradictory. He is said, by the Benedictine editors of his works, to have written more than ten thousand Latin lines as various in merit and number. Sometimes in verse, more generally in heroic or elegiac metre, and upon subjects ranging from 'An Address to the Three Persons of the Holy Trinity," to a legendary "Life of Mahomet." The large majority of his verses are of little value, while some rise to a height of energy and grandeur as to induce French to prefer him to a higher place in sacred Latin poetry than any other writer except Adam of St. Viktor, and almost to allow him to "dispute the palm" even with the latter. The first complete collection of his writings was made by the Benedictines, who edited them in conjunction with those of Marod, bishop of Remnes, his contemporary, and pub. them at Paris, 1844, for specimens of the best work of Hildebert see Trench's Misc. Lat. Poetry, 1849 and 1873. The most striking of his pieces will probably be allowed to be (1) The "noble Oration," "Oration de Lamentatione Prophetae Eccliasiae," of which Trench says, "I know no nobler piece of erudition, nor more skilful management of rhyme, in the whole circle of sacred Latin poetry;" and (2) The "Oration de Sancta Ecclesia ad Tres Personeas SS. Trinitatis," which is thus characterised by the same high authority: "A poem... which gradually rises in poetic animation until towards the end it equals the very best productions which Latin Christian poetry anywhere can boast." The following graceful lines of Hildebert's "De Nativitate Christi" form part of a longer poem, and exhibit, not unfairly, the beauties and faults alike
Hildegard, St., Virgin and Abbess, was b. at Bockenheim, or Bockenheim, Frankfurt, on May 25, 1098. Her father, Wbild, was one of the knights of Meginhard, Count of Spanheim. When eight years old she was committed to the care of a sister of St. Dominicus of the Order of St. Augustine, and was afterwards sent to the Convent of St. Barbara, near Bingen-am-Rhein, where she was instructed in the art of writing. In 1125, Hildegard was sent to the Convent of St. Thierry, near Bingen, where she remained until 1147. Hildegard gained great notoriety in her time, and was considered a great prophetess. She was also a great poet, and wrote many hymns and songs in praise of God. Her writings are attributed to her by the Church, and are considered important in the history of the Middle Ages. She died on Sept. 17, 1179, at Eibingen, near Bingen-am-Rhein.

Hildegard's writings include a collection of hymns and songs in praise of God, and a treatise on the nature of the universe. Her most famous work is the "Divine Prophecy," a collection of prophecies and visions, which is considered one of the most important works of the Middle Ages. Hildegard's writings have been translated into many languages, and are still studied today. She is considered a great figure in the history of the Church, and is remembered for her love of God and her dedication to his service.
HILL, PHILIP F.

since 1685 advocate in chancery at the ducal court.

His hymns, which found favour in Hanover, and have kept their place in Württemberg, appeared in his Denkmak der Erbitterten, Liebe und Leid, or in his Gesammelte Liedern, &c., Stuttgart, 1711, with melodies by J. G. C. Sturzl. The only one tr. into English is—

O Jerusalem du schöne. Hymn, 1711, as above, p. 325, in 7 st. of 6 l., entitled Longing and Life. It has been a great favourite in Württemberg, and was included in the Württemberg C. B., 1742, and again in that of 1842. The fine melody usually given to it in 1711 is found in the Strum Hym., 1866, no. 232.

The trs. are: (1) "O Jerusalem," by R. Massie, 1834, p. 150, repeated in English Hymn., 1842. (2) "O Jerusalem: fair dwelling," in J. D. Burn's Memoir and Remains, 1869, p. 286. [J. M.]

Hiller, Phillip Friedrich, a. of Johann Jakob Hiller, pastor at Mühlenhausen on the Hug, Württemberg, was b. at Mühlenhausen, Jan. 6, 1699. He was educated at the clergy training schools at Denkendorf (under J. A. Bengel) and Maulbronn, and the University of Tübingen (M.A. 1720). His first clerical appointment was as assistant at Breclach, near Neckarsulm, 1724-27. He afterwards held similar posts at Hessigheim and elsewhere, and was also, from 1729-31, a private tutor at Nürnberg. He was then, on St Bartholomew's Day, 1732, instituted as pastor of Neckar-güeringsen, on the Neckar, near Marbach. In 1736 he became pastor of his native place, and in 1748 pastor at Steinheim, near Heidenheim. In his third year of residence at Steinheim he lost his voice, and had to employ an assistant to preach. He d. at Steinheim, April 24, 1769. (Koch, v. 107-126; Allg. Deutsche Biogr., xxii, 425-428, &c.) Of Hiller's hymns the best appeared in—

(1) Arndt's Paradis-Gärlein . . . . in deutsche Lieder, Nürnberg, 1730. (the copy in Berlin has a front-piece dated 1730). This was written during the time he was tutor at Nürnberg. P. Gerhardt, had founded the fine hymn "O Jesu Christ, mein schönstes Lieb," (q.v.) on one of the prayers in the volume of devotion which Johann Arndt had pub. 1612, under the title of Paradis-Gärlein; and Gerhardt's example led Hiller to think of turning the whole of these prayers into hymns. The book is in four parts, and contains 60 hymns, 272 being found in Arndt and form the original.

(2) Geistliche Liederhütten, (Stuttgart, 1762, and a second series, Stuttgart, 1761. Each series contains 166 short hymns, one for each day of the year. A complete reprint of these and the other hymns of Hiller (1052 in all) was ed. by C. C. E. Ehmann in 1844 (2nd ed. 1868). Hiller is the most productive and most important of the earlier hymn-writers of Württemberg, and is the poetical exponent of the practical theology of his friend J. A. Bengel. The hymns of his Paradis-Gärlein, while clear and Scriptural, are decidedly spun out (see No. xii, below). His Liederhütten contains the hymns of his riper years, and reveals a depth of feeling, an almost proverbial conciseness, an adaptation to consolé and direct in the most diverse events of life, and the most varied experiences of the soul, a suitability as a manual for daily devotion, and a simplicity of style that speedily endeared it to the pious in Southern Germany. It has passed through many editions in Germany, while colonists (especially from Württemberg) have carried it from thence wherever they went. It is said, e.g., that when a German colony in the Caucasus was attacked by a hostile Cossack, fifteen years ago the parents cut up their copies of the Liederhütten and divided the leaves among their children as they were being torn from them into slavery.

The use of Hiller's hymns in Germany has principally been in the hymn-books of Württemberg, and, through J. J. Rambach's Haus C. G. B., 1735, in Hanover. The following have passed into English—

Hillhouse, Augustus Lucas, younger brother of James Hillhouse (commonly known as the poet Hillhouse), was b. at New Haven, Connecticut, 1792, and educated at Yale, where he graduated in 1810. For some time he conducted a school in Paris; and d. near that city, March 14, 1834. His hymn:—

Trembling before Thine awful throne (Joy in the Forgiveness of Sins) was written in 1810, and pub.
in the Christian Spectator, New Haven, April, 1812. It is a good hymn, and is in extensive use, but usually in an abbreviated form. The tr. is “Earth has a joy unknown to heaven,” found in a few American books, begins with st. iii. of this hymn. Orig. text in Christ in Song, 1876. [J. J.]

They are all of more than average merit, and are worthy of attention. [W. G. H.]

Hinde, Samuel, D.D., s. of Abel Hinde, of Barbados, was b. in Barbados in 1793, and educated at Queen's College, Oxford (b.a. 1815, d.d. 1831). He was for some time Vice-Principal of St. Alban's Hall, Oxford (1827), and also Principal of Codrington College, Barbados. He held subsequently several appointments in England and Ireland, including the Deanery of Carlisle, 1848, and the Bishopric of Norwich, 1849. Resigning his Bishopric in 1857, he retired to London, where he d. Feb. 7, 1872. He pub. several prose works, and also Sonnets and other Short Poems, 1834. From that work his popular hymn, "Lord, shall Thy children come to Thee," sometimes given as, "O Lord, Thy children come to Thee" (H. Communion,) in the Hy. Comp. and others, is taken. [J. J.]

Hindale, Grace Webster, née Haddock, a Congregationalist, dau. of Professor C. B. Haddock; was h. at Hanover, New Haven, May 17, 1833, and married to Theodore Hindale, a lawyer of New York, in 1839. Mrs. Hindale is a contributor to the periodical press, and has pub. Coming to the King, a Book of Daily Devotion for Children, 1865; republished in England as Daily Devotions for Children, 1867. Her hymns include:

1. From Coming to the King, 1865.

2. From Schaff's Christ in Song, N.Y., 1869.
   1. O soul complete in Jesus stands (1869). Safely in Jesus.

3. Are there no wounds for me! Passiontide. Written April, 1868.

4. Jesus, the rays divine. Jesus ever present. Written July, 1868.

5. There was an angel midst the throng. Jesus, the Deliverer. Written April, 1868. The hymn, "Jesus, Thou art my Lord, my God," in the 1874 Supplement to the New Comp. in composed of st., xxv.-xxviii., slightly altered, of the former.

6. Thou standest between the earth and heaven. Virgin and Child. This poem was "written after viewing Raphael's Madonna di San Sisto, in the Royal Gallery of Dresden, Aug., 1867." (Christ in Song.) It is not suited for congregational use.

Hinton, John Howard, M.A., s. of the Rev. James Hinton, Baptist minister of Oxford, was b. in that city, Mar. 24, 1791. He graduated at the University of Edinburgh, and began his ministry at Haverfordwest (1816). Thence, in 1820, he removed to Reading, and in 1837, to London, where for many years he was pastor of the Baptist Church in Devonshire Square, Bishopsgate. In his later years he returned to Reading, but spent his closing days at Bristol, where he d. Dec. 17, 1873.

For the greater part of his life Mr. Hinton was one of the best known ministers of the Baptist denomination, and a recognised leader in all their public affairs. With him the logical faculty predominated, and he was a keen controversialist. His prose publications were numerous, being chiefly works of Theology and Practical Religion, but including also a History of the United States of North America: Memoirs of William Knapp, &c. In 1864-5 his theological writings were collected and republished in seven volumes. He wrote a large number of hymns, usually composing one to suit his sermon when he could not find one adapted thereto in the book used at his chapel. A few are printed at the end of his Theological Lectures, &c. Many are preserved in ms. in the Library of the Baptist Union, at the Mission House in Furnival Street. Three only are in C. U. and are as follows:

1. Hark, the evening call to prayer. Kneeling.
4. To the Cross, O Lord, we bear. Holy Communion.

The most popular of these hymns is No. 2.

Hochheilige Dreifaltigkeit. J. Schaeffler. [Trinity Sunday.] Appeared as No. 191 in Bk. v. of his Heilig Geistlied, Breslau, 1668, p. 643 (Werke, 1872, i. p. 318), in 5 st. of 81. It was included, slightly altered and beginning, "Hochheilige Dreifaltigkeit," in Freylinghauß's G. B., 1704, and this form was repeated in many hymn-books, as in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 31. It is a fine hymn of supplication to the Holy Trinity and for the special graces afforded by Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. Tr. as:—

1. Most high and holy Trinity, Thou God, a full and excellent tr. by Miss Cox in her Sacred Hymn, 1841, p. 45. In full and unaltered in Mercer's C. P. H. Bk., 1855, No. 183 (Ox. ed., 1864, No. 247), and other collections.

Hochheilige Dreifaltigkeit. J. Schaeffler. [Trinity Sunday.] Appeared as No. 191 in Bk. v. of his Heilig Geistlied, Breslau, 1668, p. 643 (Werke, 1872, i. p. 318), in 5 st. of 81. It was included, slightly altered and beginning, "Hochheilige Dreifaltigkeit," in Freylinghauß's G. B., 1704, and this form was repeated in many hymn-books, as in the Berlin G. L. 1. Most high and holy Trinity, Thou God, a full and excellent tr. by Miss Cox in her Sacred Hymn, from the Ger., 1841, p. 45. In full and unaltered in Mercer's C. P. H. Bk., 1855, No. 183 (Ox. ed., 1864, No. 247), and other collections.

Höchster Priester, der du diéh. J. Scheffer. [Self-Dedication.] Appeared as No. 178 in Bk. v. of his Heilige Sedeslandt, Brussel, 1698, p. 593 (Werke, 1862, I. p. 295), in 3 st. of 4 l. Included in Freylinghaus’s G. B., 1704, and recently as No. 857 in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. The hymn is founded on Romans xii. 1, and carries us the figure somewhat in detail. To a number of the orthodox Lutherans of the 18th cent. st. iii. iv., gave great offence, and were accused of false mysticism, &c. Tr. as:—

Great High-Priest, who deignest to be, a good and full tr. by Miss Winkworth in her Lyras G. H. B., 1855, p. 32, and her C. B. for England, 1663, No. 129. It is here in repeated in full in the Hyl. for St. John’s, Aberdeen, 1865-70, and the Evang. N.Y., 1880; and abridged in the Harev School H. Bk., 1866; Eng. Presb. Ps. & Hym., 1867, &c. A considerably altered version, beginning, “Jesus, who upon the tree,” in which st. iv. v. are condensed as iv., was included in the American Sebhath H. Bk., 1858, and repeated in the Bap. H. Bk., Philadelphia, 1871.

Other trs. are:—

Hodenberg, Bodo von, was b. April 3, 1604. After the conclusion of his university studies he entered the service of the Duke of Lüneburg. He was for some time tutor to the sons of Duke Georg, and subsequently (1614) chief magistrate and director of the mines at Osterrode in the Harz, for the principality of Grubingen. He d. Sept. 20, 1650 (Koch, ii. 239; Allg. Deutsche B. xii. 537; Bede, p. 91). The only hymn known by him is the beautifully

Ver deinen Thron trete ich hin, morning. 1st pub. in the New Apostol. Hb., Hannover, 1667, No. 217 (beginning “Ver deinen Thron trete ich hin”), in 16 st. of 4 l. introduced by the words, “In the morning, at morn, and in the evening, I sing.” In the Lüneburger G. L. S. 1669, it is presented to Justinus Sebzema, who had probably altered it somewhat. Included as No. 131 in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. The only tr. of this form is:—

Ich danke dir mit Herz und Mund. St. 1. is altered from st. xi. in St. liii. v. v. xiv. xv. The only tr. of this form is “With heart, and mind, and every power.” by H. J. Bucsko, 1842, p. 21. [J. M.]

Höffel, Johann, was b. June 24, 1690, at Uffenheim, in Franconia, and studied at the Universities of Giessen, Jena, and Strasbourg, becoming in 1628 Doctor of Law at Jena. In 1633 he settled in Schweinfurt as a consulting lawyer, and d. there Dec. 8, 1683 (Wetzel, I. 435-156, and A. H. ii. 283-291). One of his hymns has been tr. into English:—

Hoffmann, Gottfried, s. of Caspar Hoffmann, brewer at Plagwitz, near Lauenberg, in Silesia, was b. at Plagwitz, Dec. 5, 1658. After studying at the University of Leipzig (M.A. 1688), he was appointed to the Conrector, and in 1685 Rector of the Gymnasium at Zittau. In 1708 he became Rector of the Gymnasium at Zittau, where he died of a stroke of paralysis, Oct. 1, 1712 (Koch, vi. 437-442; Allg. Deutsche B. xii. 591-592). Of his hymns, about 60 in all, written mostly for his scholars, only one has passed into English, viz.:—

Zu sich mein Kind. Death of a Child. According to Koch, v. 442, this beautiful hymn was written in 1693, on the death of his little daughter Magdalene Elisabeth, was printed in the same year in her funeral sermon on Job 21. 1, and included by Hoffmann in his Lieder Mus. B., 1720, No. 396, and repeated in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, in 6 st. of 9 l. Tr. as:—

Depart, my child. A good tr., omitting st. iv., by Miss Northcote, in H. L. L. 1st Ser., 1864, p. 29. Repeated in Kennedy, 1863, omitting st. iii. and beginning “Farewell, my child.” Other trs. are:—

Hogg, James, second son of Robert Hogg, was born in Ettrick Forest, Selkirkshire, January 25, 1772, according to his own account, though the baptismal date is December 9, 1770. He is perhaps best known as the Ettrick Shepherd, and friend of Professor John Wilson and Sir Walter Scott. He d. November 21, 1835, on his farm of Altnave in Yarrow. An edition of his Poetical Works was published in 1822 in 4 vols. (Edin. A. Constable) including the best of his poems—

The Queen’s Wake, 1813; The Pilgrims of the Sun, 1815; Matur of the Moor, 1816, &c. The two hymns by him which have come into use are, “Blessed be Thy Name for ever,” and “O Thou that dwellest in the heavens high.” A complete edition of his prose and verse was pub. in 2 vols., 1863 (Glas., W. G. Blackie).

1. Blessed be Thy Name for ever. Morning. This is “The Palmer’s Morning Hymn” (in 32 lines), which forms a part of Canto iv. of his poem Matur of the Moor, 1816. It is sometimes given in full, but more frequently as “Blessed be Thy Name for ever” (3 st. of 4 l., as in the S. P. C. K. Hymns, 1822, and others. It is also altered as “Lord of life, the Giver,” as in the B. C. B., &c.

2. O Thou that dwellest in the heavens high. Midsummer. This was written, together with music, as “A Cameronian’s Midnight Hymn,” in a st. of 4 l., in the tale of The Brown of Borroweck, 1814. Although found in several collections its use is not so great as that of No. 1. [J. M.]

Hohlfeldt, Christoph Christian, was b. Aug. 9, 1776, at Dresden. He became, in 1819, Advocate for the Poor (Armen-Advocate) at the Court of Appeal at Dresden, and d. at Dresden, Aug. 7, 1849 (K. Goedecke’s Grundw., 1862, iii. p. 183). His hymns appeared in his Harfenklänge, Dresden and Leipzig, 1823, 1830 and 1836. The only one tr. into English is:—

Verlass mich nicht! 0 du, du am ich liebe. Supplication. In his Harfenklänge, 1832, p. 214, in 6 st. of 4 l., entitled “Prayer.” Tr. as:—
HOLME, THOMAS

Hold up thy mirror to the sun. J. Keble. [St. Bartholomew.] In the annotated edition of the Christian Year, this poem is dated 1821. It was pub. in that work in 1827 in 17 st. of 4 l., and is based on St. John i. 50. In its full form it is unknown in the hymnals. In Kennedy, 1863, No. 309, there is a cento thereof, beginning, "Eye of God's Word! where'er we turn," composed of st. v., vi., xii., xiv., and xvi., slightly altered.
"The somewhat peculiar expression, "Eye of God's Word! this is thus explained in a note thereof in the Christian Year. It is a quotation from the Rev. John Miller's Bampton
Lectures, for 1817, p. 128—
"The position before us is, that we ourselves, and such as we, are the very persons whom Scripture speaks of,
and to whom, as men, in every variety of persuasive form it makes its descending though celestial appeal.
The point worthy of observation is, to note how a book of the description and the compass which we have represented the ground to be, possesses this mystery of power; this eye, like that of a portrait, uniformly fixed upon us, turn where we will."

The cento is of more than usual merit as a hymn on Holy Scripture, but its use is mentioned.

Holden, Oliver, one of the pioneers of American psalmody, was b. in 1765, and was brought up as a carpenter. Subsequently he became a teacher and music-seller. He d. at Charlestown, Massachusetts, 1844. His pub-works are American Harmony, 1839; the Worcester Collection, 1797; and other Tune books. One of his most popular tunes is "Coronation." It is thought that he edited a small hymn-book, pub. at Boston before 1800, in which are 21 of his hymns with the signature "O." A single copy only of this book is known, and that without title-page.

Of his hymns the following are in C. U.:—
1. All those who seek a throne of grace. (T. D.)
2. They who seek the throne of grace. (T. D.)
3. Within these doors assembled now. (F. M. B.)

Holiest, Holiest, hearken in love.
Appeared in his Hymns of Old and New, 1864, No.
155, in 4 st. of 5 l., and again in his Sanctus, 1877, where it is appointed for March 24. It is one of the most popular of the author's hymns, and is worthy of more than has yet been made of it.

Holland, John, 1794, and d. there, Dec. 28, 1872. During his long life he pub. more than 40 volumes in prose and verse, the most important of which is his Life of James Mont-

BRITAIN, 1849 (2 vols.), and The Psalms of standard works.

His earliest pub. poems appeared in The Lady's Magazine, 1814, with the initials "J. H." or " J. H." and his first volume of poetry, Sheffield Park, in 1820.

His hymns number several hundreds, and date from 1813 to his death in 1872. Four of these were contributed to the Jubilee Hymn Book of the Sunday School Union, 1853. They were, however, written so exclusively for local Sunday School anniversaries and children's services, and contain so many local allusions, as to render most of them unsuitable for general use. One in the Meth. Free Church Sunday S. H. Bk., 1860, "Lord, why are thus our British youth?" (8 S. Anniversary) is a fair example of his hymn-writing. His Life of Rev. John Summerfield, M.A., attained great popularity in America. He assisted Montgomery in preparing and publishing the latter's Original Hymns, 1853, and wrote the introduction to the American edition of the same. His Life, by W. Hudson, was pub.
in 1874.

Holland, Josiah Gilbert, was b. at Belmont, Massachusetts, July 24, 1819.
He was for some time on the staff of the Springfield Republican, and became in 1870
the editor of Scribner's Magazine.
He has written several successful books, and some poetical pieces. One of the latter, "For summer's bloom, and autumn's blight" (Praise in and through all things), was included from Bitter Sweet, 1858, in the Boston Unitarian Hymn [and Tune] Bk. for the Church & Home, 1865.

Holme, James, B.A., b. of T. Holme, Orton, Westmorland, was b. in 1801, and educated at Caius College, Cambridge (B.A.
1825). Ordained in 1825, he held successively the Incumbency of Low Harrowgate, the Vicarage of Kirklington, and the charge of Bolton, near Bradford. He d. in 1842.
He pub. Leisure Musings and Devotions, &c., 1835; Mount Grace Abbey, a psalm, 1843, and with his brother, the Rev. T. Holme (q.v.), Hymns & Sacred Poetry, Christian Bk.
Soc., 1861. From this last work, "All things are ours, how abundant the treasure" (Praise in Sickness), in Speer's S. of G. & G., 1872, is taken. "God my Father, hear me pray" (Leant) in the Anglican H. Bk., 1868, is attributed to him, and dated 1861. It is, however, from his Leisure Musings, 1835, p. 117.
In 4 st. of 6 l., but it is not in the Hymns & Sacred Poetry. His "Lord Jesus, God of grace and love" (H. Communion), is from the Hymns & Sacred Poetry, 1861. These works are worthy of the attention of compilers of children's hymn-books.

Holme, Thomas, brother of the above, was b. Aug. 8, 1798, and educated at Appleby Grammar School. Taking Holy Orders in 1817, he was for twenty years Head Master of Kirby Ravensworth Grammar School. Subse-sequently he was Vicar of East Cowton, Yorkshire, where he d. Jan. 20, 1872. From Hymns & Sacred Poetry, 1861 (the joint work of himself and his brother James), the following hymns are taken:—
1. Behold the lilies of the field. How gracefully, &c.
Fower Service.
3. The Christian's path shines more and more. Growth in Holiness. This hymn previously appeared in a local collection about 1866. [J. J.]

Holmes, Elizabeth. [Reed, Elizabeth.]

Holmes, Oliver Wendell, M.D., L.L.D., s. of the Rev. Abiel Holmes, D.D., of Cambridge, Mass., was b. at Cambridge, Aug. 9, 1809, and educated at Harvard, where he graduated in 1829. After practicing for some time in Boston, he was elected in 1847 to the chair of Anatomy, in Harvard. His writings in prose and verse are well known and widely circulated. They excel in humour and pathos. Although not strictly speaking a hymn-writer, a few of his hymns are in extensive use, and include:

1. Father of mercies, heavenly Friend. Prayer during war.

2. Lord of all being, throned afar. God's Omnipresence. This is a hymn of great merit. It is dated 1848.

4. O Love divine that stoop'st to share. Trust.

Of these Nos. 2 and 4 are in his Professor at the Breakfast Table, and are in C.U. in G. Britain, in Martinsee's Hymns, 1873, and others. In 1886 the M.I. degree was conferred upon Professor Holmes by the University of Oxford. He is a member of the Unitarian body.

[F. M. B.]

Höltz, Ludwig Heinrich Christoph, s. of F. F. Höltz, pastor at Marien see on the Leine, near Hannover, was b. at Marien see, Dec. 21, 1748. He entered the University of Göttingen, 1769; completed his course, Exeter, 1772; and became a Candidate of Theology, but never obtained a charge. He d. at Hannover, Sept. 1, 1776. His complete Gedichte, edited by his friend J. H. Voss, were pub. at Hamburg, 1783 (2nd ed. 1804). The only piece which can be called a hymn and has been tr. into English is:

Weh' ichmer Treu und Redlichkeit. Conduct of Life, 1st pub. in J. H. Voss's Moralreporte, Hamburg, 1779, p. 117, in 8 st. of 4 l., entitled "The old countryman to his son." Included in the Oldenbourg G. B., 1781, No. 160. The tr. are, (1) "Let truth and spotless faith be thine." In the Hymn of Zion, ed. by Basil Wood, 1833, p. 104. (2) "With honest heart go on thy way." in G. Dawson's Ps. & Hym., 1846, No. 172. [J. M.]

Holy and revered is [His] the Name. J. Needham. [Holiness of God.]

In 1768 J. Needham pub. in his Hymns Devotional and Moral, No. 25, in 8 st. of 4 l., a hymn beginning as above. This was in C. U. for many years. In 1838 George Raseon rewrote st. 1., ii., and viii., and added another (ii.), thus forming a hymn of 4 st. This was given in the Bap. Ps. & Hym., 1858, and has passed into several collections, especially in America. In some collections it reads "Holy and revered is His name." The description of the cento is J. Needham, 1768; G. Rawson, 1833. [J. J.]

Holy Bible, book Divine. J. Burton, s. [Holy Scripture.] This popular hymn first appeared in the author's Youth's Monitor in Verse, &c., 1803, and again in the Evangelical Magazine, June, 1803, in 4 st. of 4 l., where it is signed, "Nottingham-J. B."

HOLY, HOLY, HOLY LORD

In 1806 it was also given as No. 1 of pt. ii. of the author's Hymns for Sunday Schools; or, Incentives to Early Piety. As it is frequently altered in modern collections we add the original text:

"Holy Bible, book Divine, Precious treasure, thou art mine; Mine to tell me whence I came, Mine to teach me what I am. "Mine to choose me when I rove, Mine to show a Saviour's love, Mine art thou to guide my feet, Mine to judge, condemn, acquit. "Mine to comfort in distress, If the Holy spirit blows, Mine to show by living faith Man can triumph over death. "Mine to tell of joys to come, An: the rebel sinner's doom; Holy Bible, book Divine, Precious treasure, thou art mine."

This hymn has gradually grown into favour, and now it is in C. U. in most English-speaking countries. [J. J.]

Holy Ghost, come down upon Thy children. F. W. Faber. [Whitsun.]

Appeared in his Oratory Hymns, 1854, and again in his Hymns, 1862, in 6 st. of 4 l., the opening stanza being repeated as a chorus. The metre is most awkward and unmusical, and fully justifies the alterations made in the Altar Hymnal, 1884, where it is rewritten in 8, 7, 8, 7, metre, beginning "Holy Ghost, come down upon us." [J. J.]

Holy Ghost, Thou source of light. [Whitsun.]

Appeared anonymously in the Andover Sabbath Bk., 1838, No. 458, in 4 st. of 4 l., and subsequently in several other collections. In the Baptist Praise Bk., N. Y., 1871, it is altered as "Holy Spirit, Source of Light." [J. J.]

Holy Ghost, Whose fire celestial. [Whitsunday.] Appeared in Hawtry's Coll. 1815, and again in Miss Auber's Spirit of the Psalms, 1829, where it was given with a few "Hymns for the Principal Festivals." p. 149. In 2 st. of 8 l. In Speck's Songs of G. & G., 1870-72, No. 351, it is attributed to T. Cot terill in error. [J. J.]

Holy, holy, holy Lord, Ever be Thy Name adored. [Praise.] This is a curious cento, in Kennedy, 1863, from two hymns by C. Wesley, in Hymns & Sacred Poems, 1739, the first of which is "Lord and God of heavenly powers," on the words from the Office for Holy Communion, and the second, "Glory be to God on high" (q.v.), on the Thanksgiving in the same office. The lines taken from these hymns are with slight alterations as follows: st. 1., ii., and iv., 1-8, the rest of the cento being by Dr. Kennedy. [J. J.]

Holy, holy, holy Lord God Almighty. Bp. R. Heber. [Holy Trinity.] 1st pub. in his posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 84, in 4 st. of 4 l., and appointed for Trinity Sunday. It was soon adopted by hymn-book compilers, and is the best known and most widely used of the author's hymns. It is a splendid metrical paraphrase of Rev. iv. 8-11. Line 2 of st. i., "Early in the morning our song shall rise to Thee," has been subjected to Holy, holy, holy Lord, God of Hosts! When heaven and earth.

James Montgomery. [Holy Trinity.] Written Sept. 10, 1832 (m. rev.), and included in the Cong. H. Bk., 1836, No. 12, in 3 st. of 8 l.; the Leeds H. Bk., 1833, No. 44; the author’s Original Hymnals, 1835, No. 1; and numerous collections in most English-speaking countries, if without alteration. Spurgeon’s O. H. Bk., 1836, st. 11, is given as “Holy, holy, holy Thee,” and appointed as a doxology.

Holy Jesus, in Whose [Thy] Name.

Bp. R. Mant. [Prayer in the Name of Jesus, p. 109, in 5 st. of 6 l. in “Vernal of Prayer in, and to Christ” (ed. 1871, p. 183). It is sometimes given as “Holy Jesus, in Thy Name.” In the Cooke & Denton Hymnal, 1853, St. it is omitted, several alterations are made, and a doxology by the editors is added. This form, with further changes, is repeated in Kennedy, 1863.

Holy Jesus, mighty Lord. Bp. C. Wordsworth of Lincoln. [Holy Innocents.] 1st pub. in his Holy Year, 1802, No. 11, in 5 st. of 8 l. It is in C. U., but usually in an abbreviated form, “Hymn of Thee, the S. P. C. K. Church Hymn., 1871, and in a cento beginning with st. 111. of this hymn. Some six more are by Earl Nelson, by whom the cento was arranged.

Holy Jesus, Saviour blest. Bp. R. Mant. [Jesus the Way, Truth, & Life.] 1st pub. in his Ancient Hymnals, &c., as one of the originals appended thereto, 1837, p. 344, in the “Mercator of Thee, the S. P. C. K. Church Hymn., 1871, and in an Appendix to the H. Noted, 1802, as “Holy Jesus, Saviour blest.” [J. J.]

Hymn offerings, rich and rare [Lord we bear]. J. S. B. Mossell. [Offertory.] St. Mary Magdalene Church, Paddington, printed on the opening of 1867. It was included in the Parish Hymnal, No. 201, having previously appeared in the 1869 Ps. & Hymn. It is also in the S. P. C. K. 1871, Thring’s Coll. 1882, and many others.

Holy Spirit, Lord of glory. R. H. Baynes. [Confirmation.] Printed in the Churchman’s Shilling Magazine, May, 1868; and in the author’s Autun Memories & Other Verses, 1869, in 5 st. of 4 l. In 1870 it was included with slight alterations in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymnals, and again in other hymnals.

Homburg, Ernst Christoph, was b. in 1860, at Milha, near Eisenach. He practised at Naumburg, in Saxon, as Clerk of the Assizes and Counsellor. In 1848 he was admitted a member of the Fruitbearing Society, and afterwards became a member of the Elbe Swan Order founded by Rist in 1848. He d. at Naumburg, June 2, 1851. (Koech. ii. 388, 392; Alg. Deutsche Blätter, xiii. 43, 44.) By his contemporaries Homburg was regarded as a poet of the first rank. His earlier poems, 1826-1853, were secular, including many love and drinking songs. Domestic troubles arising from the illness of himself and his wife, and other afflictions, led him to seek the Lord, and the deliverances he experienced in sickness and from violence led him to place all his confidence in God. The collected works of his poems appeared in 2 parts at Jena and Naumburg, 1859, pt. 1. as his “Gielticher Lieder, Kritter Theli, with 100 hymns (engraved title, Naumburg, 1861);” and pt. 2. as the “Doch Thor with 50 hymns. In the preface he speaks of them as his “Sunday labours,” and says: “I was specially induced and compelled to their composition by the anxieties and sore domestic afflictions by which God has for some time laid me.” They are distinguished for simplicity, firm faith, and liveliness, but often lack poetic vigour and are too sombre.

Two of his hymns have passed into English, viz.:

2. Of my life the life of the life, 0 Jesus. A good tr. of st. 1. i. viii., contributed by R. Massie to the 1857 ed. of Mercer’s C. P. & H. Bk., No. 404 (by ed. 1864, No. 185), repeated in the Mcth. N. Conn. H. Bk., 1863.

4. Thou eternal life bestowest. Tr. of st. 1. iii., viii., by Miss Borthwick, contributed to Dr.
HOMO DEI CREATURA

Pageantcher's Coll., 1864, No. 73, and repeated in H. L. E., ed. 1884, p. 257.

[3. M.]

Homo Dei creatura. [Judgment to come.] This poem is a picture of the woes of the lost, and an exhortation to timely repentance. Mione, i. pp. 419-421, gives 115 lines (with various breaks) from a Rechéneau MS. of the 14th cent., and conjectures that it was written in Italy in the time of Dante. Daniel, iv. p. 250, quotes Mione's text and most of his notes; and at v. 382, ascribes it to Dionysius the Carthusian (b. at Ricken in the diocese of Liege, became a Carthusian Monk at Roermond, or Rurmunde on the Mosel, 1424, and d. there, March 12, 1471). In J. M. Horst's Paradise Anima Christica, Co- logne, 1639, the text which has passed into English is given at p. 296 (sect. iii.), entitled, "D. Dominiacius Carthusian exhortatio ad poenitentiam," and in 600 lines. Up to Mione's i. 72, the texts nearly agree; but the rest of Mione's text continues in the same gloomy strain, whereas in Horst's text the strain speeds quickly to relate the bliss of the saints, and then ends by the warning to repentance. It has been tr. by E. Caswall in his Mange de Mary, etc., 1838, in 21 st. of 10 lines, as "Creature of God, immortal man" (Hymns, etc., 1873, p. 209); and by I. Williams in his Thoughts in Past Years, 1858, as "Mortal, who art God's creation." [J. M.]

Hood, Edwin Paxton, b. in Halfmoon Street, London, Oct. 22, 1840. He was self-educated. In 1862 he became the Independent Minister at Nibley, Gloucestershire, where he remained until 1867, when he removed to Oxford Road, London. He held several charges (Brighton, Manchester, etc.), the last being Falcon Square, London. He d. in Paris, June 12, 1885.

Mr. Hood was a striking and suggestive preacher, and one of the most voluminous writers of the age. His published works include The Age and its Architecture, 1852; Exposition of Swedenborg, 1854; Lamp of the Temple, 1856; Thomas Carlyle, 1873; Oliver Cromwell, 1862, &c., are too numerous to give in detail. He also edited (and was the chief contributor to) The Ecclesiastical Review for 8 years, and The Preacher's Lantern for 2 years.

As a hymn-writer he is best known as the author of hymns for children. These hymns have a freshness and simplicity which are attractive to children. Some of the best and most popular were written for Sunday School Anniversaries at Nibley, 1852-7. He also edited:

(1) Our Hymn Book (a similar title, but a distinct work from Mr. Spence's collection). This was pub. specially for the use of his own congregations, and was enlarged from time to time. 1st ed. Brighton, 1852; enlarged 1854, 1873, and 1879. The last ed. contains 47 of his hymns. (2) The Children's Choir, 1874.

His hymns in C. U. outside of his own collections are:

3. Earth in beauty smiles again. Summer (1852-51).
4. God, who hath made the daisies. Early Piety (1852-57).

HOPKINS, JOSEPH

5. Heart-broken and weary, where'er thou mayest be. Christ's Invitation. 1st pub. at the end of the 1st volume in his Dark Sayings on a Hymn, 1859, and then in his Ours H. Bk., 1879.

7. I love to think, though I am young. Jesus the Child.

8. O Jesus, Saviour, we are young. Christ's Prayer for Guidance (1852-57).

10. Saviour and Master, these sayings of Thine. The Sand and the Rock. Written at the Portland Breakfast in the winter of 1858-59, and 1st pub. in his first volume of sermons, 1860, at the close of that on "The Sand and the Rock." He says, "I walked the other day over the Great Breakwater at Portland, and there, whilst the rain descended and the winds came I thought and wrote out these verses." The hymn is in his Ours H. Bk., 1879, Horst's Cong. Hym., 1886, &c. It has also been printed on a fly-leaf for use in Portland Prison.

11. Sing a hymn to Jesus when the heart is faint. Conservation of Self to Jesus. Suggested by a tune heard at Vespers in Fontinaldson Church, and 1st pub. in the Ps. Path Meadow, 1870, and again in Ours H. Bk., 1879.

14. There is a word I long would speak. Redemption. Written for the S. S. Anniversary, Oxford Road Chapel, 1860, and pub. in his O. H. Bk., 1862.

15. There's a beautiful land where the rains never cease. Heaven. (1852-57.) In his Children's Choir, 1876, &c.

17. We love the good old Bible. Holy Scripture. (1852-57.) Given in several collections.

The most popular of these hymns are Nos. 4 and 7. Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 11, 16, 17 are from the Children's Choir, 1870. These are all in numerous collections. [W. G. H.]

Hook, Walter Farquhar, D.D., of Dr. Hook, sometime Dean of Worcester, was b. in London, Mar. 18, 1798, and educated at Winchester and Christ Church, Oxford (A.A. 1820, D.D. 1837). Taking Holy Orders in 1820, he was successively Vicar of Holy Trinity, Coventry; Vicar of Leeds, 1837-59; Dean of Chichester, 1859; Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen, &c. He d. at Chichester Oct. 20, 1875. He was the author of numerous Sermons, Pamphlets, Tracts, &c., but is best known through his Church Dictionary, and his Lives of the Archbishops. In 1946 he edited—Verses for Holy Seasons, with questions for Examination, by C. P. H., Lond., 1848.

This was a volume of verses by Cecil Frances Humphreys, afterwards Cecil F. Alexander (q.v.). He also pub.:

In this collection all the hymns were given anonymously. Hence has arisen the error of attributing some of them to the editor. Dr. Hook was not a writer of hymns. [J. J.]

Hooper, Emma. [Whitfield, Emma.]

Hooper, Mary Fawler. [Mead, M. P.]

Hopkins, John. [Old Version, § ix. 2. x.]

Hopkins, John Henry. [Various.]

Hopkins, Josiah, D.D., was b. at Pittsford, Vermont, April 18, 1786. From 1809 to HOPPER, EDWARD

1830 he was pastor of a Congregational Church, at New Haven, Vermont; and from 1838 to 1848 of the First Presbyterian Church, Auburn, N. Y. He died at Geneva, New York, July 27, 1862. He was the editor of the Presbyterian Church, New York, 1842. He is pastor of the Church of the New York, and Land, N. Y. He is the author of:

1. Jesus, Saviour, pilot me (ms.), Jesus the Pilot.
2. They pray the best who pray and watch. The Watcher.
3. We preach and struggling in mid-ocean. The Pious

Of these No. 1 appeared in the Baptist Praise, 1871, and 2 & 3 in Hymns & Songs of Praise, N. Y., 1874.

Hopps, John Page, was b. in London, Nov. 6, 1834, and educated at the G. Baptist College, Leicester. Commencing public work in 1856, in a brief ministry at Hugglescote and Iskele, he became colleague with George Dawson at the Church of the Saviour, Birmingham. From 1860 to 1876 he ministered to Unitarian congregations at Sheffield, Dunikin, and Glasgow. Since 1876 he has preached in Leicester. Mr. Hopps has published many books and pamphlets, chiefly volumes of sermons and lectures. Most of his smaller works are compiled in a monthly periodical called The Truthseeker, which he still edits. He has compiled the following hymn-books for Congregational, Mission, or School purposes:

(1) Hymns for Public Worship and the Home, 1858.
(2) Hymns for Public Worship and Progress, c. 1868.
(3) Hymns for Sunday Schools, 1873.
(4) Hymn Book for Public Worship, 1877.
(6) The Young People's Hymn Book, 1884.

Mr. Hopps has himself written various hymns, some of considerable merit. Several of his Unitarian and other collections. Among the best known are the following:

1. Cold and cheerless, dark and drear;
   Divine Guidance.
2. Father, let Thy kingdom come.
3. God bless the little children.
4. We praise Thee oft for hours of bliss.

These hymns are from his Hymn Book, 1877, and the Hymn, for Special Services.

Hora novissima, tempora pessima Heavenly Jerusalem.
[The evidently inspired by the last two chapters in the Abbey of Cluny, about 1145, and extends to about 3000 lines. It is found in a 13th cent. ms. in the Bodleian (Digby 65, f. 42).]

HORA NOVISSIMA, TEMPORA 553

It was included by Florius Hyliriemius, in his Paroemiarum de corrupto Ecclesiæ status, Basel, 1536. Hyliriemius was an ardent and enthusiastic Reformer; and as the greater part of the poem "is a bitter satire on the fearful corruptions of the age," it answered his purpose to use it in this manner. It was subsequently reprinted at Bremen, 1597; at Roskock, 1619; at Leipzig, 1620; at Lüneburg, 1620; in Wocher's New Theological Annuale, December, 1820; and in Mohr's Studien, 1821. In Trench's Soc.Latin Poets, 1843, 96 lines were given, beginning with "Hic breve vivitur" (from which Dr. Neale's first translation was made); and in Dr. Neale's Rhythm of Bernard de Morlaize, Monk of Cluny, on the Celestial Country, 1858, there are 218 lines. In Daniel, ii. 890; Bussel, No. 139; Königsfeld, ii. 262; Strickland, p. 280, there are also extracts from the poem. The original is dedicated to Peter the Venerable, the General of the Order to which St. Bernard belonged, and is entitled, "De contemptu mundi." (Dr. Schnel, in his Lib. of Religious Poesy, 1833, p. 961, says this poem was printed in Paris in 1496. We have not, as in this edition.)

II. Design and Execution. Bernard states his arguments thus:

"The subject of the author is the Advenet of Christ to Judgment: the Joys of the Saints, the pains of the reprobate. His intention, to persuade to the contest of the world. The war, to despise the things of the world, to seek the things which he desires. He sets a ball in his execution with the authority of the Apostle Paul, saying, "Little children, it is the last time"; where he endeavors to secure abundance and the favor of his readers, by setting the words of the Apostle before his own. At the commencement he treats of the Advent of the Judge, to render them in earnest, and by the description of celestial joy, he makes them do so."

The execution of the poem, written as it was in "a rhythm of intense difficulty," was attained, as the author believed, through special divine grace and inspiration. His words in his dedicatory epistle, and in the poem:

"Often and of long time I heard the Bridegroom, but had not listened to Him, saying:—Thy voice is pleasant in Mine ears." And again the Beloved cried out, "Open to Me, My sister." What tongue can express that I might open my body to the Beloved? And I said, "Lord, to the end that my heart may think, that my pen may write, and that my mouth may set forth Thy praise, to pour into my heart and pen and mouth: Thy grace. And the Lord said, "Open thy mouth." Which He straightway filled with the spirit of wisdom and understanding; that by one I might speak truly, by the other peremptorily. And I say it in nuncius arrogantly, but with all humility, and therefore truly: that this Spirit of Wisdom and Understanding had been written me, and flowed in upon so difficult a metre, I could not have composed so long a work. For that kind of metre, continuous ductyle (except the final teacher or sponde), preserving also, as it does, the Lennine sonority, has almost, not to say altogether, grown obscure through its difficulty. For Hildebert of Lavardin, who from his immense learning was first raised to the Episcopal see to the Metropolitan dignity; and Vincill, Canon of Lyons, excellent versifiers, how little they wrote in this metre, is manifest to all." (Neale's Rhythm, &c., Preface.)

The poem is written in ductyle hexameters, with the leonine (sometimes a triyllable or ductyle), and tailed rhyme, each line being broken up into three parts thus:

*Hora novissima | tempora pessima | sunt: vigilium
Ecce in macte | immintet amicis | ultra superare
Immitem, immitem | ut malo temere | sequa coronet
Recta remunerat | sanum libris, | aeterna dona.
iii. Merits. The two great authorities on this matter are Archbishop Trench and Dr. Neale. Referring to the numerous editions of the poem, the former says:—

"This is not wonderful; for no one with a sense for the expression of poetry, even when it manifests itself in forms the least to his liking, will deny the breath of real inspiration to the author of these dactylic hexameters." (Sac. Lat. Poetry, ed. 1874, p. 318.)

Archbishop Trench, whilst thus highly commending the poems, condemns the metre, and points out "its want of progress":—

"The poet, instead of advancing, eddies round and round his subject, recurring again and again to that which he seemed to have thoroughly treated and discarded." (Ibid., p. 314.)

Dr. Neale says concerning the poem as a whole, and specially of that portion which he has translated:—

"The greater part is a bitter satire on the fearful corruptions of the age. But as a contrast to the misery and pollution of earth, the poem opens with a description of the peace and glory of heaven, of such rare beauty, as not easily to be matched by any mediæval composition on the same subject." (Med. Rhy., 3rd ed., p. 60.)

iv. Translations. The first to translate any portion of the poem into English was Dr. Neale, and no translation but his is in C. U. at the present time. His first tr. was of the 86 lines in Trench's Sac. Lat. Poetry, beginning with "Hic breve vivitur" ("Brutus's life is here our portion"). This was pub. in his Mediaeval Hymns, 1851, p. 50. In 1858 he pub. The Rhythm of Bernard de Moraia, Monk of Cluny, on the Celestial Country, in which he gave 218 lines from the original, beginning with the first ("Hora novissima"), a tr. of the same, and an interesting Preface. The tr. and the Preface (slightly altered) were reprod. in the 2nd ed. of his Mediaeval Hymns, 1863. From one or the other of the three works the centos following have been taken:

1. Hora novissima, tempor a passima sunt, vigilamus — The world is very evil. This is the opening of several centos, all compiled from the first portion of the Rhythm, but composed of varying stanzas. Taken together they are in extensive use.

ii. Hic breve vivitur, hic breve piangitur, hic breve durum est life here our portion. This cento varies from five stanzas in the Hymns and Introits, 1853, to twelve stanzas in the 1869 Appen.

di. l. 40. The S. P. C. K., Ps. & Hymns. No common rule is adhered to as to the number of stanzas or the order in which they are arranged: but in its various forms it is found in upwards of a hundred collections in G. Britain and America.

iii. 0 bona Patria, lumina sobria te speculatur = (1) For thee, 0 dear, dear country. (2) For thee, sweet, heavenly country. (3) For thee, 0 heavenly country. In common with the foregoing, these centos vary both in length and arrangement of stanzas. These centos are in more extensive use than those under No. ii.

iv. 0 saera potio = 0 happy, holy portion. In the 1862 Appendix to the H. Noted.

v. Urbs Syon aures, Patera lactea, ovae decorae = Jerusalem the golden. The cento beginning with this stanza are not so numerous as those in Nos. ii. and iii., but their use in all English-speaking countries is very extensive use.

vi. Urbs Syon incolita, gloria deserta, gloriosa dicita = Jerusalem the glorious. In comparison with the foregoing the centos which begin with this stanza are in extensive use.

vii. Urbs Syon unica, manue mysticae, candida coelestis = Jerusalem the only. This is given in the Appendix to the H. Noted, 1862.

viii. Urbs Syon incolita, turris et edita litora = Jerusalem excelling. This is given in a few collections only.

Taken together these centos, compiled from one tr. of 218 Latin lines, present a result unique in hynmology. Without doubt the ballad measure adopted by Dr. Neale has much to do with its popularity; but the tr. possesses features of excellence which have won the approval of those for whom the ballad measure has no attractions.

The changes made in the text by various compilers are somewhat numerous. The best are those in Thrissell's Coll. 1882, including the re-translation by Prebendary Thring of the concluding eight lines of the original, as in Dr. Neale's Rhythm; and the worst, i.e. Dr. Neale's judgment, those in the Sarum Hymnal, 1868.

The trs. not in C. U. are:-

1. The last of the hours iniquity towers. By Dr. A. Cokes, Newark, New Jersey, 1846.
2. These are the latter times, these are not better times: Let us stand waiting. By S. A. W. D. and Field, 1847.
3. Here we have many tears, this is the weal of tears, the land of sorrow. O Montrie, in the Church Times; and Lyra Mystica, 1865.
4. Earth very evil is: time through the last of his journeys is hastening. Tr. of the whole poem. Jackson, 1840.
5. Hail Zion, city of our God, ac. ("Urbs Syon Incolitas") By T. Morgan, 1880.

Although these trs. are very much nearer the original than Dr. Neale's and, in the case of Duffield and Montrie, follow the metre of Bernard, yet there is little if any prospect of any of these being adopted for use in public worship.

Horne, George, d.d., b. at Oatham, near Maidstone, Kent, Nov. 1, 1759, and educated at Maidstone, and University College, Oxford (a.M. 1749). He subsequently became Fellow, and in 1768 Master of Magdalen College. He was also Vice-Chancellor of his University, 1776; Dean of Canterbury, 1781, and Bishop of Rochester, 1787. He died 1801.

Horne is widely known through his Commentary on the Book of Psalms. His hymns have been included in his Memoirs by the Rev. W. Jones, 1795, and again, in his Essays and Thoughts on Various Subjects with Hymns and Poems, 1808: and again, in his Works, 1809. Of his Hymns the best known is:—

See the leaves around as falling (autumn), which appeared in his Memoirs, 1790, pp. 232-4, in 18 st. of 4 l. and entitled "The Leaf," "We all do fade as a leaf," Isa. lviii. 6. It is also found in his Essays, Isaac, and Works, 1809, Coller included it in an abridgment, in 1793, from whence it passed into modern Nonconformist hymns. It was brought into use in the Church of England by Cotterill through his Psalms and Hymns, 1819.

Bishop Horne's translation of the Latin Grace, "Te Deum patrem colimus" (v.):—

Thee, Mighty Father, we adore, has been strangely overlooked by hymn compilers.

Horne, William Wales, b. in 1773 at

Gissing, in Norfolk. In 1793 he became minister of a small Baptist Church at Tibenham, in the same county; thence removed, in 1797, to Yarmouth, thence to Leicester, and about 1806, to London. In London he preached first at the City Chapel, in Grub Street; for many years, at Trinity Hall, Aldersgate Street, and Hopkhah Chapel, Limehouse, taking services every Sunday at both places; finally (the two congregations having united) at Ebenezer Chapel, Commercial Road. Whilst pastor of this church he died, in 1826.

Whilst minister at Tibenham, Horne pub. a small vol. entitled New Songs of Sol. or Short Hymns selected from the Scriptures of the Old Testament, London, Mathews, 1794. In 1798, when at Leicester, he pub. A Selection of Hymns for Public Worship, selected from the best authors, including also a great many original hymns. This contained 310 hymns, 9 being his own composition. In 1804, when minister in Grub Street, London, he pub. Song of Harmony; or the United Praises of Reasoned Sinners: a complete Selection of Hymns for Public Worship. This contained 113 hymns, 22 being his own. In 1812 an Appendix appeared, and in 1821 a new ed., of the entire book, as New Harmony from the Holy Scriptures: a Selection of Psalms, Hymns, and Spiritual Songs, for Public, Social, & Private Worship, by W. W. Horne. Lond. printed by W. Wood by Horne. Horne's own compositions have been less introduced into English hymn-books used by congregations holding G., & G., and others in Denham's & Gadsby's Selections. These include:—

1. Draw near, ye saints, with sweetest praise, Praise to Jesus.
2. Death is no more, a frightful foe (1806). Victory over death.
3. Sing to the Lord, whose matchless love. The Father's love.

Hosanna to the living Lord. Bp. R. Heber. [Advent.] This hymn is found in two forms and both by Heber. The first is unknown in modern hymnals, the second is in very extensive use in English-speaking countries. In 1811 Heber contributed several hymns to the Christian Observer, prefixing them with a letter in which he strongly condemned the familiarity assumed by hymn-writers with the Divine, and with divine things; and promised to remedy the defect so far as it lay in his power so to do. This letter appeared in Oct. 1811, together with four hymns, the first of which was this for Advent Sunday. The first stanza reads:

Hosanna to the living Lord! Hosanna to the Incarnate Word! Hosanna in the earth he said, And in the heavens which he hath made.

In 1827, it appeared in Heber's posthumous Hymns, &c., p. 1, in a new and much-improved form. From this revised text all existing forms of the hymn in collections for congregational use have been made. The first stanza of the revised text is:—

Hosanna to the living Lord! Hosanna to the Incarnate Word! To Christ, Creator, Saviour, King, Let earth, let heaven, Hosanna sing! Hosanna! Lord! Hosanna in the highest!

The full revised text is in Lord Selborne's Bk. of Praise, 1862, No. 141. The doxology, which is given in *H. A. & M. and other collections, was added to the hymn as early as Strutton's Church Hymn, 1800. The hymn "Hosanna, Lord, the angels cry," in Martineau's Hymns, &c., 1840, and later collections, begins with st. ii. of this hymn.

Hosanna David's Son. B. Schmolek. [Advent.] 1st pub. in his Lustige Sababth in der Stille zu Zion, Jauer, 1712, p. 3, in 8 st. of 6 l., entitled "Hosannah for the Heavenly Manna. On the First Sunday of Advent." It is also suitable for Palm Sunday. Included in the Berlin *G. L. S.,” ed. 1863, Tr. as:—

1. Hail, Hosanna! David's Son. A good tr. of st. i, iii, vi, as No. 6 in the Dalston Hospital H. Bk., 1848, repeated in Dr. Page's Church Hymnology, 1864, No. 13.
2. Glad Hosanna! David's Son. In full in the Ohio Luth. Hly., 1880, No. 17.

Another tr. is: "Hosanna to the Son of David! Raise!" by Miss Winkworth, 1856, p. 67. [J. M.]

Sept. 28, 1788, aged 43. During the three years previous to his death he had written 364 hymns, which in the year following, after correction and revision, were pub. by Messrs. HOSTE DUM VICTO

Hoskins's hymns are said to have been greatly esteemed by his friends and hearers, but they have little poetic merit. [W. R. S.]

HOSTE DUM VICTO TRIUMPHANS. [Holy Communion.] In the Cluniac Breviary, Paris, 1866, p. 357, this is given as a hymn for the Octave of Corpus Christi, at the Vigil, and consists of 5 st. and a doxology. Tr. by E. Caswall, and pub. in his Masque of Mary, &c., 1858, p. 307, and in his Hymns, &c., 1873, p. 159, as "When the Patriarch was returning." It was given in the People's H., 1867, the Appr. to H. Noted, 1862, &c. [J. M.]

House of our God, with cheerful anthems ring. P. Doddridge. [New Year.] 1st pub. in Job Orton's posthumous ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, 1755, No. 67, in 6 st. of 6 l.; and again in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 81. In Brown-Borthwick's Select Hymns for the Church & Home, 1871, and in the S. P. C. K. Church Hym., 1871, is a cento beginning "House of our God, with hymns of gladness ring," which is mainly from this hymn. It is by J. Ellerton. The lines chosen are greatly varied from Doddridge, and at v. ill. 2-4 are by Mr. Ellerton. [J. J.]

How blest the man who never trod. J. Keble. [Ps. c.] Pub. in his Psalms, 1839, in 6 st. of 4 l. In the Rugby School H. Bk., 1876, No. 284, and the Wellington College H. Bk., 1880, p. 119, it is given in an altered form, as "Blest is the man who walks with God," and in the latter with the addition of a doxology. The "Mr. Knight's Coll." referred to in the Rugby book, is the Ps. & Hym. by the Rev. W. Knight, St. Michael's, Bristol, 4th ed., 1867. [J. J.]

How blest Thy creature is, O God. W. Cooper. [The Blessness of Peace with God.] Southey in his Memoirs and Correspondence of William Cooper, 1854, vol. 1, pp. 99-104, gives an account of Cooper's insanity, his residence at St. Alban's under the care of Dr. Cotton, and his partial recovery. At the beginning of his attack Cooper wrote a most painful poem, the nature and burden of which will be gathered from the following (the third stanza, which reads:

"Man disconsol, and Deity disowns me,
Hell might afford my miseries a shelter;
Therefore, hell keeps her ever-hungry mouths all Bolted against me."

In contrast to this distress Southey states that "During this (the latter part of his stay with Dr. Cotton) part of his abode at St. Alban's, he again poured out his feelings in verse, and the contrast is indeed striking between what he called this specimen of his first Christian thoughts, and that which he composed (as above) which cannot be purged of desponding. He cast his thoughts in the form of a hymn, which he entitled 'The Happy Change,' and took for his text part of a verse in the Revelations, 'Behold, I make all things new.'"

The hymn composed under these circumstances, in July, 1765, is full of peace and hope, as evidenced in st. iv.:

"The soul, a dreary province once
Of Satan's dark domain, Fell a new empire formed within
And owns a heavenly reign."

The publication of the hymn in 6 st. of 4 l. with Cooper's original title, "The Happy Change," was in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. iii, No. 44. In full or in part it is given in several hymn-books, especially in America. Sometimes it begins: "How blest is man, 0 God," as in the American Unitarian Hymn, for the Church of Christ, Boston, 1833. [J. J.]

How few receive with cordial faith. W. Robertson. [Passionate, &c.] 1st appeared as No. 6 in the Draft Scottish Translations & Paraphrases, 1715, as a version of Ps. liii. in 16 st. of 4 l. In the revised edition, 1751, at v. vii, x., xil. were slightly altered. In the Draft of 1781, No. 25, it was considerably altered; and with further alterations this was repeated in the public worship ed. of that year which is still in C. U. in the Church of Scotland. In the markings by the eldest daughter of W. Cameron (q.v.), the original is ascribed to W. Robertson, and the alterations in 1781 to John Logan. The revised text of 1781 is included in full in the Eng. Prov. Ps. & Hym., 1867, and in two hymns, No. 75, revised above, and 171 as "We all like sheep have gone astray." In the addition the following centos are in C. U.:

1. The Saviour comes (same), no outward pomp.
2. Rejected and despised of men.
3. Fair as a beauteous, tender flower.

In addition, Miss Leeson pub. an altered form of the hymn in 9 st. in her Paraphrases & Hymns for Cong. Singing, 1853, as pt. i., "Who faith believed the Witness-Word?" and pt. ii., "We counted as condemned of heaven." Compare also Watte's Hymns, 1769, Bk. i., Nos. 141-2. [J. M.]
How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord. [Persecution of the Saints.] This hymn appeared in Rippon's Selection, 1787, No. 128, in 7 st. of 4 l., and entitled, 'Exceeding great and precious promises.' In 1822 it was repeated in A. Fletcher's Bap. Coll. of Hys., No. 296, in 4 st., the omitted stanzas being h., iv. & v. Two arrangements of the text were thus handed down to modern hymnals. In the 1835 ed. of Fletcher's Coll., the full original text is restored. This is repeated in Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1866, No. 732, and other hymn-books.

The authorship of this hymn has been the subject of much discussion. We have (1) in modern editions of Rippon the name of "Kirkham"; (2) in Fletcher's 1835 ed. as above, "Keen"; (3) and in Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., "George Keith."

1. Rippon's original signature was "K." In modern editions, which are not published by Dr. Rippon, his name is "Kirkham," but on what authority we cannot say.
2. The original form of Miller's Singers and Songs, 1849, p. 340, is as follows: In the original text, the line "he in white gowns doth sing," is based upon nothing but the statement of an old woman whom Sedgwick met at a almshouse.
3. In Fletcher's Coll., 1822, the "K." of Rippon is extended to "Kn," and in the ed. of 1835 this is still further extended to "Keen," and so it remains. That there is more than a suspicion that Rippon had not the slightest acquaintance with the principle of the hymn, and that it has been correctly ascribed either to either of the other two, is gathered from the fact that Dr. Fletcher was assiduous in his search. Dr. Keith was the editor of the Rippon's Tune Book, to whom he specially refers in these words: "No one can fully appreciate the beauty of the composition of this hymn, it is in the highest degree unoriginal; and it is a just cause to acknowledge that the original author of this hymn must be that of an unknown person of the name of Keen."

The following hymns bear the same signature as the above in Dr. Rippon's Sel., 1874.

1. In songs of sublime adoration and praise (Distinquishing Grace). This is given in Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., and is attributed to "George Keith, 1873."
2. The work is justly esteem'd (Holy Scriptures). From the fact that these two hymns have a common signature in Rippon's Sel., 1871, with "How firm a foundation," &c., and that the three appeared there for the first time, we also ascribe them to Keen. Miller, in his note on George Keith, in the Unsupported word of D. Sedgwick as above.

How grand and how bright that wonderful night. W. H. Harcroyd. [Christmas Carol]. The words and music were written at Aylesbury, in 1827, and also printed in "Poetry," 1828. It was hawkers' music, and sold by hawker's throughout Worcestershire, where it was "The Worcestershire Carol." It is now known as "The Worcestershire Carol." The words 1872. How great the wisdom, power, and grace. B. Beadome. [Wonders of Redemption.]

How happy the children who are Jesus in peace, Who stand around His glistening throne. C. Wesley. [The Hope of Heaven.] Pub. in his Funeral Hymns, 2nd series, 1755, No. 2, 4 st. of 8 l., and from thence into the Supplement of the Wes. Bk., 1830. G. J. Stevenson has given interesting "Associations" in his Methodist H. Bk. Notes, 1883, setting forth the spiritual help this hymn has been to many. (Orig. text, P. Works, 1868-72, vol. iv. p. 216.) Its use with the Methodist bodies in all English-speaking countries is extensive. A cento from this hymn, beginning "A stranger in the world below," is given in H. W. Beecher's Plymouth Coll., 1853, No. 1275. It is composed of st. ii. and iii. A second cento in the American Hymns and Songs of Praise, N.Y., 1874, p. 77, as "O what a blessed hope is ours" (st. vii., viii.)

How happy is the pilgrim's lot. [Desiring Heaven.] Appeared in the Wesley Hymn Book, 1747, No. 51, in 9 st. of 6 l. When given in the Wes. Bk., 1780-1875, the fourth stanza was omitted. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. iv. p. 278.) Although somewhat unreal as a hymn for general use, it has long been most popular with the Methodist bodies. Stanza xvi. "No foot of land do I possess," and vii. "There is my house and portion fair," have gathered around them reminiscences, in many instances of a tenderly sacred character, some of which are noted in detail in Stevenson's Methodist H. Bk. Notes, 1883, p. 77. In Stevenson's Notes this hymn is attributed to John Wesley, and in the Index to the same work to Charles Wesley. The former is also the almost universal ascription in America.
the argument usually put forth being that the personal circumstances evidently referred to suited John Wesley rather than Charles. The editors of the Wes. H. Bk. are in doubt, and have left the authorship an open question. As there is no direct evidence either way, we must follow their example. [J. J.]

How happy the pair whom Jesus unites. C. Wesley. [Holy Matrimony.] Written in 1749, in contemplation of his coming marriage which took place at Garth, in Wales, on the 8th of April of the same year, and published in Hymns & Sacred Poems, 1749, in 6 st. of 4 l., as one of several hymns which were written under the same circumstances. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. v. p. 427.) In its original form it is not in C. U. The hymn, "Appointed by Thee, we meet in Thy name," given in the Wes. H. Bk., 1789, No. 472, and repeated in later editions, and in several other hymnals, is the same hymn in an abbreviated form. [J. J.]

How honourable is the place. I. Watts. [Safety of the Church.] This hymn, which is based on Isa. xxvi. 1-6, has a twofold history; the first English, and the second Scottish.

i. English History. It was first published in Watts’s Hymns, &c., 1707 (1709, Bk. ii., No. 8), in 7 st. of 4 l., and entitled “The Safety and Protection of the Church.” In this form it came into extensive use with some of the Nonconformist bodies, and maintained its position until recently.

ii. Scottish History. In 1745 it was included in the Translations and Paraphrases, No. xxix. (see Scottish Trs. and Paraphrases) with the single alteration of st. iv. 1. 4 of "trust in" for "sustained on his grace." The principal changes were made in 1781, when in the Draft st. i. ii., and vii. were rewritten, and a word or two in the remaining stanzas altered. This text with in st. vii. 2. "brave for" a "prop," was given in the authorized Trs. and Par. of 1781, No. xxv., as "How glorious, Sion’s courts appear." W. Cameron (q.v.) ascribes this recast of Watts in his list of authors and reviewers of the Trs. & Par. to Dr. Hugh Blair. It has been in authorized use in the Church of Scotland for more than 100 years, and is also given in a few English and American collections. J. E. Leeson’s Par. and Hymns, 1833, No. xlv., in "Judah’s land let Zion’s sons," is a cento by Miss Leeson from the Scottish Par. with alterations and additions by herself. St. i., iii, Miss Leeson; st. ii., iv. as above. In the American Presbyterian Ps. & Hys., Richmond, 1867, No. 560, "How glorious is the sacred place," is an altered form of Watts, 1709. [J. J.]

How long shall dreams of creature [earthly] bliss? P. Doddridge. [God the Salvation of His People.] Written Aug. 15, 1736, p. 1735, No. 123, in 4 st. of 4 l.; and again in J. D. Humphrey’s ed. of the same, 1839. In one or two American collections it begins, "How long shall dreams of earthly bliss?" as in the Unitarian Hymns, for the Church of Christ, Boston, 1833. [J. J.]

How many pass the guilty night. C. Wesley. [Watchnight.] Appeared in Hymns and Sacred Poems, 1742, p. 135, in 6 st. of 4 l., as the first of a series of "Hymns for the Watchnight." (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. ii. p. 193.) In 1830 it was given in the Supp. to the Wes. H. Bk. with alterations, and the omission of st. iv. This was repeated in the revised edition, 1875. The opening line has undergone several changes, as: "How many pass this guilty night?"; "How many pass this solemn night?"; and "How many spend the guilty night." The original reading has by far the most extensive use. [J. J.]

How precious is the book divine. J. Fawcett. [Holy Scriptures.] Pub. in his Hymns, &c., 1782, No. 41, in 6 st. of 4 l., and based upon the words, "Thy Word is a lamp to my feet and a light to my path." Its use is extensive, especially in America, but usually in an abbreviated form. In the New Cong., 1839, No. 466. st. iii. is by another hand. Orig. text in Lyra Brit., 1867, p. 226. [J. J.]

How rich Thy bounty, King of kings. P. Doddridge. [Divine Treasure in Earthen Vessels.] Written Sept. 23, 1739 (D. Mss.), and pub. in his (posthumous) Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 175, in 5 st. of 4 l., and based upon 2 Cor. iv. 7. In 1839 it was repeated in J. D. Humphrey’s ed. of the same, No. 300. [J. J.]

How sad our state by nature is. I. Watts. [Salvation through Christ.] 1st pub. in his Hys. & S. Songs, 1707 (ed. 1709, Bk. ii., No. 90), in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed "In Christ for Pardon and Sanctification." In 1736-7 it was included by J. Wesley in his Charlestown Ps. & Hys. p. 52, with the change of st. v. 1. 4, "With all his hellish crew," to "With his infernal crew." Wesley’s alteration was repeated by G. Whitefield in his Coll. 1735; by M. Madan, in his Ps. & Hys. 1760, and others. In Conyers’s Coll., ed. 1774, the line reads, "And form our souls anew," in modern hymn-books the line is often omitted. [J. J.]

How shall a contrite [sinner] spirit pray. J. Montgomery. [Lent. Prayer.] Written Sept. 15, 1840. "M. Mss." and pub. in an undated ed. of T. Russell’s Sel. of Hys. for Congregational Worship, enlarged ed. with Appendix; and again in Dr. Leitch’s original Hymns, &c., 1842, No. 76. Subsequently it was included in the author’s Original Hymns, 1853, No. 75. In Praise, 1879, it is given as "How shall a contrite sinner pray?" Its use, especially in its original form, is extensive. [J. J.]

How shall I follow Him I serve. J. Conder. [Resignation and Suffering.] This hymn, in 11 st. of 4 l., on the words, "If any man serve Me, let him follow Me," is in his Star in the East, &c., 1824, p. 62. In 1836 it was rewritten and divided into two hymns, the first in 7 st. beginning with the same first line, and included as No. 341 in the Cong. H. Bk., 1836; and the second in 3 st., as "Thou Who for Peter’s faith didst pray!" No. 588 in the same collection. The modern arrangements of these hymns, as in the Bap.
How should the sons of Adam’s race.

I. Watts. [Divine Majesty.] 1st pub. in his Hymns, &c., 1709, Bk. 1, No. 86, as a paraphrase of Job ix. 2-10, in 6 st. of 4 l., and entitled “God, Holy, Just, and Sovereign.” Its use is limited. It appears, slightly altered, in the 1718 Scottish Trans. & Paraph. of 1745; it was revised by the Rev. Dr. H. Blair in 1751; and has been in use in the Church of Scotland for more than 150 years. In her list of authors and revisers of the 1818 issue, W. Cameron’s daughter claims these alterations of 1781 for W. Cameron (q.v.). It is given in full in all modern editions of the Scottish Psalms.

In the American Prayer Bk. Coll., 1826, the Scottish version appears as: “Ah, how shall fallen man,” and this has been repeated in other hymnals, including the Prot. Episco. Hymnal, 1874. It was rewritten for the F. Bk. Coll. by Bp. Onderdonk (q.v.). [J. J.]

How still and peaceful is the grave.

Hugh Blair. [Burial of the Dead.] 1st pub. as No. 39 in the Draft Scottish Trans. and Paraph., 1718, as a version of Job iii. 17-20, thus:—

How still and peaceful is the Grave!

The silent bed how blest!

The Weary rest.

There the free Pres’rer’s groans no more

Breath Life’s sleeping Load;

Mole in the Opposer’s cruel Voice,

And broke the Tyrant’s Rod.

There Slaves and Masters equally

And share the same Repose;

The Small and Great are there; and Friends

Now mingle with their Foes.”

In the draft of 1781 it appeared as No. 4, rewritten in 5 st. and again, with three lines only, that year by the Church of Scotland, and ascribed to Blair, and the alterations in 1781 to Cameron. It is given also in several modern hymnals in Great Britain and America. [J. M.]

How sweet and awful is the place.

In Dr. Alexander’s Augustina, H. Bk., 1849, later editions it appears as No. 41, and given as, “How sweetly awful is the place; and how sweet and sacred is the place.” [J. J.]

How sweet from crowded thrones.

J. Conder. [For open-air Service.] “Written for the Centenary Commemoration of White-Hill, July 30, 1835,” and pub. in the Evangelical Magazine of October the same year.

In 1854 it was also included in Conder’s Hymns of Praise, Prayer, &c., p. 162. Dr. Kennedy has given it in an unaltered form in his Hymns, Christ., 1863, No. 1442. Although remarkably well adapted for open-air services, its use is limited. [J. J.]

How sweetly flowed the Gospel’s sound.

Sir J. Bowring. [Jesus the Teacher.]
Pub. in his Matins and Vespers, &c., 2nd ed., 1824, p. 234, in 4 st. of 4 l., and headed, “Jesus teaching the people.” In 1837 it was included in Beard’s Unitarian Coll., No. 121, and subsequently in a number of hymn-books, especially modern American collections. Orig. text in Laudes Dominii, N. Y., 1834, with, in st. 1, l. 4, “And joy and gladness” for “And joy and reverence.” [J. J.]

How truly do I love Thee, Lord. [Ps. xxxii.] This paraphrase of the 18th Psalm in Kennedy’s Psalter, 1850, is rewritten from T. Sternhold, in the Old Version. Kennedy’s rendering is in 39 st. of 4 l. In his Hymnologia Christiana, 1863, a portion is given in two parts, as No. 376, Pt. ii. being, “The Lord Himself will light my lamp.” Another arrangement in C. U. is, “My God, the Rock in whom I trust.” It begins with st. ii. of the 1860 version. [J. J.]

How vast the treasure we possess.

I. Watts. [All things in Christ.] This hymn, as in Bickersteth’s Christ. Pedalody, enlarged ed., 1841, the Bap. Ps. & Hymn. 1858, and others, in 5 st. of 4 l., is a cento from two hymns appended to Watts’s Sermons, 1721-4, the first beginning, “How vast the treasure we possess;” and the second, “My soul, survey thy happiness.” In the cento, st. 1. is from the first, and st. ii.-v. are from the second of these two hymns. [J. J.]

How welcome was the call. Sir H. W. Baker. [Holy Matrimony.] Appeared in H. N. & M., 1852, and the revised ed., 1875. It has attained to great popularity, especially in America, and is a favourite marriage hymn.

How, William Walsham, D.D., b. of William Wybergh, How, Solicitor, Shrewsbury, was b. Dec. 13, 1823, at Shrewsbury, and educated at Shrewsbury School and Wadham College, Oxford (b.a. 1843). Taking Holy Ord in 1846, he became successively Curate of St. George’s, Kidderminster, 1846; and of Holy Cross, Shrewsbury, 1848. In 1851 he was preferred to the Rectory of Whittington, Diocese of St. Asaph, becoming Rural Dean of Holywell, and Hon. Can of the Cathedral in 1869. In 1879 he was appointed Rector of St. Andrew’s, Uxbridge, London, and was consecrated Suffragan Bishop for the East London, under the title of the Bishop of Bedford, and in 1888 Bishop of Wakefield. Bishop How is the author of the S. P. C. K. Commentary on the Four Gospels; Plain Words, Four Series; Plain Words for Children; Pastor in Parochii; Lectures on Pastoral Work; Three All Saints’ Sermons, and Other Poems, and numerous Sermons, &c. In 1854 was pub. Psalms and Hymns, Compiled by the Rev. Thomas Baker Morrell, M.A.,... and the Rev. William Walsham How, M.A. This was re-published in an enlarged form in 1864, and in it was added a Supplement in 1867. To this collection Bishop How contributed several hymns, and also to the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, of which he was joint editor, in 1871. The Bishop’s hymns in C. U. amount in all to nearly sixty.

Combining pure rhythm with great directness and simplicity, Bishop How’s compositions arrest attention more through a comprehensive grasp of the subject and the unexpected light thrown upon and warmth infused into facts and details usually shunned by the poet, than through glowing imagery and impassioned rhetoric. He has painted lovely images inwoven with tender thoughts, but these are few, and found in his least appreciated work. Those compositions which have held the firmest hold upon the Church, are simple, unadorned, but unutterasically practical hymns, the most popular of which, “O Jesus, Thou art standing...”; “For all the Saints who from their labours rest,” and “We give Thee but Thine own,” have attained to a foremost rank. His adaptations from other writings, as in the case from Bishop Ken, “Behold, the Master passeth by,” are good, and his Children’s hymns are useful and popular. Without any claims to rank as a poet, in the sense in which Cowper and Montgomery were poets, he has sung us songs which will probably outlive all his other literary works.

The more important of Bp. How’s hymns, including those already named, and “Lord, Thy children guide and keep”; “O Word of God Incarnate”; “This day at Thy creating word”; “Who is this so weak and helpless”; and others which have some special history or feature of interest, are annotated under their respective first lines. The following are also in C. U.:—

i. From Psalms & Hymns, 1854.

3. Lord Jesus, when we stand afar. Passiontide.
5. O Lord of Hosts, the earth is Thine. In time of War.

ii. From Psalms & Hymns, enlarged, 1864.

7. Lord, this day Thy children meet. Sunday’s Anniversary.

iii. From Supplement to the Psalms & Hymns, 1867.

11. With trembling awe the chosen three. Transfiguration.

iv. From Parish Magazine, 1871, and Church Hymns, 1871.

v. From the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871.

15. Great Gabriel sped on wings of light. Annunciation of the R. V. M.
16. O blest was he, whose earlier skill. St. Luke.
19. O Lord, it is a blessed thing. Weekdays.
20. O One with God the Father. Easter.

22. Rejoice, ye sons of men. Purification of the R. V. M.
23. Summer suns are glowing. Summer.
24. The year is swiftly waning. Autumn.
25. Thou art the Christ, O Lord. St. Peter.
26. To Thee our God we fly. National Hymn.
27. Upon the holy Mount they stood. Transfiguration and Church Visitors.

28. We praise Thy grace, O Saviour. St. Mark.
vi. From the S. P. C. K. Children's Hymns, 1872.

31. It is a thing most wonderful. Sunday S. Annv., p. 30.

Bishop How's hymns and sacred and secular pieces were collected and pub. as Poems and Hymns, 1886. The Hymns, 54 in all, are also published separately. [J. J.]

Howard, Caroline. [Gilman, C.]

Howitt, Mary, née Botham, second daughter of Samuel Botham, a member of the Society of Friends, was b. at Uttoxeter, Staffordshire, circ 1804, was married in 1823 to William Howitt, and d. Jan 30, 1888. Her publications have little in common with hynody. They include poems, novels, translations of Swedish and Danish works, and numerous contributions to magazines. In addition she was a joint author with her husband of a Literary and Romance of Northern Europe, 1852, &c. Her hymns include:

3. O spirit, free from earth. Death and Burial, 1841, p. 316. Dr. Martineau dates this poem 1834.

Mrs. Howitt also contributed "Let me suffer, let me drain" (The Willing Disciple), and "Clothe me with Thy saving grace" (The Cry of the spirit) to Lyra Britannica, 1867. [J. J.]

Hucul montem Calvariae. [Passion-tide.] This hymn is found in the Mainz G. B. (R. C.), 1691, p. 287, in 7 st., and is probably of much earlier date. It is also in Daniel, ii, p. 333; Neale's Hymn Eclesiastic, 1851, p. 124, and other sources. Tr. as:

1. Up the hill of Calvary. By J. M. Neale, in his Medicean Hys., 1851, p. 154, in 7 st. of 8. When included in Kennedy, 1863, it was divided into two parts, the second beginning with st. iv., "Have wealth and honour spread their wing."

2. To Calvary ascending. By H. Kyannon, pub. in his Occasional Hys., 1882, p. 70, in two parts, the second beginning with st. iv., "Divinitus nutatus" ("Art poor? in all thy toil...""). The two parts were given in Lyra Messianica, 1864, and as No. 108, in the People's H., 1867. [J. M.]

Huse of the rich unfolding morn. [Morning.] Written Sept. 20, 1822, and 1st pub. in his Christian Year, 1827, as the opening poem, in 16 st. of 4. From it the following centos have come into C. U.:—

1. Huse of the rich unfolding morn. (st. 1.) In a large number of hymn-books. Few collections.

2. Of timely happy, timely wise. (st. v.) This is in a large number of hymn-books. A few collections.

3. New very morning is the love. (st. vi.) This is in a large number of hymn-books. Few collections.

4. If our daily course our mind. (st. vii.) In several collections.

5. As for some dear familiar strain. (st. x.) In limited use.

The whole poem was given in Dr. Martineau's Hymns, &c., 1840; and again in his Hys. of Praise & Prayer, 1873. [J. J.]

Hughes, Thomas, M.A., b. at Donington Priory, near Newbury, Berks, Oct. 20, 1823, and educated at Rugby, and at Oriel Coll, Oxford (b. a. 1845), and called to the Bar, 1848. From 1865 to 1868 he was M. P. for Lambeth, and from 1868 to 1874 for Farnham. Appointed a Queen's Counsel in 1869. He has published several popular works, including Tom Brown's School Days, 1856; The Scouring of the White Horse, 1858; Tom Brown at Oxford, 1861, and others. His hymn—

"O God of Truth whose Living Word," Truth, 9 st. of 4, was given to the Hymn. Mrs. Norton for insertion in Lyra Britannica, 1832, p. 927, a collection published for a charitable purpose. It is a hymn of great force, and seems to gather up and embody the distinctive thoughts and feelings which have animated his life. It was probably suggested by Maurice's sermon on "The Word of God conquering by Sacrifice," in Doctrine of Sacrifice. It is usually given in an abridged form, as in the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1872 (st. 4), or W. G. Horder's Congregational Hys., 1874 (st. 7).

[W. G. H.]

Hulse, Richard, M.D., was b. at Abreken, 1795, and educated at the High School, Edinburgh, and the University of Edinburgh. Entering upon the medical profession, he practised at Dundee for some time, and then removed to Edinburgh in 1822. He d. June 10, 1867. He pub.: —

The Family Hymn-Book, being a Selection of Hymns from the best authors, interspersed with a few originals, and arranged for the purposes of Domestic Worship. By Richard Hulse, M.D., Edinburgh, 1828.

To this Sel. he contributed 29 hymns. Of these the following are given in Lyra Brit. 1867.

1. Ask, and ye shall get the blessing. The Merciful.

2. What is faith? It is to see. Faith, Hope, and Charity.

3. Ye worldly cares and themes, be gone. Saturday Evening.

The following cento is also from the Family H. Hys., 1825, No. 510:—

4. O ye who with the silent tear. Burial. It is st. 1, ill., slightly altered, and was given in Bucknall's Christ. Poems, London, 1836, as "Whittaker's," and in his son's Ps. & Hys., 1836, as "Hulse;" and in his son's Ps. & Hys., 1836, as "Hulse," and in his son's Ps. & Hys., 1836, as "Hulse," which is probably a misprint for "Hull." [J. J.]

Hujus diei gloria. [St. James the Great.] A hymn for the Festival of St. James the Great, July 25. The text, in 8 st. of 4, is given by Moore, No. 697, from a Rheinanms, of the 11th cent., from an 11th cent. Ms. at Stuttgart, and from later sources. It is also found in Daniel, i, No. 349, with a further note at iv. p. 176; in Hackenroth, i, No. 179, &c. St. v. 1. 3 ("Jacto sibi Christophoro") has been interchanged as referring to St. John the Evangelist, who was presente with a bone on Jesus' bosom (St. John xiii. 23). Both in the Breviaries of Rome, Paris, Lyon, &c., St. Christopher is commemorated along with St. James at Lauds on July 25; while in the Missale rite only St. Christopher and his companions are noticed on that day. A. fr. by Dr. Littledale, "May this blessed day, O Christ the King," was pub. in the Church Times, July 16, 1861; and again in the People's H., 1897.

[W. A. S.]
Hull, Amelia Matilda, daughter of William Thomas Hull, was b. at Marpool Hall, Exmouth, cir. 1825. Her publications include:—

1. Hymn by A. M. H., South Petherton, N.D. [1850];
2. Heart Melodies, 1864; (The Silver Trumpet Answered; (4) Fruit from the Tree of Life; (5) A Hymn Book for Children; (6) Royal Musings concerning the King and His Work, N.D. [1844].

Miss Hull also contributed 22 hymns to Miss H. W. Soltan's Pleasant Hymns for Boys and Girls, N.D. [1869]. From this collection her two popular hymns are taken:—

1. It is true as I am told. The Good Shepherd.
2. There is life for a look at the Crucified One. Life in Christ.

Hull, William Winstanley, M.A., s. of John Hull, M.D., an eminent physician in Manchester, was b. at Blackburn, March 15, 1781, and educated at Macleodfield and Brazenose, Oxford, where he took a first-class Litt. Hum. in 1814, and subsequently became a Fellow. At Oxford he made lifelong friendships with some, and acquaintance with most of the foremost men of his time, including Arnold, Keble, Whately, Milman, Rickards, Card, Newman, Stanley, and others. He entered Lincoln's Inn and was called to the Chancery Bar. He took a prominent part in London and at Oxford in the religious movements of the day. On retaining from the Bar he resided first at Tickwood Hull, Much Wenlock, and then at Knowle, Haleswood, Dorset, d. Aug. 28, 1873. He published several prose works, including Church Inquiry, 1828; Reasons for continuing to Protestants the whole Legislature of Great Britain and Ireland, 1829; Dispute of the Atonement, 1831; Defence of Dr. Hampden, 1836, &c. His hymns and poems, chiefly distinguished by their earnest piety, were:—

1. A Collection of Prayers for Household Use, with a few Hymns and Other Poems, Oxford, J. Parker, 1828;
2. Poems on Various Subjects, 1832;
3. A Collection of Hymns for General Use, Submitted to the Consideration of the Governors of the United Church of England and Ireland, London, Hatchard, 1833. This work is also known as A Churchman's Hymn, the title being printed on the cover; (4) A second edition of his 1828 Col. of Prayers, &c., London, Seelys, 1851. Of these No. 1 and 2 contained 89 of his original hymns and poems. No. 3 contained 296 hymns, of which 88 were original and signed in black "a." In No. 4 the texts are altered in several instances, and additional hymns and poems are also given.

Very few of Hull's hymns were repeated in other collections until 1858, when Dr. Kennedy included the following in his Hymnario: Christian. The bracketed dates are those of publication. Several of the first lines are altered from the originals, and sometimes additions are also given:—

1. A car of fire is on the air. (1833) Death and Burial.
2. A Comfort, people of the Lord: fore He. (1828)
6. Lord God, to Thee we pray. (1826) National Hymn. Altered form of "God save the King."
7. Lord, let Thy work be done. (1833) Missions.
9. O Thou, the woman's promised Seed. (1833)
10. Once He came, how meek and lowly. (1829) Advent.

Humphreys, Joseph

11. Our hearts and worship Thee, Lord, our voices proclaim. (1833) Blessedness of God's People.
12. Raise up some warning voice, O Lord. (1833) Lamentation.
13. Son of God, we know before Thee. (1851) Christ's constraining Love.
14. The day must come, the Judgment day. (1833) Adoration.
15. The sinful earth was sunk in woe. (1828) Christmas.
16. This darkness all, and dreariness. (1833) Lamentation.
17. To the God of all creation, (1833) Divine Worship.
18. We have a name to live. (1833) Life in Christ.
19. We have heard the solemn story. (1833) Easter.
20. We know the Spirit's will. (1833) The Holy Spirit, the Guide.
21. When on the blazed mount the stone. (1833) Giving of the Commandments.
22. Ye that would worship the Lord. (1833) Ps. c.

These hymns and others by the author are worthy of the attention of hymn-book compilers.

Humble souls who seek salvation.

J. Fawcett. [Follow the Lamb.] The earliest date to which we have traced this hymn (although probably it previously appeared in a magazine with which we are acquainted) is in John Fellows' Hymn on Believers' Baptism, 1773, No. 25, in 5 of 8 1/2. It next appeared in John Fawcett's Hymnario, &c., 1785, No. 117, with the heading "Invitation to follow the Lamb, Matt. iii. 15," and the following note:—

"The Author lays claim to this hymn, tho' it has appeared under another name; he hopes the insertion of it, and the following ["Ye saints, with one accord"] will give no offence to those of his friends who are differently minded, as to the subject to which they refer."

With this note before us, we have no hesitation in ascribing this hymn to John Fawcett. Its use is mainly confined to America. [J. J.]

Humbly, my God, with Thee I walk.

J. Montgomery. [The walk of Faith.] Written "at Dinsdale Hotel, Sept. 14, 1835," and sent in ms. to several persons from time to time (N. Mes.). It was given in his Original Hymnario, 1853, in 6 st. of 4 L, as No. 167, and is in C. U. through a few collections. [J. J.]

Humphreys, Cecil Frances. [Alexander, G. F.]

Humphreys, Joseph, s. of Asher Humphreys, minister at Burford, Oxfordshire, was b. at Burford, Oct. 28, 1729, and educated at a grammar school at Fairford, and at an academy for the training of young men for the ministry in London. From the latter he was expelled, Dec. 25, 1739, because of his attachment to Whitefield. For a short time he associated with the Wesleys, but eventually joined G. Whitefield, and subsequently preached at Bristol, London, and Deptford. He d. in London (date unknown), and was buried in the Moravian Cemetery at Chelsea.

He was a contributor to Whitefield's Christian History (1741-1748), 1743, &c., and pub., 1742, An Ac-
Hunter, William, D.D., of John Hunter, was b. near Ballymoney, County Antrim, Ireland, May 24, 1811. He removed to America in 1817, and entered Madison College in 1830. For some time he edited the Conference Journal, and the Christian Advocate. In 1835 he was appointed Professor of Hebrew in Alleghany College: and subsequently Minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, at Alliance, Stark Country, Ohio. He d. in 1877. He published: Ministrel of Zion, 1845; Select Melodies, 1851; and Songs of Devotion, 1859. His hymns, over 125 in all, appeared in these works. Some of these have been translated into various Indian languages. The best known are:

2. Joyfully, joyfully onward I [we] move. Pressing towards Heaven. This hymn is usually dated 1843. It was given in his Ministrel of Zion, 1845, and Select Melodies, 1851, and his Songs of Devotion, 1859. It has attained to great popularity. Two forms of the hymn are current, the original, where the 2nd st. begins “Friends fondly cherish, have passed on before”; and the altered form, where it reads: “Teachers and Scholars have passed on before.” Both texts are given in W. F. Stevenson’s Hymns for Church and Home, 1873, Nos. 79, 80, &c.

3. The [My] heavenly home is bright and fair. Pressing towards Heaven. From his Ministrel of Zion, 1845, into the Cottage Melodies, New York, 1859, and later collections.

4. The Great Physician now is near. Christ the Physician. From his Songs of Devotion, 1859.

5. Who shall forbid our grateful [chastened] woes? This hymn, written in 1843, was pub. in his Ministrel of Zion, 1845, and in his Songs of Devotion, 1859. [F. M. B.]

Huntingdon’s Hymn-Books, Countess of. The history of the hymn-book issued from time to time by the Countess with which Lady Huntingdon’s name is associated is very involved and obscure. Apart from the rarity of the original editions, such information is widely in content. There is no absolute proof that any edition before that of 1743 was collected by her ladyship, while her biographer states that her brother-in-law, W. Shirley (q.v.), assisted her in the compilation of that edition. If so, such co-operation dates from 1770, as in the Bath edition of that year Shirley’s “Sweet the moments, rich in blessing,” first appears. Whether before that date this work of compilation was entered upon by Lady Huntingdon is unknown. The connection has never issued an edition of the authorised book with authors’ names, and it is impossible to assign the parts Shirley and Harriett Huntingdon took in altering the hymns of others found therein. It remains therefore for us to give details of the various editions of the Countess’s hymn-books, and to add thereto such facts of interest as have come to our knowledge. The various editions are:

L. A Collection of Hymns, London, Printed for William Lee at Lewes, in Sussex, MDCCLXXXV. This contains 498 “Society Hymns” and 15 “Doxologies,” and is numbered, and 69 “Congregational Hymns.” This edition apparently contained no originals. It was reprinted in 1787. 12mo edition was also issued the same year. Many of the Inghamite and Moravian hymns were withdrawn in favour of Watts and the Wesleyans.

II. The Collection of Hymns sung in the Countess of Huntingdon’s Chapel, Bristol, Printed by T. Mills, Bookseller, and sold at his shop in Westmoreland Street, Bath, 1738. This contained the Preface, as in No. I, and the first 8 numbers of “Society Hymns” (1 unnumbered) and Doxologies, 13 “Children’s Hymns,” and 91 “Congregational Hymns” with the “Doxologies” numbered as 92. A 12mo edition was also issued the same year. Many of the Inghamite and Moravian hymns were withdrawn in favour of Watts and the Wesleyans.

III. In 1770 appeared the third edition, printed at Bath by S. Haward for Thomas Mills, and sold at his circulating Library, King’s Head Square (Bath). This contains 240 hymns, including several added by W. W. Shirley for the first time (see Shirley, W. W.).

IV. A Collection of Hymns sung in the Countess of Huntingdon’s Chapels, Bath, Printed by T. Mills, Bookseller, and sold at his shop in Westmoreland Street, Bath... This Hymn Book is sold in Bath by W. O. only. In this edition the hymns are arranged alphabetically by the names of the authors, and are divided into sections. The date of this edition is not certain, but it must be very near to if not absolutely 1784. It contains additional original hymns by W. W. Shirley (q.v.). Hymns by Cowper, Grigg, and W. Williams are introduced for the first time.

V. A Collection of Hymns sung in the Countess of Huntingdon’s Chapels in St. James’s, London. Printed for William Bulcombe, S. D. The arrangement of the hymns in this edition differs from the former editions. This seems to have been No. I, revised and altered.

VI. The Collection of Psalms and Hymns sung in the Countess of Huntingdon’s Chapels in Lincolnshire, Gainsborough, Printed by J. Mosely, 1778. This contains 399 hymns, and some “Doxologies.” It is one of the usual small Octavo shape of the Huntingdon hymn-books, and apparently nothing original, and was probably a collection independently of the usual book.

VII. These varying editions took the definite shape which has been since retained in A Select Collection of Hymns to be universally sung in all the Countess of Huntingdon’s Chapels, Collected by her Ladyship, London, MDCCLXXX. This contained 289 hymns, several Doxologies, and the words of the Choruses in Handel’s Messiah. To this Supplement were added in 1796 and 1798. In later editions the Choruses are omitted.

VIII. Before the issue of the authorised book of 1780 the Countess allowed her Preachers to make their own collections if they so desired. Thomas Maxfield’s Collection, containing hymns never before published, appeared in 1766, 1767, and 1778; the Collection of Herbert Taylor and W. Jones (to which Cooper and Newton contributed) in 1779; and a Collection for Cumberland Street, Shoreditch, together with others which might be named.

IX. Since the issue of the authorised edition of 1780 various independent Supplements have been published as an addition to Watts’s popular Hymn Book from the best authors, and Various Originals: extended as a Supplement to the Countess of Huntingdon’s Hymn Book. Selected by Thomas Young, Minister to the Church of Newington (1780), and Psalms and Hymns Selected by the Rev. Joseph Serina, A.B., of Trinity Colledge, Dublin, Minister of the late Countess of Huntingdon’s Chapel, Brighton (and dedicated “To the Congregation”), 1842.

T. Hawkes’s (q.v.) Carmina Christi; or, Hymns to the Huntingdon, Selina, née Shirley. Countess of, daughter of Washington, Earl Ferrers, was b. Aug. 24, 1707; married to Theophilus Hastings, 9th Earl of Huntingdon, June, 1728; and d. in London, June 17, 1791. At an early age she received serious religious impressions, which continued with her, and ruled her conduct through life. She was a member of the first Methodist Society, in Fetter Lane, London, and the first Methodist Conference was held at her house in June, 1714. Her sympathies, however, were with the Calvinism of G. Whitefield, and when the breach took place between Whitefield and Wesley she joined the former. Her money was freely expended in chapel building, in the founding of Trevecca College, South Wales (now Cheshunt), and in the support of her preachers. A short time before her death the Connection which is known by her name was founded; and at her death it numbered more than sixty chapels. For use in these chapels she compiled A Select Collection of Hymns, details of which and its various editions are given under Huntingdon's Hymn-Books. Countess of. Her own part in hymn-writing is most uncertain. The hymn, “Come, Thou Fount of every blessing,” and “O when my righteous Judge shall come” (q.v.), have been specially claimed for her, but upon insufficient testimony. No mention of these hymns as being by her is made in her Life and Times, 1839.

Miller says, “although the Countess was not much known as a hymn-writer, yet it is proved beyond doubt that she was the author of a few hymns of great excellence” (Singers & Songs, 1859, p. 183); but he neither names the hymns, nor submits any evidence. It is most uncertain that she ever wrote a hymn; and it is quite clear that upon reliable evidence not one has yet been ascertained to be of her composing. Her history and that of her Connexion are elaborately set forth in The Life and Times of Selina, Countess of Huntingdon, Loud., Painter, 1839.

Huntingdon, Frederic Dan, D.D., was b. at Hadley, Massachusetts, in 1819, and graduated at Amherst College, 1839, and Cambridge Divinity School, 1842. From 1812 to 1835 he was an Unitarian Minister in Boston; and from 1835 Professor of Christian Morals, and University Preacher, at Harvard. In 1839 he received Episcopal Ordination. He was for some time a Rector in Boston; and in 1869 he was consecrated Bishop of Central New York. With Dr. F. D. Hedge he edited the Unitarian Hymns for the Church of Christ, Boston, 1853. This collection contains three of his hymns:

1. O Love Divine, lay on me burdens if Thou with Supplication.
2. O Thou, in Whose Eternal Name. Ordination.

The Cento, “Father, Whose heavenly kingdom ics,” in the Hymns of the Spirit, Boston, 1864, is from No. 2. Dr. Huntington has also edited, with Dr. Hedge, Eliaim: Hymns of Holy Refreshment, a collection of Sacred Poetry. From this work his hymn for Burial, “So heaven is gathering one by one,” is taken. [F. M. B.]

Huntingdon, Emily. [Miller, E.]

Huntley, Lydia. [Sigourney, L.]

Huphton, Job, was b. in 1762, at a small village near Burton-on-Trent. He was brought up to work at a forge, but after his conversion through the preaching of the Rev. John Bradford, one of Lady Huntington’s ministers, whom he heard at Walsall, he began to preach; and after a few months at Trevecca College, was himself employed by Lady Huntington for some years as one of her itinerating ministers. Having changed his views upon the subject of Baptism, he became, in 1794, pastor of the Baptist church at Claxton, in Norfolk, where he laboured with much success for many years. He d. Oct. 19, 1849.

Huphton wrote much both in prose and verse, his compositions appearing in the Gospel Magazine under the signatures of “Ebeneser,” “Elijah,” and “J. H. n.” His prose writings were collected and pub. in 1843, under the title The Truth as it is in Jesus. In 1841, D. Bede-wick reprinted his Hymns and Spiritual Poems, with a brief memoir.

Of his 22 hymns three only are in C. U. —
3. Jesus, omnipotent to save. Lent.

The first of these, “Come ye,” &c. (q.v.), in its altered form by Dr. Neale, is in extensive use, the rest are in a few hymn-books only. Huphton had a bold and vigorous imagination and great command of language. If in early life he had enjoyed better educational advantages, he would probably have attained to eminence as a poet.

W. R. S.

Hurditch, Charles Russell, was b. in Exeter, Dec. 20, 1839. In 1854 he underwent a spiritual change which led him subsequently to undertake religious work in some of the villages of Devonshire, and afterwards to succeed the late Mr. Henry Hall as the Secretary of the Young Men’s Christian Association, Stafford Street, London. In 1865 he published The London H. Bk. for Prayer Meetings and Special Services. This was revised in 1860. In 1873 he also published The Enlarged London H. Bk., a Collection of Hymns for Public, Social, and Private Use. Of the smaller work more than half a million copies have been sold; and of the enlarged book the 86th thousand was issued in 1881. To the first (1865) he contributed Nos. 10 and 11 given below: the rest were published in the second book (1873).

2. Arm of the Lord, awake! Exalt the Saviour slain.
4. He dies! He dies! The Son of God most holy. Good Friday.
5. Hear the gospel’s joyful sound. Invitation.
6. Jesus, do Thou my vision fill, Jesus All in All. Holy Communion.
HURLBURT, WILLIAM H.

10. Lord Jesus, we pray. Second Advent desired.
13. O sacred Name! O Name of power. Name of Jesus.
16. Only Jesus would I see. Jesus only.
17. Reject, reject, ye saints, reject. Rejoicing in the Lord.
18. Salvation's song be given. Praise to Jesus.
19. Soon shall these eyes, my Saviour, see. Praise to Jesus.
20. Soon shall we find our journey over. Nearing Heaven.
22. The atoning blood is flowing. Redemption.
23. These supplications hear. Lent.
24. Till we meet These in glory. Constancy desired.
25. We bless Thy precious Name. Name of Jesus.
26. What wondrous grace in Christ we see. Christ's Humility.
27. Ye dying sons of men; Christ calls, &c. Invitation.

Of these hymns, No. 1 was written as a companion hymn to "Come, let us all unite and sing. God is love;" No. 2, "about 1839;" No. 11, when he received the invitation to proceed to London, as noted above; No. 15, for the baptism of his youngest son; and No. 25 for a Conference which was held in London. All Mr. Hurditch's hymns are characterized by great simplicity and earnestness. [J. J.]

Hurlburt, William Henry, b. at Charlestown, South Carolina, July 23, 1827, and educated at Harvard. He also studied at Berlin and Paris, and Rome. In 1848 he contributed the following hymns to Longfellow and Johnson's Unitarian Book of Hymns:

1. My God, in life's most doubtful hour. Faith desired, or, the Power of Trust.
2. We pray for truth and peace. Faith desired.
3. We will not weep, for God is standing by us. The Might of Faith. [F. M. B.]

Hurn, William, b. at Breecles Hall, Norfolk, Dec. 21, 1754. His education was superior, enabling him, in 1777 to take the post of classical tutor in the Free Grammar School, Dedham, Essex. In 1779 he entered Cambridge, but resigning his commission in the army, in 1780, he was ordained by Bishop Young of Norwich, in 1781. After holding various curacies, including Brighton Broome, Lowestoft, &c., he was presented in 1790 to the rectory of Debenham, Suffolk. In October, 1798, he resigned his Vicarage, and in April, 1802, undertook the pastorate of the Congregational chapel at Woodbridge, in the same county. This he continued to his death, Oct. 9, 1829. His poetical works included:

(1) Health Hall, a descriptive poem, 1777; (2) Leaves of a Lyric Poem, 1774; (3) Laughter in Affairs of Peace, a Lyric Poem, 1792; and (4) Memoirs & Hymns, the greater part of which, and the selected compositions altered with a view to theologiae & Doctrinae. General Usefulness. By W. H., Vicar of Debenham, Ipswich. 4th ed., 1813. Hurn, Vicar of Debenham, 41 hymns, and a diction. Of these this contained 42 in his

HUTTON, JAMES 545

From the first edition of Hurn's collection the following hymns are in C. U.:

3. The first of Truth His Church has blest. God's love of the Church.

A biographical notice of Hurn was given in the Evangelical Magazine, 1829, and his Brief Memorials were pub. in 1831. [J. J.]

Husband, Edward was educated at St. Aidan's College, Birkenhead. Taking Holy Orders in 1866, he was successively Curate of Altrincham and Folkestone; and in 1878 Vicar of St. Michael and All Angels, Folkestone. In 1874 Mr. Husband pub. The Mission Hymnal, in which appeared his hymns as follows:

1. A lion's path, I loved thee long. Rest in Jesus.
2. And shun, Thou ask me, dearest Lord. Christ's Invitation. "Follow Me."
3. I must have Jesus only. Jesus only desired.
4. Sweet Blest, dear name of our souls. The Blood of Jesus.

These hymns are very simple, earnest, and impassioned; and bear a great resemblance to Faber's compositions. [J. J.]

Hushed the storm that lately raved. Archbishop E. W. Benson. [The Annunciation.] Written for and 1st pub. in the Willington College H. H., 1860, and also included in the same year the Rev. J. Moutrie's Rugby Parish Church Collection, and subsequently in other collections. [J. J.]

Hushed was the evening hymn. J. D. Burns. [The Child Samuel.] Pub. in his Evening Hymn (a small book of Prayers and Hymns), 1857, in 5 st. of 61. It is one of the most popular of the author's hymns, and is very tender, and worthy of the position to which it has attained. [J. J.]

Huss, John. [Various.]

Hutton, Ulrich von, was b. at his ancestral castle of Steckelburg near Schlichten, on the Kinzig (Hesse-Cassel), April 21, 1488, and d. on the Island of Ueufa, in the Lake of Zurich, about the end of August, 1523.

He is better known as a herald of the Reforma, as a free lancer, and as a satirist (he was one of the authors of the famous Epistolae obsequiarum divorum, than as a hymn writer. His complete works, German and Latin, appeared in 7 vols. at Leipzig, 1601, ff. One piece is "Ich habe gewagt mit meinen." [Petronius.] This piece is an appeal to popular sympathy for his cause, and he asked by his motto, "Ich habe gewagt" (I have ventured it), was 1st printed on a broad sheet in 1523 (hence in Wackernagel, vol. III, p. 364, in 7 st.), and soon became a favourite song of the early adherents of the Reformation. It has been tr. as "I have ventured it, knowing what I risk'd," in Madame de Poëte's Poetes et Poétes de Gérmén, 1842, vol. I, p. 364. (2) "I've ventured it of purpose free," by Miss Winkworth, 1869, p. 99. [M. M.]

Hutton, James, s. of a clergyman and cousin to Sir Isaac Newton, was b. in London, Sept. 3, 1715, and followed for some years the trade of a bookseller. In 1739 he visited the Moravian settlement at Herrnhut, where he became acquainted with Count Zinzendorf. He retired from business in 1745, and was ordained a deacon of the Moravian Church in 1749. He d. May 3, 1795. He contributed several hymns to the Moravian H. H., 1754.
All his hymns were included in an Appendix to his Memoirs, pub. by Daniel Buham in 1836. In the English Moravian H. Bk., 1886, the following hymns are by Hutton:—
1. Besprinkle with thy blood my heart, Holy Islamabad (from the Moravian H. Bk., No. 184. It begins "Stream thro' the bottom of my soul.")
4. How shall a young man cleanse his way? (1764) Holy Scripture.
5. Teach me yet more of Thy best ways. Good Friday. Sometimes "O teach us more." (M. H. Bk., 1742.) [J. J.]

Hyde, Abby Bradley, was b. at Stockbridge, Massachusetts, Sept. 28, 1799, and married to the Rev. Lavius Hyde, of Salisbury, Mass., Sept. 28, 1818. She d. at Andover, April 7, 1872. Her first poem, an Address to Mr. Wolfe, the Jewish missionary, appeared in a New Haven paper in 1822 or 1823, and from it Dr. L. Bacon (q.v.) took two hymns for his Hymns & Sac. Songs for the Monthly Concert, Andover, 1823. These hymns have merit, but are not now in C. U. Amahel Nettleton included 9 pieces by her in his Village Hymns, 1824, and 94 more were given in the revised and enlarged ed. of the same, 1851. An additional hymn appeared in Nason's Congregational H. Bk., 1857. Of those hymns the following are still in C. U.:—
1. Ah, what can I a sinner do! Lent. From Nettleton's Village Hymns, 1824, in 5 st. of 4 l., into a few collections.
2. And canst thou, sinner, slay! Grieve not the Spirit. From Nettleton's Village Hymns, 1824, in 4 st. of 4 l., into a great number of American collections, and a few in G. Britain.
4. Dear Saviour, if those lambs should stray. Prayer on behalf of children. In Nettleton's Village Hymns, 1824, in 4 st. of 4 l. A touching hymn, and widely used.
5. Say, sinner, hath a voice within Exhortation to Repentance. In a letter to Mr. Nason, dated July 16, 1857, Mrs. Hyde says that this hymn "was written down from my lips by a young sister, when I was not able to hold up my head from the pillow." It appeared in Nettleton's Village Hymns, 1824, in 6 st. of 4 l., and is in extensive use.

All Mrs. Hyde's pieces in the Village Hymns are signed "Hyde." [F. M. B.]

Hymn of Justinian. Greek Hymnody, § 2. 10.

Hymnarium. Before the complex office book known as the Breviary assumed its present general order and shape at the close of the 11th and beginning of the 12th centuries, its various contents were distributed in separate volumes. One of these volumes was the Hymnarium, Hymnale, or Hymnal, which contained the hymns proper to the various sacred Seasons and Festivals, or assigned to the several Hours of the day. We are using the word Hymnarium in this article in the ancient meaning, and without reference to the many collections of hymns in modern times to which we ordinarily attach now the title of Hymnary.

In the first part of this article we shall enumerate, with a necessarily brief description of them, certain ancient and important ms. Hymnaria which have descended to us, together with two ancient Service Books, miscellaneous in character, but available to form the basis of the Hymnarium and then give a complete list of the first lines of all the Hymns. In the second part we add the first lines of such later hymns as did not become incorporated in the authorized Breviaries of after times, and are therefore not included in the first lines of hymns previously given under the article Breviary. This second list also includes a few more first lines of hymns drawn from medieval sources other than Hymnaria, for with this it would be difficult to find a place elsewhere. In such cases a special reference is given to the press mark of the ms.

Sometimes a Hymnarium or Collection of Hymns is found as an independent volume. It was frequently (see the ms. described below) appended to a Psalter; and occasionally to an Antiphonary.

Part I.—In compiling the first list of first lines of hymns an exhaustive use has been made of the following ms. Hymnaria and Service-books:

(a) The Durham Hymnary. A Collection of Latin Hymns used in the Anglo-Saxon Church, with an interlinear Anglo-Saxon gloss. The ms. is of the 11th cent., and is now preserved in the Library of the Dean and Chapter of Durham, B. II. 52. It was probably written in the diocese of Winchester, c. 1050. It was printed in 1851 by the Surtsey Society, forming vol. xxvii. of its publications, and is referred to in the annotations in this Dictionary as the Latin Hymnus of the Anglo-Saxon Church, 1851.

(b) Cottamia MS. Julius A. iv. An 11th century Latin Hymnarium. The text of each hymn is given in its metrical form, and is followed by a prose paraphrase with an interlinear Anglo-Saxon gloss. The hymns extend to fol. 72, and are followed by Canticles. (This ms. is quoted in this Dictionary as Jul. A. iv. A late 10th century Calendar is bound up with and prefixed to this Hymnarium, which has perhaps led to this Hymnarium itself being sometimes erroneously assigned to the 10th century. This ms. has also two hymns without glosses: Adsum, o socii, at f. 17, in a hand of the 12th cent., and O generis aeterni, at f. 89, in a hand of the end of the 11th cent.

(c) Cottamia MS. Vesprean D. vi. An early 11th century Latin Hymnarium. Each hymn is followed by a prose version of the same, accompanied by an interlinear Anglo-Saxon translation. The Hymnarium extends to fol. 124, and is followed by Canticles, which extend to the end of the volume, and which are duplicated in a similar way. At folio 156, 156 are two hymns ("Aeterni Patris" and "Lauda mater") in a hand of the 12th cent., and one ("Requiescat in pace") in a hand of the 14th or later. See tempus idoneum, at f. 122, in a hand of late 12th cent. (This ms. is quoted in this Dictionary as Vespr. D. vi.).

(d) Harleian MS., 2061. This is a Collectarium or incipit Breviary, without the Psalter. It was written in the 11th cent., and once belonged to Leufric, first Bishop of Exeter, 1050-72. The later history of this ms. is given in the Introduction to the Leufric Missal, 1833, p. xxvii. The Collectarium occupies the first part of the ms. (f. 1-124), and is followed by the Hymnarium (f. 218-256). The Sequences of this ms. are indexed under Sequences. (This ms. is quoted in this Dictionary as Harl. 2061).

(e) The Antiphonary of Bangor. A 7th century Irish Service Book, originally belonging to the Monastery of Bangor, County Down. It is proved from internal evidence to have been written about 680-91, during the lifetime of Aelfric Cramen. It is now preserved in the Ambrosian Library at Milan. It has been printed in Muratori's Anecdota Bibliographica Ambrosiana, vol. iv. pp. 121-139; and in Migne's Patrologia, c. 1858. It has no claim to the title of Antiphonary, but it is a collection of miscellaneous devotional pieces, including several hymns.
(f) Book of Hymns; or, Liber Hymnorum. An Irish ms. collection of devotional pieces, including a few hymns. Two copies of this ms. are in existence, both now at Dublin, and both written about the 11th century. The Trinity College (Dublin) copy has been partly published by the Irish Archæological and Celtic Society, vol. xvii. It is being edited by Dr. J. H. Todd.

(g) C.C.C. 391. This is a Psalter written soon after A.D. 1064, and now at Corpus Christi College (C.C.C.), Cambridge (Ms. No. 391). It seems to have been written at Winchester and the text to have passed to Worcester before it fell into Archb. Parker's hands. The Psalter is followed by a complete Hymnarium, and that again by a complete Collectarum, or Incipit Breviary, with miscellaneous devotions at its close.

(h) Add. 30851. This ms. is of the 11th cent., and is now in the British Museum. It is a Service Book of the ancient Church of Spain (Monasterie), and contains a Psalter followed by Scripture canticles; then a Hymnarium; and lastly, miscellaneous Offices with hymns.

Some leaves of the Hymnarium are missing, and so, e.g. "Psalmat altitudine," begins imperfectly on f. 122; and "Hierusalem gloriosa," begins imperfectly on f. 132. The hymns found among the Offices at the end are marked in the following list as *.

(i) Junius 35. This is one of the ms. bequeathed by Francis Junius to the Bodleian Library. It was probably written c. 990 A.D.; and contains 26 hymns with an interlinear Frisian gloss. Junius made several of these hymns (e.g. Junius 116). A good ed. by E. Stevens, from the original ms., was pub. as Die Murhacker Hymnen, 1874.

(k) Harl. 2028. This ms., in the British Museum, is of the 12th cent., and contains a complete Hymnarium, being of later date than the ms. 2-4, it is not cited in the case of hymns found in three or more of the earlier mss.

In the following list of hymns the letters a, b, c, d, e, f, g, h, i, k, indicate the ms. named above in which they are found. The orthography has been modernised.

Part II.

In this second part are given the first lines of hymns which are not included in the first list of this article, and which are not (with a few exceptions) in the lists given under the article Breviary. In compiling this second list the following MSS. are principally cited:—

1. Ashmole MS. 1525. This is in the Bodleian, and formerly belonged to the monks of Canterbury. It is of the 13th cent., and contains a number of MSS. collected in a complete Hymnarium for the ecclesiastical year.

2. Ashmole MS. 1532. Also in the Bodleian. A Cistianick Bronholmian MS., and of a similar nature as (q), but of the early 14th cent.

3. Additions, 18,501. A MS. in the British Museum. This includes a Hymnarium of the 12th cent.

4. Cambridge University Library, M. iv. 11. This is a paper Hymnarium of the beginning of the 16th cent.

5. Liturg. Miss. 370. This is in the Bodleian. It is a Psalter with a Hymnarium of the 13th cent., apparently written for use at Padua.

6. Harleian MS. 4664. A ms. of the beginning of the 14th cent., now in the British Museum. It contains a Hymnarium apparently written for use at Durham.

7. Arundel, 340. A MS. of the 14th cent., now in the British Museum, and containing a Hymnarium.

The following list also includes a number of first lines drawn from mediaeval sources other than the above, for which it would be difficult to find a place elsewhere. In such cases references are given to the press marks of the MS. The MSS. marked add. are in the British Museum. Those marked Laud, Rawlinson, Duplex, Ashmole, Cumnor, are in the Bodleian. Those marked c.e.c. are in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge.

Hymn. of the Anglo-Saxon Church (Surtsey Society, 1851), is printed from an 11th cent. MS. at Durham, in II st. of 4 l. (B. iii., 32 f. 25 b). In an 11th cent. The hymns in the above lists are mostly of unknown authorship. They are of varying merit, many, especially those in the second list, hardly rising above the level of doggerel. Many of them have never been printed and hence have escaped observation, and are not to be found in the collections of Daniel and Mone. The index of first lines may be of use to persons who are interested in the obscure Latin hymns of the later middle ages. An examination of other MSS. than those specified as made use of in this article would no doubt swell the list. Private libraries and the libraries of separate colleges at Oxford and Cambridge remain to be searched for such a purpose. [F. E. W. and J. M.]
I gave my life for thee. Frances R. Havergal. [Christ desiring the entire devotion of His Servants.] Miss M. V. G. Havergal's ms. account of this hymn is:

In F. R. H.'s ms. copy, she gives this title, "I did this for thee; what hast thou done for Me?" placed under a picture of our Saviour in the study of a German divine. On Jan. 10, 1858, she had come in weary, and sitting down she read the motto, and the lines of her hymn flashed upon her. She wrote them in pencil on a scrap of paper. Reading them over she thought them so poor that she tossed them on the fire, but they fell untouched. Showing them some months after to her father, he encouraged her to preserve them, and wrote the true lines specially for them. The hymn was printed on a leaflet, 1859, and in Good Words, Feb., 1860. Pub. also in The Ministry of Song, 1869. Though from Spiritual Troubles." It was repeated in D. Seelwig's reprint, 1859, p. 43. From this hymn the cento, " God's furnace doth in Zion stand," in Alexander's Augustine H. Bk. 1849 and 1860, Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk. 1861, and others, is taken. It begins with st. iv. The cento in the American Unitarian Hym. & Tune Bk. for the Church and Home, Boston, 1868. "The world can neither give nor take," is composed thus:—st. i. from Mason's "My tidings, my reconcile'd God"; and st. ii. iii. from this hymn.

I thirst, but not as once I did. W. Cooper. [Thirsting for God.] Given in the Olney Hymns, 1779. Bk. ii., No. 61, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed, "My soul thirsteth for God." It is found in several American collections, and in a few also in G. Britain.

I thirst, Thou wounded Lamb of God. [Union with Christ.] This hymn, by John Wesley, first appeared in Hys. & Sacred Poems, 1740 (P. Works, 1868–72, vol. 1 p. 765), thus,—

1. "I thirst, Thou wounded Lamb of God, To wash me in thy cleansing Blood, To dwell within thy Wounds; then Pain Is sweet, and Life or Death is Gain.
2. "Take this poor Heart, and let it be For ever closed to all but Thee! Seal Thou my Breast, and let me wear That Pledge of Love for ever there.
3. "How blest are they who still abide, Close shelter'd in thy bleeding Side! Who Life and Strength from hence derive, And by Thee move, and in Thee live.
4. "What are our Works, but Sin and Death, Till Thou thy quick'ning spirit breathe? Thou giv'st the Power thy grace to move; Wondrous Grace! O boundless Love!
5. "How can it be, Thou heavenly King, That Thou shouldest us to glory bring; Make Slaves the Partners of thy Throne, Deck'd with a never-failing Crown!
6. "Hence our Hearts melt, our Eyes overflow, Our Words are lost; nor will we know, Nor will we think of ought beside, My Lord, my Love is crucify'd!
7. "Ah! Lord, enlarge our scanty Thoughts, To know the Wonders Thou hast wrought; Unloose our stammering Tongues, to tell Thy Love immense, unsearchable.
8. "The birth of many Brethren, Thou! To Thee, lo! all our Sobs we bow, To Thee our Hearts and Hands we give, Thyine may we die, Thyine may we live!

This hymn is made up from four German hymns, all of which appeared in Appendix vii. to the Herrnhut G. B., 1735. (See notes on their first lines.) Of Wesley's hymn st. i., ii., are based on st. i., ii. of N. L. von Zinzendorf's:

Stanzas iii. iv. are based on J. Nitschmann's

2. "Nimm mich mit Liebesarmen Beim Herz und bei den Armen, Und setz ein Siegel drauf; Lass mich verschlossen werden Vom dem Gi-rasch der Erden, Dir aber mache selber auf.

Stanza vii. is based on st. i., ii. of Zinzendorf's:

1. "Der Gott von unserem Bunde, Der sein Lob in dem Munde Der Sänglingen bereit, Der lasse uns kraftig fühlen, Wie die Register spielen Der Gotteslieb in dieser Zeit.

Stanza viii. is based on st. xiv. of a hymn by Anna Nitschmann, which begins " Mein König deine Liebe."

Wesley's tr. was first adopted for congregational use as No. 61 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1742, in full and unaltered. In the 1789 and later eds. it is abridged and begins " We pray Thee, wounded Lamb of God." In 1738 Wesley's full text was given in his H. & Spiritual Songs, No. 14, and repeated in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780. It is also, in the Leeds H. Bk., 1853, People's Hys., 1857, and others. It is found in the following abridged or altered forms:—

1. Jesu, Thou wounded Lamb of God (i. alt.). The Hymn Comparison, and others.
2. 0 come, Thou wounded Lamb of God (i. alt.). Whitefield's Hymns, &c., 1753; Madan's Ps. & Hys., 1760, and others.
3. 0 come, Thou stricken Lamb of God (i. alt.). Walker's Ps. & Hys., 1855, &c.
4. Jesus, Thou holy Lamb of God (i. alt.). Rugby Church H. Bk., 1839.
5. We pray Thee, wounded Lamb of God (i. alt.), in Robinson's Songs for the Sanctuary, N.Y., 1845, &c.
6. Take my poor heart, and let it be (ii. alt.), in Speyer's Songs of S. & G., 1872.
7. Lord! take my heart, and let it be (ii. alt.). Amer. Prob. Hys., 1874, &c.
8. How can it be, Thou heavenly King (v. Amer. Meth. Epis. South Coll., 1847, &c.

I too, forewarned by Jesus' love. C. Wesley. [Death Anticipated.] The two closing hymns of the Official Hymnal of the Math. Episcopal Church, N. Y., 1878, are "I too, forewarned by Jesus' love," and "In age and feebleness extreme." They are introduced by the following special note:—

"The following hymns were composed by Charles Wesley in extreme old age. The second hymn was his last utterance in verse, and was dictated on his deathbed.

With regard to "I too, forewarned by Jesus love," it was pub. in C. Wesley's Short Hymns, &c., 1762, vol. ii. p 367, No. 783, in 2 Peter i. 14, and in 2st. of 41. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. xiii. p. 191.) As C. Wesley was b. in 1707, and d. in 1788, this gives his age as 55 when the hymn was pub., that is 26 years before he died. The hymn therefore was not written by him in extreme old age. The statement concerning his age and feebleness extreme "(q.v.), however, is correct. [J. J.]

I TRAVEL all the irksome night. J. Montgomery. [Journey of Life.] In Montgomery's Greenland, and other Poems, 1819, this poem of 21 st. of 41. is given as:

"A night in a stage-coach: being a Meditation on the road between London and Bristol, Sept. 23, 1813."

It was repeated in his P. Works, 1828, vol. iii. p. 189. and again in later editions. In the Plymouth Coll., N. Y., 1855, st. i., xvi. xxvi. are given as No. 1116. In the Boston Unitarian Hymn of the Spirit, 1861, the arrangement is, st. i. from this poem, and st. ii. and iii. from another source. [J. J.]

I want a Sabbath talk with Thee. Jane Crowdon, née Fox. [Sunday.] This plaintive hymn for private use rather than public worship, appeared in A Little White and other Poems, Manchester, Tabba & Brook, 1864, p. 14, and entitled, "Sabbath Musings for a Sick Chamber." It is based on the words, "Jesus Himself drew near, and went with them," St. Luke xiv. 15. It is given in Speck's Songs of G. & G., 1872, No. 822, without alteration. [J. J.]

I want that adorning divina. Charlotte Elliott. [For Purity.] This poem on "The Pilgrim's Wants," appeared in the Christian Remembrancer pocket book, 1846, and as one of J. Groom's leaflets, 1846, in 9 st. of 41. Each stanza is based upon a passage of H. Scripture.

I. Col. iii. 12-17; ii. Rom. vii. 11; iv. 1 John iii. 2, 3; iv. Rev. ii. 17; v. John iv. 2, 5; vi. 1 John ii. 15; vii. Matt. vi. 19, 21; viii. Heb. iii. 5, 6; ix. Phil. iii. 6, 9.

It is also given in Leaves from the Christian Remembrancer, 1871, and in Leaves from Unpublished Journals, Letters and Poems of Charlotte Elliott, Lond., n.d. (cir. 1870). In Speck's Songs of G. & G., 1872, it is given in two parts, Pt. ii., being, "I want Thine own hand to unbind." [W. T. B.]

I want to be an angel. Sidney P. Gill. [For Purity.] In the s. mss. (W. 56) there is a letter from Mrs. Anna Reed Wilson, of Newark, New Jersey, to Mr. Randolph, of New York, respecting this hymn and its authorship. It is dated "Newark, N.J., Feb. 6th. /78," and in it Mrs. Reed says:—

"My sister's full name is Miss Sidney P. Gill. (An old name for a woman, but coming down from a Welsh ancestress.) The hymn was written in Philadelphia when my sister, then a young lady, taught the Infant Sunday School of 1st. Joel Parker's Church, of which she was a member. She had been teaching a lesson on Angels (I believe), when a lovely little girl exclaimed 'Oh I want to be an angel.' The child within a few minutes was attacked by a fatal disease and died; and under the strong impression of the circumstance, the little hymn was written, and sung in the S. School. The first knowledge we had of its being in print was finding it in a Dayton, Ohio, newspaper . . . . I cannot give you the exact date of its composition, but think it must have been about /64."

This hymn has become a great favourite with children. It is in use in all English-speaking countries, and has been translated into several languages. In some collections it is given as "I would be like an angel." This is especially the case in G. Britain. In the Presbyterian Ps. & Hymns for the Worship of God, Richmond, U. S. A., 1867, the opening line is again altered to "I want to be with Jesus," but this change is not so popular as the former. [J. J.]

I was a wandering sheep. H. Bonar. [The Lost Sheep.] Pub. in the 1st series of his Songs in the Wilderness, 1848, No. 1, in 5 st. of 81, and headed, "Lost but Found. Ye were as sheep going astray; but are now returned unto the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls, 1 Pet. ii. 25." It was repeated in his Bible H. Bk., 1845, No. 264, and in his Hymns of Faith and Hope, 1857. It ranks with the most popular of Dr. Bonar's hymns, and is in C. U. (usually in an unaltered form), in all English-speaking countries. [J. J.]

I was wandering and weary. F. W. Faber. [The Lost Sheep.] 1st pub. in his Jesus and Mary, &c., 1849, in 7 st. of 91, and entitled, "The True Shepherd. For the Ragged School." Also found in his Hymns, 1862. It is a hymn of great beauty and pathos, admirably suited for private use, but from its peculiar quaintness cannot be popular with the general public. It is sometimes given as, "I was weary and wandering," to the manifest efficacy of the hymn. [J. J.]

I weep, but do not yield. H. Bonar. [Lent. Chastisement.] Appeared in the 1st series of his Hymns of Faith and Hope, 1857, in 22 st. of 41, and entitled "The Rod." From this poem the following centos are in C. U.:

1. I weep, but do not yield. The original text abridged.
2. Come nearer, nearer still. In Newman Hall's Christ Church Hymnal, 1876.
3. I did Thee wrong, my God. In several collections in G. Britain and America.
4. I said, my God, at length. In the 1874 Supplement to the New Cong. & Bk. to the American Sabbath H. Bk., 1858.

Through these centos the poem has become well known and widely appreciated. [J. J.]

I will praise Thee every day. W. Cooper. [Praise for Salvation.] Pub. in the Ohio Hymns, 1779, Bk. i., No. 58, in 5 st. of 41, and headed, "O Lord, I will praise Thee." It is found in a few modern collections, including the Cong. Church Hymn, 1887. [J. J.]

I will take refuge in my God. J. Conder. [Renunciation.] In his Hymn of Praise and Prayer, &c., 1856, p. 173, this is given in 3 st. of 81, and is based on Phil. i. 24, "To abide in the flesh is more needful. As a whole it is not in C. U., but st. ii. is in the American Church Pulpits, Boston, 1864, as:

"And shall I shun the sacred fight." [J. J.]

I worship thee, sweet will of God. F. W. Faber. [Will of God.] 1st pub. in his Jesus and Mary: or Catholic Hymns, &c., 1849, in 14 st. of 41, entitled "The Will of God," and repeated in his Hymnus, 1862. In its full form it is not usually found in C. U.; but broken up into centos it is found as:—

1. He always wins who sides with God. In the American Unitarian Hymn. of the Spirit, Boston, 1864.

2. I worship Thee, sweet Will of God. In several collections in Great Britain and America.

3. I bow before Thy will, O God. In Dr. Dale's English H. Bk., 1857.

4. I know me to Thy will, O God. In Spurgeon's O. t. H. Bk., 1866, and others.

5. I love to kiss each print where Thou. In the Prize Bk., N. Y., 1872.

6. I worship Thee, O blessed God. In one or two minor collections.

Through these centos the hymn is widely known in Great Britain and America. [J. J.]

Ich armer Sunder bin auch heilig. [Sanctification.] Included as No. 394 in the Ohio G. B., 1870, in 9 st. of 6 lines, without name of author. Tr. as, "Who knew no sin and no deceiving," by E. Cronenwett, as No. 507 in the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1886. [J. M.]

The hymn is an echo of the thoughts that sustained Gerhardt in the many trials of his earthly pilgrimage. Leipzig, in 1856, relates that on the first Sunday of May, 1852, the retired and aged schoolmaster of Altenburg, near Calw, in Württemberg, was requested by his successor to act as organist for the day. He consented with joy, and sang with the congregation the first stanza of this hymn; but in the middle of the second he fell on the floor and his spirit departed. With the strains of this hymn his body was laid to rest a few days after.

Translations in C. U.:—

Other tr. are, (1) "On earth I'm but a pilgrim," by C. M. Maude, in the F. P. W. Mission Mag., 1859, p. 45; (2) "On earth I'm but a pilgrim," by J. Kelly, 1867, p. 316. See also note on "In exile here we wander." [J. M.]

Ich bin getauft auf deinem Namen. J. J. Rambach. [Holy Baptism.] 1st pub. as one of the 8 hymns which form pt. iii. of his *Erbautes Handbüchlein für Kinder, Giessen, 1734, in 7 st. of 6 lines, entitled "Daily Renewal of the Covenant." (Bule, p. 280.) Included as No. 363 in his Geistreiches Hymnus G. B., 1735, and recently as No. 457 in the Berlin L. S., 1863. It is one of the finest of his hymns. The tr. in C. U. are:—

1. I am baptised into Thy name. In full, by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 2nd series, 1858, p. 91. Repeated more or less abridged in Holy Song, 1869, and in America Boardman's Selection, 1861; Bapt. Service of Song, 1871; and Meth. Epis. Hyl., 1878.

2. Baptised into Thy name most holy. A good tr., omitting st. vi, by Miss Winkworth, as No. 95 in her C. B. for England, 1863. Repeated in full, and with a tr. of st. vi, added in the Luth. Hyl., 1880. With st. iv. omitted it is found in the 880 Suppl. to the Bapt. Ps. & Hymn., and in Allens' Cong. Præsidium Hyl., 1886.

3. Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, I am baptised... [J. M.]

Ich rühme mich einzig der blutigen Wunden. [Love to Christ.] These words are given on the frontispiece of the Herrnacht G. B., 1735, as the motto of that collection. They are not however by N. L. von Zinzendorf, but are taken from an hymn beginning "Ach alles was Himmlisch unschliesset," which is No. 847 in the Vollständiges G. B., Hamburg and Ratzeburg, 1879, in 8 st. of 4 lines, and repeated as No. 69 in Porat's G. B. ed., 1855. Tr. as:—

"I glory in nothing, but in the Wounds bloody," as No. 632, in pt. 1 of the Moravian H. Bk., 1754. In the 1768 and later eds. (1806, No. 431) changed to: "I'll glory in nothing but only in Jesus." [J. M.]

Other tr. are, (1) "He never yet has made mistakes," of st. xvii., xviii., as No. 475, in pt. 1 of the Moravian H. Bk., 1754. (2) "I sing to thee with heart and tongue," in the Suppl. to Gen. Ps. ed. 1765, p. 65. Included in the Moravian H. Bk., 1749, No. 482 (1866, No. 647), altered and beginning, "I'll praise Thee with heart and tongue." (3) "I sing to thee with mouth and heart," by Miss Wm. (1854, p. 154, p. 148) "I'll sing to thee with heart and mouth," by Miss Wm. (1863, p. 106, p. 5). "My heart's warm gush breaks forth in mirth," by E. Masse, 1867. [J. M.]

Ich weiss mir ein Blümlein, is hübsch und fein. [Holy Communion.] This is No. 278 in the Univ. L. S., 1851 (mir being omitted for metrical reasons), and is there (as also by Miss Winkworth) erroneously ascribed to Basilius Fischart (b. at Rossela in Touringia, d. as pastor of Gumpertn, near Orlauninde, in 1619). Wackernagel gives it as anonymous, and at v. p. 10 includes four forms, the oldest being from "Drey schön geistliche Lieder," printed separately in 1579. In his Bibliographie, p. 309, he had cited a broadsheet Zwey schön neue geistliche Lieder, which he dated Nürnberg, c. 1596. The form tr. by Miss Winkworth is that in the Leipzig G. B., 1856, in 8 st. Tr. as: "I know a flower so sweet and fair," by Miss Winkworth in Lyra Eucharistica, 1883, p. 197, repeated in the Schaff-Gilman Lib. of Rel. Poetry, ed. 1883. [J. M.]
I CH W I L L D E M H E R R E N

I will dem Herren, meinem Gott, liebehen. Thanksgiving. Included, as No. 564, in Freylinghausen's Neues geistreiches G. B., 1714, in 11 st. of 2 1. Tr. as:—

(1) "I'll sing unto my God, the Lord of nature," as No. 828, in pt. I. of the Moravian H. Bk., 1754. (2) "To thee, the Lord of all, I'll happily sing," as No. 1168 in the Supplement of 1808 to the Moravian H. Bk., 1808 (1806, No. 664). [J. M.]

I will dich lieben, meine STärke. J. Scheffler. [Love to Christ.] One of the finest of his hymns, breathing a deep spirit of ardent devotion to the Saviour. First pub. as No. 10 in Bk. I., 1807, of his Heilig Sechstund (Works, 1802, i. p. 41), in 8 st. of 6 l., entitled, "She [the Saviour] promises to love me even unto death." It passed through Freylinghausen's G. B., 1704, into many recent collections, and is No. 317 in the U. S. L. S., 1851. Tr. as:—

1. Thee will I love, my strength, my tower.
   Thee will I love, my joy, my crown, a fine tr.

2. Thee will I love, my strength, my glory, a free tr. of st. i., by A. T. Russell, as No. 57 in the Dalton Hospital H. Bk., 1848, Ps. & Hys., 1851, No. 186; he added free tr. of st. v., vi.

3. I will love Thee, all my treasure: by Mrs. Findlater, in the 2nd ser., 1855, of the H. L. L., p. 13 (ed. 1884, p. 80), omitting st. ii. Included, more or less altered or abridged, in Cantata Domino, Boston, U.S., 1859, Anovel Sabbath H. Bk., 1858, &c.

4. Thee will I love, my strength, my tower.
   Thee will I love, my joy, my crown, a good tr.
   omitting st. ii., vii., by Miss Winkworth, as No. 150 in her C. B. for England, 1863.

Other tr. are: (1) "Also that I not earlier knew Thee," (beginning with st. iii.) in the Christian Examiner, Boston, U.S., Sept., 1866, p. 246. (2) "Thee will I love, my strength, my tower, Thee will I love, my joy, my crown," by R. Masse, in the British Herald, April 1843, p. 54, repeated in Reid's Psalter Bk., 1872, No. 384. (3) "Thee will I love, my strength, my tower," by R. Masse, in The Hymn of Rest, 1879, p. 272. [J. M.]

IDE, George Barton, D.D., Baptist Minister, was b. at Coventry, Vermont, in 1806; educated at Middlebury College, Vermont; was pastor successively at Westfield, Massachusetts, and in 1872, he edited the Baptist Harp, Philadelphia, 1849. To that work he contributed 9 hymns. Of these, "Son of God, our glorious Head (On behalf of ministers) is still in C. U. [J. J.]

IDE, Mary. [Tarry, Mary.]

Idiomela. [Greek Hymnody, § x. 11.]

Idiomelon. [Greek Hymnody, § xvi. 9.]

'Iðou ò Ναυμάχος ερήτης. [Midnight.] This midnight hymn of the Eastern Church is taken from the Ferial Midnight Office of the Greek Church, where it is given at the beginning of the Horologion. The tr. "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," by G. Moultrie, was pub. in Lyra Mathiaca, 1864, p. 50; and again in Moultrie's Hymns & Lyrics, 1867, p. 18. It was brought into congregational use through the People's H., 1867. It is in extensive use in America. [J. J.]

'Iðouv γλυκύτατε. [Theolous, St.]

'Iðouv ò ζωοδότης. [Anástas traphmop.]

'Ιησούς ὑπέρ τοῦ κόσμου. St. Andrew of Orte. [Palm Sunday.] This is a cento from a canon of three odes, sung at Compline on Palm Sunday. The canon dates circa 690-732, and is found in the Greek Office for Palm Sunday, in the Tridion. (Sive Daniel, iii. p. 50.) The cento therefrom translated by Dr. Neale, "Jesus, hastening for the world to suffer," is composed of the 3rd and 6th Troparia of the first ode; the 4th of the second Ode, and the 6th and 7th of the third Ode. It was pub. in The Ecclesiastic and Theological, 1833, p. 349, and in his Hymn of the Eastern Church, 1862 (ed. 1882, p. 16). [J. J.]

If God is mine, then present things. B. Beddome. [Security in God.] This hymn is in C. U. in two forms:—

1. If God is mine, then present things. This appeared in the 10th ed. of Rippon's Soc. 1805, No. 297, pt. ii., in 6 st. of 4 l., and is in somewhat extensive use in America, but usually in an abridged form.

2. If Christ is mine, then all is mine. This was given from Beddome's use, in his (posthumous) Hymns, &c., 1817, No. 364, in 6 st. of 4 l. This is also in C. U., and more especially in America. [J. J.]

If human kindness meets return. G. T. Noel. [Gratitude. Holy Communion.] Given as No. 45 in 4 st. of 4 l., in the 1st ed. of his Ps. & Hys., 1810. In the 3rd ed., 1820, it is No. 61. It is also in the author's Arcenvel, or Sketches in Italy and S.uereland, 1826. It is in extensive use in G. Britain and America, and usually unaltered, as in the New Cong., 1859; and others. [J. J.]

If I must die, O let me die. B. Beddome. [Death Anticipated.] This hymn was pub. in Dr. Rippon's Baptist Register, 1794, p. 319, in 4 st. of 4 l., in an obituary notice of Beddome. It there began:—

"If I must die, O let me die
   Trusting in Thee alone."

In the Baptist Register, 1800, p. 312, it is given as:

"Lord, must I die? O let me die
   Trusting in Thee alone."

This text was repeated in the 10th ed. of Rippon's Soc., 1800, No. 550 (pt. iii.), and is found in a few modern collections, with sometimes two additional stanzas (i. i. and v.), which were added in the 27th ed. of Rippon, 1827. In Beddome's (posthumous) Hymns, &c., 1817, No. 778, it is given in 4 st. from Beddome's ms. as:—

"If I must die—O let me die,
   Trusting in Jesus' blood."

The American Sabbath H. Bk., 1858, and others are from this text. [W. T. B.]

Another tr. is:

The fish in wave, and bird on wing. From selfsame waters spring. J. Williams, in Brit. Mag., 1834, and his Hymn tr. from the Parisian Hymn., 1839. [J. J.]

I'll praise my Maker with my [while I've] breath. I. Watts. [Ps. 103.] 1st pub. in his Psalter of David, &c., 1719, in 6 st. of 6 l., and headed, "Praise to God for His Goodness and Truth." It is sometimes given in this form: but the more popular arrangement, which is in extensive use in all English-speaking countries, is that by J. Wesley, beginning, "I'll praise my Maker while I've breath." This is composed of st. i., iii., iv. and vi., somewhat altered. It appeared in Wesley's Ps. & Hymns, Charleston, South Carolina, 1796; was repeated in the Wesley Ps. & Hymns, 1793; and in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780. Another arrangement is, "Happy the man whose hopes rely." This is composed of st. iii., iv., and vi., somewhat altered, and was given in Cotterill's Select, 1810. Neither the original nor the arrangements by Wesley are by Cotterill have the doxology which is found in some collections. [J. J.]

I'm but a stranger here. T. R. Taylor. [Heaven the Home.] This hymn, written apparently during his last illness, was pub. in his Memoirs and Select Remains, by W. S. Matthews, 1836, in 4 st. of 8 l., and headed "Heaven is my home. Air— Robin Adair." In 1853 it was included in the Leeds H. Bk.; and later in numerous collections in G. Britain and America, sometimes as "We are but strangers here." Orig. text in Ps. & Hymns, 1858 and 1880, with tempest for "tempests" in st. ii. 1. [J. J.]

I'm kneeling at the threshold, aweary, faint, and sore. W. L. Alexander. [Death Anticipated.] "I wrote it," writes Dr. Alexander, "after an evening spent with my venerable father then near the end of his earthly pilgrimage, and when he spoke much of his longing to depart to and join those who had been the companions of his pilgrimage, but had preceded him into the better land." (x. 28.) In 1860 it was included in the Sunday Magazine in 5 st. of 8 l. From that magazine it first passed into a few American hymnals, and then into the 1874 Supp. to the New Cong.; the Hym. Comp., 1876, and others. It is the most popular of Dr. Alexander's hymns. [J. J.]

I'm not ashamed to own my Lord. I. Watts. [Not ashamed of the Gospel.] Pub. in his Hymns & Songs, 1709, Bk. i., No. 103, in 4 st. of 4 l., and based on 1 Tim. i. 12. Two forms of the hymn are in C. U. The first is the original as in the New Cong., 1859; and the second is that in the Scottish Traditions and Paraphrases. In the Draft Trs. and Paraphs., 1745, Watts' text was given with the alteration of st. i., ii. 3, 4, to "Maintain the glory of his cross

And honour all his laws."

In the authorized issue of the Trs. and Paraphs., 1781, this alteration was retained, and others were introduced by W. Cameron (q. v.). This recast has been in use in the Church of Scotland for more than 100 years, and is easily distinguished from the original by the alteration noted above. [J. J.]
Immensa coeli conditor. St. Gregory the Great [Monday]. This hymn, on the Second Day of the Creation, has been frequently ascribed to St. Ambrose, but the Benedictine editors do not acknowledge it as his, nor is it claimed for him by Luigi Biasi in his Inni sacri e carmi di Sant' Ambrogio, Milan, 1862. None thinks it is by St. Gregory, but it is not included in the Benedictine edition of St. Gregory's Opera. It is found as a Vesper hymn in almost all the Breviaries and hymnaries, generally assigned to Monday, as in the Roman, Sarum, York, Aberdeen, Mauruicae and other Breviaries. None, No. 273, gives the text from a ms. of the 9th cent. at Trèveres, and says the first verse is in a 9th cent. ms. at Trèveres. Daniel gives it at I, No. 58, and in IV, p. 56, from a Rheims ms. of the 10th cent., &c. It is in four ms. of the 11th cent. in the British Museum (Vesp. D. xi. f. 14 b.; Jul. A. vi. f. 246; Harl. 9861, f. 221 b; Add. 3580, f. 72 b.), and in the Lat. Hymn. of the Anglo-Saxon Ch., 1651, p. 17, is printed from an 11th cent. ms. (R. iii. 35, f. 5) at Durham. Among the St. Gall MSS. it is found in No. 20, of the 9th cent., and No. 278, 4 of the 11th cent. Also in Card. Newman's Hymns Ecclesiæ, 1838 and 1856, &c. [J. M.]

Translations in C. U.:

Immortal spirit! look, arise. Charlotte Elliott. [Morning.] Printed in her Hymns for a Week, 1839, and pub. in the same year, in 10 st. of 4 L, and appointed for Tuesday Morning. It is based on Heb. xii. 1, "Let us run with patience the race that is set before us." In Whitting's Hym. of the Ch Catholic, 1842, it is given in 6 st., and in the Preb. Sel. of Hym., Philadelphia, 1861, No. 490, in 5 st. The latter begins, "Lord, I to Thee commit my way," that is, st. v. and vi. rewritten, while st. ii. v. are the original st. vi.-x. [J. J.]

In a land of strange delight. J. Montgomery. [Midnight.] Pub. in Collyer's Coll., 1812. No. 298, 4 st. of 4 L., and headed, "A Midnight Thought." In 1810 it was repeated in Cotterill's Sel. No. 343, and Montgomery's Greenland and Other Poems:

1. In Collyer's Coll., 1812:
"When I wake to see my doom,
I will hide in His embrace."

2. In Cotterill's Sel., 1819, and in the Christian Psalmist, 1823:
"Fearless in the day of doom,
May I see Him face to face."

3. In Greenland, &c., 1819:
"Fearless in the day of doom,
May I stand before His face."

4. In Original Hymns, 1853:
"When I wake to see my doom,
May I see Him face to face.

Of these readings No. 2 is the finest, and is also the most popular. [J. J.]

In age and feebleness extreme. C. Wesley. [Trust in Jesus.] This stanza of 6 l. was the last of the magnificent series of hymns and spiritual songs associated with the name of Charles Wesley. Dr. Whitehead, his physician, seems to have been the first to give the hymn full publicity. The text is in his Life of John Wesley. In Jackson's Official Memoirs of the Rev. Charles Wesley, small ed., 1845, p. 455, the details are:

"Hence it appears that Mr. John Wesley still entertained a hope of his brother's recovery. The decree, however, was gone forth, and no means could avail for the preservation of his life. While he remained in a state of extreme feebleness, having been silent and quiet for some time, he called Mrs. Wesley to him, and requested her to write the following lines at his dictation:

'In age and feebleness extreme,
Who shall a faithful word redeem?
Jesus, my only hope Thou art,
Strength of my failing flesh and heart.
O could I catch a smile from Thee,
And drop into eternity.'

"For fifty years Christ as the Redeemer of men had been the subject of his effective ministry, and of his loftiest songs; and he may be said to have died with a hymn to Christ upon his lips. He lingered till the 29th of March, 1742, when he yielded up his spirit into the hands of his God and Saviour, at the advanced age of seventy-nine years and three months."

The stanza was included in the Wes. H. Bk. in 1875, but it had previously appeared elsewhere. It is not suited for congregational use. Its interest lies in its origin and its after associations. In G. J. Stevenson's Meth. H. Bk. Notes, 1883, pp. 522-30, these after associations are gathered together in a long and interesting note. [J. J.]

In Christ I've all my soul's desires. [Christ All in All.] Appears in the Christian Magazine, 1790, and signed "W. G. Bristol." In 1806, it was transferred, with alterations, to John Dobell's New Selection, No. 55, in 5 st. of 4 L. This, the recognized form of the text, is in C. U. in G. Britain and America, including Steptoe's Songs of G. & G., 1872, and the Dutch Reformed Hymn for the Church, N. Y., 1869. [J. J.]

In domo Patris summae majestatis. [Eternal Life.] The text of this hymn is given by None, No. 502, from a 15th cent. ms. at Karlsruhe, and with the title "A hymn of the various mansions and rewards of the Elect in the Heavenly Jerusalem." The tr. by J. M. Neale, "My Father's home eternal," was pub. in his Hymns chiefly Medicean, 202.
on the Joys and Glories of Paradise, 1865, p. 38, and repeated in the People's H., 1867. Dr. Nave says of his tr. that it "is little more than an imitation and abbreviation of the Latin." Also tr. as "In my Father's house on high," in Lyra Mystica, 1865, by "H. R. B." [W. A. S.]

In dulci jubilo singunt und sit vro. [Christmas.] This hymn is a macaronic, partly Latin and partly German. It was a great favourite in Germany till comparatively recent times. It has been often ascribed to Peter of Dresden, who d. cir. 1440, but is certainly older. Wackernagel, ii, pp. 483-486, gives 8 versions, varying from 3 to 7 st. of 8 lines. (See Hoffmann von Fallersleben's monograph in dulci jubilo. Hannover, 1861, p. 46.)

The tr. are: (1) "In dulci jubilo, now let us sing with mirth and joy," in 3 st. (as in the Psalms Ecclesiasticus, Mainz, 1558), in the Gude und Godly Hallatser, ed. 1568, f. 26 (1566, p. 47). (2) "Let Jubilant trumpets blow, and hearts be rapturously dace," in 4 st. (as in King's G. R. Wittenberg, 1529, in Lyra Davidica, 1709, p. 7. (3) "In dulci jubilo—unto the house of God we go" (as in King, 1529), by Sir J. P. Bowring, in his Hymns, 1825, No. 21. (4) "In dulci jubilo, sing and shout, all below," in 4 st. (as in a Brabant 18th cent. ms.), by Miss Wackernagel, 1848, p. 94. (5) "In dulci jubilo, Let us our homage shew," by R. L. de Pearsall, first in the Musical Times, and then in Novello's Part Song Book, 2nd Series, vol. x., 1877, No. 249 (as in King, 1825).

It has also passed into English through a retranslation (from the text of King, 1529) entirely in German, which begins "Nun singet und sei froh." This is in 4 st., and was 1st pub. in the Hannover G. B., 1646, p. 222, and has been repeated in many subsequent collections as in the Berlin G. L. S. ed., 1863, No. 174. Tr. as "Now sing we, now rejoice," a good and full tr. by A. T. Russell, as No. 48 in his Ps. & Hym., 1851. Another tr. is "All indeed were perished," a tr. of st. iii., as No. 302 in pt. i. of the Moravian H. Bk., 1743.

In every object here I see. J. Newton. [Nature lifting the soul to God.] Printed in the Gospel Magazine, June, 1774, and included in the Olney Hymns, 1779, in 2 st. of 6 l., and headed, "A Thought on the Seashore." It was given in the Leeds S. S. U. H. Bk., 1833 and 1879, as No. 128. [J. J.]

In exile here we wander. W. Cooke. [Septuagimna.] This hymn, pub. in the Hymnary, 1872, under the signature "A. C. C." was suggested to Canon Cooke by P. Gerhardt's "Ich bin ein Glaub auf Erden" (q.v.), but it is not a tr. of that hymn. It was written for the Hymnary. The alteration in Thring's Coll., 1882, of st. iii., ll. 4-8, to

"And we shall rise in that great day In bodies like to Thine, And with Thy saints, in bright array, Shall in Thy glory shine." is the author's authorized text. [J. J.]

In evil long I took delight. J. Newton. [Looking at the Cross.] Pub. in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. ii., No. 57, in 7 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Looking at the Cross." Although not referred to by Josiah Bull in his account of Newton (John Newton, &c., 1868), it seems to be of special autobiographical interest as setting forth the great spiritual change which Newton underwent. In its full form it is rarely found in modern hymnbooks. Two arrangements are in C. U. (1) "In evil long I took delight," abridged, and

(2) "I saw one hanging on a tree." The latter is mainly in American use. [J. J.]

In Gottes Namen fahren wir. [Travelers' Hymn.] This is found in varying forms from the 14th to 16th century, and was very much used by travellers on land and water, by the crusaders, at pilgrimages and processions, &c. Wackernagel, ii, pp. 515-517, gives 6 versions, and at litt. pp. 1229-33, gives 5 versions, varying from 2 to 29 st., the oldest being from a Munich ms. of 1422. (See also Hoffmann von Fallersleben, 1861, pp. 70-73 212-213, &c.) The forms tr. into English are:

I. Wackernagel, ii, No. 660, from the Psalms Ecclesiasticus, Mainz, 1840, in 4 st. Tr. as, "Now in the name of God we go," by Miss Wackernagel, 1865, p. 43.

III. Wackernagel, iii, No. 1437, in 3 st., from the Bohn G. B., 1851; included as No. 1194 in the Berlin G. L. S. ed., 1863. Tr. as, "In God's name, let us be our way," by Miss Wackernagel, in her Lyra Ger, 2nd ser., 1854, p. 107. Repeated as No. 10 in her C. B. for England, 1863, and in the Ohio Luth. H. Bk., 1880. Another tr. is "In God's name let us do as we go," as No. 323 in pt. i. of the Moravian H. Bk., 1743.

In Knapp's Er. L. S., ed. 1865, No. 2744, this third form is ascribed to Johann Hiltstein, 1557. Hiltstein's hymn (Wackernagel, iii, p. 1140, and Univ. L. S., 1851, No. 618) is essentially different. [J. M.]

In grief and fear, to Thee, O Lord. W. Bullock. [in time of Trouble.] Appears in his Songs of the Church, Halifax, N. Scotia, 1854, pp. 221-222, in 5 l. of 4 st., entitled, "The Church in Plague or Pestilence," and based upon the words, "God is our Refuge and Strength, a very present help in trouble." In 1861 it was given in H. A. & M.; in 1863 in Kennedy, and again in many other collections, and usually with the omission of st. iii., which reads:

"Our sins Thy dreadful anger raise, Our deeds Thy wrath deserve, But we repent, and from Thy days We never more will swerve.

The H. A. & M. text, with st. i., l. 3, thus: "And while Thy judgments are abroad, and the stanza above quoted, will give the orig. text. Its use is somewhat extensive. [J. J.]

In humble faith, and holy love. T. Kennell. [Holy Trinity.] These stanzas by Dean Kennell form the words of the anthem known by the above first line, No. 304 of the Musical Times series, the music being by Dr. George M. Garrett. In its original form the hymn is not used as such in the collections, but rewritten by Dr. Kennedy as, "A triple light of glory shines," it was included in his Hymno. Christ., 1863.

In latter days, the mount of God. [The Church the House of God.] In the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases of 1745, this is given as No. xxviii, on Is. ii. 6-8, as follows:

1. In latter Days, the Mount of God, his sacred House, shall rise Above the Mountains and the Hills, and strike the wonderful Eye.
IN LATTER DAYS, THE

2. "To this the joyful Nations round,
   All tribes and tongues shall flow;
   Up to the House of God, they'll say,
   To Jacob's God, we'll go.

3. To us he'll point the Ways of Truth:
   The sacred path we'll tread:
   From Salem and from Zion-Hill
   His Law shall then proceed.

4. Among the Nations and the Isles,
   As Judge supreme, he'll sit:
   And, vested with unbounded Pow'r,
   Will punish with a sequel.

5. No Strife shall rage, nor Angry Feuds, Disturb these peaceful Years.
   To plow-shares then they'll beat their swords,
   To Pruning-hooks their Spears.

6. Then Nation shall'st gainst Nation rise,
   And slaughter'd Hosts deplore:
   They'll lay the useless Trumpet by,
   And study War no more.

7. O come ye, then, of Jacob's house,
   Our Hearts now let us join:
   And, walking in the Light of God,
   With holy beauties shine.

The author of this piece is unknown, and the piece itself has passed out of use. From it, however, there has grown a hymn concerning the authorship of which much discussion has arisen. The details of this controversy are given under Bruce, E. (q.v.). From evidence there adduced we hold that the revision of the above, known as, "Behold the mountain of the Lord," was written by M. Bruce about 1764; that after his death in 1767, the ms. was given to J. Logan for publication; that in 1781 Logan published it in his Poems as his own; and that the same year, as one of the revisers of the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, he secured, after some alterations and the addition of a stanza, also altered from the original of 1745, its insertion therein.

2. The text as given in Logan's Poems, 1781, p. 106, No. 5, and which is the nearest approach to Bruce's original that can be attained, is as follows:

1. "Behold! the mountain of the Lord,
   In latter days shall rise
   Above the mountains and the hills;
   And draw the wondering eyes.

2. "To this the joyful nations round
   All tribes and tongues shall flow;
   Up to the hill of God, they'll say,
   And to His house we'll go.

3. The beam that shines on Zion's Hill
   Shall lighten every land;
   The King who reigns in Zion's towers
   Shall all the world command.

4. No strife shall vex Messiah's reign;
   Nor mar the peaceful years;
   To plow-shares then they beat their swords,
   To pruning-hooks their spears.

5. No longer hosts encounter hosts,
   Their millions slain deplore;
   They hang the trumpet in the hall
   And study War no more.

6. Come then—O come from every land,
   To worship at His shrine;
   And, walking in the Light of God,
   With holy beauties shine.

3. As already indicated, this text with slight alterations, and the original st. iv. as above, altered to "Among the nations," &c., was given in the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1781, No. xviii., as follows:

2. St. 1. as above, 1745, with l. 3. "On mountain tops, above," &c. St. 2. as above, 1781. St. 3. as above, 1781. St. 4. from 1745, 4th, 5th, altered. St. v. "No strife shall rage, nor hostile feuds disturb those peaceful years," &c. 1745. St. vi. 1. 1. as 1781; 2. "Shall crowds of slain deplore"; 3. 2. and 4 as 1745. St. vii. "Come then, 0 house of Jacob, come!"; 1. 2. 3. 4. as 1745. Modern editions are somewhat different from this.

4. In this last form the hymn has been in authorized use in the Church of Scotland for more than 100 years, and is found in the hymnals of most English-speaking countries. It should be designated as Scottish Tr. & Paraph., 1745, rewritten by M. Bruce, and altered by J. Logan.

5. In Miss J. E. Leeson's Par. and Hymns, &c., 1853, this hymn is given as rewritten by her for that collection as. "The mountain of Jehovah's house." It is in 5 st. of 4 l.

In life's gay dawn, when sprightly youth.
T. Blacklock. [Children.] 1st appeared as No. 16 in the Draft Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1781, as a version of Eccles. xii. 1., in 4 st. of 4 lines. In the public worship ed. issued in that year by the Church of Scotland, and still in use, dawns in st. 1., 1. 1., was altered to "O, in the morn of life, when youth." This was followed in America in the Bap. Psalmist, 1843; Cheshire Association Christian Hymns, 1844; and further altered to. "In the glad morn of life, when youth," in Adams & Chapin's Coll., 1846, or to. "In the bright morn of life, when youth," as in the Bap. Praise Bk., New York, 1871.

IN NEVER CEASING SONGS 565

IN natali Domini. [Christmas.] This hymn probably is of the 14th or 15th cent., Wackenrode, i. pp. 202-203, gives five versions varying from 2 to 6 st., the oldest being from a 15th cent. ms. at Munich. The form tr. into English is his No. 323—which appeared with the German in 6 st. of 7 l. in the Euchiridienn, gesellaller leder, Wittenberg, 1571. Daniel, i. No. 474, quotes it from Wackenrode's 1st ed. (1541). It has passed into English through the German "Do (Os. Christi gebaren war Fröwde, sick der Engel solen," which appeared with the Latin, 1571, as above, and thence in Wackenrode, iv. p. 790, in 6 st. of 7 l., repeated as No. 26 in the Un. L. S. 8. 1851. Tr. as:

Hark! the heavenly hosts proclaim. A good tr. st. 1. 1., iv. by A. T. Russell, as No. 50 in his Ps. Hym., 1851. Slightly altered and beginning "Hark, thy angel choirs," as No. 101 in Kennedy, 1863. Another tr. is. "On the birthday of the Lord." By Dr. Littledale in Lyra Messicana, 1864.

[3. J.]

In never ceasing songs of praise.
B. Beddome. [The overruling of all for Good.] Pnb. in his (posthumous) Hymns, &c., 1871, No. 34, in 5 st. of 6 l. In this form it is not in C. U.; but the hymn "Temptations, trials, doubts and fears," included in the 1800 ed. of Rippon's Sel., No. 286, pt. ii., has many lines in common. Whether Beddome's 1817 text is Rippon's 1800 text expanded from 3 st. of 4 1. to 5 st. of 6 l. or whether the 1800 text was abridged by Rippon from Beddome's ms., we cannot say.

[J. J.]

In noctis umbra desidiae. C. Coffin. [Addct.] Appeared in the Paris Breviary, 1736, for Compline in Advent; and again in Coffin's Hymns Sacer, 1736, p. 93. The text is also in J. Chandler's Hymns of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 12, and Card. Newman's Hymns Ecclesiæ, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:

1. While we our weary eyelids close. By J. Chandler, in his Hymns of the Prim. Ch., 1837, p. 10. It is repeated in a few collections.

2. When shades of night around us close. By the Compiler of H. A. & M. 1st printed in their trial copy, 1859, and then in the 1st ed., 1861.

3. When night has veiled the earth in shade. By the Editors of the Hymnary, 1872, principally from the trs. by J. Chandler and J. D. Chambers.

Translations not in C. U.:

1. And now with shades of night opprest. I. Williams. 1839.

2. When clouds of darkness veil the sky. R. Campbell. 1839.

4. In shadowy night, whilst drowsy sleep. J. D. Chambers. 1857.

In passione Domini, qua datur salus hominï. St. Bonaventura. [Passionate.] This is ascribed to St. Bonaventura, and is given in his Opera, Mainz, 1609, vol. vi. p. 417, as a hymn for a Little Office of the Passion at Matins. Mone, No. 84, gives the text from three ms. of the 14th cent., one in Strasburg, and two (one of which belonged to the abbey of Reichenau) at Karlsruhe. He mentions another as in the Michaelan at Bologna as selecting it to Compline on the festival of the Crown of Thorns; and Daniel, iv. p. 219, in giving the text of Mone, cites it as a hymn at Matins on this festival in the Constanza Breviary, 1516.

[W. A. S.]

Translations in C. U.:

1. In the Lord's atoning grief. By F. Oakeley. Written in 1841 for use in Margaret Street Chapel, London, of which the translator was then the Incumbent, and pub. in his Devotions for the Day, 1842. In 1852 it was included, with alterations, in H. A. & M., and thence, in 1861, into H. A. M., in 5 st. of 4 l. This text has been repeated in several, and sometimes abridged to 3 st. as in Thring's Coll., 1882.

2. In our Lord's atoning grief. This arrangement of Canon Oakeley's tr. appeared in the Church & Harmony, 1853, No. 68, and was repeated in Chase's Church Hymnal, 1864. St. 4 1., iv. are from Oakeley, and 3st. is new.

Translation not in C. U.:

Thy wondrous passion life, O Lord. J. D. Chambers. 1857.

[J. J.]

In streets and openings of the gates. J. Logan. [Voice of Wisdom.] 1st pub. in the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1781. No. x., in 7 st. of 4 l. We have ascribed this paraphrase to J. Logan on evidence given in the memoir of M. Bruce in this work (q.v.). In Miss J. E. Leeson's Paraphs. and Hymns., 1855, No. 43, this hymn opens with the same first line; but it is a rewritten form of the hymn in 4 st. by Miss Leeson.

[J. J.]

In the beginning God said "Be!" J. Montgomery. [Creation.] This hymn is dated in the original ms. "Written at Din- dale, Sep. 22, 1885." In 1883 it was included in Montgomery's Original Hymns, No. 2, in 4 st. of 4 l., and entitled "The Creation and Dissolution of All Things." Its use is limited.

[J. J.]

In the Cross of Christ I [we] glory. Sir J. Bowring. [Glory in the Cross.] Pub. in his Hymns, 1825, 5 st. of 4 l., and based upon Gal. vi. 14. It has passed into numerous collections in G, Britain and America, and is one of the most widely known of the author's hymns. It is sometimes given as "In the Cross of Christ we glory." [J. J.]

In the fields with their flocks abiding. F. W. Farrar. [Christmas Carol.] Written in 1871 for one of the Harr.-Concerts, and subsequently embodied by Mr. John Farmer in his Oratorio Christ and His Soldiers. From the Oratorio it was transferred, together with the original music, to Mrs. Brock's Children's H. Bk., 1881. It is also in several other collections.

[J. J.]

In the hour of my distress. R. Herrick. [Litany to the Holy Spirit.] This litany was pub. in his Noble Numbers, &c., 1647, in 12. of 1.; and in Dr. Grosart's Early English Poets, 1869, vol. lii. p. 132. The form in which it is found in C. U. is that of a cento. The stanzas chosen vary in the hymnals, those usually omitted being too quaint for congregational use. In some collections it begins "In the time of my distress." By mistake the whole text is given as "In the hour of deep distress," with the refrain "Good Spirit, comfort me." This form of the text appeared in Cotterill's Sel., 1819, where it was given as a sequel to "O Thou from Whom all goodness flows." It is in extensive use in G. Britain and America. Orig. text in Lyra Brit., 1667, p. 306. [See English Hymnody, Early, § ix.]

[J. J.]

In the hour of trial. J. Montgomery. [In Trial and Temptation.] Montgomery's original ms. of this hymn is dated "October 13, 1834," and on it the names of twenty-two persons are written to whom he sent ms. copies, together with the dates on which they were sent [M. ms.]. The text is the same as that given in Montgomery's Original Hymns, 1855, No. 193, in 4 st. of 8 l., with the exception of st. iii., 1, 4, which reads, "O'er the sacrifice." Four st. of the text (besides minor alterations, are in C. U.:

1. The authorized text of 1855, This was given in Mercer's Ch. Ps. & H. Bk. 1854, and has become exceedingly popular in G. Britain and America. This text is that given in the H. Comp., with st. 1, 1, 2, 4 for "Jesus," and by J. Bickersteth's note (in 1876) to this hymn: "This hymn, as given by J. Montgomery in his ms., is given, as varied by F. A. Hutton (1861)," is in error both with regard to date and text.

2. An altered text by Mrs. Frances A. Hutton, given in Preliminary H. W. Hutton's (Lincoln) Supplement and Lituriges, n.d. This text is easily recognised by the date and the name of the author.
for his Hymno, Christ, 1863, No. 1409, in 5 st. of 4 l. It is from various "Songs" in Mason's Spiritual Songs, or Songs of Praise, first pub. in 1863 as follows:

These "Songs" are Nos. iv., v., vi. and vii. respectively, and are found in full in D. Seldwick's reprint of Mason's Songs of Praise, 1869.

In Thy Name, O Lord, assembling. T. Kelly. [Public Worship.] 1st pub. in his Hymns... Not Before Published, 1815, No. 24, in 3 st. of 6 l. (Hymns, 1833, No. 371.) In its original form it is in extensive use, and as "In Thy courts, O Lord, assembling" it is also found in several collections. The latter text was given in Martin's Hymns, 1840 and 1873, and others.

In token that thou shalt not fear. H. Alford. [Holy Baptism.] In Mrs. Alford's Life of Dean Alford the origin of this hymn is thus stated:

"Some lines on 'The Sign of the Cross in Baptism' (suggested by Hooker's Excl. Prayer, Bk. v., sec. 65) were written at this time. They were sung four years afterwards in Wymondham Church as a hymn when his first child was christened, and since their publication they have come to be used not unfrequently on the occasion of a Baptism." Life, ii. p. 73.

The passage from Hooker here referred to by Mrs. Alford is:

"Seeing therefore that to fear 'some which doth softly follow sin, and to bear undeserved reproach, and mortification, is the general duty of all men professing Christianity; seeing also that our weakness while we are in this present world doth need towards spiritual duties the help even of corporal forsettences, and that by reason of natural intercourse between the highest and the lowest powers of man's mind in all actions, his fancy or imagination carrying in it that special note of remembrance, than which there is nothing more forcible where either too weak, or too strong a conceit of infamy and disgrace might do great harm, standeth always ready to put forth a kind of necessary helping hand; we are in that respect to acknowledge the good and profitable use of this ceremony, and not to think it superfluous that Christ hath His mark applied in that part where baseliness appeareth, in token that which are Christians should be at no time ashamed of His ignominy."

The hymn was written at Heale, during Alford's stay from June 5 to July 17, 1832, with his uncle, Mrs. Alford's father, and was first printed in the British Magazine, Dec. 1832. In 1838 it was repeated in Alford's anonymous Poems & Poetical Fragments, and subsequently in most of his poetical works and collections of hymns, including his Year of Praise, 1867. In the numerous collections in which it is found, both in G. Britain and America, it is usually given in a correct form. It is sometimes found "In token that we should not fear." It is given in a greater number of hymn-books than any other hymn for Holy Baptism, and in popularity it ranks amongst the Dean's hymns as second only to his "Come, ye thankful people, come." [J. J.]

In vain Apollos' silver tongue. B. Beddome. [Before Sermon.] Appeared anonymously in Rippon's Bap. Sel., 1787, No. 390, in 2 st. of 4 l. In Beddome's (posthumous) Hymns, 1817, No. 588, there is a hymn in 3 st. of 4 l. beginning "In vain does Paul's..."
Persuasive tongue." The former hymn is either the latter rewritten from 3 st. to 2, or the latter is the former expanded. As Beddome supplied Rippon with many of his hymns in ms., probably the 1817 text is the original. [J. J.]

Incarcante God! the soul that knows. J. Newton. [Safety of the Believer.] Pub. in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. i., No. 47, in 8 st. of 4 l., and headed "The Believer's Safety." Psalm xcv. It is in use in its original form, and is also as "O God most high, the soul that knows." This altered form of st. i., vii.-viii. was made by W. J. Hall for his Mitre H. Bk., 1836, No. 83. Sometimes, as in the New Mitre, 1875, a doxology is added. [J. J.]

Incarcante Word, Who, wont to dwell. Bp. R. Heber, [Epiphany.] Appeared in his (posthumous) Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 32, in 4 st. of 4 l., and appointed for the 2nd S. after Epiphany. It is given in several collections in an unaltered form. Another form, "Messiah, Lord, Who, wont to dwell," is also in C. U. This was given in Martin Mead's Hymns, 1840. [J. J.]

Indulgent God, to Thee I raise. T. Cole. [Pray, O Lord, for Salvation.] Included anonymously in the 10th ed. of Rippon's Bapt. Sel., 1800, No. 299 (Pt. iii.), in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed "Happy in the Salvation of God." In some copies of the 1827 edition of Rippon the blank is filled in with "Coles." After Dr. Rippon's death in 1836, three editions of his Sel. appeared: (1) his original Sel. as revised in 1827; (2) an edition pub. by Hall, Virtue & Co., which was a reprint of Rippon's 1800 edition with additions; and (3) The Compendious Hymns, 1844. In No. 2 this hymn is ascribed to "B. Francis," and in No. 3 to "Francis." That No. 1 in giving it to "T. Coles," is right: it is evident from a communication from B. F. Flint, grandson of B. Francis, to D. Seward, dated "Jan. 26, 1839," in which he says "Indulgent God, to Thee I raise," ascribed to my Grandfather, is not his, but was written by the late Rev. Thomas Coles of Bourton. [J. J.]

Indulgent Sovereign of the skies. P. Doddridge. [Fast Day.] In the d. ms., this hymn, No. 76, is headed "God intreated for Jerusalem." A hymn for a Fast Day, from Isa. lxii., 6, 7, and is dated "May 20, 1731." It is also in the Brooke ms. It was pub. in Doddridge's (posthumous) Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 120, in 10 st. of 4 l., with the heading changed to "God intreated for Zion: Isaiah lxii., 6, 7. For a Fast Day: or, A Prayer for the revival of Religion;" and repeated in J. D. Humphrey's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 136. It is usually given in the hymn-books in an abridged form, and sometimes as "Thou glorious Sovereign of the Skies." [J. J.]

Ingermann, Bernhardt Severin, was b. at Thorald’s in Falster, May 28, 1758. From 1782 till his death in 1802, he was Professor of the Danish Language and Literature at the Academy of Sorø, Zealand, Denmark. He was a poet of some eminence. His collected works were pub. in 1851, in 34 volumes. Seven of his hymns tr. into English are given in Gilbert Tait's Hymns of Denmark, 1888. The only hymn by him in English C. U. is:—

Ingeniem Nar og Tvang. Unity and Progress. It is dated 1828, and is given in the Unit Fellowship's Dan. Psalms.-Bok, Copenhagen, 1872, No. 502. In its tr. form as "Through the night of doubt and sorrow," by the Rev. S. Baring-Gould, it has become widely known in most English-speaking countries. The tr. was pub. in the(handler's H., 1847. It was greatly improved in H. & M., 1875, and has been specially set to music by several composers. [J. J.]

Ingham, Benjamin, M.A. The details of the life of this hymn-writer are given in the article on Ingham Hymnody. Ingham's hymns appeared in the Kendal H. Bk., 1757, and in various editions of the English Moravian H. Bk. The 1886 ed. of the Moravian H. Bk. contains the following hymns by him:— 1. Jesus, my Saviour, full of grace. Jesus All in All. 2. The one thing needful, that good part. Mary's Choice. [J. J.]

Inghamite Hymnody. The Inghamite Society was founded by the Rev. Benjamin Ingham, brother-in-law to the Countess of Huntingdon. He was b. at Ossett, Yorkshire, June 11, 1712, and educated at Queen's College, Oxford. At Oxford he made the acquaintance of Whitefield and the circumstances which greatly influenced his after life. In 1735 he was ordained by the Bishop of Oxford (Dr. John Potter), and in October of the same year he sailed with C. Wesley to Georgia, in America. On the voyage he made the acquaintance of several Moravian missionaries, who were also proceeding to America, and on his arrival in that country he joined them in their work. Returning to England in 1738, he began preaching in various churches and chapels in Wakefield, Leeds, and Halifax; but in June, 1739, he was inhibited from preaching in any of the churches in the diocese of York. He continued to labour with the Moravians in Belfordshire, Nottinghamshire, Lancashire, and Yorkshire, &c., where several Moravian settlements were subsequently established, that at Fulneck, near Leeds, being on ground given to the Society by Ingham. Ingham's Society and chapels were, however, distinct from the Moravians, and his preachers looked to him as their head. In 1755, at a general meeting of his preachers, at Winewall, near Colne, in Lancashire, he was elected General Overseer of the Societies, and William Batty (q.v.), and James Allen (q.v.) were chosen as his fellow-workers, who were set aside for their work by prayer and the laying on of hands by Ingham. At about this time the Inghamites had upwards of eighty chapels, but mainly through internal dissensions they have dwindled to a very small number. The first hymn-book published for the use of this society was printed at Leeds, and was drawn mainly from the Lady Huntingdon Coll. The most important collection was that known as the Kendal Hymn Book, which was published in 1757, and to it an Appendix was added in 1761. The editor of this book was James Allen, who contributed about one-half of the contents. The other contributors were Christopher Batty, William Batty, John Green, Benjamin Ingham, and four or five others. Ingham seems to have written Nos. 3 and 85.
INGLIS, CHARLOTTE H.

[s. mss]. Half-a-dozen hymns from this book are all that are found in modern hymn-books, outside the English national official collection. (For further details concerning Ing. and the Ing. national see Life and Times of Selina, Countess of Huntingdon, Lond., Publisher, 1829.)

INGLIS, Charlotte H. [Various.

INGLIS, Margaret Maxwell, née Murray, was b. at Sanquhar, Dumfriesshire, Oct. 1775, and was married first to Mr. Finlay, and secondly to Mr. John Inglis, an officer of the Excise, who d. in 1826. Mrs. Inglis d. at Edinburgh, Dec. 1843. Her Miscellaneous Poems were pub. at Edinburgh in 1838 (Rogers' Sacred Minstrel, p. 75).

Ingeolstätter, Andreas, was b. at Nürnberg, April 8, 1833, where he became superintendent of the market, and where he d. June 7, 1711. In 1672 he was admitted a member of the Pognitz Schipfer and Flower Order, and was in 1674 crowned as a poet. Of his seven or eight hymns (of which six were contributed to the Pognitz Andachtsklang, 1673-91) one has passed into English:

Hinab geht Christi Weg. [Humility.] 1st pub. in the Poetischer Andachtsklang, Nürnberg, 1763, No. 39, in 7 st. of 8 l. & is found on meditation, No. 261, of Dr. H. Müller's Geistliche Ergaubnissstücken. Included in Knapp's Er. L. S., 1837, No. 2198, in 6 st. of 8 l.

Christ's path was sad and lowly. A good tr. from Knapp by Mrs. Findlater in the 3rd Ser., 1858, of the H. L. L., p. 8 (1884, p. 135), repeated in the Irrigente H. for use of the Churches, 1871. In B. Ryle's Coll., 1860, it begins: "Lowly, my soul, be lowly."

Another tr. is "Still downward goes Christ's way," by J. D. Burns, in the Family Treasury, 1828, p. 272 (remains, 1869, p. 245).

[ J. M.]

Instantis adventum Del. C. Coijn [Advent.] Given in the Paris Brev., 1736, as the hymn at Matins for Sundays, and Ferials in Advent. It was also included in the author's Hymni Sacri, 1736, p. 32: in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 35; and in Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiastici, 1838 and 1883. It is tr. as:

1. The advent of our God, our Prayers, &c. By J. Chandler. 1st pub. in his Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 34, and subsequently included in numerous collections, and sometimes with considerable alterations as noted below. Its use is more extensive than any other tr. of this hymn.

2. Our God approaches from the skies. By J. Williams. 1st pub. in his Hys. Tr. from the Parisian Brev., 1839, p. 43. This was given in the Salisbury H. Bk., 1857, as "God cometh! and even now is near;" and was repeated, with further alterations, and the introduction of some lines from Chandler, in the Sarum Hyl., 1868, as "The advent of our God! Behold, the Lord is near."

3. The coming of our God, our Prayers, &c. This tr. in R. Campbell's Hys. and Anthems (St. Andrews Hymnal), 1850, is based upon Chandler, st. I.-iii., being repeated almost word for word. The tr. by R. Campbell in Mr. O. Shipley's Annus Sanctus, 1884, is this text of 1850, partly rewritten, specially st. iii., but several of Chandler's lines are still retained.

4. Lost the Gomer tarry long. By W. J. Bledsoe. 1st printed for use in his own Church cir. 1851, and then in his Ch. Hy. and Tune Book, 1852 and 1855. It is repeated in Rice's Hymns, 1870.

6. The Advent of our Lord. Our prayers, &c. This tr. appeared in the trial copy of H. A. & M., 1859, and again in the 1st ed., 1861, and the revised ed., 1875. It is J. Chandler's tr. very much altered by the Compilers of H. A. & M.

7. Lift up the Advent strain. This rendering appeared in the Parish H. Bk., 1865 and 1875, and the Hymnary, 1879. It is J. Chandler's tr. slightly altered.

8. To hail Thine Advent, Lord, we lift. In Mercer's Ch. Psalter and Hy. Bk., Os. ed., 1864, No. 75, is J. Chandler's tr. rewritten from s. m. into L. M. This was probably done by Mercer.

9. The Advent of our Lord! For this prepare the way. This is the Rev. F. Potter's revision of J. Chandler's tr. in Hys. fitted to the Order of Comm. Prayer, 1861.

10. The Advent of our God. Behold the Lord, &c. This in the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871, is a cento from J. Chandler, I. Williams, the Sarum Hyl., 1868, and some lines newly rendered by the Editors of Church Hys.

Translations not in C. U.:

1. To haste Thine Advent from the skies. J. D. Chambers, 1847.

2. The advent of our God and King. O. Moutrie, 1870.

Interval of grateful shade. P. Dodridge. [Evening] In the "P. ms." this hymn is given in full, but without date. In 1758, it was included in Dodridge's (posthumous) Hymns, as the second of the "Hymns on Particular Occasions and in Uncommon Measures," being No. cccxxii. of the volume, in 70 lines, and entitled "An Evening Hymn, to be used when composing oneself to sleep." It is also in J. D. Humphrey's ed. of the Hymns, 1839, No. 309. In 1812, Dr. Collyer gave the complete hymn in his Collection, dividing the same, as in Dodridge's Hymns, into three parts, and using each part as a separate hymn. He also divided the unbroken lines of the original into stanzas. The three hymns thus made were:

"Interval of grateful shade."
"What though downy (peaceful) slumbers fec." "Wist if death my sleep invade."

This arrangement was repeated in Bielersteth's Christian Psalmody, 1833, No. 489, 490, 491, in Elliott's Ps. & Hys., 1835, No. 327, and other collections. In this manner these three hymns were handed down to modern collections. A cento from the poem is also in C. U. It begins: "Heavenly Father, gracious Name." [See Eng. Hymnody, Early, § xiv.]

[ J. J.]

Into the heav'n of the heav'n of heaven. H. Bonar. [Ascension] Given in the 3rd Series of his Hys. of Faith & Hope, 1867, in 8 st. of 4 l. and headed, "The Song of the Lamb." The cento, "Blessing, and honour, and glory, and power," in 3 st. in Laudes Dominii, N. Y. 1844, and others, is taken from this hymn.

INTO THE HEAV'N OF
Iota. In W. Carus Wilson's Friendly Visitor, and in The Children's Friend this is the nom de plume of Dorothy A. Thrupp.

Ira justa Conditoris. [Passiontide.]
In the Office of the Most precious Blood of our Lord Jesus Christ this is the hymn at Matins.

This Office is one of those added to the Roman Breviary since 1738. In the Bologna ed., 1827, it is given in the Appendix to the Psalter Vernalis as one of the festivals of March, and as a double of the first class; but by a decree of Pope Pius IX., Aug. 10, 1849, it is ranked as a double of the second class and appointed for the 1st Sunday in July.

The text is found as above in the Appendix, 1827, p. 233, in 6 st., and is repeated in subsequent editions of the Roman Breviary. Also in Daniel, ii. p. 355. [J. M.]

Translation in C. U.:

Ex Who once in righteous vengeance. By E. Gaswell. Pub. in his Lyra Catholicae, 1849, p. 83, in 6 st. of 6 l.; and again in his Hymns, 1873, p. 47. In 1853, st. ii., iv.-vi. were given in the Cooke & Denton Hymnal, No. 6. This arrangement of the text has been repeated in a large number of hymn-books in Great Britain and America, and is the popular form of the hymn. In the 1862 Appendix to the H. Voted, No. 298, the full text is given; and in the Hymnary, 1872, st. iii. is omitted. [J. J.]

Irish Hymnody. Although there are numerous hymns and sacred poems of great excellence in the Irish, Latin, and English languages which are the production of Irish birth, yet Ireland does not possess a distinctive hymnody as is the case with England, Scotland, France, Germany, and America, &c. The best and fullest account of what was done in the earliest days of Irish history is contained in The Book of Hymns of the Ancient Church of Ireland, by J. H. Todd, d.d. 2 vols., 1855-63. These hymns are taken from the Liber hymnorum, a manuscript in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin; with various readings from the well-known Antiphonarium Bencorense in the Ambrosian Library, Milan; and other ancient sources. Dr. Todd accompanies the hymns with translations. Another work of interest is the Lyra Hibernica Sacra, compiled and edited by Rev. W. MacIrene, D.D., Canon of St. Patrick's, Dublin: Belfast, 1878. This work has an interesting Preface; nearly 200 pieces divided into "Sacred Poems," "Hymns," and "Sacred Lyrics," and a list of the 80 authors from whose works the extracts are given; from St. Patrick (372-469), Sculmian (434), and St. Columba (521-597), to Mr. C. F. Alexander, Dean Bagot, Dr. Momsell, and Dr. Littleclad. This book presents good specimens of what has been done by the eighty writers therein represented; but it neither exhausts the list of writers nor gives one-hundredth part of the sacred lyrics which they have written.

2. The various collections of hymns for public worship which have been or are still in use in Ireland are comparatively few. "The United Church of England and Ireland" used Tate and Brady in common until the practice in England of publishing independent hymn-books for Church use led to the publication of Weyman's Melodia Sacra, by Marcus W. Moses, a music-seller in Dublin, circa 1820. This was followed by an Appendix to the same Hymns with Tunes, and by Dr. W. The Chorist, consisting of vol. i. Metrical Psalms & Chants, 1842; vol. ii. 200 Hymns, 1864, vol. iii. 100 additional Hymns and several short anthems, 1865 (Crawford's Biog. Index [Composers] to the [Irish] Church Hymnal). In October, 1862, a Committee of Clergymen was appointed by a Conference of the Presbytery and Lieut. of the diocese of Down and Connor, and Dromore, to compile a hymn-book under the direct sanction of the Bishop of the diocese. The result was a Book of Hymns suited to the Services of the United Church of England and Ireland, Belfast, 1863, containing 414 hymns. In 1864 the Dublin Association for Promoting Christian Knowledge published a quasi-official collection as The Church Hymnal (286 hymns). This book, revised and enlarged to 474 hymns, 2 graces, and 16 doxologies, was published in 1873 under the authorised hymn-book of the Church of Ireland. This was the first book of hymns to attain to a large circulation. Its Biographical Index (the "Writers" by G. A. Crawford and J. A. Eberle, and the "Composers" by G. A. Crawford) is the best work of its kind extant.

3. The Presbyterians throughout Ireland have usually adhered to the use of the Scottish Peal [see Scottish Hymnody]. Individual efforts have, however, been made from time to time to supply separate congregations with hymn-books, in the case of A Selection of Psalms & Hymns for the Use of the Presbyterian Assembly, and the Congregation of Strand, Dublin, 1871; and W. F. Stevenson's Hymns for Church and Home, 1873.

4. The Congregationalists have also had individual efforts made on their behalf in A Selection of Hymns designed for the Worship of a Christian Congregation, Belfast ("sold at the Vestry-Room of the Independent Mission House, Donegall-Street"), 1820; and A Collection of Hymns adapted to Congregational Worship, By William Urquhart, Dublin ("York Street Meeting-House"), 1829.

5. The Methodists have used from the first the same official hymn-books as those in use in England; and some other religious bodies do the same.

6. The Roman Catholics being provided with their hymnody for the ordinary services of the Church in their Liturgy and Missal, only a few small hymn-books for use in Schools and Missions are in use amongst them.

7. Thomas Kelly's Collection of Psalms & Hymns extracted from Various Authors, 1802; and his Hymns adapted for Social Worship, 1812; A Selection of Hymns used in Bethabara Chapel, Donegall Street [Dublin], Dublin, 1819; and a few others of no real moment, were individual or congregational in nature or denominational significance.

8. Taken together, therefore, these results do not present an imposing array of hymn-books as an outgrowth of religious work in Ireland. If Ireland, however, has not done much for herself in the way of influencing the Church at home and abroad through her hymn-books, yet her hymn-writers stand, in numbers and in merit, in the front rank of the Singers of the Church. [J. J.]

IRONS, Joseph, s. of William Irons, of Ware, was b. at Ware, Nov. 1783, and was for some years the friend of John Newton when the latter was Rector of St. Mary, Woolnoth, and an attendant upon his ministry. On the death of Newton, Irons joined the Nonconformists, and was for some time Pastor of a Nonconformist Chapel at Sawston, and then of the Grove Chapel, Cambridge, London. He d. April 3, 1832.

J. Irons's reputation as a preacher amongst the Nonconformists was very great. His sermons were intensely Calvinistic and very powerful; and the perorations, not sufficiently in poetical blank verse, were most striking and effective. His hymns are powerful, and at timesatical, but from their strong Calvinistic teaching have hitherto been popular. They were published for use by his own congregation, and until several were adopted by Spurgeon in his G. G. H. Bk., 1866, and Spurgeon's Songs of G. G., 1872, were seldom found in any other collection for congregational use.

J. Irons's poetical works, including those in which his hymns appeared, were:

1. A Supplement to Dr. Watts's Psalms and Hymns. Printed for the Author by G. Youngman, Suff'rm Walden, 1816. This ed. contained 244 hymns. It was enlarged, 2nd ed., 1818, 3rd ed., 1825, 4th ed., 1827, 5th ed. (671 hymns). The title was afterwards changed to Zion's Hymns, for the use of Zion's Sons and Daughters. (2) Symposium. Bride and Bridegroom's Commentary, a Paraphrastic Exposition of the Songs of Solomon, in Blank Verse, 1840; (3) Judah, The Book of Psalms Paraphrased in Spiritual Songs for Public Worship, 1847; and (4) Chantery. A Poem in Blank Verse.

From his Zion's Hymn, the following hymns, in addition to a few annotated under their respective first lines, are in C. U.:

i. From the 1st edition, 1816:
5. See from Zion's fountain rise. The Water of Life.
6. Zion, beloved of God. The Church the Bride of Christ.

ii. From the 2nd edition, 1819:
7. In yonder realms where Jesus reigns. The heavenly Mansions.
8. O the happiness arising. Happiness in Christ.

iii. From the 3rd edition, 1825:
10. Are the saints predestined? Predestination.
11. Advice, my soul, with songs to own. Praise for Overcoming Grace.
14. Father, we glory in Thy choice. Holy Trinity.
15. Forever, O delightful word. Praise of God everlasting.
16. Hark, how the choir around the throne. Triumph of Grace.
17. Hark, how the glorious hosts above. The Church Triumphant.
19. How saron are all the chosen race. Final Perseverance.
20. I sing the glorious, fixed decree. Predestination.
21. Jesus saw His Church elected. The Church the Bride of Christ.
22. Let party names no more be known. Unity desired.
25. Of Israel's covenant I boast. Praise for Overcoming Grace.

IRONS, WILLIAM J.

26. One with Christ, O blissful thought. Union with Christ.
27. Praying soul, dismiss thy fear. Christ the Intercessor.
29. We sing the Father's Love. Holy Trinity.

His paraphrases of the Psalms given in his Judah, &c., 1847, are almost unknown to modern hymn-books. The following are in C. U.:

30. My heart expands with good ending. Ps. 110.
This is given in Spurgeon's G. G. H. Bk., 1866, as "Warm with love my heart's inclining."
31. My soul lies groaning low. Ps. cxiv.
32. O give thanks unto the Lord. Ps. cxi.

Although the use of these hymns is mainly confined to Spurgeon and Stepp, a few are found in other collections both in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

IRONS, William Josiah, d.d., s. of Joseph Irons above, was b. at Hockewold, Herts, Sep. 12, 1812, and educated at Queen's College, Oxford (B.A. 1835, D.D. 1854), and took Holy Orders 1835. In 1857 he became Incumbent of St. Peter's, Walmouth, and was subsequently Vicar of Barkway, Incumbent of Brompton Rector of Waddington; and in 1872, Rector of St. Mary-Woolnoth, formerly held by his father's friend, John Newton. He was also Hampton Lecturer in 1876, and Prebendary of St. Paul's Cathedral. He d. June 18, 1888. Dr. Irons took a somewhat prominent part in the controversy of his day, and was widely known as the author of a very moderate approach to the manner of feeling at the time. His hymn-books, in addition to these, were:

1. Metrical Psalter, 1857; (2) Appendix to the Brompton Metrical Psalter, 1861 (22 hymns); (3) Hymns for Use in Church, 1866 (100 hymns). These contained hymns by Dr. Irons, and others. The next contains his Translations and Original Hymns only; (4) Psalms and Hymns for the Church, 1st ed., 1873 (126 h.); 2nd ed., 1878; 3rd ed., 1882. The principal object of this last work was to supply special hymns on the Collects, Epistles, and Gospels, and for Advent and Lent, together with special hymns for the Festivals; and this to a great extent Dr. Irons was enabled to accomplish. His versions of individual Psalms are directly from the Hebrew, line for line.

In addition to these of Dr. Irons's hymns and translations, which are annotated under their respective first lines, the following are in C. U. outside of his own collections, the details appended being from his ms. notes:

1. Bluest voice of love. O Word divine. Confirmation. Written for a Confirmation at Brompton, and pub. in Lowe's Hymns for the Christian Seasons, 1854, No. 163; in the Appendix to the Brompton Metrical Psalter, 1861; and the author's later collections.
2. Can earthly voice fitly sing. Public Opening of a School. Written at Brompton on the occasion of the opening of a school, and pub. in the Appendix as above, and in the author's later collections.
3. Children of earth, for heaven we seek. Epit-Irvingite Hymnody. This brief title, which has been given by hymnologists to the hymnody of The Catholic and Apostolic Church, is adopted throughout this work. The origin of the first hymn-book of this denomination is thus set forth in its Preface:—

"In addition to the Divine Songs and Anthems, principally from Holy Scripture, which have been in use among these congregations, a collection has long existed for a larger selection of hymns, for use both in the public worship of the Church and in private devotional exercises. The object in preparing this book has been to provide such Hymns..."

This collection was compiled by a committee of which Mr. E. W. Eddis was the leading member, and was published in 1864, as Hymns for the Use of the Churches. It contained 205 hymns. In 1871 it was enlarged to 320 hymns and 44 doxologies. The 3rd edition is a reprint of that of 1871 with a few verbal alterations. The original hymns contributed to this book were by Mr. E. W. Eddis and other writers, who have appended their initials to their hymns, but decline to give their names to the public. Some of these hymns have passed into other collections. Several of those by Mr. Eddis are of great merit, especially those of Praise, and might be transferred to other collections with advantage. This is the Official (and only) hymn-book of "The Catholic and Apostolic Church." [J. J.]

Is heaven a place where pearly streams? T. J. Bailey. [Heaven.] Appeared in his poem "Festus," 1839, in the Leeds H. Bk., 1833, as it was given as "Is heaven a clime where diamond dew's?" and in Dale's English H. Bk., 1874, as "Is heaven a place where diamond dew's?" In one or another of these forms it is also found elsewhere. [J. J.]

Is the [thy] cruse of comfort wasting. Elizabeth Charles. [The Cruse of Oil.] Appeared in her Three Wakings, 1839, and repeated in the H. Comp., revised ed., 1876, and appointed for "Almsgiving." It is also in several other collections, and sometimes as "Is thy cruse," &c. [J. J.]

Is there in heaven and earth, who can? B. Beddome. [Salvation through Jesus.] Appeared anonymously in the 10th ed. of Rippon's Set., 1860, No. 204, p. ii., in 6 st. of 4 l., and thence into a few later hymnals. In Beddome's (posthumous) Hymns, &c., 1817, No. 696, it is given as "Is there a friend in earth or heaven?" and headed "The All-sufficient Saviour." [J. J.]

Israel in ancient days. W. Cooper. [The Gospel in the Old Testament.] Pub. in the Olney Hymns. 1779, Bk. 1, No. 132, in 6 st. of 6 l., and headed "Old Testament Gospel." It is a poetical summary of some of the principal types of the Jewish Dispensation and their fulfilment in Jesus Christ. It is found in several modern collections. [J. J.]

Israel's Shepherd, guide me, feed me. J. Bickersteth. [The Good Shepherd.] This hymn is found in a Select Portion of Psalms & Hymns, 4th ed., Lancaster, W. Marshall, printer, 1816, No. 78, in 4 st. of 8 l., and again, with slight alterations, in the author's own Ps. & Hys., 1819. Thence it passed into Ist Gott für mich, so trete. P. Gerhardt. [Trust in God]. Included in the Frankfurt ed. 1656, of Crüger's Praeis pietatis melonm. As No. 380, in 15 st. of 8 l., reprinted in Wackernagel's ed. of his Gishüliche Lieder, No. 63, and Bachmann's ed., No. 79, and included as No. 418 in the Uew. L. 8, 1851. It is a magnificent hymn of Christian confidence, founded on Romans vi. For this reason it is probably suggested by the troubled experiences of his life, but the idea that st. xiii. refers to his conflict with the Elector is disproved by the fact that the hymn was pub. in 1556, while the contest did not begin till 1562. Lauxmann, in Koch, viii. 408, quotes Langbecker as saying, "This heroic hymn of Gerhardt's is worthy to be placed side by side with Luther's "Ein feste Burg", and himself says of it:—

"The 'hymn bears the watchword of the Lutheran Church as Paul gives it, 'If God be for us, who can be against us?" One thinks of Philip Melanchthon's last words as he, worn out with the manifold conflicts after Luther's death and with many bitter and grievous trials, lay a-dying on April 19, 1560, he once more raised himself in bed and cried, 'If God be for us, who can be against us? When one asked him if he wished anything, be replied, 'Nothing, save Heaven!' and gave up his spirit. In the same spirit it has been entitled 'A Christian hymn of Consolation and of Joy,' and has spoken to the hearts of many troubled ones and strengthened them with new courage for the fight of Faith.'

The 15th st., "Mein Herze geht in Sprün- gen," has been a special favourite in Germany, and Lauxmann, in Koch, relates of it in regard to a well-known German theologian:—

While still young, Professor Antonius of Havel departed from this life in 1644. This highly gifted and highly cultured witness for the Faith was by an early death compelled to give up his greatly blessed labours, many projects, and a happy family life. On the 2nd of May, a few hours before his death, a friend said to him, "Christ's disciples follow in His pathway, first Death and the Grave, then Resurrection and Ascention." To this he replied, "Of the fear of death, thank God, I know nothing, and can say with Paulus Gerhardt:—

'Ist Gott für mich, so trete
Gleich alles wider mich.""

In the same night (just before his death) he repeated st. xv. of this hymn. Soon after, his light, as a taper, quietly went out.

Translations in C. U.—

1. If God be on my side. A good tr., omitting st. iv.-vi., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 1st Ser., 1855, p. 130. Included, abridged, in Holy Song, 1869, and the Evening Hym., New York, 1889. Centos from this tr. are:—

(1) If Jesus be my friend (st. 1, 1, 3), in the Andover Sabbath H. Bk., 1846, Hatheld's Church H. Bk., 1872, &c.

(2) Since Jesus is my friend (st. 1, 1, 3 altered), in Robinson's Songs for the Sanctuary, N. Y., 1865, Laudas Domini, 1864, &c.

(3) Here I can firmly rest (st. 1, 3), in the Andover Sabbath H. Bk., 1846, Pennsylvania Luth. Cb. Bk., 1864, and other American collections.

3. Is God for me! I fear not. A spirited if rather free version, omitting st. v., xii., xiii., by Mrs. Bevan in her Songs of Eternal Life, 1856, p. 39; repeated, abridged, in Snepp's Songs of G. & G. In Reid's Praise Bk., 1872, it appears as three stanzas: (1) as above; (2) No. 922, beginning "There is no condemnation" (st. vi.); and (3) No. 623, beginning "In heaven is mine inheritance" (st. x.).

Other tr. are: (1) "Is God for me? what is it," by J. C. Jacobs, 1812, p. 41 (1225, p. 130). Included in the Moravian v. Bk., 1784; and repeated, abridged, in the 1799 and later eds., beginning "Is God my strong salvation"; (2) "The world may rise against me round," and "The world may fall beneath my feet," trs. of st. i., xiii., by Mrs. Stanley Carr in her tr. of Wildenhahn's Paul Gerhardt, 1845 (1846, pp. 172, 174).

Iste Conessor Domini sacratus [coleentes]. [Saints' Day]. This hymn is found in the Common of Consecrators in the Sarum, York, Aberdeen, Mazaric, Roman and other Breviaries. In the Roman Brev. of 1632 (text in Daniel, i. No. 226) it is altered considerably, beginning "Iste confessor Domini calendas." Daniel, after giving the text at i., No. 226, notes at iv. p. 371, that it is contained in a 9th cent. ms. at Bec. as a hymn on St. Germanus. It is in three ms. of the 11th cent. in the British Museum (Vesp. B. xii. f. 186; Jul. A. vi. f. 66 b; Harl. 2961, f. 349, and in the Lat. Hym. of the Anglo-Saxon (c. 1031), p. 136, is printed from an 11th cent. ms. at Durham (B. iii. 22, f. 40). Also in three ms. (Nos. 357, 413, 414) of the 11th cent. at St. Gall. Also in Card. Newman's Hymn. Recluse, 1836 and 1885. The text usually tr. is from the Brev. of 1532.

Translations in C. U.—

1. The Consecrator of Christ from shore to shore. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Cath. Cath. 1849, p. 216, and again in his Hym. & Psalms, 1873, p. 114. This is also given in some Roman Catholic collections for Missions and Schools.

3. This is the day when Jesus' true Consecrator. By R. F. Littledale, made for and first pub. in the People's H. 1867, and repeated, except the alternative first stanza and the third, in the Marquesse of Bute's Rom. Brev. in English, 1879, p. 842.

4. Hail, whom in all lands celebrate the faithful. Appeared in the Antiphoner & Grad, 1880, and the Hymner, 1882, and appended for St. Vester.

Translations not in C. U.—

1. Unto Thine holy Consecrator, our voices. W. J. Bree, 1862.

2. This Thy Consecrator Lord of fame sublime. J. D. Chambers (from the older text), 1866.

3. Over all the world the faithful sing. J. Wallace, 1874.

It is my sweetest comfort, Lord. E. Caswall, [Christ's Humanity.] 1st pub. in his Masque of Marl., &c., 1866, p. 233, in 4 st. of 4 l., and headed "Christ's Humanity," and again, in a revised form, in his Hs. & Psalms, 1873, p. 276. It is given in several modern hymn-books.
It is the Lord, behold His hand.
J. Montgomery. [In Times of Distress.]
Written Aug. 22, 1832, during the epidemic of cholera in Sheffield, and for use in that town (m. mss.). It was pub. in Montgomery's Original Hymns, 1853, No. 220, in 6 st. of 4 l. and entitled "During the Cholera—Confession and Supplication." In Kennedy, 1863, No. 457, it is abbreviated, and altered.
The companion hymn, also written on Aug. 22, 1832, and for the same purpose, was "Let the land mourn through all its coasts." This was pub. in the Original Hymns, 1853, No. 249, in 6 st. of 4 l. and is in C. U. in W. Britain and America. The hymn, "Sing Hallelujah, sing," and "Walking on the winged wind," were written by Montgomery at the close of the same year as a "Thanksgiving for Deliverance from the Cholera" (m. mss), and also pub. in his Original Hymns, 1853. [J. J.]

It is Thy hand, my God. J. G. Deek. [In Affliction.] The origin of this hymn is thus stated by the author in Joy in Departing: a Memoir of the Conversion and Last Days of Augustus James Clarke, who fell asleep in Jesus, May 2nd, 1843. By J. G. Deek, London, 1847, p. 34:—

"It was written originally to comfort a bereaved mother and widow in her hour of sorrow, and the Lord made it a comfort to the soul of this young disciple."
The date of its composition is unknown.
It was pub. in Psalms & Hymns & Spiritual Songs in two Parts, Lond., D. Walther, 1812, pt. ii., No. 70, in 6 st. of 4 l. and headed "In Sorrow." It was repeated in numerous collections, and is in C. U. in W. Britain and America, and sometimes with the erroneous signature of "J. N. Darby." [J. J.]

Italian Hymnody. [Various.]
I've found the Pearl of greatest price. J. Mason. [Praise of Christ.] 1st pub. in his Spiritual Songs, or Songs of Praise to an Almighty God, &c., 1803. No. 15, in 4 st. of 8 l., and headed "A Song of Praise for a Christian." and again in D. Sedgwick's reprint, 1839, p. 20. Various arrangements of the text are in C. U. in G. Britain and America, including the alteration, "I've found the precious Christ of God," in the Enlarged London H. Bk., 1873, and others. The alterations and transpositions in the text are too numerous to enumerate. They can easily be detected by reference to the Sedgwick reprint as above. The opening lines of the original read:—

"I've found the Pearl of greatest Price,
My heart doth sing for joy;
And sing I must; a Christ I have;
to what a Christ have I?"
The words in italics Mason expanded into a poem which was included in his Poetical Remains, 1834. This poem was given in A Pocket Hymn-Book designed as a constant Companion for the Pious, collected from Various Authors, York, R. Spencer (5th ed., 1786, No. 113), the first stanza being:—

"A Christ I have, O what a Christ have I."
He built the globe, he spread the starry sky;
And yet for me, and Adam's sinful race,
He bled and dyd to manifest his grace."

In 1786 this book was reprinted at the request of the Committee held at Bristol that year, with omissions and additions by J. Wesley, as A Pocket Hymn-Book for the Use of Christians of All Denominations. London, 1786. Wesley's Preface is exceedingly plain and severe. This hymn and one by James Allen were omitted, with others, in the reprint, and the omission is specially explained:—

"But a friend tells me 'Some of these, specially those two that are doggerel double distilled, namely, "The despaired Nazarene," and that which begins, "A Christ I have, O what a Christ have I," are hugely admired, and continually echoed from Berwick-upon-Tweed to London.' If they are I am sorry for it: it will bring a deep reproach on the judgment of the Methodists."

Usually these stricatures are said to have been applied by Wesley to "I've found the Pearl of greatest price," in the 1st st. of which the line "A Christ I have, &c.," is embedded. This is not so. They apply to the hymn from the Poetical Remains of 1694, in which the first line of each stanza begins, "A Christ I have, O what a Christ have I." It is to be noted that the words, "doggery double distilled," are not J. Wesley's, but are given by him as a quotation from "a friend." [J. J.]

21. The power that rules the globe. Christ’s Power to Heal.
22. To God all glory be. Holy Trinity.

Jackson, Edward Hall, s. of a civil engineer, was b. in Birmingham, April 12, 1838. In 1856 he joined a Baptist Church, and in 1859 became a Baptist minister. In that capacity he has laboured in Liverpool, Billesden (Leycestertes), Castle Donington, Ripley, and Louth; and as an occasional lecturer he has been widely popular. His hymns have been composed chiefly for S. School Anniversaries. Three were introduced into the Baptist Hymnal, 1879, and seven into the School Hymnal, 1880. The following are found in several S. S. collections:

1. A thousand blessings on the plan. The Sunday School. Brethren, we have found the Lord. Invitation to Church Fellowship.
2. Fearless, calm, and strong in love. Teachers’ Meeting.
3. Fearless, calm, and strong in love. Teachers’ Prayer.
4. Fearless, calm, and strong in love. Teachers’ Prayer.
5. How fair are the lilies, what fragrance they yield. Flower Services.
6. I have a work, 0 Lord. Teachers’ Prayer.
7. Jesus, hear us for the young. Teachers’ Prayer.
8. Little vessels on life’s waters. Prayer for the Young.
11. The golden land is shining. Heaven. [W. R. S.]

Jacobi, John Christian, a native of Germany, was b. in 1670, and appointed Keeper of the Royal German Chapel, St. James’s Palace, London, about 1708. He held that post for 42 years, and d. Dec. 14, 1750. He was buried in the Church of St. Paul’s, Covent Garden. His publications included:

1. A Collection of Divine Hymns, Translated from the Dutch. Together with their Proper Tunes and Musical Bass. London: J. Young. . . . 1722. This edition contained 62 hymns, of which 3 ("He reigns, the Lord our Saviour reigns;") "Is God withdrawing?" "Shepherd rejoices") and the first stanza of another ("Rise your devotion, mortal tongues," from "Christian to the Prince of Life") were taken from J. West. A 2nd Part was added in 1725, and was incorporated with the former part in 1722. Lond., G. Smith. After Jacobi’s death the Psalmist Germanica was republished, in 1765, by John Haberkorn, with a Supplement of 32 pieces.

Jacobus de Benedictis, commonly known as Jacopone, was b. at Todi in Umbria, early in the 13th. cent., his proper name being Jacopone di Benedetti. He was descended from a noble family, and for some time lived a secular life. Some remarkable circumstances which attended the violent death of his wife, led him to withdraw himself from the world, and to enter the Order of St. Francis, in which he remained as a lay brother till his death, at an advanced age, in 1268. His zeal led him to attack the religious abuses of the day. This brought him into conflict with Pope Boniface VIII, the result being imprisonment for long periods. His poetical pieces were written, some in Italian, and some in Latin, the most famous of the latter being "Cur mundus militat sub vana gloriam" (possibly by Walter Mapes), and the "Stabat Mater dolorosa." Archbishop Trench says of him:

"An earnest humourist, he carried the feeling for Christ into every-day life. The things which with this intent he did, somewhat striking enough, were extravagances and pieces of gross spiritual buffoonery—wise and folly, such as we often find, side by side, in the saints of the Roman Calendar—are largely reported by Wadding, the historian of the Francisian Order, and by Lisco, in a separate Life of the Stabat Mater, Berlin, 1843, p. 23. These often leave one in doubt whether he was indeed perfectly sound in his mind, or only a Christian Brute, signing folly, that he might impress his wisdom the more deeply, and utter it with more freedom." St. Latin Poetry, 3rd ed., 1874, p. 268.

Sketches of the life and writings of Jacopone, drawn entirely from the original sources (Trench), have been published, as follows:

Jackson, George, s. of George Jacque, Douglas, Lanarkshire, was b. near Douglas, Jan. 18, 1804. After studying at the University of Glasgow, he became, in 1835, minister of the South U. P. Church, Auchterarder, Perthshire. He has pub. The Clouds; a Poem, 1866; and Hope, its Lights and Shadows, 1875. He was appointed a member of the Hymn Committee of the U. P. Church in 1870, and contributed the following to their Presb. Hymnal, 1876:

1. Hark, how heaven is calling. Divine Worship.
2. O Thou in Whom are all our springs. National Hymn.

Jahn, Martin. [Jesus, M.]

Jam Christe sole justitiae. [Lent.] In this hymn Lent is regarded as a season of waiting and penitential preparation for the Second Creation at Easter. It does not seem to be earlier than the 6th cent. It is found in two mss. of the 11th cent. in the British Museum, viz. in a Hymnarium (Vesp. D. xii. f. 120), and in a Mozarabic Breviary (Add. 30848, f. 98). From the former of these it is printed in the Lat. Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon Ch., 1855, p. 153. It is found in the older Roman (e.g. Venice, 1748) and Aberdeen Breviaries. Also in Mone, No. 69; Daniel, i., No. 214, &c. In the revised Roman Breviary, 1632, it begins O salutis inimica, and this form is repeated in later eds of that Breviary; in Daniel, i., No. 214; and in V. Newman's Hymnææ Ecclesiarum, 1838 and 1865. [J. M.]

Both forms of this hymn have been tr. into English as follows:—

i. Jam Christe sole justitiae. This is tr. by J. D. Chambers, in his Lauds Sion, 1857, p. 129, as — O Christ! Thou Sun of justice, come.

ii. O salutis inimica. The trs. in C. U. are:

1. The darkness fleets, and joyful earth. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholic, 1849, p. 74, and again in his Hys. & Poems, 1873, p. 41. It is in C. U. in its original translated form, and also (1) the same with slight alterations in the Hymnary, 1872; (2) the same abbreviated; (3) as When darkness fleets, and joyful earth.

2. *The people's Hymn, 1867; and as (4) Jesus, true Sun of human souls, in the 1862 Appendix to the H. Noted.

Translations not in C. U. :—
2. Salvation's Sun, the inward glory. R. M.蒙, 1837.

Jam Christæ auctore Ascendent. St. Ambrose.? [Whitsun tide.] This hymn is ascribed to St. Ambrose by Thomasius, Mone and others, but is not assigned to him by the Benedictine editors. It is a metrical setting of Acta ii. 1-16, without much beauty or point. Thomasius, ii. 374, cites it as in a Vatianus ms. of the 8th cent. It is in three mss. of the 11th cent. in the British Museum, two of the English Churc (Vesp. D. xii. f. 79: Jul. A. vi. f. 52), and one of the ancient Spaniæ Church (Add. 30848, f. 158); and in the Latin Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon Church, 1851, p. 95, is printed from an 11th cent. ms. at Durham (B. iii. 32, f. 28). Also in an 11th cent. ms. at St. Gall, No. 387. In the Sarum Breviary it was the hymn at First Vespers on Whitsunday and daily to Trinity Sunday; the second part, Impleta gaudens visceræ, being assigned to Lauda. In the York and Roman Breviaries it was the hymn at Matins in Whitsun tide. In the Durham ms. it is Incredulæ (l. 13) is assigned to Sext, and Judææ tune incredulæ (l. 25, to None in Whitsun tide. The printed text is also in Mone, No. 182; Daniel, i., No. 57, and iv. p. 83; and the Littlemore Hymnææ secundum Usum ... Eccl. Sarisburniæ, 1850, p. 70. [J. J.]

Both parts of this hymn have been tr. into English, and are in C. U. as follows:—

1. Jam Christæ auctore Ascendent. Tr. as :—
   1. Above the stARRY SPHERES. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholic, 1849, p. 104; and again in his Hys. & Poems, 1873, p. 59. It is usually slightly altered, as in A. A. D.

4. Christ had regained the sky. By A. A. Dayman, in the Sarum Hymnal, 1868, in 9 st. of 6 l., and again in the Hymnary, 1872, in 6 st. of 6 l.

Translations not in C. U. :—
1. O redemption, Jesus Christ. Primer, 1664.
3. Now Christ hath pierced the skies to claim. Primer, 1706.
4. Now Christ beyond the stars had gone. W. J. Copeland, 1848.
5. Now Christ had climbed the starry skies. W. J. Blew, 1852-55.

ii. Impleta gaudens visceræ. Tr. as :—

1. Breathed on by God the Holy Ghost. By R. F. Littledale, in the People's H., 1867, and signed "A. A. D."

In addition to these trs. Mr. Blew has a tr. beginning "To men from every nation call'd." This opens with st. ii. of "Impleta gaudens visceræ," beginning "Notique cunctis gentibus.*

Jam designatæ suspicio. C. Coffin. [Christmas.] The hymn for Matins of Christmas Day in the Paris Breviary, 1736; and again in his Hymnææ Sacri, 1736, p. 36. It is also in the Lyonæ and other Propers. J. Chandler's H. of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 41, and Card. Newman's Hymnææ Ecclesiarum, 1838 and 1865. [W. A. S.]

Translations in C. U. :—

1. Cease, weary mortals, cease to sigh. By J. Chandler, in his Hys. of the P. Church, 1837, p. 44. This was repeated in Johnston's English
Hymnal, 1852, and again, with alterations, in 1866 and 1861.

1. Away with sorrow's sigh. By I. Williams, in his Hymn, tr. from the Parisian Brev., 1839, p. 53. This is given in Lord Selborne's Bk. of Prayers, 1852.

2. God from an high hath heard. By Bp. J. R. Woodforde. Written about 1850, and 1st pub. in his Hymn, Arranged for Sundays, &c., 1852 and 1855. It is found in numerous hymn-books, and in various forms, the principal of which are:—

(a) The original tr. in Chope's Hymnal, 1864.
(b) The text in s. m. as in H. A. & M. This was given in the triptych of H. A. & M., 1859, and in the ed. 1861 and 1875. It is also in many other collections.
(c) It is an altered version of Bp. Woodforde's tr., written without his knowledge, and was never accepted by him. [s. m.]
(d) The Parish Hymn Book, 1863 and 1875. This text is then composed: st. i. v. and vii. are from Bp. Woodforde's tr.; and st. vi. viii. are by the Rev. O. Phillimore. [s. m.]
(e) The Sarm Hymn text, 1866, No. 4. This is by Woodforde's revised and authorized text. [s. m.]

It is given, slightly altered, in the Hymnary, 1872.

(f) The S. P. C. K. Church Hymn, 1871. This text is then composed: st. i. - vi., Bp. Woodforde's original tr.; st. vii. viii. the same but slightly altered; st. vii., from Bp. Woodforde's revised text in the Sarm, 1866; st. vii. viii. by O. Phillimore, as in the Parish H. Bk.

It should be noted in connection with this tr. that the beautiful lines in the Sarm text, "Adorning tremble still,

And trembling still adore," are from I. Williams's tr., 1839, where they are given as one line.

3. Clear through the silent night. This tr. in T. Darley's Hymn for the Ch. of England, 1887, is a slightly altered form of the H. A. & M. text beginning with st. ii.

4. Calm be our griefs, hush'd every sigh. By J. D. Chambers in his Lanu Scon, 1857. This was repeated in the Hymnary for the Use of St. John the Evangelist, Aberdeen, 1870.

5. Hark on the midnight air. In Skinner's Daily Service Hymnal, 1864; and the Altar Hymnal, 1884. This text is as follows: st. i. - iv. by Bp. Woodforde in the Parish H. Bk. as above; st. v. from G. Phillimore's addition to the same, altered; and the rest by A. H. Ward.

Translations not in C. U.:

1. Ye people, peace from Bees. R. Campbell, 1849.
2. Let singing cease and woe. W. J. Blew, 1852.

In O. Stifle's Annuaire Sacra, 1844. [J. J.]

Jam lucis orto luce. [Morning.] This hymn has frequently been ascribed to St. Ambrose, but it is not assigned to him by the Benedictine editors, or by Biraghi in his Inni sinceri e carmi di Sant'Ambrogio, 1862. It is certainly ancient, and may possibly be as old as the 5th cent. Mone, p. 372, cites it as in an 8th cent. ms. at Darmstadt, and in two ms. of the 8th cent. at Trier; in each case appointed for Prime. It is found in three ms. of the 11th cent. in the British Museum (Vesp. D. xii. f. 7 b; Jun. A. vi. f. 21; Harl. 2961 f. 219 b). In the Lat. Hymns of the Anglo-Saxon Church (Surtsee Society), 1851, p. 9, it is printed from an 11th cent. ms. at Durham (B. iii. 92 f. 4). It is also in an 11th cent. ms. at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge (391, p. 230); in the St. Gall ms. 313, 314 of the 11th cent., &c. In almost all Mediaeval Breviaries, including the Sarum, York, Aberdeen, Mozarabic of 1502, Roman (Venice, 1478, and the revision of 1632) and Paris of 1643: uniformly as a hymn at Prime in the Daily Office. The text is also in Daniel, i. No. 48, with a reference at iv. p. 42 to it as in a Rheims ms. of the 10th cent.; in the Hymnarium Sarisb., 1851, p. 38; in Wackernagel, i., No. 67; in Card. Newman's Hymni Eclesiae, 1838 and 1865, &c. In the Paris Brev., 1736, it is recast by Charles Coffin, and this text is in J. Chandler's Hymns of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 3; Card. Newman's Hymni Eclesiae, 1898 and 1895; Macgill's Songs of the Christian Church, 1876.

Both forms of this hymn have been tr. into English, and have come into extensive C. U. as follows:—

1. The Original Text.

2. Now hath arisen the star of day. By H. Alford, in his Ps. & Hy., 1844, No. 106; and again in his Year of Promise, 1867.

3. Now doth the sun ascend the sky. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 9; and again in his Ps. & Hy., 1873, p. 9. This was repeated in Oldknow's Hymns, &c., 1850; with slight alterations in the People's H., 1867; and also in other collections.

4. Now that the daylight fills the sky. By J. M. Neale, in the Hymnal N., 1852, No. 4. This is given unaltered in several hymn-books. In H. A. & M., 1861 and 1875, it begins with the same first line, but the text is very much altered by the compilers. This is repeated in Kennedy, 1864, No. 421. The text in Pott's Hymn, &c., 1861, is altered by the editor. In the S. P. C. K. Church Hymn, 1871, the text of H. A. & M. is taken with slight alterations. The text in Thringly's Coll., 1882, is Neale's tr. altered by Thing. In addition to these it is altered in the English Hymnal, 1852 and 1861, to "Now that the day-star mounteth the sky [on high];" in the Sarum Hymn., 1868, "While now the daylight fills the sky;" and the Hymnary, 1872, "Again the daylight fills the sky." When these arrangements of Neale's tr. of the hymn are all taken into account it is found that his tr. is the most widely used of any.

5. The star of light is rising bright. By W. J. Blew, in his Church Hymn & Tune Bk., 1852-55, and again in Rice's Sel. from the same, 1870.

6. As mounts on high the orb of day. By R. C. Singleton, written in 1867, and pub. in his Anglican H. Bk., 1868.

7. The star of light ascending the sky. By G. Moultier, in his Hymns and Lyrics, 1887, and the Irissenge Hymn, for the Use of the Churches, 1871.

Other translations are:—

2. The morning star has risen, and we. W. W. Hull, in his Coll. of Hymn, 1833.
5. You herald star hath brought the morn. Hymnarium Anglicanum, 1844.

2. To day, 0 Lord, a holier work. This tr. in H. A. & M., 1861 and 1875, in Kennedy, 1883, and others, is Chandler’s tr. altered by the compilers of H. A. & M.

3. To day, 0 God, Thy mind resolves. This tr. in the Hymnal for the Use of St. John the Evangelist, &c., Aberdeen, 1870, is Chandler’s tr. altered by the editor.

4. To day, 0 Lord, Thy will resolves. This tr. in the Hymnary, 1872, is also Chandler’s tr. but altered by the editors of the Hymnary.

Jam toto subitus vesper cat polo. [B. V. M.] The hymn at Matins in the office of the Seven Dolours of the B. V. M., commemorated on the 3rd S. in September. This office has been added to the Roman Breviary since 1736. It is bound up with the Para Autummalis of the British Museum copy of the Antwerp ed., 1757, and was authorized then for use in Germany by the “Fratres ordinis servorum B. M. V.” In the Kempken ed., 1746, it is given among the offices not of universal obligation, and marked as to be used in all the hereditary possessions of the House of Austria. The text of this hymn is in recent editions of the Hymnary, and also in Daniel, iv. p. 506. Tr.:—

Janus, Martin, seems to have been a native of Silesia, and to have been born about 1629. After receiving his license in theology, he became Preceptor of the two churches at Soran, in Silesia, then, about 1653, was appointed Rector of the Evangelical School at Sagan, and Preceptor at the church near the Eckersdorf gate. He became Pastor at Eckersdorf about 1664, but was expelled by the Imperial Edict of March 13, 1668, by which all Evangelical pastors and teachers were driven out of the principality. He is said to have become Preceptor at Ohlau, in Silesia, and d. thence about 1662. The only hymn by him tr. into English is:—

Jehan Calvin (?). [Praise to Christ.] This hymn, entitled "Salutation à Jésus-Christ," first appeared in the edition of the French Psalter, published at Strasbourg in 1545, the Strassburg copy of which unfortunately perished in the destruction of the Town Library during the bombardment of Strasbourg in the Franco-German war. It has been ascribed to Calvin, but F. Bovet, in his Histoire du Psautier des Églises Réformées, 1572, and M. E. Reuss, of Strasbourg, who included it in 8 st. of 8 lines in the "Lesser Works of Calvin," 1867, vol. xxxiv., both regard his authorship as very doubtful. O. Donen, in his Clément Marot et le Psautier Humanist, 1879-78, thinks it probable that the author was Jean Garnier, then Minister of the French Congregation at Strasbourg. Mr. Baumer gives an interesting summary of the evidence as a preface to his translation (see below). It is tr. as

Jehovah! 'tis a glorious Name. P. Doddridge. [Trust in Jehovah.] In the D. M. S. this hymn is headed, "The Saint encouraging himself in the Lord his God," and is dated Oct. 9, 1787. It was included in J. Orton's ed. of Doddridge's (posthumous) Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 20, in 3 st. of 4 l., and again in J. D. Humphry's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 24. In the Baptist H., 1879, it is slightly altered. [J. J.]

Jelecky, Johannes, better known in the Germanised form Oleksey, was ordained a priest of the Bohemian Brethren's Unity in 1555. He was sometime President of the community at Fulnek, in Bohemia, and afterwards at Graslitz, in Bohemia. He d. at Graslitz, Dec. 28, 1568. He was sent by Bp. Blaschow to negotiate with the Abbatas of Austerlitz. To the Kirchengemeinde, 1566, he contributed 22 hymns and translations. Two have passed into English, of which one is noted under Augusta, J. The other is Jersey, Margaret Elizabeth Villiers, née Leight, Countess of, eldest daughter of Lord Leigh, of Stoneleigh, in the county of Warwick, was b. Oct. 29, 1849, and in 1870 was married to the Earl of Jersey. In 1871 the Religious Tract Society published a small collection of her hymns and poems under the title of Hymns and Poems for little Children. A second series under the same title appeared in 1873. They were mostly written by Lady Jersey before she married, for the use of a little sister, it being difficult to find hymns composed in language simple enough for a very young child. And certainly they are distinguished by a charming simplicity both of thought and language. Six of these hymns were included in W. R. Stevenson's School Hymnal, 1880. Some of these are repeated in the Voice of Praise (London S. S. Union) and other collections. Her hymns in C. U. are:—

1. Here am I, for thou didst call me. Child Samuel.
4. O let me praise my God and King. Praise to God the Father.
5. Speak the truth, for that is right. Speaking the Truth.
6. There are many lovely things below. Heaven.

Jerusalem, Jerusalem, enthroned once on high. Bp. H. Heber. [Christ Weeping over Jerusalem.] Pub. in his posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 102, in 5 st. of 4 l., and appointed for the 10th S. after Trinity, the account of Christ weeping over Jerusalem being the Gospel for that day. In T. Darby's Hymns for the Church of England, ed. 1861-1875, it is altered to "Thou city of Jerusalem." The original is in several collections. [J. J.]

Jerusalem Luminosa. [Eternal Life.] This hymn, in 100 lines, was first pub. by Mone, No. 304, from a 13th cent. ms. at Karlsruhe, in which it is entitled, "On the glory of the heavenly Jerusalem as concerning the endowments of the glorified body." Of this and the two cognate hymns of this ms. ("Quiquis valet" and "In domo Patria," q. v.) Dr. Neale says, "The language and general ideas prove the writer [unknown, but apparently of the 13th cent.] to have been subject to the influence of the school of Geert Groot and Thomas Kempis" (Hymns chiefly Medieval on the Joys and Glories of Paradise, 1865, p. 44). Lines 25 ff. "In tu numquam nibilata," may be compared with a passage in St. Cyprian's De laude marisfcrifiti:—

"All things there have nothing to do with either cold or heat; nor do the fields rest, as in autumn; nor again does the fertile earth bring forth fruit in the early spring; all things belong to one season, they bear the fruits of one summer: indeed, neither does the moon serve to mark the months, nor does the sun run through the spaces of the hours; nor does the day pass, to give way to night; joyful rest reigns over the people, a placid dwelling contains them."

Dr. Neale's rendering of the II. 23-30 is:—

"There the everlasting spring-tide
Sheds its dew, green repose;
There the Summer, in its glory,
Cloudless and eternal glories;
For that country never knowth
Autumn's storms nor winter's snows."

Jerusalem, my happy home. [The Heavenly Jerusalem.] The importance of this poem, the varying forms in which it, or some portions of it, are found in modern hymn-books, and the doubt which attaches to its authorship, necessitate an exhaustive treatment of its text and history. The fact that two versions are known, both dating from the latter part of the 16th cent. (those of F. B. P. and W. Prid), points naturally to a common source from whence each was taken. After indicating this probable source of the poem, we will give the text and history in detail.

1. Probable Source of the Poem. For some centuries the work was known as The Meditations of St. Augustine (liber meditationum) had been popular, and had widely influenced the thought of the Church. At the time of the Reformation, Roman Catholic and Protestant alike vied in translations of it, in whole or in part. In many editions Card. P. Damiani’s hymn on Paradise, “Ad perennis vitae fontem,” is given as a part of the Manual, and has thus become frequently ascribed to St. Augustine. In the Liber Meditationum [ed. Dini Aurelii Augustini Hipponensis Episcopi Meditationes, Soliloquia et Manuale, Venice, 1533, c. 25] the following passage is found:

This passage, together with Card. P. Damiani’s hymn, seems to have been the source of the hymn by F. B. P., as it is certainly of that by W. Prid.

2. The Hymn by F. B. P. This is in a ms. book in the British Museum, numbered Add. 15,225. The ms. is unedited, but is of the latter part of the 16th or the beginning of the 17th cent. The full text is as follows:-

A SONG MADE BY F. B. P.
To the tune of Diana.

"1 Hierusalem my happy home
When shall I come to thee
When shall I come to thee
Thy loyes when shall I see;

"2 O happy harbour of the saints
O sweet and pleasant sojourn
In thee may I may be found
No greene, no care, no toyle;

"3 In thee no sicknesse may be seen
No hurt, no ache, no sore
There is no death, no agie devill
There is life for evermore;

"4 No dampshe mist is seen in thee
No cold, no darksome night
There everie sandle shines as the sunne
There god himselfe glorius light

"5 There lust and lust and lust will not dwell
There envyies nor may see
There is no hunger beate nor cold
But pleasure everie way;

"6 Hierusalem Hierusalem
God grant I on e may see
Thy endless loyes and of the same
Partake wee to see;

"7 Thy wales are made of precious stones
Thy holwaires Diamonde square
Thy gates are of right orient pearle
Exceedinge rich and rare;

"8 Thy terrace and thy pinacles
With carbuncles doth shine
Thy verticl streets are paved with gold Surpassing cleare and fine;

"9 Thy houses are of ivory
Thy windows cristale cleare
Thy tyles are mad of beaten gold
O god that I was there;

"10 Within thy gates no darkness doth come
That is not passinge,cleane
Noe spiders web, noe durt noe dust
Noe filthe may there be seene
Ab my sweete home Hierusalem
Would god I in thee
Would god my sweete at end were an at Ab my loyes that I might see;

"12 Thy saints are crowned with glorie great
They see god face to face
They triumph still, they still rejoyce
Most happy is their case;

"13 Woe that are beere in banishment
Continuallie doe mourne
We sighs and sobs, we weepes and weales
Perpetually we grieve

"14 Our sweete is mixt with bitter saile
Our pleaure is but paine
Our loyes scarce last the looking on Our sorrows still remaine

"15 But there they lie in such delight
Such pleare and such play
As to them a thousand yeares
Both seeme as yeaste day

"16 Thy vinardes and thy orchardes are
Most beutifull and faire
Full furnished with trees and fruits
Most wonderfull and rare

"17 Thy gardens and thy gallant walks
Continually are greene
There grows such sweete and pleasant flowers
As noe where elles are seen
JERUSALEM, MY HAPPY

"18 There is nectar and ambrosia made
There is muske and civette sweete
There is saffron and honey drawn
And trabon under fete

19 There cinnamon there sugar groes
There darne and balme abound
What tongue can tell the sweete concele
The loyes that are found there are 20 Quyth through the streetes with silver sound

The knaves the drakes and the booke
Upon whose bonkes on evarie syde
The wood of life doth growe

21 There trees for evermore beare fruits
And evermore doe springe
There evermore the Angels sit
And evermore doe singe

22 There sawd stands with harpe in hand
As master of the Queene
Tenn thousand times that mane were blest
That might this musicke hear

23 Our Ladie singes magnificat
With tune surpassing sweete
And all the virgines beare their parts
Silence about her feete

24 To Deum deth Saint Ambrose singe
Saint Augustin deth de the like Ouid Ninecon and Zacharias
Have not their songs to seek

25 There Magalene hath left her home
And cheerefully doth singe
With blessed Saints whose harmonie
In evry streete doth ringe

26 Hierusalem my happie home
Would god I were in thee
Would god my woes were at an end
Thy loyes that I might see

In 1601 this hymn, abbreviated to 19 stanzas, was printed in The Song of M'ry the Mother of Christ . . . . with the Description of Heavenly Jerusalem. London: E. Alle, 1601. This text, being derived from the above, is very corrupted and incomplete, and variations in arrangement and in phrase are numerous. These two versions, if the latter is not derived from the former, must have had one common source, and suggest the possibility of an earlier and probably printed version of the hymn now unknown being the source of both.

From this hymn or song of 176 lines we will quote those stanzas only which have to do with the New Jerusalem. It reads:

"Psalm of Zion.

1 O Mother dear Hierusalem,
Jehovah throne on thee,
O Sacred City, Queen and Wife,
Of Christ eternally.

2 May God long to see thy face,
That we may live with thee for euer:
Thy glorious beauty to behold,
My mind is set on fire.

3 Our brightly Queen in glory clad,
In honour and degree,
All fairer than an exceeding bright
Two spot there is in thee,

4 O perennial saint and daughter faire
Of love, without annoy
Triumph, for in thy beauty brave,
The King doth greatly joy

5 Thy port, thy shape, thy stately grace,
Thy favour faire in decee:
Thy pleasant new and countenance,
All others doth exceede.

Stanzas 6–12, which follow, are an indifferent paraphrase of passages from The Song of Solomon. The writer returns to his subject in st. 13–18:

JERUSALEM, MY HAPPY

"13 0 then thirse haste should my state
In happinesse remaine;
If I might once Thy glorious Seate,
And princely place attaine.

14 And view thy gallant gates thy walls
Thy streetes and dwellings wide,
Thy noble troop of Citizens
And mightie King beside.

15 Of stones full precious are thy towers
Thy gate of pearles are told
There is that Alleluia sung
In streets of beaten gold

16 Those stately buildings manifold,
On squared stones do rise
With Nayphro de-kt, & lofty frames
Enclosed Castellwise.

17 Into the gates shall none approach
But honest, pure and clean:
No spot, no fault, no loathsome thing,
Shall enter in (I meanse).

18 O mother dear Jerusalem,
The comfort of vs all,
How sweate thou art and dilicate,
An thing shall thee befall.

Stanzas 19–22 are much in common with F. B. P.'s hymn. Stanzas 23–28 are:

"23 He is the king of kings beset,
Amidst his Seruants right:
And they his happe household do,
Do serue him day and night.

24 There, there the quiers of Angels sing,
There the supernall sort
Of Citizens (that hence are rid
From dangers desper) do sport.

25 There be the prudent Prophets all,
Thrapostilles six and six:
The glorious martirs on a row,
And Confessors betwixt.

26 There doth the crew of righteousness men,
And matrons all consite:
Young men & maides that here on earth
Their pleasures did resist.

27 The sheepe & lambs that hardly scape,
The snares of death and hell,
Triumph in joy everlasting
Whereof no tongue can tell.

28 And though the glory of each one
Doth differ in degree,
Yet is the joy of all alike,
And common (as we see)."

Stanzas 29–33 continue to borrow from the Meditations of St. Augustine. At the close of st. 34 the writer takes a fresh departure, and referring to our Bless'd Lord, says:

"According to his promise made (Which here I encounter), and st. 35–38 consist of "enterlaced" texts accordingly. Stanzas 39, 40 are of no special note; and the poem concludes with st. 41–44:

"41 0 blessed are the pure in heart,
Their Sovereign they shall see;
And they most happy heavenly sights
That of his household bee.

42 Wherefore, O Lord, dissolve my bonds,
My glories and settings strong:
For I have dwelt within the tents
Of Cedar o'er long.

43 And grant, O God, for Christ his sake,
That once deside of strife,
I may thy holy hill attaine,
To dwell in all my life.

44 With Cherubines and Seraphines,
And holy soundes of men:
To sing thy praise O Lord of hostes,
For ever and ever. Amen."

In his Preface to The Glass of Vaine Glory, Prid says this is a "Song of Solomon which I have here translated out of S. Augustine's Booke of Prayers, Chap. 24, into English metre. . . . I have as near as I could possibly, followed the varie words of mine Authour.

To this point the history is clear. It is certain that W. Prid translated direct from the work known to us as St. Augustine's Meditations; and it is highly probable that F. B. P. derived his directly from the same source, or indirectly through the translation of another. It now remains for us to show how later writers have availed themselves of these materials.

iv. Additional forms of the Hymn. From this point we have a great variety of texts, the more important of which are as follows:

(1) The most noted of these is a broadside of the 18th cent., which was reprinted by Dr. H. Bonar in his work "The New Jerusalem; a Hymn of the Old Time," 1852. Dr. Bonar attributes this text to David Dickson, a Scottish Presbyterian Minister (1563-1663). It is in 448 lines, all of which, with the exception of II. 26-32, and 233-257, are altered either from F. B. P. or from W. Prid. From the following extract from Robert Wodrow's "Life of D. Dickson," 1726, it is evident that Wodrow gathered the production as an original poem by Dickson:

""Some short poems on pleasurable and serious subjects, such as the Christian Sacrifice," O Mother dear, Jerusalem," and (as somewhat larger, octavo 1649), "True Christian Love," to be sung with the common tunes of the Psalms...." This is all of this I have seen in print.

The opening stanza of this combined version of F. B. P. and W. Prid. is:

"O Mother dear, Jerusalem!
When shall I come to thee?
When shall my sorrows have an end,
Thy joys, when shall I see?
O happy harbour of God's saints!
O sweet and pleasant soil!
In thee no sorrow may be found
No grief, no care, no toil."

The full text is given in Dr. Bonar's work as above.

(2) Contemporary with this broadside in Scotland was another in England. It is in the Robinson Collection, 4to, 566, 167, and entitled "The true description of the everlasting joys of Heaven. To the Tune of, 'O man in desperation.'" It is undated, but "Printed for P. Coles, T. Vere, and J. Wright," who are known to have issued many broadsides, ranging from 1650 to 1670. This broadside is more plentiful from external evidence, circ. 1660, or a little later. The first six stanzas will be sufficient to show that it is merely F. B. P. more or less altered, and that it contains no trace whatever of W. Prid's version.

"1 Jerusalem, my happy home,
When shall I come to thee?
When shall my sorrows have an end?
Thy joys, when shall I see?
O happy harbour of God's saints!
O sweet and pleasant soil!
In thee no sorrow may be found
No grief, no care, no toil."

The last three stanzas (which we have given in italics to mark them off from the rest) are the familiar lines prefixed in an altered form to several editions of the English Bible in the early part of the 17th cent. and beginning —

"Here is the spring whence waters flow.
By a slight alteration in the opening line that and the eleven lines which follow are made to set forth the beauties and treasures of Holy Scripture instead of those of Heaven. (See Variants.) The concluding lines of the poem fix the date at a short time after the Restoration of Charles II. (1660): —

"God still preserve our Royal King,
Our Queen likewise defend,
And all their happy, joyful days good Lord, unto them send.
Then to conclude I end my song
wishing health, wealth, and peace;
And all that wish the Common wealth, good Lord their wis increase."

(v.) Another transformation of F. B. P.'s text appeared in "Psalms and Hymns..., by W. S., London," 1725. It is in 40 st. 4, and is superior to many arrangements of the poem. The following lines are fair specimens of the rest —

"There David sits with Harp in Hand
As Master of the Choir:
Most happy they who understand,
And may His Muse hear."
Jesus, thy joys divine. [The Heavenly Jerusalem.] This poem, in 27 st. of 8 l., and headed by 1 st. in 4 l., appeared in The Song of Mary the Mother of Christ, containing the story of his life and passion, the tears of Christ in the garden; with the description of the Heavenly Jerusalem, 1601. (See "Jerusalem, my happy home.") This poem was partially reprinted in the Parker Society's Select Poetry of the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, 1845, p. 427. It is from this poem that Kennedy, 1868, "Jerusalem, thy joys divine," is compiled. [W. T. B.]

Jervis, Thomas, a. of a Presbyterian minister of the same name, was b. at Ipswich in 1748, and educated for the ministry at Hoxton. In 1770 he was appointed classical and mathematical tutor at the Exeter Academy. From 1772 to 1783 he was tutor to the sons of the Earl of Shelburne, at Bowood, where Dr. Priestley was librarian. In the latter year Jervis succeeded Dr. A. Rees at St. Thomas's Southwark, moving in 1796, after the death of Dr. Kippis, to the Prince's St. Chapel, Westminster. From 1808 to 1818 he was minister at the Mill Hill Chapel, Leeds. After his retirement he lived in the neighbourhood of London, and d. there in 1833. Jervis was one of the four editors of A Coll. of Hymns & Ps. for Public & Private Worship, London, 1795. [See Unitarian Hymnody.] He contributed 17 hymns to the 1st ed., and 4 to its Supplement, 1807. Of these several are found in later Unitarian collections in G. Britain and America, including:—

2. Great God! the attributes divine. Confidence in God.
3. Lord of the world's majestic frame. Praise a Duty.
5. Sweet is the friendly voice which [that] speaks. Peace to the President.
6. Thou, Lord, in mercy will regard. Pardon.
7. With sacred joy we lift our eyes. Divine Worship.
8. This is given, laudes Domini, N.Y., 1844, am
9. "With joy we lift our eyes." These hymns all date from 1795, and the most popular are Nos. 4 and 6. [V. D. D.]
Jesaiä, dem Propheten, das geschah.

M. Luther.  [The Sanctus.] This paraphrase of Isaiah vi. 1-4, was 1st pub. in Luther's Deutche Messe und ordnung Gotts Dienste, Wittenberg, 1526, repeated in the Erfurt G. B., 1527, the Geisthche Lieder, Wittenberg, 1:29 and 1534, etc., in 16 l., entitled "The German Sanctus." Thence in Wackenagel, iii. p. 18. Also in Schircks's ed. of Luther's Geist. Lieder, 1854, p. 58, the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 191, etc.

According to the ritual directions of the Deutche Messe, in the Holy Communion the bread was consecrated and received by the communicants, and then this Sanctus, or else Luther's "Gott selig lobest," or "Jesus Christus unser Herr Amsterdam," from Hesse was sung. The wine was then consecrated and received (see Blatter für Hymnologie, 1882, p. 89).

Jesu, accept the grateful songs.

C. Wesley.  [Jesu All in All.] Pub. in Hym. & Sac. Poems, 1749, in 22 st. of 4 l., and headed "After Preaching in Church." (P. Works, 1862-79, vol. v. 110). From this one of the most popular cantos in use by the Methodist bodies was given in the Ws. H. Bk., 1780, No. 36, as "Jesus the Name, high over all." It is composed of st. ix, x, xii, xxii. and xxiii. This canto, with the omission of its st. i. and iv. was given as "Jesus, the Name to sinners dear." in Dr. Alexander's Augustinit H. Bk., 1849 and 1865. G. J. Stevenson's note on the Wes. H. Bk. cento in his Meth. H. Bk. Notes, 1865, p. 45, is long and interesting. The last stanza:—

"Happy, if with my latest breath,
I may but gasp His Name;
Praise Him to all, and cry in death,
"Behold, behold the Lamb," as had a special charm for many Ministers of the Gospel. Several instances are given by Stevenson as above. [J. J.]

Jesu, at Whose supreme command.

C. Wesley.  [Holy Communion.] Pub. in Hym. & Sac. Poems, 1742, and again in the Hsps. for the Lord's Supper, 1745, No. 30, in 8 st. of 4 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. iii. p. 237). With slight alterations it was included in the Wes. H. Bk., as one of the "Additional Hymns," in 1840. It has passed into several collections in G. Britain and America. In addition two forms of the text are in C. U.:—

1. Blest Jesu, to Thy gracious Board. This form, opening with st. ii., slightly altered, was given in the Statituary H. Bk., 1857, and is repeated in other hymnals.
2. Jesu, by Thy supreme command. This text in the Hymnary, 1872, is Wesley's very much altered, together with the omission of st. iii., and the addition of a doxology. [J. J.]

Jesu Corona celisior.  [Common of Confessors.] This hymn is cited by Morel, p.179, as in a 14th cent. ms. at Einsiedeln. It is also in a ms. of, at the latest, 1415, in the British Museum (Add. 30014 f. 167 b), in the St. Gall ms., No. 526, of the 15th cent., in the Roman Breviary (Venice, 1478), the Ambrosian Breviary, 1539, etc. Daniel, I, No. 98, gives the older text and also the revised form in the Roman Breviary of 1532, "For Feasts of a Confessor and not a Bishop." Mone, No. 747, gives only Daniel's st. viii., beginning "Anni recurto tempore," from a 15th cent. ms. at Karlsruhe. He thinks that itsmetrical form proves it to have been composed in France in the 11th cent. The Roman Brev. text, 1632, is in Card. Newman's Hymni Eccleiae, 1838 and 1865. [J. M.]

Translation in C. U.:—

Jesus, eternal Truth sublime. By E. Caswell, pub. in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 219, in 8 st. of 4 l., and again in his H. & P. 1873, p. 115. It is found in a few collections, including Skinner's Daily Service Hymnal, 1864, etc., and the Marquess of Bute's Roman Breviary in English, 1879, vol. i. p. 981.

Translations not in C. U.:—

2. Jesus, surpassing happiness. J. Wallace. 1874. [J. J.]

Jesu Corona Virginum.  [Comman of Virgin.] This beautiful hymn, founded on Canticles ii. 16, Isaiah xxxvii. 5, and Rev. xiv. 4, has been ascribed to St. Ambrose, but is not adjudged to him by the Benedictine Editors. Thomao, ii. 492, gives it from a Vatican m. of the 8th cent. It is found in four hymnaries of the 11th cent. in the British Museum (Vesp. D. xii. f. 111 b; Jul. A. vii. f. 68; Harn. 2961, f. 239; Add. 30851, f. 155), and in the Lat. Hsps. of the Anglo-Saxon Ch., 1851, p. 140, is printed from an 11th cent. m. at Durham. (B. iii. 92 f. 41.) It is also in 3 mss. of the 11th cent. at St. Gall (Noa. 387, 113, 414). Among Breviaries are cited in the Roman (1478), Ambrosian of 1539, Sarum, York, Aberdeen, etc., the Sarum use being at London and Second Vespers on the festivals of Virgins and Martyrs. Daniel, i, No. 99, gives the text, and at iv. pp. 140, 368, cites it as in a 10th cent. Rheinma ms., and in a 9th cent. ms. at Bern. The Roman Brev. text is also in Card. Newman's Hymni Eccleiae, 1838 and 1865. [J. M.]

Translations in C. U.:—

1. Thou Crown of all the Virgin choir. By E. Caswall, pub. in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 221; and again in his H. & P. 1873, p. 116, but altered to "Dear Crown of all the Virgin choir." The original text is given in Roman Catholic hymn-books for missions and schools. It is also in other collections.
2. Jesu, the Virgin's Crown, do Thou. By J. M. Neale in the 1838 ed. of the H. Noted. The most popular form of this text is its altered text by the compilers of H. A. & M., 1861 and 1875. It begins with the same first line, and is in several collections.
4. O Jesu, Crown of Virgin, Thou. This in the Hymnary, 1872, is Dr. Neale's text, as above, altered by the Editors of the Hymnary, Jesus dulcis memoria. St. Bernard.
[The Holy Name of Jesus.] This hymn has been generally (and there seems little reason to doubt correctly) ascribed to St. Bernard; and there are many parallels to it in his genuine prose works, especially that on the Canticles. It has been variously dated 1130, 1140 or 1153; but as positive proof is lacking that it is unquestionably the work of St. Bernard it is manifestly impossible to fix a date for its composition. The years 1130 and 1140 were very stormy times indeed with him, and have nothing in common with the hymn. [See Bernard of Clairvaux, p. 136, l.] Possibly it was written shortly after the Second Crusade which he preached (1146), and for the disasters of which he was blamed. The most probable moment of his life would then be about 1150, when he was residing in retirement and was weary with the world. Dr. Schaff in his Christ in Song justly styles the hymn as the "sacred and most evangelic hymn of the Middle Ages." It is, however, open to the charge of edifying round its subject, so that Abp. Trench says of it:

"With all the beauty of the stanzas in particular, the composition, as a whole, lags under the defect of a certain modernity and want of progress." It is best known as the Joyful (or Jubilee) Rhythm of St. Bernard on the name of Jesus; but sometimes by the title of In commemorationem dominicæ passionis. The title Cursus de aeterna sepulcriis was probably suggested by Ecclesiastical xxiv. (especially vv. 20, 21; see Dr. Edensheim in the Speaker's Commentary on the "Apocrypha"), the Eternal Wisdom being Our Lord Jesus Christ.

I. MS. forms of the Text.
The earliest form of the text now known (and it may be added the best, and most probably the original) is contained in a MS. of the end of the 12th. cent., now in the Balliol, Oxford, Laud Misc. 668 f. 101), in 42 st. of 4 i. The first lines of these stanzas are:

1. Dulcis Jesus memoria.
2. Nihil cantitur suavis.
3. Jesus spes penitentiarum.
4. Jesus dulcedo cordium.
5. Nec lingua potest dilectio.
7. Cum Maria dictu.
8. Tumblam profundum flexibus.
10. Mane nobiscum Domine.
11. Amor Jesu dulcisimnus.
13. Jesus ancitor clementiae
15. Tua Jesu dilecto.
16. Qui te gustans, estiam.
17. Quem ut in amor oblatum.
18. Jesum deus angelicum.
19. Deus doctus est a nobis.
20. Amor te continuas.
21. Jesum summi beatae

"Jesus, sweetest love of mine." J. Wallace, 1874.

[J. M.]
Practically the same form is found in a 13th cent. ms. in the Bollandist (Rasellinum, C., 510 f. 3 b; also beginning Dulcis Jesu); and in a ms. of 1288 at Einsiedeln. The text of the Einsiedeln ms. is printed by Morel, No. 106, though no important difference being that this ms. does not contain stanza 39. The hymn is also found in a ms. of the 15th cent. in the Bibli Nat., Paris (Fonds italics, 559 f. 106. This ms. contains the poems of Jacobus de Beneficetis, otherwise called Jacopone or Giacopone da Todi), in 43 st. From a collation kindly supplied by M. Leopold Delisle, the chief librarian, it appears that in this ms. stanza 27 is omitted and two stanzas added, viz.: 43. Jesu stringam vestigata. 44. Vent, vent, Rex optimus. A ms. of the 15th cent. at Mainz (see Morel, i. p. 332) contains in all 50 st., viz., 1-42, 44 as above, and:— 45. Ora nostrum quando visitas. 46. Hos probat ejus passio. 47. Hic amantem diligite. 48. Jesu mi bose, sentiam. 49. Te verum iunem patriae together with the following:— 50. Tuum dulcem sitio, quae semel redievo, In me qua desidio, Et periculis et castitatis, Ad te, Jesu, respicio. 51. Hic amore est suavitas Ine sanctas et puritas; Nam Deus est et charitas. Among the St. Gall ms. the hymn is found in No. 1894, in a hand of 13th cent.: in No. 519 cir. 1438, and No. 520 of 1436. Herr Iddonson, the librarian, has kindly informed me that these three ms. all contain st. 32; but that of the stanzas numbered 43-51 not one is found in No. 1894, and in Nos. 519, 520, only stanza 48. The variations of text are exceedingly numerous and very bewildering. The ms., moreover, not only disagree as to the order of the stanzas, but often as to the order of lines and words in the individual stanzas. As in the four earliest ms. none of the stanzas 43-51 are to be found (one, viz., st. 48 is in Morel's Frankfurt ms. of the 14th cent.; the rest have not been traced earlier than the 15th cent.) it is hardly likely that they are by St. Bernard; and st. 44 has not the quadruple rhyme. These stanzas are quite unnecessary to the hymn and break its course, though in themselves some of them are not at all unworthy of St. Bernard.

II. Printed forms of the Text.

A form in 48 stanzas (viz. 1-42, 44-49) is found in the Benedictine ed. of St. Bernard's Opera, Paris, 1719, and later editions. Daniel, i. No. 206, gives it in 48 st. (from Bernard's Opera, Paris, 1590, q. c. Fabricius's Poetorum vet. eccles. opera Christiana, Basel, 1584, and other sources), viz., st. 1-42, 44-49, adding in his notes st. 43 from Fabricius, and the readings of the Roman Breviary, 1722; while at iv. pp. 211-217 he gives further notes principally from Mone. [For order of stanzas see below.] St. 37 here begins "Coeli elvis oecurrite" (1, 2), and st. 49 "Tu fors misericordiae" (1, 2).) The Lauds (see above) affords much better text than that which Daniel gives, and it is hoped will not escape the notice of future editors of Latin hymns. Mone, No. 258, prints 24 st. with a doxology ("Aeterna sapientia," &c.) from a 14th cent. ms. at Frankfurt-am-Main (where the stanzas are in order 1, 2, 3, 9, 5, 20, 11, 18, 48, 15, 16, 19, 21-26, 32, 34, 13, 40, 39, 41); and also gives the readings of a 15th cent. ms. at Mainz (see above). Waechtergel, L. No. 183, gives 50 st. from Bernard's Opera, 1719, and Fabricius, 1564. The full text is also in J. M. Horst's Paradisum anticanum Christianum, 1668, and later editions. Centums will be found in Abp. Trench's Sac. Lit. Poet., 1864 (15 st.); F. A. Marcili's Latin Hymns, 1865 (24 st.; Königsfeld, 1847 (11 st.); Bässler, 1858 (11 st.), and others.

III. Ritual use of the Rhythm.

The length of the hymn and the fact that it was not especially appropriate for any of the usual offices of the Church made its use for some time limited. In the Frankfurt ms., employed by Mone, of the 24 st. selected three are apportioned to each of the eight canonical hours of the day; and Fabricius arranges the 47 st. of his text according to a similar plan.

The text of Mone is the arrangement made by Heinrich Suso, otherwise called St. Amandus or Heinrich von Berg (b. at Constantz, March 21, 1306, became a Dominican 1318, d. in the Dominican convent (in Ulm, Jan. 25, 1365), who was one of the Medieval Mystics, and a member of the society of The Friends of God, along with Tauler (q.v.) and others. In his youth he had taken the Everlasting Wisdom in the Songbook as the object of his love, and in his later years founded a Brotherhood of the Everlasting Wisdom. For this brotherhood he compiled his logiam sapientis, or Horae de aeterna sapientia. In a ms. of the 14th cent. written in Germany and now in the Brit. Mus. (Add. 18318, f. 141) it is quoted as "Quicumque desiderat sapientiam aeternam familiarium sibi sponsum habebit, ade et haec coelitide desvovit legere." In the printed ed. which the British Museum catalogue dates Venice, 1493, it is marked as "Incipit cursus seu officium de eterna sapientia, compositum a beato Heinricho Suso ordinis praedicatorum." Of this office (meant, as it will be seen, for daily use by the brotherhood) there is a tr. which the British Museum catalogue dates Douay, 1560, and which is entitled Certany sweete Prayers of the glorious name of Jesus, commonly called Jessat Mattens, with the hower thereto belonging: written in Latin above two hundre yeares ago, by H. Susiane. This contains a series of 10 st. from St. Bernard which are earlier than any noted below, but are very poor. The first begins, "O Jesu maecle, y't sweetest thought."

The form in 50 st. seems to have been used as a Rosary, being arranged in five decades and answering to the 50 Ave Marias of the Rosary. When a separate office of the Holy Name of Jesus came into general use, apparently about 1500, centos from this poem were embodied in it. Such an office appears to have been added to the Barnum Breviary about 1595 (certainly in the Paris ed. 1499), and contains two centos. (i.) "Jesu dulcis memoris," for Matins, and (ii.) "Jesu, auctor Clementine," for Lauds; and the same centos are in the Hereford Brev., 1505; the Aberdeen Brev., 1560-10; and the York Brev., 1526 (not in the Barnum Brev.). In the regular Roman Breviary the hymn does not appear in any form till the revision of 1568; and then only in the patchwork noted under "Lux alma, Jesu, mentitur," and appointed for the festival of the Transfiguration. An office of the Holy Name seems to have been authorized for use in the Franciscan Order by Clement VII. (Pope 1523-34), but was not authorized for general use before 1721, and by decree of Dec. 20, 1722, was allowed as a double of the second class. It appears in the Antwerp, 1733, and later ed. of the Roman Breviary, and includes three centos, (i.) "Jesu dulcis memoris," for Vespers; (ii.) "Jesu, Rex admirabilis," for Matins; (iii.) "Jesu decus angelicum," for Lauds. In the
IV. Translations into English.

After giving an account of the full tr. of the poem, we proceed only with those cantus which have been tr. into English, and most of which are in C. U. at the present time. As in annotating the tr., we follow the text of Danieli (which is itself the Benedictine text), a comparative table is here given to serve as a chart. The columns headed D represent the stanzas in the order in which Danieli gives them; and the columns headed M the order in which the corresponding stanzas are given in Section I of this article.

V. Translations of the Full Form.

1. A full tr. was given by E. Caswall in his Musique of Mary, 1858, and again in his Hymns & Poems, 1873, p. 139. In this he repeated several stanzas of his earlier tr. from the Roman Brevary (see below), including four of the five stanzas which compose the Vesper hymn. This tr. has been broken up into the following cantus:

(l.) Jeux dulcis memoria = Jesus, the very thought of Thee. Usually the tr. of the Roman Brev. text is followed here.

(ii.) Jeux Rex admirabilis = 0 Jesus, King most wonderful. This is generally given from the tr. of the Roman Brev. text (see below). It is distinguished from that by st. ii., “Stay with us, Lord; and with Thy light.”

(iii.) Amor Jesus dulcisissimus = Jesus, Thy mercies are untold. Composed of st. xii., xiii., xv., vii. in H. A. & M., 1857.

(iv.) Jeux decus angelicum = 0 Jesus, Thou the beauty art. This is usually taken from the Roman Brev. text (see below). It is distinguished from this by st. ii., “For Thee I yearn, for Thee I sigh.”

2. In the tr. of J. M. Horst’s Paradise of the Christian Soul, edited by Dr. E. B. Fusey in 1847, The Pityrm hymn is tr. in five decades of varying metre, thus:

(l.) Jeux dulcis memoria = Jesus, who dost true joys impart.

(ii.) Mane nobis dominum. Domine = Stay with us, Lord, and lift Thy gracious light.

(iii.) Qui Te substant aurantium = They who of Thee have tasted hunger more.

(iv.) Jam quod sequivi video = Now what I sought do I behold.

(v.) Tu mea vita delectatio = Thou art the mind’s delight.

This tr. is not in C. U. It is vigorous and musical, and from it some excellent cantus might be compiled. The tr. used in the tr. of The Paradise of the Christian Soul, pub. by Burns, 1852, is E. Caswall’s as above, divided into five decades.

3. Jeux, how sweet those accents are. By W. J. Copeland, in his Hys. for the Week, &c., 1848, p. 137, reduced to 30 st. of 4 l. In Darling’s Hymns &c., 1887, the following hymns are said to be based on this tr.; but they have so little in common either with Copeland’s tr. or St. Bernard’s original that Mr. Darling may claim them as his own. The most that can be said is that they were suggested by Copeland’s tr.:

1. Lord Jesus, since the faith of Thee.

2. To Thee, O Christ, our thoughts aspire.

3. What name so full of melody.

4. Jeux, name of sweetest thought. By Dr. Eddershain, in his The Jubilee Rhythm of St. Bernard of Clairvaux, &c., 1867. This is a very spirited and musical tr., and from it some five or six cantus of great excellence might be compiled. It has been strangely overlooked. It is in 48 st. of 4 l.

6. O Jesus, Thy sweet memory. By Mrs. Charles in her Voice of Christian Life in Song, 1858, in 19 st. of 4 l. This tr. is rarely quoted in the collections.

VI. Translations from the Sarum Uses.

In the Sarum Brevary there are two cantos, and in the Sarum Gradual one, all of which have been rendered into English as follows:

(l.) Jesus dulcis memoria. This is applied for Matins on the Festival of the Holy Name in the Sarum Brev., 1499, and is composed of the following stanzas: 1, 2, 3, 5, 9, 10, as above. This has been tr. as:

1. Jesus, the very thought is sweet. By J. M. Nasle, in the H. Noted, 1852, No. 18, with added doxology. This tr. may be distinguished from Nasle’s tr. from the Sarum Gradual (below) through st. iv., which reads here “No tongue of mortal can express.” This tr. is found in a large number of hymn-books in G. Britain and America, the text, slightly altered, as in H. A. & M., being the most popular. In the Salisbury Bk., 1867, it begins “Jesus! memorial name so sweet;” and in the Sarum H., 1868, “Jesus, sweet memories of Thy Name.”

3. Jesus, how sweet Thy memory is! To every heart, &c. By J. D. Chambers, in his Laudis Sion, 1857, p. 244.

(ii.) Jesus, utor clementiae. In the Sarum Brev., 1499, this is the hymn for Laude at the Festival of the Holy Name. It consists of st. 16, 22, 33, 37, 25, 43, 45, and an additional stanza. Tr. as:

1. Jesus, Well-spring of all joy. By W. J. Blow, in his Church Hym. and Tune Bk., 1852–55, and again in Rice’s Sel., from the same author, 1870.

2. Jesus, Thou Fount of mercy, hall. By J. D. Chambers, in his Laudis Sion, 1857, p. 245, and again in the Hymnal, 1882, somewhat freely altered as “Jesus, of mercy Source alone.”

(iii.) Jesus dulcis memoria. This longer extract from the poem appears in the Sarum Gradual, 1532, as a Sequence (commonly called the Hymn Sequence) for the Festival of the Holy Name. It consists of st. 1–7, 47, 48. It is tr. as:
JESU DULCIS MEMORIA

Jesu, the very thought is sweet. By J. M. Neale, in the H. Noted, 1858, No. 72, and a few other collections, including the People's H., 1867. It is distinguished from Neale's tr. above by st. iv., which begins "Jesu, Thou sweetness pure and blest," which is also the opening of No. 1474 in Kennedy, 1863, and others. In the Sarum Hym., 1868, No. 67, Pt. I. is composed of st. i.-v. from this tr., and st. vi.-viii. from the tr. above, i. 1 also by Dr. Neale, and in both instances slightly altered; and Pt. II. from this tr. being at st. vii., vii. and ix. also altered.

VII. Translations from the Roman Use.

In the Roman Breviary, 1722, three centos were given for the 2nd S. after the Epiphany, being the Festival of the Holy Name of Jesus, as follows:

(1) Jesu dulcis memoria. This is appointed for Vespers, and is composed of st. 1, 2, 3, 5, and an added st., "Sis Jesu nostrum gaudio," Tr. as:

1. Jesu, the very thought of Thee. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 56; and again in his Hymns & Poems, 1873, p. 33. This tr. is the most widely used of any made from The Rhythm, and is usually given unaltered, except at times a slight change in st. iv. In Kennedy, 1863, it is slightly altered, and st. iii., iv. 5-8, are added from Caswall's tr. of "Jesu, Rex admirabilis."

Other trs. are:

(ii.) Jesu dulcis memoria. This is appointed for Matins at the same Festival, and is composed of st. 9, 11, 4, 14, and the added stanza, "Te not in Jesu's word," Tr. as:

1. O Jesu, King most wonderful. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 57; and his Hymns & Poems, 1873, p. 32. This tr. is widely used.

Other trs. are:

2. Jesu, King of all adored. R. Campbell, 1860.
3. Jesu, the King all wonderful. W. J. Bloom. 1852-55.

(iii.) Jesu, dulces angelicum. This is appointed for Lauds in the same Festival, and is composed of st. 22, 20, 27, 10, 35. Tr. as:

1. O Jesu, Thou the beauty art. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 58; and his Hymns & Poems, 1873, p. 33. This also is in extensive use.

VIII. Translations from the Paris Use.

In the Paris Breviary, 1736, the hymn for Lauds for the Festival of the Transfiguration is:

Jesu dulcescere cordium. This is composed of st. 4, 10, 11, 18, 21, 44, of The Rhythm, and is tr. as:

1. Jesu, the heart's own Sweetness and true Light. By J. Williams, in his Hymns tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839.

IX. Various Centos.

The following hymns are translations of stanzas compiled from The Rhythm. They vary much in length and character. Some are in C. U. and others are worthy of that distinction:

1. In Romanus's Hymns & Antics, 1851, there are two centos arranged by Dr. Romanus from various trs., with additions of his own, as:

1. "Jesu, how sweet the memories are."
2. "Jesu, the angels' Light and song."
3. "O Jesu, Thou the glory art."

3. In Dr. Kynaston's Occasional Hymns, 1862, there are two centos from The Rhythm, as:

1. "Source of recollection sweet."
2. "Jesu, Bridegroom, Saviour, Friend."

4. The Rev. R. C. Singleton's tr. in the Anglican H. Bk., 1868, No. 258, "Jesu, how sweet the thought of Thee," is from the Roman Breviary, with an additional stanza (v.) from The Rhythm (s.).

5. In the Roman Catholic Hymn, for the Year, 12 st. are given from The Rhythm, divided into three parts:

1. "Jesu, the very thought of Thee." The 2nd st. begins "No sound, no harmony so gay."
2. "Thou, then, I'll seek, retired apart."
3. "O King of love, Thy blessed fire."

6. The hymn given in the American College Hymn, N. Y., 1876, as, "O Thou in Whom our love doth find," is from E. Caswall's full tr., st. 41, 11, 14, 18, very slightly altered.

7. The hymn, "O Jesus, Lord of all below," in the American Hymn, for the Church of Christ, Boston, 1853, is composed of E. Caswall's tr. of the Roman Breviary form of "Jesu, Rex admirabilis," st. iii.-v. slightly altered.

8. The most popular cento in C. U. is, "Jesu, Thou joy of loving hearts," by Dr. Ray Palmer. It is composed of the tr. of st. 4, 3, 20, 28, 10, of Daniel's text, and appeared in the American Andover Sabbath H. Bk., 1858, No. 686. It is found in all the best English and American hymn-books now in C. U., and is usually given in an unaltered form. In the Hymnary, 1872, it is altered to "O Jesu, joy of loving hearts."

9. In the 1892 Appendix to the Hymnal N., there are two centos: (1) "Tu mentis deliciae," tr. by T. I. Ball as "Thou the spirit's pleasure," and (2) "Jesu, Tus dilecto," tr. as "Jesu! the soul hath in Thy love."

10. Another cento, tr. by Dr. J. W. Alexander, was pub. in Schaff's Kirchenfreund, N. Y., April, 1859; and in Schaff's Christ in Song, 1859 and 1870. It begins, "Jesu, how sweet Thy memory is! Thinking of Thee," &c.

11. In the Primers of 1848 and 1865, and in the Evening Office of 1725, there are the following centos:

1. "Thou, Jesus art the admired King." (1843.)
2. "Jesus the only thought of Thee." (1858.)
3. "If Jesus called to mind impart." (1725.)

These centos are printed in full in O. Shipley's Annus Sanctus, 1884; and the Primers, &c., are described in the Preface to the same [see also Primers.]
JESU DULCISSEME, E THRONO

12. In R. Beza's Church Hymns, 1849, there are 14 st. of 4 l. from The Rhythm, as: "Jesus, how sweet the thought of Thee."
13. Dr. J. Wallace gave 14 st. in 4 l. in his Hymn of the Church, 1874, as "Jesus, to think of Thee."

This elaborate and extensive use of St. Bernard's Rhythm is almost not entirely unique in hymnody. A few hymns exceed it in number of their translations into English, as the "Adeste Fideles," the "Dies Irae," and the "En feste Burg," but no other poem in any language has furnished to English and American hymn-books so many hymns of sterling worth and well-deserved popularity. [J. J.]

X. TRANSLATIONS THROUGH THE GERMAN

The hymn has been frequently tr. into German.
Four of these versions have passed into English, viz.:

1. Ach Gott, wie manches Herrscheid (q. v.)
2. O Jesus nus, der dein ganzen (Wackernagel, v. p. 464, gives this in 1 st. of 4 l. from the 1612 ed. of Johann Arndt's Paradise-Gärtlein; and also gives a version in 52 st. from the 1711 ed. of the Paradise-Gärtlein. According to Krieger, p. 359, the 1st. of 1612 form part of a version in 48 st. in Conrad Vetser's Paradies-Gärtlein, 1613; Vetser in his preface stating that this version had been for some time in print. There does not appear to be any reason for assigning this tr. either to Arndt, or as has sometimes been done, to John Melchior. A selection of 16 st. is No. 732 in the Lnc. L., 1853. Tr. as:

When memory brings my Jesus to my sense.
A very free tr. in 8 st. of 4 l's. 1st pub. in A. W. Boeckmann's tr. of Arndt's True Christianity, vol. L., 1712, p. 597. This was revised by J. C. Jacoby, reduced to 8 st., and included in his Psalmodia Germanica, 1729, p. 35 (1727, p. 7), beginning "When thought brings Jesus to my sense." In the Moravian H. Bk., 1854, p. 1. No. 326, is a canto of 17 st. from Jacoby; to which are added 3 st. from Isaac Watts at v. of his "Far from my thoughts, vain world, he gone;" and st. iv., v. of his "Twas on that dark, that doleful night." In all 20 st. Centos, beginning with st. 1, from the text of 1754, are found in Montgomery's Christian Psalms, 1826; Surrey Chapel B. Bk., 1854, &c. Other more or less altered forms of Jacoby are:

1. Dear Jesus, when I think of Thee (Jacoby's st. i. altered). Morav. Bk., 1789 (1849, No. 415).
2. Of Him Who saved and Salvation bring (Jacoby's st. iii.) in Madan's Pr. & H_, 1780, and in various centos in the Amer. Meth. Eps. Hymns, 1849, Hymns & Songs of Praise, N. Y., 1874, &c.
3. Some all, an anthem of Jesus' love (Jacoby's st. xii. altered) in Dr. Hawker's Coll. Plymouth, 1847.

iii. An Jesusken odenk en viel. By M. Vinkart, in his Jesus Hertbäude. This work was completed in 1630, and first printed 1631. Only the 2nd ed., Leipzig, 1643, is now extant (Royal Library, Hannover), and there the tr. being broken up into sets of 3 st., begins at p. 41, and ends p. 121. The complete text, in 48 st., is in Dr. J. Linne's ed. of Rinkart's Geistl. Lieder, 1882, p. 352. In the Linneburg Stadt. B. G., 1866, No. 24-6, parts of st. 1, 2, 4, 12, 28, 38, and this form is in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1885. Tr. as:

Sweet meditation on the Lord. A tr. of st. 1, 2, 4, 12, 28, by H. L. Hasteins, 1879, included in his Hymnals, 1880, and Songs of Pilgrimage, 1886.

JESU DULCISSEME, E THRONO GLORIESE.

This is found in the Psalterium cantionum Catholicarum. Cologne 1722, p. 334; in the Hymnus Sacra, Münster 1732, p. 161; in Daniel, ii. 371. &c. It is probably not earlier than 1650, and is in 4 st. of 4 l.

JESU GOH' VORAN. N. L. von Zinnendorf.

[Folowing Christ.] 1st appeared as No. 525 in the Bieder G. B., 1778, in 4 st. of 6 l. It is a slightly altered cento (probably made by Christian Giger) from two hymns by Zinnendorf, on both which see notes. St. i. is st. x., iii. is st. iv., and iv. is st. xi. of "Scheidenbrüllgam, O du Gottes-Lamm"; and st. ii. is st. xi. of "Glanz der Ewigkeit." In the text of 1778 it has passed into many German hymn-books, e.g. the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1866, No. 624, and has become a great favourite, especially as a children's hymn. Tr. as:

1. Jesus, still lead on. A very good but free tr. by Miss Borthwick, in the Free Church Mag., 1846, p. 14, repeated, slightly altered, in H. L. L., 1st Ser., 1854, p. 23 (1884, p. 26). From the H. L. L. it has passed into many recent hymnals, e.g. the People's, 1867; Church Hys., 1871; Thring's Coll., 1882; Bapt. Hys., 1879; N. Comp. Hys., 1887, &c.; and in America in the Sabbath B. Bk., 1858; Presb. Hys., 1874; &c.

2. Jesus' guide our way. A good and full tr. by A. T. Russell, written March 20, 1846, and pub. in his Ps. & Hys., 1851, No. 61. This, generally omitting st. iii., has been repeated in the Book of Praise Hys., 1867; American Presb. Hys., 1874; Jesus' Hys., 1880, &c. The versions in the Eng. Presb. Ps. & Hys., 1867, and John Robinson's [some time Chaplain of the Settle Union, Yorkshire, who died Jan. 1866] Coll., 1869, are partly from Mr. Russell and partly from Miss Borthwick.

Other trs. are: (1) "Jesus, lead the way," by J. D. Burns, in the Family Treasury, 1859, p. 1. 298, and his Memoir & Remains, 1849, p. 241. (2) "O Jesus, show the way," in Dr. J. F. Hurst's tr. of C. R. Hagenbach's Hist. of the Church in 19 Centuries, N. Y., 1869, p. 433. (3) "Jesus, day by day," partly from Miss Winkworth, as No. 1614 in Reid's "Practical Psalter," 1872. (4) "Jesus, day by day, Guide us on our way," as No. 468 in the Moravian B. Bk., 1866. [J. M.]

JESU, IF STILL THOU ART TO-DAY. C. Wedley. [For Pardon.] Pub. in Hys. & Sac. Poems, 1740, in 21 st. of 4 l., and headed,
These things were written for our Instruction (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 262). It is a résumé of the miracles of our Lord, together with their spiritual teachings. In 1780 the poem was divided (with the omission of st. xii.) into two parts, and included in the Wes. H. Bk. as two hymns (Nos. 131, 132), the second part being, "While dead in trespasses and sins." Both parts have passed into other collections, Pt. i. sometimes being given as "Jesus, If Thou art still to-day," as in Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk. 1869. Sometimes Pt. i. is used as a special hymn for the 3rd Sundays after the Epiphany, for which it is most suitable. In the Reformed Dutch Hymns of the Church, N. Y., 1869, st. vii.-x. of Pt. ii. in the Wes. H. Bk. are given as, "O Lord, impart Thyself to me."

Jesu, komm doch selbst zu mir. J. Scheffler. [Love to Christ.] A fine hymn of longing for spiritual union with Christ, 1st pub. as No. 3 in the H. Bk. 1869, of his Heilige Seelenlust (Werke, 1862, i. p. 29), in 9 st. of 4 l., entitled, "She [the Soul] longs after Jesus alone." It passed through Freylinghausen's G. B., 1794, into many later German collections, and is No. 761 in the U. S. L. S., 1831.

The tr. in C. U. are:—

1. Jesus, Jesus, visit me. A good and full tr. by Dr. R. P. Dunn, contributed to Sacred Lyrics from the German, Philadelphia, 1859, p. 125. Repeated, generally omitting st. vi., in Hattfield's C. H. Bk. 1872, Baptist Service of Song, 1871, Amer. Presb. Hym., 1874, Laudes Domini, N.Y., 1884, and others.

3. Jesu, Jesu, komm zu mir. A good tr. from the greatly altered text ("Jesus, Jesu, komm zu mir" of the Trier G. B. (R. C.), 1846, p. 121, in 7 st.; in Lyra Eucharistica, 1864, p. 29, signed "M."). Repeated as No. 94 in the Hymn for St. Etheldreda's, Lond., 1873.

Other trs. are: (1) "Dear Jesus, come to me," as No. 465 in the Metropolitan H. Bk. 1874 (i.e. No. 453), repeated in some eds. of Lady Huntington's C. (2) "Jesus, come to me," by Miss Huntington, 1864, p. 29. (3) "Jesus, Jesus, come to me! How I long," Acc., by Miss Huntington, in the British Herald, July, 1866, p. 109. (4) "Jesus, Jesus, come to me! Oh how," Acc., in the British Herald, April, 1867, p. 56, repeated as No. 243 in Reid's Praise Bk., 1872. (5) "Jesus, Saviour, come to me, Lo, I thirst," Acc., in the Family Treasury, 1877, p. 111. [J. M.]

Jesu, Lord, we look to Thee. C. Wesley. [Family Union desired.] Appeared in Hymns and Sacred Poems, 1749, vol. i. No. 146, in 8 st. of 4 l., and again in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 493. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. v. p. 52.) The cento "Lord, we all look up to Thee," in T. Davies's Hym. Old and New, 1864, No. 231, and in Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk. 1886, was adapted by Mr. Davis from this hymn. [J. J.]

Jesu, Lover of my soul. C. Wesley. [In time of Danger and Temptation.] 1st pub. in the Wesley Hymns and Sacred Poems, 1749, in 5 st. of 8 l., and, having "In Temptation" (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 259). In 1800 it was added to the Wes. H. Bk., but before this it had been included in a few hymn-books of the Church of England, amongst which were M. Madan's Ps. & Hys., 1760; R. Cony's Ps. & Hys., 1774; A. M. Top- lady's Ps. & Hys., 1776, and others. During the past hundred years or so its use has been so extensively as to become a general practice. Its popularity increases with its age, and many collections are now found from which it is excluded. It is given in the hymn-books of all English-speaking countries, and has been translated into many languages.

The opening stanzas of this hymn have been, with its. four lines. The first difficulty is the term 'Lover' as applied to the Lord. From an early date this tender expression was felt by many to be beneath the solemn dignity of a hymn addressed to the Divine Being. Attempts have been made to increase the reverence of the opening line by the sacrifice of its pathos and poetry. The result was "Jesus, Refuge of my soul," a reading which is still widely adopted; "Jesus, Saviour of my soul," and 'Father, Refuge of my soul.' Wesley's reading, however, has high sanction. In the Wisdom of Solomon, xi. 26, we read: "But Thou art gentle, for they are Thine, O Lord, Thou Lover of souls."

The second difficulty was in ll. 3, 4:

"While the waters roll,
While the tempest still is high."

To a great number of hymn-book compilers, these words have been a stumbling-block and a rock of offence. Various attempts have been made to surmount the difficulty from the lat. ed. of Lady Huntington's Coll. of Hymns, 1764, to the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871. Wesley's opening lines are:

"Jesus, Lover of my soul,
Let me to Thy bosom fly,
While the waters roll,
While the tempest still is high."

Amongst the numerous attempts to improve these lines are the following:

1. "While the billows near me roll."

This is in Lady Huntington's Coll. 1764, as above, and more than a hundred years later in H. H. Paister & H. and W., 1776, besides several collections between the two dates.

3. "While the tempesting waters roll."

This appeared in Rippon's Ps. & Hys., 1787; Bickersteth's Cront. Psalmody, 1833, and others, and is widely used.

5. "While the threatening waters roll."

In Kemphorne's Ps. & Hys., 1810, and a few modern hymn-books.

7. "Jesus, Refuge of the soul.
To Thy sheltering arms we fly."

This is in Cotterill's Sel., 1816. In the 1819 ed. it was changed to:

9. "While the waters round us roll,
While the tempest still is high."

This appeared in W. Uwicke's Coll. Dublin, 1829, and has passed into a few collections.

11. "To Thy sheltering wings I fly."

This is Frake's reading altered, and was given in Frake's Cront Psalmody, Haddingfield, 1833.

3. "Jesus, Saviour of my soul.
Let me to Thy mercy fly."

In Basil Wood's Ps. & Hys., 1821.

7. "Jesus, Saviour of my soul.
We to Thee for safety fly."

This is in W. J. T. Wicke's Coll. Dublin, 1829, and has passed into a few collections.

9. "Jesus, Refuge of the soul.
We to Thee for safety fly."

This is in W. J. T. Wicke's Coll. Dublin, 1829.
by a pitiless storm. These charming stories must be laid aside until substantiated by direct evidence from the Wesley books; or from original manuscripts as yet unknown.

5. Mr. G. J. Stevenson's "associations" of this hymn in his Meth. H. Bk. Notes, 1889, are of more than usual interest and value.

6. This hymn has been tr. into several languages, including Latin, by R. Bingham in his Evangelium, Christi, Latin, 1871, as, "Mess amor Amator;" and H. M. Magill in his Songs of the Christian Creed & Life, 1876, as, "Jesu! Animae Amator." [J. J.]

Jesu, meek and gentle. G. R. Fry. [A Child's Prayer.] Written in 1856, and pub. in the author's Hymnal Suitied for the Services of the Church, &c., 1868, in 5 st. of 4 l. In 1861 it was given in H. A. & M., and subsequently in most collections published in G. Britain and America. The author has also republished it in his work The Soldier's Dying Visions, and Other Poems, 1881, and has added the following note:

"This little hymn has found its way into most English Hymn-books. It is commonly thought to have been written for children, and on this supposition I have been asked to simplify the fourth verse. The hymn was not, however, written specially for children. When it is used in collections of hymns for children, it might be well to alter the last two lines in the fourth verse thus —

"...Through earth's passing shades,
To heaven's endless day."

Usually the original text is given as in H. A. & M., 1875.

Jesu meine Freude. J. Franck. [Love to Christ.] This beautiful hymn appears in C. Peter's Andachts-Zeitbucoh, Freyberg, 1655, No. 211, in 6 st. of 10 l., followed by a seventh stanza marked off "Vater aller Ehren," from Franck's Vaterunserharfe (i.e. one of his metrical versions of the Lord's Prayer). It is also in J. Cruiger's Praxis, Frankfurt, 1536, No. 383 (with the melody by Cruger still in German use); in Franck's Geistliche Stimmen, 1674, No. 85 (1846, p. 58), and in most later hymn-books generally in the original 6 st., as in the Unz. L. S., 1851, No 762.

It is modelled on a Song in H. Alberti's Arion, pt. 4, Königsberg, 1641, No. 34, which begins, "Freu' meine Freude; Meine Seele weint." When the hymn began to be extensively used many of the older Lutherans objected that its depth of spiritual experience unfitted it for use in public worship; just as in our days, according to Wordsworth, in the preface to his Holy Year, objected on similar grounds to the use of "Jesus, lover of my soul," by an ordinary congregation. Landmann, in Koch, viii. 279-286, relates many instances in which the use of this hymn was blessed. He adds that it was first given into Russian in 1734, by command of Peter the Great; and about the same time into Latin.

Translations in C. U.:

1. Jesus, my chief pleasure. A good tr., omitting st. iii., contributed by R. Massie, as No. 436, to the 1857 ed. of Mercer's C. P. & H. Bk. (Or. ed. 1844, No. 339, omitting the tr. of st. iv.). Mr. Massie included the tr. in his Lyra domestica, 1864, p. 132, and it is also in Reid's Praise Bk., 1872; Schaff's Christ in Song, &c.

2. Jesus, precious treasure. A good tr., omitting st. ii.i, by Miss Winkworth, as No. 151, in her C. B. for England, 1863, repeated, adding a tr. of st. iii.i, in her Christian Singers, 1899, p. 228. Included in the Ohio Luth. Hym., 1880, No. 280, with a tr. of st. iv. not by Miss Winkworth.

3. Jesus, Thou art nearest. A tr. of st. i., ii.,
Jesus, my God and King. C. Wesley. [Jesus The King.] 1st pub. in Hys. & Soc. Poems, 1799, in 5 st. of 8 l., and headed Ps. 139, 23, "Try me, O God, and seek the ground of my heart." In the revised ed., 1875, this arrangement, either in full or abbreviated, is given in several modern hymnals. The last stanza of the original is sometimes given as a short hymn beginning, "O sovereign Love [Lord], to Thee I cry." [J. J.]

Jesus, my Master and my Lord. C. Wesley. [Close of the Year — Temptation.] Appeared in Hys. & Soc. Poems, 1749, vol. ii. in 4 st. of 8 l., as No. 6 of "Hymns for the Watch Night." (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. v. p. 268.) In the Wes. H. Bk. 1780, st. ii.-iv. were given (No. 301) as "Into a world of ruffians sent"; but in the revised ed., 1875, the original first stanza was restored. In both forms the hymn is in C. U. [J. J.]

Jesus, my Saviour, Brother, Friend. C. Wesley. [Jesus All in All.] 1st pub. in Hys. & Soc. Poems, 1742, p. 214, in 15 st. of 4 l. headed "Watch in all things." (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. ii. p. 271.) In 1780 J. Wesley divided st. i.-xii. into two hymns, and gave them in the Wes. H. Bk. as (1) "Jesus, my Saviour, Brother, Friend" (No. 303); and (2) "Pierce, fill me with an humble fear." (No. 304). This arrangement is repeated in the revised ed., 1875, and other collections. In several American Unitarian hymn-books the first part is altered to "Great God, my Father, and my Friend"; and in some Presbyterian collections as "Great God, our Father, and our Friend"; but the use of these forms has not extended to G. Britain; neither has that in the American Meth. Episco. Hymns, 1849, No. 586, which is composed of st. vii., and begins "Jesus, I fain would walk in Thee." In the American Meth. Episco. Hymns, 1849, Pt. ii. begins "Lord, fill me with a humble fear." [J. J.]

Jesus, my Strength, my Hope. C. Wesley. [Self-Consolation.] Appeared in Hys. & Soc. Poems, 1742, p. 146, in 7 st. of 8 l., and headed "A Poor Sinner" (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. ii. p. 208.) In 1780 st. i.-vi. and vii. were given in the Wes. H. Bk. as No. 292 (ed. 1775, No. 301). This is repeated in several collections. There are also the following additional contexts from this hymn in C. U.: —

1. I rest upon Thy word. In the American Church Pastoral, Boston, 1864.
2. I want a heart to pray. In the American Dutch Reformed Hys. of the Church, 1868, &c.
3. Jesus, our strength, our hope. In the Cooke and Denton Hymnal, 1853, &c.
5. O God my Strength, my Hope. In Martineau's Hymns, 1848; the Bap. Ps. & Hys., 1856, and others. [J. J.]

Jesus nostrum redemptio, Amor et desiderium. [Ascension.] This fine hymn is probably of the 7th or 8th cent. It is found in three ms. of the 11th cent. in the British Museum, two of the English Church (Vesp. D. xii. f. 69; Jul. A. vi. f. 48 b.), and one of the ancient Spanish Church (Add. 30848, f. 133 b.); in the St. Gall ms. No. 387, of the 11th cent.; in a ms. cir. 1064, in Corpus Christi College, Cambridge (No. 391, page 247); and in the Latin Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon Ch., 1651, p. 83, is printed from an 11th cent. ms. at Durham (B. iii. 32, f. 24 b.). It is in the old Roman (Venice, 1478), Sarum, York, Aberdeen, and many Brevaries. The printed text is also in Daniel, i, No. 56; Mone, No. 173; J. Chandler's Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837; and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiæ, 1838 and 1865. The use of Sarum was at Compline from the vigil of the Ascension to Whit-nesday; that of York at Lauds; and the Roman at Vespers. In the revised Roman Breviary of 1632 it begins, Salutis humanæ sator. This is repeated in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1857, No. 71, and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiæ, 1838 and 1865. [J. M.]

This hymn has been tr. in both its original and in the Roman Breviary forms, as follows: —

1. 0 Jesus nostrum redemptio. The tr. in C. U. are: —

1. O Christ, our hope, our heart's desire. By J. Chandler, in his Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 83. This tr. is the most popular of any of this hymn. In addition to being in C. U. in the original tr. in some collections it was altered by the compilers of H. A. & M. in 1861 to "Jesus, our hope, our heart's desire" (again altered in ll. 2-4 of st. i. in 1875), and in the Hymnary, 1872, to "O Jesu, our Redemption, Love." The Hymnary text is rewritten in L. M., and is much altered throughout.

2. O Jesu, our Redemption. By E. Caswall in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 290; and again in his Hys. and Poems, 1873, p. 146. This is repeated in several collections. In the Hymnary this is rewritten in L. M. as "O Jesu, our Redemption, Love."

3. Jesu, Redemption, all divine. By J. M. Neale, in the H. Noted, 1852, and one or two other hymn-books.

4. Our Redemption, our Salvation. By W. J. Blew, in his Hymn and Tune Bk., 1852-55; and again in Rice's Set. from the same, 1870.

JESU, NOW THY NEW-MADE

Translations not in C. U.:
1. Jesus, Thou who dost save. [J. D. Chambers] Pub. in his Verbes by a Country Curate, 1859, in 7 st. of 6 l., and entitled "A Hymn after Baptism." It is followed by a quotation from one of the author's sermons, and a dedication reads: "To Mr. and Mrs. T.—my faithful and consistent Church parishioners, for the baptism of whose grandson this Hymn was composed, I inscribe the same with affectionate regard.—The Country Curate. Whitsun Monday, 1859."

It was included in the S. P. C. K. Appendix, 1869; in the Hymnary, 1872; Thirty-third Edition, 1882; and also in several others, but usually somewhat abridged. [J. J.]

JESU REDEMPTOR OMNIIUM, Perpetua corona praeclarum. [Comm. of Confessors.] This hymn is found in four hymnaries of the 11th cent. in the British Museum, and entitled "A Hymn after Baptism." It was also published in the Sarum, York, Aberdeen, and a number of German Brevisaries (e.g. Hildesdorn, 1500, and Havellberg, 1518), and in Lent at Vesper or Lauda; sometimes from the 1st to the 3rd S., or, as in the Sarum, in the daily office at Lauda from the 3rd S. in Lent to Passion Sunday. The text is also in two MSS. of the 11th cent. in the British Museum (Cevp. D. xii. f. 53: Jul. A. vi. f. 46: in the Sarum, H. ii. 32 f. 9): and in the Lat. Hymn of the Anglo-Saxon Ch., 1851, p. 64, is printed from an 11th cent. ms. at Durham. (B. iii. 32 f. 19.) It is also found in two MSS. of the 11th cent. at St. Gall (Nos. 413, 414): in Daniel, i, No. 6, the Hymnarium Sarisinianum, 1851, p. 77, at Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1863. [J. M.]

Translations in C. U.:
1. Jesus, Thou the Law and Pattern, whence. By J. M. Neale. Pub. in the H. Noted, 1852, No. 21, in 6 st. of 4 l. It has also been included in several collections, including the Hymner, 1882.

3. Jesus, our Lenten fast of Thee. By J. W. Hewett. Pub. in his Verbes by a Country Curate, 1859, p. 31, in 6 st. of 4 l. In H. A. & M., 1861 and 1875, it is given with alterations by the compilers.

4. In watch and prayer by Thee. By F. Pott. Made for and 1st pub. in his Hymn to the Order of Cem. Prayer, 1861, in 6 st. of 4 l. In 1871 it was revised by the compiler for the S. P. C. K. Church Hymn, and given therein as "In hunger, watch, and prayer."

5. Jesus, in fast for sinful man. This rendering in the Hymnary, 1872, is Dr. Neale's tr. as above, slightly altered by the Editors of the Hymnary.

JESU, REDEMPTOR OMNIIUM

Translation not in C. U.:
Jesus, Redeemer of mankind. C. Wesley. [Lent. Holiness desired.] Appears in Hymn and Sec. Poems, 1742, p. 246, in 14 st. of 4 l., and based upon Titus ii. 14, "He gave Himself for us that He might redeem us from all iniquity" (Rom. 6:23, 64-72, vol. ii. p. 303). Six stanzas, beginning with st. ix., were given in the H. H. Bk., 1870, No. 384, as "What is our calling's glorious hope. This text has been repeated in several collections. [J. J.]

JESU Redemptor omnium, Perpetua corona praeclarum. [Comm. of Confessors.] This hymn is found in four hymnaries of the 11th cent. in the British Museum, and entitled "A Hymn after Baptism." It was also published in the Sarum, York, Aberdeen, and a number of German Brevisaries (e.g. Hildesdorn, 1500, and Havellberg, 1518), and in Lent at Vesper or Lauda; sometimes from the 1st to the 3rd S., or, as in the Sarum, in the daily office at Lauda from the 3rd S. in Lent to Passion Sunday. The text is also in two MSS. of the 11th cent. in the British Museum (Cevp. D. xii. f. 53: Jul. A. vi. f. 46: in the Sarum, H. ii. 32 f. 9): and in the Lat. Hymn of the Anglo-Saxon Ch., 1851, p. 64, is printed from an 11th cent. ms. at Durham. (B. iii. 32 f. 19.) It is also found in two MSS. of the 11th cent. at St. Gall (Nos. 413, 414): in Daniel, i, No. 6, the Hymnarium Sarisinianum, 1851, p. 77, at Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1863. [J. M.]

2. Jesus, Our Lenten fast of Thee. By J. W. Hewett. Pub. in his Verbes by a Country Curate, 1859, p. 31, in 6 st. of 4 l. In H. A. & M., 1861 and 1875, it is given with alterations by the compilers.

3. In watch and prayer by Thee. By F. Pott. Made for and 1st pub. in his Hymn to the Order of Cem. Prayer, 1861, in 6 st. of 4 l. In 1871 it was revised by the compiler for the S. P. C. K. Church Hymn, and given therein as "In hunger, watch, and prayer."

In the York Breviary of 1433, st. iii., iv., slightly altered and beginning Haec rite mundi gaudio. are given as the hymn for 1st Vespers and for Matins in the office of the Common of one Matron, usually called the Common of Holy Women. This form is found in the reprint of that Breviary, by the Surtees Society, ii. 77 (1849). The tr. from this text is:

"Jesu, Redeemer saeculi, qui tertiopost funera. C. Coffin. [Easter.]" This hymn, as given in the Paris Breviary, 1736, for Compline during the Octave of Easter and up to the Ascension, begins:

Jesu, Redemptor saeculi, qui tertiopost funera Redux ab interfert die Morte resurgentem necas.

The hymn was repeated in Coffin's Hymni Sacri, &c., 1736; in Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiæ, 1838 and 1845, and in J. Chandler's Hymns of the Primitive Church, 1837. Although several trs. of this hymn have been made, none are in C. U. They are:

2. Thou, Who to save the world, &c. J. Williams, in the British Mag., April, 1837; and again in his Hymns, tr. from the Parisian Brev., 1839.
3. Jesu, for all Thy blood was shed. R. Campbell, 1840.
4. Jesu Redeemer, Thee we praise. J. D. Chambers, 1857.
5. Jesu, the earth's Redeemer Thou. Another rendering slightly different from the former, by R. Campbell, c. 1833, printed from his ms. in Mr. Shipley's Annum Sanctum, 1854.

Jesu Redemptor saeculi, Verbum Patri aftisemii. [Easter.] This is found in two ms. of the 11th cent. in the British Museum, viz. in a hynarum (Harl. 2961, f. 220b), and in a Macarabic Breviary (Add. 30848, f. 666). In the later Breviaries, as in the Sarum, York, Paris (1433), &c., it begins, "Jesu Salvator saeculi." The text of the Harleian MS. (in 4 st. and a doxology) is printed in the Lat. Hymns of the Anglo-Saxon Ch., 1851, p. 163. Daniel, i. No. 218, only gives st. i.; and Mone, No. 291, st. i.-iii., and a doxology differing from the Harleian. In the Sarum use (see the Hymnarium Sarisb., 1851, p. 92) it is the hymn at Compline from the Saturday in Easter week to the Festival of the Ascension. It is also directed that st. v., vi. are to be said at the end of every hymn of the same metro, only excepting "Chorus novae Hierusalem," till the Ascension, p. 11. ii. In order the more accurately to distinguish this hymn from that by C. Coffin as above, we give the first stanza in full:

"Jesu Redemptor saeculi, Verbum Patri aftisemii, Lux lucis invisibili, Custod tuorum pervigil." [J. M.]

JESUS, SOFT HARMONIOUS

This is usually confounded with R. Hill's arrangement of Hammond's text. It is, however, a distinct piece.

[J. J.]

Jesus, soft harmonious Name, C.
[Prayer for Unity.] Given in Hymns & Works, 1749, vol. ii. p. 243, in 4 st. of 8 l. and has been repeated in several collections, sometimes as "Jesus, best harmonious" as in the Lewis H. Bk. 1833. In this form it has appeared in several collections and named a hymn, 1840 and 1873. It is given in his Short Hymns, Select Passages, and St. S. Scriptures, 1762, as follows:

This is repeated in W. C. Wesley's Select Hymns, 1767. It is the best known in England.

Hymn, 1840, No. 175.

The form, however, as known in England, is so different from the original in M. Madison's Ps. & Hymns, that it has been translated into the liturgical arrangement of the Reformed Dutch Hymns of 1869, as "My dying Lord God." Pleased remembering the Holy, Bk. form of the hymn and benefits to many in the church, and being an original text in P. Works, 1806.

Jesus, at Thy command. [Life a Voyage—Christ the Pilot.] This hymn is in an undated edition of Lady Huntington's Coll. of Hymns, pub. at Bath about 1774. It is No. 179, 7 st. of 6 l. It is also given in Coughlin's 1775 Appendix to J. Bazée's [q. v.] Select Collection of Ps. & Hys. No. 311, where it is entitled, "The Believer's Pilot." In 1776 it reappeared in A. M. Toplady's Ps. & Hys. No. 312, in De Courcy's Coll., 2nd ed., 1782, and again in later hymn-books. In modern collections it is sometimes attributed to Toplady, and again to De Courcy (q. v.), but in error. It is associated with the Lady Huntington Connection from the first, and is possibly by one of that denomination. A part of this hymn is given in the American Church Pastoral, Boston, 1864, as, "By faith, I see the land." It begins with st. v., and is taken from Toplady's Ps. & Hys., as above. [J. J.]

Jesus, behold the wise from far. [Hymn to Christ.] This hymn in its original form appeared in J. Austin's Devotions on the Antient Way of Offices, &c., 1698: again in Theophilus Dorrington's ed. of the same, 1698; and Lady Susanna Hopkin's ed., 1687. The form by which it is known to modern hymn-books was given to it by J. Wesley, and appeared in his Coll. of Ps. & Hys., pub. at Charles-Town, 1780-7, No. 17, as "Hymn to Christ," in 6 st. of 6 l. (P. Works, 1686-72, vol. i. p. 116). This form of the hymn is in C. U. in G. Britain and America, and sometimes in an abbreviated form. Its designation is "J. Austin, 1698; J. Wesley, 1798." [J. J.]

Jesus, Christ is risen to-day. Easter. This version of the anonymous Latin hymn, "Surrexit Christus Hodie," is first found in a scarce collection entitled:—

Lyra Davitica, or a Collection of Divine Songs and Hymns, partly new composed, partly translated from the High German and Latin Hymns; and set to easy and pleasant tunes. London: J. Walsh, 1706.

Of the history of this collection nothing is known, but the character of its contents may perhaps lead to the supposition that it was compiled by some Anglo-German of the Pietist school of thought. The text in Lyra Davitica, 1706, p. 11, is as follows:—

"Jesus Christ is risen to day, Hallel-Jah. Our triumphant Holyday Who so lately on the Cross Suffer'd to redeem our loss. Hast ye females from your fright Take to Galilee your flight To his sad disciples say Jesus Christ is risen to day. In our Paschal joy and feast Let the Lord of life be blest Let the Holy Tryste be prais'd And thankful hearts to heav'n be rais'd."

We subjoin the original Latin for the purpose of comparison:—

This text is a popular hymn that celebrates the resurrection of Jesus Christ. It is known as the "Resurrection Hymn" and is one of the oldest hymns in the Western church. The text is traditionally attributed to the apostles, and it is found in various early manuscripts. The hymn text is typically set to a melody and is sung on Easter Sunday.

Variations of this text are found in several collections. The following is in Kempthorne's Select Portions, &c., 1810:

"Hymn LXXIII.
Christ's Resurrection to sinners.
A Rom., ex. 25.
Easter day.
"Jesus Christ is risen to day;
Hallelujah.
"Jesus Christ is risen to day;
Our triumphant holy day;
Who did once, upon the cross,
Suffer to redeem our lost.
Hallelujah.
"Hymn of praise, let us sing
Our heavenly King,
Let him be tasted to redemption
And save us.
Hallelujah.
"Praise, praise our heavenly King,
Who endured the cross and grave.
O sing his praises;
Hallelujah.
"Praise, praise our heavenly King,
Who endured the cross and grave.
O sing his praises;
Hallelujah.

This hymn is known by many names, including "Hymn of Praise," "To our Heavenly King," and "Resurrection Hymn." It is one of the oldest hymns in the Western church and is sung on Easter Sunday to commemorate the resurrection of Jesus Christ.
It has attained to great popularity, and is in extensive use in G. Britain and America. In some American hymnals, including Beecher's Plymouth Coll., 1855, ii. 3, 4 of st. ii.

"But the Lord was meek and lowly, Pure and spotless, free from sin, is added as a refrain to each stanza, with line 4 as "And was never known to sin." This reading of this line is repeated in some English collections, including Mrs. Brock's Children's H. Bk., 1881.

Jesu Christus, nostra salus. J. Hus [Holy Communion]. This hymn has been ascribed to Hus, and is included in the Monumentorum Joannis Hus altera pars, Nürnberg, 1538, but his authorship is at least doubtful. Wackernagel, vol. i., gives three forms, No. 367, in 10 st. from a Munich ms. of the 15th cent.; No. 368 from the 1538, as above, in 9 st.: No. 369 from Leisentrut's G. B. (R. C.), 1584, in 7 st. The last text is also in Daniel, ii. 370. In his Cantiones Bohemicæ, Leipzig, 1869, preface, pp. 32, 31, 43, &c., G. M. Drovos discusses the authorship, and cites it as in 10 st., in a ms. of 1410, belonging to the Abbey of Hohenfurth; in a Gradual, cir. 1420, in the Bohemian Museum at Prag, &c. The text of Leisentrut's G. B., 1584, is tr. as:

Jesus Christ our true salvation. By R. F. Little, in the 2nd ed. of Lyra Eucharistica, 1864, p. 354, and the People's H., 1867.

This hymn has also passed into English through the German, viz.:

Jesus Christ unser Heiland, Der von uns den Gottes Zorn wandst. This is by M. Luther, and 1st appeared in Eyn Enchiridion, Erfurt, 1524, in 10 st. of 4 l., entitled "The Hymn of St. John Huss improved." Thence in Wackernagel, iii. p. 9. Also in Schircks's ed. of Luther's Geistl. Lieder, 1854, p. 70; in the Univ. L. S., 1851, No. 279, &c. Only st. i. is at all directly taken from the Latin, so that if Luther "improved" the hymn he did so by superseding it. Tr. as:

Other trs. are: (1) "O Saviour Christ, King of grace," in the Gode and Godle Ballates, ed. 1565, f. 9 (1664, p. 153). (2) "Our Saviour Christ by His own death," as No. 276 in Pt. i. of the Moraviant H. Bk., 1764. (3) "To avert from men God's wrath," by C. J. Latrobe, as No. 547 in the Moraviant H. Bk., 1819 (1849, No. 937). In the ed. of 1865, No. 972, it begins, "That we never should forget," (st. ii.); (4) "Jesus Christ, our Saviour, Who," by J. Anderson, 1846, p. 72. In his ed. 1847, p. 105, altered to "Christ our Lord and Saviour"; (5) "Jesus the Christ—the Lamb of God," by Dr. J. Hunt, 1853, p. 106. (6) "Christ Who freed our souls from danger," by R. M. Martin, 1844, p. 75, and in Dr. Bacon, 1894, p. 30. (7) "Christ Jesus, our Redeemer born," by Dr. W. G. Macdonald in the Sunday Magazine, 1867, p. 460, and his Hymns, 1876, p. 103.

Jesu Christus, unser Heiland, Der von uns den Tod überwand. M. Luther. [Lent.] 1st pub. in Eyn Enchiridion, Erfurt, 1524, in 3 st. of 4 l., each stanza ending with "Kyrie eleison." Thence in Wackernagel, iii. p. 11. Appeared in Schwarck's ed. of Luther's Geistl. Lieder, 1854, p. 24, the Univ. L. S., 1851, No. 139, &c. Tr. as:

2. Jesus Christ, our great Redeemer. By A. T. Russell, as No. 105 in his Ps. & Hymns, 1851.
3. Jesus Christ to-day is risen. By R. Musse, in the M. Luther's Sain. Songs, 1854, p. 15, repeated in Reid's Praise Bk., 1872, the Ohio Luther. Hyl., 1880, &c.

Other trs. are: (1) "See! triumphant over death," by Miss Fry, 1849, p. 71. (2) "Christ the Lord today is risen," by Dr. J. Hunt, 1853, p. 43. (3) "Jesus Christ, our Saviour true," by Dr. G. Macdonald, in the Monthly Magazine, 1867, p. 322, repeated, altered, in his Exegete, 1876, p. 84. (4) "Christ the Saviour, our Prince exalted," by W. L. Proctor, 1876. (5) "Jesus Christ, who came to save," in Dr. Bacon, 1894.

Jesu, exalted far on high. T. Cotterill. [Circumcision. The Holy Name, Jesus.] Pub. in the Ulstersele Sel., 1868, and again in Cotterill's Sel. of Ps. & Hymns, 1st ed., 1810, in 5 st. of 4 l. It has attained to extensive use, and is usually given in an unaltered form, as in the Oxford ed. of Mercer's Ch. Psalter & H. Bk. In Kennedy, 1863, No. 605, "O Thou Who in the form of God," is an altered form of a part of this hymn, and begins with st. iii. [See Staffordhire Hymn-Books.] [J. J.]

Jesus, full of all compassion. D. Turner. [Lent.] Appeared in the Bristol Bap. Coll. of Asst. & Evans, 1769, No. 223, in 10 st. of 4 l., headed "The Supplication," and signed "D. T." It was repeated in full in Rippon's Sel., 1877, No. 295; and again in later collections. It is in a large number of modern hymn-books in G. Britain and America, but usually in an abridged form. It is justly regarded as Turner's finest hymn. [J. J.]

Jesus, gentlest [holy] Saviour, God of might, &c. F. W. Faber. [Holy Communion.] This hymn of "Thanksgiving after Communion" was pub. in his Oratory Hymns, N.D. (1854), No. 20, in 12 st. of 4 l. ; and again in his Hymns, 1862, No. 91. It is given in its full form in some Roman Catholic hymn-books for Missions and Schools, and altered and abbreviated in various collections, including (1) the S. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, as "Jesus, Lord and Saviour"; (2) J. G. Gregory's Bonchurch H. Bk., 1868, as "Jesus, holy Saviour"; (3) Mrs. Brock's Children's H. Bk., 1881, as "Jesus, gentlest Saviour"; and (4) Martin's Hymns, 1873, as "Father, gracious Father." In Nicholson's Appendix Hyl., 1806, the hymn is divided into two parts, Pt. ii. beginning "Jesus, dear Redeemer." In these various forms its use is extensive. [J. J.]

Jesus, I love Thy charming Name. P. Dodridge. [Jesus precious to the Believer.] In the p. ms. this hymn is No. 56, is entitled "Christ precious to the Believer," and is dated "Oct. 23, 1717." It was given by J. Orton in his ed. of Dodridge's (posthumous) Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 335, with the same title, and in 5 st. of 4 l., and was repeated in J. D. Humphrey's edition of the same, 1839, No. 361. At an early date exception was taken to the opening line, "Jesus, I love Thy charming Name"; and in modern hymn-books the result seen in the text being changed to "Jesus, I love Thy sacred Name," and to "Jesus, I love Thy saving Name."
Jesus is our great salvation.

Adams. [Election.] Pub. in the Gospel of St. John, May, 1776, in 6 st. of 6 l. and a half.
[Note: J. Adams "in 1787 it was given in Rippon's Bap. Sel., No. 108, in 5 st., and with a signature. After J. Adams (q.v.) was expelled from the Baptist denomination, the hymn was continued in Rippon, but its name was withdrawn. The hymn found its way into several modern hymn-books, marked Calvinistic type, as Steeple's Song, & G. & G., 1872, &c. This other edition of Adams was identified by his son, the Rev. John Adams, sometime Vicar of Thornton, Leicestershire. (J. J.)]

Jesus, lead us with Thy power.

W. Williams. [In Temptation—Security.] Pub. in his Gloria in Excelsis, Hymn of Praise, &c., 1772, No. 35, in 8 l. In modern hymn-books it is usually given as "Jesus, lead us with Thy power." Original text in Lord Seabourne's Bk. of Praise, 1862.

Jesus lebt, mit ihm auch ich.

Gellert. [Easter.] 1st pub. in his Geistliche Oden und Lieder, Leipzig, 1757, p. 147, in 6 st. of 6 l., entitled "Jesus lebt, mit ihm auch ich." It was the key-note of Gellert's finest hymns, and is still a popular song in Berlin, B. G. 1765, and almost all later German hymn-books, and is No. 304 in the Berlin keynote, and is found in many hymn-books, and is given in all the principal English-speaking countries without containing a version of it.

German translations:

In English:

(2) In 7.8.7.8.4 metre. This, the most popular form of the hymn, was given in Rorison's Hymns & Anthems, 1851, and repeated in Murray's Hymnals, 1852. The two last lines of each stanza were omitted, "Alleluia" was added to each stanza, and the text was considerably altered. Rorison gives in order st. I., II., III., IV., V., VI., while the 1852 nearly follows his text, but gives in order st. I., II., III., IV., V., VI., and adds a doxology. To follow out the variations of text and order in later books would be wearisome, the most usual form being that given in Murray's Hymnals, 1852, repeated (without the doxology) in H. & M.. The H. & M. text (with Dr. C. H.'s beautiful tune St. Albans) has passed into every English, American, and other hymn-books.

The principal forms in which the 7.8.7.8.4 metre do not begin with the original first line are:

(a) Jesus lives! Thy terrors now Can no longer, Death, appall us, in Christ's Hymn, 1871, &c. Otherwise this is the H. & M. text.

(b) Jesus lives! thy terrors now Can, O Death, no more appall us, in Thring's Coll., 1886-92. Here st. 1., II., 2. was altered with Miss Cox's consent in order to avoid an apparent denial of the resurrection of Jesus which some musical settings of the opening line might produce. Otherwise (st. III. being omitted) the text and order of her 1884 version are nearly followed.

(c) Jesus lives! henceforth is death (st. II.) in Alfred's Year of Praise, 1887.

(d) Jesus lives! to Him the throne (st. v.), in Rorison's Coll., ed. 1860.

3. Jesus lives! I live with Him. A good and full tr. by Dr. J. Guthrie, in his Sacred Lyrics, 1869, p. 121, repeated in the Izroth Hymn, 1871.

The text not in C. U. are, (1) "My Saviour lives! I will rejoice," by Lady E. Fortescue, 1843 (1869, p. 187). (2) "Jesus lives! With Him shall I," by Miss Warner, 1849 (1777, p. 18). In Sir John Bowring's Matins and Vespers, 3rd ed., 1841, p. 231, there is a hymn in 3 st. of 4 l. beginning "Jesus lives, and we in Him," which is based on Gellier. This previously appeared as No. 150 in J. R. Beard's Colls., 1837.

[J. M.]

Jesus, Lord of life and glory, Bend from, &c. J. J. Cummins. [Lent.] A sweet and musical Litany, which appeared in his Poetical Meditations and Lyrics, 1839, in 7 st. of 4 l., with the refrain, "By Thy mercy, O deliver us, Good Lord." In 1845, it was reprinted in his Hymns, Meditations, and Other Poems, Lon., Royton & Brown, pp. 26-27. It is in C. U. as:

(1) Orig. text, st. 1., III., VII., with "our Hope," for "our Lord" in H. & M., 1860 and 1872.

(2) "Jesus, Lord of life and glory." As in H. & M., with change to Jesus only in the Hymnary, 1872.

(3) "Jesus, Lord, we kneel before Thee." In the Salisbury H. Bk., 1857, No. 74, with the alteration of the first line, the omission of st. V., and the addition of st. VII. The same text was repeated in Kendrew, 1863, the Augsburg H. Bk., 1865, and in the 1868 Appendix to the S. P. C. K.'s Ps. & Hymns.

(4) The same first line, but composed of st. I., II., IV., VI., and VII., in Hope's Hymn, 1844, and Thring's Colls. 1882.

The sub-title of the Hymns, &c., of 1849, and by which the book is generally known, is Lyra Evangelica. Orig. text therein. [J. J.]

Jesus, Master, Whose I am. Frances R. Havergal. [Servant of Christ.] Written for her nephew, J. H. Shaw, in Dec., 1865, printed as a leaflet (Parlano's Series), and then pub. in her Ministry of Song, 1869, and the Life Mosaic, 1879. In the original ms. it is divided, st. I.-III. being "Jesus, Master, Whose I am," and st. IV. VI., "Jesus, Master, Whom I serve." The hymn is suitable for Confirmation, or for personal Consecration to Christ. [J. J.]

Jesus, my Lord, my Lord.

Jesus, my all, to heaven is gone. J. Cennick. [Jesus the Way.] Appeared in his Sac. Hymns for the Use of Religious Societies, 1743, No. 64, in 2 st. of 4 l. In 1760, M. Madan included 8 stanzas in his Ps. & Hymns, No. 17. This text in a more or less correct form has been handed down to modern hymn-books, including Common Praise, 1879, and others. Orig. text in Lyra Brit., 1867, p. 133. [J. J.]

Jesus, my kind and gracious Friend. R. Burnham. [Jesus the Sinners Friend.] Appeared in the 4th ed. of his Hymns Particularly designed for the Congregational Meeting in Greenstreet, Soko, 1798, No. 202, 6 st. of 4 l., and headed "Praying for the Redeemer's mindfulness." In this form it is almost unknown, but as "Jesus, Thou art the sinners Friend," it is the most popular of Burnham's hymns. Its use in America especially is very extensive. It is sometimes attributed to "Richard Parkinson" in error. [J. J.]

Jesus, my Lord, how rich Thy grace. P. Doddridge. [Offertory.] This hymn is No. 94 in the Miniature, but is unmarked. The heading is, "On relieving Christ in the Poor." In 1755 it was pub. in Doddridge's (posthumous) Hymns, &c., No. 188, in 5 st. of 4 l.; and again in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 269. It is in C. U. in its original form; but the most popular forms are the following:

1. Feast of all good, to own Thy love. This is Doddridge's text rewritten by E. Osler, for Ps. & Hymns, No. 84, 1805, and repeated in the Izroth Hymn, 1871. It has been included in several collections.

2. Fountain of good, to own Thy love. This is Osler's text with slight alterations, and the addition of a doxology from Tate & Brady. It was given in Streton's Church Hymns, 1860, No. 64 (it is possibly older), Johnston's English Hymnal, 1872 and 1882; Thring's Colls., 1882, and others. In Mercer, Alford's Year of Praise, 1867, the C. Hymn. and many others, the doxology is omitted. In addition there are other arrangements of Osler's text, as in Streton, including that in Port's Hymns, &c., 1861, where st. I.-III. are slightly altered from Streton, and st. IV. V., VII. are new. This form of the text is repeated, with slight variations, in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871.

3. High on a throne of radiant light. This begins with st. II. of the original, and is found in a few collections.

4. Jesus, our Lord, how rich Thy grace. In the American Songs for the Sanctuary, N. Y., 1845. All these arrangements from Doddridge's text, together with the original, are in C. U. in America and other English-speaking countries. The best arrangement is that in Thring, 1882, from Streton, 1850. [J. J.]

Jesus, my Lord, I cry to Thee. C. Wesley. [For Penitent.* This cento is from his Short Hymns, on Selected Passages of the Scriptures, 1762, as follows:

St. I., II., Short Hymns, &c., vol. II., No. 299, on St. John ix. 25.
St. V., VI., Short Hymns, &c., vol. I., No. 1004, on Isaiah xxix. 3.

In this form it appeared in the West H. Bk., 1780, No. 397, and has passed into several collections (Orig. text, P. Works, 1868-72, vol. vi. and xii.). [J. J.]

Jesus, my Lord, my God, my all! How can I love Thee, &c. F. W. Faber. [Holy Communion.] Appeared in his Jesus
JESUS, MY SAVIOUR, AND

and Mary, &c., 1849, in 9 st. of 4 l., with the refrain,

"Sweet Sacrament! we Thee adore!
O, make us love Thee more and more!"

It is headed "Corpus Christi." In C. U. it is broken into parts, as: (1) "Jesus! my Lord," &c.; (2) "King joyously, ye solemn bells!" and (3) "Sound, sound His praises higher still!" Its tune is mainly confined to Roman Catholic hymnals.

[J. J.]

Jesus, my Saviour, and my King.
S. Browne. [Prayer for Unity.] 1st pub. in his Hymns and Spiritual Songs, 1729, &c., No. 147, in 4 st. of 4 l. and headed, "Prayer for brotherly love." In its original form it is not in C. U. The following stanzas are associated therewith:—

1. O God, our Saviour, and our King. This is No. 1163 in Kennedy, 1683, where st. ii., ii., are from this hymn, and st. iii., iv. are from J. Wesley's. "O Thou to Whose all searching sight" (see Seelenbrunetikum), st. ii. and iv. altered.

2. O Lord, my Saviour, and my King. No. 566 in the Bap. Ps. & Hymns, 1846, is from Browne's hymn, but somewhat altered.

[J. J.]

Jesus, my Saviour, bind me fast.
B. Beddoe. [Divine Drawings improved.] Pub. in his (posthumous) Hymns, &c., 1817, No. 557, in 4 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Draw me." In the 27th ed. of Rippon's Bap. Sel., 1827, st. ii.-iv. were given, together with a new opening stanza, as: "If Thou hast drawn a thousand times." This is repeated in Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1869, No. 483, and others; especially the American hymn-books.

[J. J.]

Jesus, my Shepherd is. J. Conder.
[Ps. xxxiii.] Pub. in Collyer's Coll., 1812, No. 887, in 6 st. of 6 l., headed, The Good Shepherd," and signed "C." In Conder's New in the East, &c., 1824, it was pub. in a new form, and began "The Lord my Shepherd is." This was repeated in the Cong. H. Bk., 1836, No. 401, and in Conder's (posthumous) Hymns of Praise, Prayer, &c., 1856, p. 8, and is the authorised form of the hymn.

[J. J.]

Jesus, our Lord, who tempted wast.
H. Alford. [Lent.] 1st pub. in his Ps. & Hymns, &c., 1844, No. 29, in 7 st. of 4 l. and again in his Year of Praise, 1867, No. 73, in 5 st., the second and third stanzas being omitted. The original text is repeated in full, but with slight alterations, in several collections.

[J. J.]

Jesus, our souls' delightful choice.
P. Doddridge. [Spiritual Conflict.] This hymn is No. 4 of the p. miss., is in 4 st. of 4 l., is headed, "On the Struggle between Faith and Unbelief," and is dated, "Sep. 7, 1733." J. Orton included it in his ed. of Doddridge's (posthumous) Hymns, &c., 1753, No. 197; and J. D. Humphreys in his ed. of the same, 1829, No. 229. It is in a few modern collections, including Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1866.

[J. J.]

Jesus setzt ein vor seinem End
(Holy Communion). Keilhein, in his Katholische Kirchenlieder, vol. i., 1859, p. 386, quotes the following:

1. A New Hymn for Corpus Christi. Repeated in the Bamberg G. B., 1670, p. 264; Münster G. B., 1677, p. 247; and other Roman Catholic collections. Tr. as:—

Before to His and death He went, a tr. of st. i.-viii. as No. 263 in the Ohio Luth. Hym. 1880. [J. M.]

Jesus shall reign wherever the sun.
I. Watts. [Foreign Missions.] This is one of the most popular hymns by Watts, and was given in his Psalms of David, 1719, as Pt. ii., of his version of Ps. lxxii., in 8 st. of 4 l. Although it has attained a high position in modern hymnals, it is rare found in the collections published before the present cent. It increased in popularity with the growth and development of Foreign Missions, and is now used most extensively in all English-speaking countries. One of the earliest to adopt it for congregational use was Rowland Hill. It is found in his Ps. & Hymns, 1st ed., 1783; but abbreviated to 6 st. This was followed by some compilers in the Church of England, including Cotterill in Ps. & Hymns, 1810-1820; Bickersteth, 1833, and others; by the Wesleyans in their Supplement, 1830; the Baptists, and other denominations, until at the present day it is given in almost every English hymn-book of any standing or merit. As an example of the way in which The Psalms of David were imitated in the language of the New Testament, by Watts, it is unusually good. It is also in his best style. In modern collections it is generally given in an abbreviated form, ranging from 4 st., as in H. A. & M., to 6 st., as in the Wes. H. Bk. Changes are also introduced in the text, but most of these date from the beginning of the present century. It has been rendered in full and in part in many languages, including "Dominus regnabit Deus," by the Rev. R. Bingham, in his Hymno. Christ. Lat., 1871, p. 103. In this rendering st. ii., iii., and vii. are omitted. [See Psalter, Eng. § xv.] Mr. G. J. Stevenson gives, in his Methodist H. Bk. Notes, 1883, p. 551, an account of the striking and historical use which was made of this hymn when various islands in the South Seas officially renounced heathenism and embraced Christianity:—

"Perhaps one of the most interesting occasions on which this hymn was used was that on which King George, the sable, of the South Sea Islands, being on his blessed memory, gave a new constitution to his people, exchanging a heathen for a Christian form of government. Under the spreading branches of the hauhana tree sat some thousand natives from Tonga, Fiji, and Samoa, on Whit Sunday, 1862, assembled for divine worship. Foremost amongst them all sat King George himself. Around him were seated old chiefs and warriors who had shared with him the dangers and fortunes of many a battle; men whose eyes were dim, and whose powerful frames were bowed down with the weight of years. But old and young alike rejoiced together in the joys of that day, their faces most of them radiant with Christian joy, love, and hope. It would be impossible to describe the deep feeling manifested when the solemn service began, by the entire audience singing Dr. Watts's hymn, "Jesus shall reign wherever the sun." To them it was so much as they could realise the full meaning of the poet's words; for they had been rescued from the darkness of heathendom and cannibalism, and they were not so long met for the first time under a Christian constitution, under a Christian king, and with Christ Himself reigning in the hearts of most of those present. That was indeed Christ's kingdom set up in the earth."

[J. J.]

Jesus, tender Shepherd, hear me.
Mary Dance, nee Landrie. [Child's Evening Hymn.] This beautiful little hymn was composed for her children in 1830, and 1st pub. in Jesus, the Christ of God. H. Bonar. [Praise to Christ.] Appeared in his Hymns of Faith & Hope, 2nd series, 1864, in 7 st. of 4 l., and entitled "Praise to Christ." It is found in numerous collections in G. Britain and America. In some hymn books it begins with st. ii.:

"Jesus, the Lamb of God, Who us from hell to raise;"

but this form of the text is not so popular as the original. [J. J.]

Jesus, the needy sinner's Friend. C. Wesley. [Holy Communion.] This cento is composed of Nos. 306, 367, and 368 of "Hymns on the Four Gospels," pub. from the Wesley use by C. W. Cooper's "The Works of J. & C. Wesley, 1808-72," vol. x. p. 282. It appeared in No. 875 in the revised edition of the Wes. H. Bk., 1875, with the concluding lines changed from:

"We banquet on the heavenly Bread, When Christ Himself imparts, By ministerial hands conveyed To all believing hearts;"

in the following:

"We banquet on the heavenly Bread, When Christ Himself imparts, By His disciples' hands conveyed To all believing hearts." [J. J.]

Jesus, Thou all-redeeming Lord, Thy blessing, &c. C. Wesley. [General.] Appeared in Hymns & Sacred Poems, 1749, vol. i. p. 316, in 18 st. of 4 l., and entitled "Before Preaching to the Colliers in Leicester sheriff." (P. Works, 1808-72, vol. v. p. 212). In 1780 two hymns compiled, with slight alterations, therefrom, (1) "Jesus, Thou all-redeeming Lord," being st. i., ii., iv., v., vi.-ix. (2) "Lovers of pleasure more than God," being st. xii., xiii., xvii., xviii., were included in the Wes. H. Bk., Nos. 34, 35, and continued in subsequent editions. Also found in other collections. In addition to these, a cento beginning "Lover of souls, Thou well canst prize," is given in Kennedy, 1863, No. 327. It is compiled from the Wes. H. Bk., pt. 1., as above, st. iii.-viii., with slight alterations and a doxology. [J. J.]

Jesus, Thou needest me. H. Bonar. [Oneness with Christ Explained and Desired.] Pub. in his Hymns of Faith & Hope, 2nd series, 1864, in 8 st. of 4 l., and headed "The Lord needs thee." It has passed into a few collections, including Dale's English H. Bk., 1875, &c. [J. J.]

Jesus, Thou Soul of all our joys. C. Wesley. [Choral Festival.] Appeared in Hymns & Sacred Poems, 1749, vol. ii., No. 290, in 8 st. of 6 l., as the second of two hymns on "The True Use of Music." In the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, it was included as No. 196 (ed. 1875, No. 294). It has passed into several collections, sometimes abbreviated, as in Mercer: and again, in the altered form, "Jesus, in Thine arms reclined, as in the Cooke and Denton Hymnal, enlarged ed., 1855.

Whom Thy saints rejoice," as in the Cooke and Denton Hymnal, enlarged ed., 1855. [J. J.]

Jesus, Thou wast once a child. J. Gabb. [Holiness desired.] This hymn is found in three forms:

1. In the author's "Songs to the Throne," ed. 1844, in 8 st. of 4 l., and repeated in his Hymns and Songs, ed. 1871, with the title "Christ Incarnate." In this form it is a prayer for Holiness.
2. The above text was rewritten by the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon as a hymn for Mothers' Missions, and included in his O. H. Bk., 1866, No. 1012, from whence it passed into Snee's "Songs of G. & S.," 1872.
3. In 1876 the same hymn was written by the author in 6 st. of 4 l., and given, with his tune "Love-songs," in his "Wellborn Appendix," 1876, No. 49, as above.

Of these texts the first is by far the most beautiful and simple. [J. J.]

Jesus, Thy Church with longing eyes. W. H. Bathurst. [Second Advent.] 1st pub. in his Ps. & Hymns, 1831, No. 41, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed "Second Coming of Christ." It has passed into a large number of hymn-books, both in G. Britain and America, and ranks as one of the most popular of Bathurst's hymns. It is a most suitable hymn on behalf of Foreign Missions. Orig. text in Thring's Coll., 1882. [J. J.]

Jesus, Thy name I love. J. G. Deck. [Jesus, All and in All.] Appeared in Ps., Hymns and Spiritual Songs, London, D. Walther, 1842, Pt. ii., No. 6, in 4 st. of 8 l. In A Few Hymns and Some Spiritual Songs selected for the Little Flock, No. 104, it is given in a rewritten form as "Jesus! that Name is love." Outside of the Plymouth Brethren hymn-books the original text is given sometimes with slight alterations, as in Hatfield's Church H. Bk. N. Y., 1872, No. 1003. [J. J.]

Jesus, when I fainting lie. H. Alford. [Death anticipated.] 1st pub. in his Year of Praise, 1867, No. 208, in 3 st. of 6 l., and appointed for the 16th Sun. after Trinity. It was one of two hymns which were sung at the author's funeral, the second being his "Ten thousand times ten thousand." [J. J.]

Jesus, where'er Thy people meet. W. Cooper. [Opening of a Place of Worship.] The Rev. J. Bull, in his John Newton of Olney and St. Mary Woolnoth, &c., gives the following account of this hymn:

"1769. In a letter to Mr. Cunliffe, April 6, 1769, Mr. Newton speaks of a journey to Kettering, and of his preaching there and says: 'I have been pretty full-handed in preaching lately. I trust the Lord was graciously with me in most or all of our opportunities. We are going to remove our prayer-meeting to the great room in the Great House. It is a noble place, with a parlour behind it, and holds about one hundred and thirty people conveniently. Pray for us, that the Lord may be in the midst of us there, and that as He has now given us a Rekboth, and has made room for us, that He may be pleased to add to our numbers, and make us fruitful in the land.'

"We were there this day that two of the hymns in the selec.
The first of these references is in st. iii.,

II. 1, 2;—

"Dear Shepherd of Thy chosen few,

Thy former mercies here renew," and the second to st. v., II. 3, 4;—

"some Thou and fill this wider space,

And bless us with a large increase."

The hymn was pub. in the Olney Hymns, 1779, bk. ii., no. 44, in 6 st. of 4 l. It is preceded, as stated above, by J. Newton's "O Lord, our languid souls inspire," which is headed "On opening a Place for Social Prayer, and is given as no. "XLIV. C. Another," meaning, another hymn on the same subject. It is given in modern hymn-books in its original form, and also as follows:—

1. The arrangement in the Salisbury Bk., 1857, is thus—St. I. ii., i., v., and vii. are slightly altered from Cooper: st. iii., vi., and ix. are by J. Keble, and the doxology by H. Cresap. This text was repeated, with the omission of the doxology, in the Sarum Hymnals, 1866. In the Anglican Bk., 1862, five stanzas are taken from the Salisbury Bk., and one from the original, and further altered as "O Jesus, where Thy people meet.

2. In Kennedy, 1858, the text is as in the Salisbury Bk., 1857.

3. In the S. P. C. K. Church Hymn., 1874, the arrangement is—st. i., ii., v., vi., and vii., Cooper: st. iii., Keble: st. iv., v., vi., and vii., Cooper: st. ii., it is as in Sarum Hymnal, 1866. In the Martineau's Hymns, &c., 1844 and 1873, Cooper's st. i., ii., and iv. are given as "O Lord, where Thy people meet.

The use of this hymn in its various forms is extensive in all English-speaking countries. It has also been translated into many languages, and is one of the most popular of Cooper's hymns. Orig. text in Lord Selborne's Book of Prayers, 1862, p. 150. [J. J.]

Jesus, while He dwelt below. J. Hart. [Passiontide.] A descriptive hymn of great power on The Passion of Our Lord. It was pub. in Hart's Hymns, &c., 1750, no. 75, in 23 st. of 6 l., and headed "Jesus oftentimes resorted thither with His disciples," John xviii. 2. The following cantos have been compiled therefrom:—

1. "Jesus, whilst He dwelt below." Pt. I.

"Full of love to man's last race," Pt. II.

"There my last act wrought, my last amazed,"

Pt. III.

These cantos were given in Steep's Songs of G. & G., 1773, no. 230.

2. "Jesus, while He dwelt below." Pt. I.

"Eden from every flowery bed," Pt. II.

"These were given in the Scottish Hymns, Union Hymnal, 1878, no. 34, and others.

3. "Comes once more the awful night." In the N. P. C. K. Church Hymn., 1871, this is very much altered from the original.

4. "Comes again the dreadful night." In Whitting's Hymn, for the Ch. Catholic, 1862. Also altered from Hart.

Through these various cantos great use is made of this hymn. [J. J.]

Jesus, while [whilst] this rough desert soil. H. Bonar. [Jesus' presence desired.] Pub. in his Faith and Hope, 1st ser., no. 1857, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed "Strength by the way." In Kennedy, 1863, it reads, "Jesus whilst this rough desert soil." [J. J.]

Jevons, Mary Ann, née Roscoe. [Roscoe Family.]

Jewitt, William Henry, nephew of Mr. Orlando Jewitt, the engraver, was b. at Oxford, March 17, 1812. Mr. Jewitt is an architect and artist. He has written several hymns of more than usual merit. The earliest were pub. in Hymn on the Te Deum, Manchester, J. Anson, 1874. This little work contains 23 pieces. He also pub. in 1886 a vol. of tales in verse, entitled "The Romance of Love." His hymns in C. U. are:

1. "Chrift the Lion of royal Jaffa." St. Mark

2. "O Christ, the Father's guarded Light." All Saints

4. "O Father of the world supreme. God the Creator, or Flower services.

7. "We know that Thou shalt come." Advent.

8. "We know They, Lord, the eternal Way." SS. Philip and James.

Of these hymns Nos. 1, 5, 6, 7, are from the Hymn on the Te Deum, 1874. No. 1 was contributed to the Universals H. Bk., 1857; No. 2 appeared in the Manchester Diocesan Magazine; No. 8 in the Penny Post; and No. 5 in the Altar Hymnal, 1884. In addition to these Mr. Jewitt is the author of Nos. 24, 35, 42, 44, 45, 46, 47, 87, 88, 95 and 96, in Chope's Carols for Easter and other Christian seasons (London, Novello, 1884). [J. J.]

Jex-Blake, Thomas William, s. of Thomas Jex-Blake of Burnwell, was b. in 1832, and educated at Rugby, and University College, Oxford (n.a. in Ist class 1855; b.a. 1873). He was some time Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford; from 1858 to 1868 Assistant Master at Rugby; Principal of Cheltenham College, 1868 to 1871; Head Master of Rugby, 1874 to 1887; and Rector of Alvechurch, Redditch, 1887. Dr. Jex-Blake's well-known hymn, "Lord, we thank Thee for the pleasure," written at the request of Dr. Cotton (then Head Master of Marlborough), in September, 1855. It is in the Rugby and other Public Schools hymn-books, and several general collections. Dr. Jex-Blake's published works do not contain any original poetical compositions. [J. J.]

John Arkias. [Greek Hymnody, § xvi. 2, and John of Damascus.]
John of Damascus

Johns, John, b. at Plymouth, March 17, 1601, the son of an artist. Educated at the grammar school, and the Rev. Worsley, Unitarian minister at Plymouth, and after-wards spent two years at Edinburgh. In 1820 became minister of the Old Presbyterian chapel at Crediton, where he remained till his removal to Liverpool in 1836, as Minister to the Poor. He was a man of fine poetic temperament and retiring disposition, but his work among the people called out his great practical and organizing ability. He died a sacrifice to the fever which raged in the district where he laboured, June 23, 1847. Besides his reports to the Liverpool Domestic Mission Society, and frequent contributions to the Monthly Repository, Christian Reformer, and Christian Teacher, he published three volumes of poetry, Deeds of Castalia; a collection of Poems, 1829; The Valley of the Nymphs, 1829; and Geographies of Life, 1845. There are 35 of his hymns in Dr. Beards's Collection, 1837, and several of them are in other Unitarian books. The best known of his hymns are:

1. Come, Kingdom of our God. Prayer for the Kingdom of God.
2. Farewell, our blest treasure. Death of a Child.
5. O know ye not that ye? Purity. This is altered from "What, know ye not that ye?"
6. Thanks to God for these who came. Preachers of the Word. Altered from "Welcome, welcome who came."

These hymns were contributed to Beard's Coll., 1837, and passed thence into other collections.

Johnson, Samuel, M.A., was b. at Salem, Massachusetts, Oct. 10, 1822, and educated at Harvard, where he graduated in Arts in 1842, and in Theology in 1846. In 1853 he formed a Free Church in Lynn, Massachusetts, and remained its pastor to 1870. Although never directly connected with any religious denomination, he was mainly associated in the public mind with the Unitarians. He was joint editor with S. Longfellow (q.v.) of A Book of Hymns for Public and Private Devotion, Boston, 1846; the Supplement to the same, 1848; and Hymns of the Spirit, 1849. His contributions to these collections were less numerous than those by S. Longfellow, but not less meritorious. He d. at North Andover, Massachusetts, Feb. 19, 1882. His hymns were thus contributed:

1. To A Book of Hymns, 1846.
   b. Go, preach the gospel in my name. Ordination.
   c. Lord, once our faith in man no fear could move. Time of War.
   5. Onward, Christians, [onward] through the region. Conflict. In the Hymns of the Spirit, 1844, it was altered to "Onward, onward through the region."
   6. Thy servants' snares, Lord, are wet. Ordination.

ii. To the Supplement, 1848.

5. God of the earnest heart. Trust.

iii. To the Hymns of the Spirit, 1864.

6. City of God, how broad, how far. The Church
   a. The City of God.
   b. I bless Thee, Lord, for sorrow sent. Affliction—Perfect through suffering.
   c. Life of Ages, richly pour'd. Inspiration.
Johnston, James Aitken, was ordained by the Bishop of Jamaica in 1834, and was preferred to the Perpetual Curacy of St. John's, Waterloo Road, London, in 1848. He d. in 1872. He was the editor of

A new and thoroughly revised ed. was pub. in 1856. This was reprinted in 1861 as the 3rd ed. From a ms. supplied by Johnston to D. Sedgwick [s. ms.] we find that he was the author or translator of 34 hymns in the 3rd ed., but his list does not include "O Jesus, Lord, the Way, the Truth" (S. S. Philip and James), attributed to him in Thrng's Coll, 1882. In his lr. he is considerably indebted to others, and his original hymns display no special merit. [J. J.]

Join all the glorious Names. I. Watts. [Names and Titles of Jesus Christ.] Pub. in his Hym. & Sec. Songs, 1709, Bk. i., No. 150, in 12 st of 8 l., as the second of two hymns on "The Offices of Christ, from several Scripture." It has been freely altered, abbreviated, and divided from M. M. From and Hymns, 1760, to the present time. The line which has caused most trouble to the editors has been st. x, l. 1, "My dear, Almighty Lord," the term "dear," being very objectionable to many. The line has undergone the following amongst others:

A. B. "O my great, Almighty Lord." 1823.

To this list may be traced most of the changes found in modern hymn-books. There are others also of less importance. In addition to abbreviations which begin with the original first line, there are also the following cents:—

1. "Arrested in mortal flesh. This was given in R. Conyers's Cat., 1714, in 5 st., and in other hymn-books. 2. Great Prophet of my God. In Allford's Fear of Famine, 1867, &c.

The original hymn is justly regarded as one of Watts's finest efforts. In its various forms and editions, "Chorale style," "Englightenment" style, and in many similar adaptations, it has been inviolate, unaltered, and unmarred in form and content, and has become the established example for all English hymns. It has been translated into the principal languages of the world, and has become the widely accepted English hymn in use in all English-speaking countries. It has been translated, or paraphrased, in many languages, including Latin, in Bingham's Hymnas, Christ, Lat., 1870, as "Pange nomen omne mirum." [See English Hymnody, Early, §§ vi., xiii.] [J. J.]

Jones, Justus (Jobat, Just, Joch-cus), s. of Jonas Koch, burgomaster of Nordhausen, in Thuringia, was b. at Nordhausen, June 5, 1493. He studied at Erfurt (m. a. 1510), and Wittenberg (L.B.); returning to Erfurt in 1517, where, in 1518, he was appointed Canon of the St. Severus Church, Professor, and, in 1519, Rector of the University. In the festive ode on his rectorate (by his friend Eobain Hesse) he called the Just Jonas, and henceforth he adopted Jonas as his surname, and it is as Jonas that he is known. In 1521 he was appointed Probat of the Schlosskirche (All Saints) at Wittenberg, d.d., and Professor of Church Law in the University. Here he worked for twenty years as a true and devoted friend and helper of Luther and Melanchthon, and was then, from 1541 to 1546, superintendent and chief pastor at Halle. After Luther's death he passed through various troubled experiences, but became in 1553 superintendent and chief pastor at Eisfeld on the Werra, where he d. Oct. 9, 1555. He added two stanzas to Luther's "Erhalt uns Herr, bei deinem Wort" (q.v.). The only original hymn by him which has passed into English is:

Wes. d. Herr nicht bei uns halten. Pr. evang. 1st pub. in Eyn Eckmarks admon, Erfurt, 1824, and thence in Wucherer's, iii. p. 42, in st. In the Evang. L. S., 1851, No. 254. Tr. as, "If God were not upon our side," by Jasp. Winkworth, 1860, p. 117. [J. M.]

Jones, Edmund, s. of the Rev. Philip Jones, Cheltenham, was b. in 1722, and attended for a time the Baptist College at Bristol. At the age of 19 he began to preach for the Baptist Congregation at Exeter, and two years afterwards he became its pastor. In 1760 he pub. a volume of Sacred Poems. After a very useful ministry he d. April 13, 1765. From an old ms. record of the Exeter Baptist Church, it appears that it was under his ministry in the year 1759, that singing was first introduced into that Church as a part of worship. As a hymn-writer he is known chiefly through:

Come, humble sinner, in whose breast. This hymn appeared in Rippon's Sab. Sel., 1787, No. 332, in 13 st. of 4 l.; and headed, "The successful rescue of a soul. In unto the King, Esther iv. 16." It has undergone several changes, including:

2. "Come, trembling sinner, in whose breast." This is in a great number of American hymn-books.

Miller, in his Singers & Songs of the Church, 1869, p. 333, attributes this hymn to a Welsh Baptist hymn-writer of Trevecca, and of the same name. Rippon, however, says in the 1st ed. of his Sel. that Edmund Jones, the author of No. 333, was pastor of the Baptist Church at Exon, Devon. This decides the matter. [W. R. S.]

Jones, Griffith, of Llanddowror, was b. at Cilhrada, Carmarthenshire, of respectable parents, in 1683. He was ordained deacon by Bishop Bull in 1708. In 1711 he became Vicar of Llandeilo-Abercowyn, and Vicar of Llanddowror in 1716. In 1730, he first commenced his circulating schools in Wales, which were approved of invaluable blessings to thousands. He d. April 8, 1761, at the house of Mrs. Bevan, who had helped him with his schools.
and also bequeathed £10,000 towards its maintenance. He laboured in the parish of Llanddowror for 45 years. He published many books and some hymns, selected from the works of different authors. One of his books was called Anogeth ffolianu Duce, or A admonition to praise God. [W. G. T.]

Jones, Samuel Flood, M.A., s. of William Jones, for many years the Secretary of the Religious Body Society, was b. in London in 1826, and educated at Pembroke College, Oxford (B.A. 1851). Taking Holy Orders he was Minister of St. Matthew's, Spring Gardens, London, 1854-76; Lecturer of Bow, London, 1858-76; Minor Canon, Westminster Abbey, 1859; Precentor, 1869; Vicar of St. Botolph, Aldersgate, London, 1876; and Priest in Ordinary to the Queen, 1869. In 1877 he pub. Hymns of Prayer and Praise, Lond., Dalton & Lucy. This book contained 100 hymns, of which the following were by Mr. Jones:—

1. Here all is strife and war. The Present and the Future.
2. Jesus, my Advocate in heaven. Jesus the Advocate. This is adapted from "Star of the Sea."
3. Lord of light, this day our Guardian be. Morning.
4. This is the day of light. When first the silvery dawn. Sunday. Written long before 1860.

Mr. Jones’s most popular hymn is:—

This was written about 1877, at the request of the late Dean Stanley for use at Marriages in Westminster Abbey. It has passed into several hymn-books. Mr. Jones’s brother, William Henry Rich-Jones, M.A., Vicar of Bradford-on-Avon, and Canon of Salisbury (b. 1817, d. 1885), contributed:—

1. It was my song, thy God adore. God the Sustainer.
2. Lord, Thy solemn Passion past. Ascension. (In W. J. Blew’s *Old, 1852-55, but not his.)
3. to his Hymn, &c., as above; and his wife Catherine Flood Jones (b. 1826) also contributed:—

Pilgrim, bend thy footsteps on. Onward. to the same work. [J. J.]

Jonson, Benjamin, commonly known as Ben Jonson, the son of a clergyman, was b. at Westminster in 1573, and educated at Westminster School, and St. John’s, Cambridge. He d. in London, Aug. 6, 1637. His history and dramatic abilities are well known to all students of English literature. He is known in association with hymnody mainly through his carol, “I sing the birth—was born tonight,” which is still in use. It is given in his Underwoods in the 2nd vol. (folio) of his Works, 1640, and entitled “A Hymn on the Nativity of my Saviour.” Two additional hymns therein, “The sinner’s sacrifice” and “A Hymn to God the Father,” have much merit, but are unsuited for congregational use. His Works have been edited by Gifford, and more recently by Lient.-Col. Francis Cunningham. [See English Hymnody, Early, § v.; and for Life, Enc. Brit., 9th ed.] [J. J.]

Jordanis oras praevia. C. Coffin. [Advent.] Pub. in his Hymni Sacri, 1736, p. 34: and again in the Paris Breviary the same year as the hymn for Sundays and Ferrial days in Advent at Lauds. It is also in the Lyons and other modern French Breviaries; Card. Newman’s Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865; and J. Chandler’s Hymns of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 37. It is tr. as:—

1. On Jordan’s bank the Baptist’s cry. J. Chandler. 1st pub. in his Hymns of the Primitive Church, 1837, p. 40, in 6th ed. It is one of the most popular of Chandler’s translations, and is given in a large number of hymn-books, those which contain the original tr., however, being in the minority, and include the People’s H. 1867, the Westminster Abbey H. Bk., 1883, and the Universal H. Bk., 1885. Of the numerous versions of the text, in most instances embodying slight alterations only, the best known are, Murray’s Hymnal, 1852; the Salisbury *H. Bk., 1857; Kennedy, 1865; Cooke, 1864, &c. The most popular arrangement is that by the Hymnary, 1872; T. Darling’s Hymns, &c., 1887, &c. The Rev. F. Pott’s version in his Hymnary, &c., 1861, and Prebendary Thring’s in his Coll., 1882, are specially good. In the English Hymnal, 1856, and 1861, Chandler’s text is altered to “On Jordan’s banks a herald-cry;” and in the New Metre Hymnal, 1875, No. 158, is a cento, st. i.-iii. being from Chandler’s tr., and st. iv. v. are Dr. Watts’s version (L. M.) of Ps. 117, pub. in his Ps. of David, 1719, and not from his Hymns, &c., 1709, as stated by the editor.

2. Lo! the desert-depths are stirred. By W. J. Blew. Printed for use in his Church, 1850, and pub. in The Church H. & Tune Book, 1852 and 1855. It was repeated in Rice’s Hymns, 1870.

Translations not in C. U.:—

1. Lo, the Baptist’s herald cry. J. Williams, 1839.
2. Lo! the Prophet sent before. G. Rixton, 1851.

Joseph of the Studium. [Joseph of Thessalonica.]*

Joseph of Thessalonica. This hymn-writer is known in Greek hymnody as Joseph of the Studium. He is not however the same person wrongly named by Dr. Neale in his Hymns of the Eastern Church as Joseph of the Studium, author of the great Canon for the Ascension. That Joseph is a Joseph the Hymnographer (q.v.), Joseph of Thessalonica, younger brother of St. Theodora of the Studium, q.v. (see Hymns of the Eastern Church, was some time Bishop of Thessalonica, and died in prison, after great suffering inflicted by command of Theophillus. [Greek Hymnody, § xviii. 1.] He was probably the author of
JOSEPH THE HYMNOPHAGHER

the Triodia in the Triodia, and certainly of five Canons in the Pentecostaria to which his name is prefixed. His pieces have not been tr. into English. [H. L. B.]

Joseph, St., the Hymnographer. A native of Sicily, and of the Sicilian school of poets is called by Dr. Neale (in his Hys. of the Eastern Church), Joseph of the Studium, in error. He left Sicily in 830 for a monastic life at Thessalonica. Thence he went to Constantinople; but left it, during the Iconoclastic persecution, for Rome. He was for many years a slave in Crete, having been captured by pirates. After regaining his liberty, he returned to Constantinople. He established there a monastery, in connection with the Church of St. John Chrysostom, which was filled with inmates by his eloquence. He was banished to the Chersonese for defence of the Icons, but was recalled by the empress Theodora, and made See euphylax (keeper of the sacred vessels) in the Great Church of Constantinople, through the favour of the patriarch Ignatius. He stood high also in the favour of Phocius, the rival and successor of Ignatius, and accompanied him into banishment. He d. at an advanced age in 883. He is commemorated in the Calendars of the Greek Church on April 3rd. He is the most voluminous of the Greek hymn-writers. There are more than two hundred Canons under the aegis of his name, in the Menaca. Cardinal Pitra says he is reported to have composed a thousand. There is some difficulty in distinguishing his works from those of the brother of Theodore of the Studium, Joseph of Thessalonica. This latter poet, and not the more celebrated Joseph the Hymnographer, was named Joseph of the Studium. [Greek Hymnody. § xviii. 1. 3.] [H. L. B.]

Josephson, Ludwig Carl Leopold, was b. January 28, 1809, at Sande, Westphalia, and studied at the University of Bonn. In 1832 he became Pastor at Isenberg, Westphalia, and after other appointments became in 1863 Pastor and Superintendent at Barth, near Stralsund, in Western Pomerania. He d. at Barth on Jan. 22, 1877 (mr. from Superintendent Bartz, Barth, &c.). His hymns appeared in his Stimmen aus Zurm. Islerbohn 1841, and from this a number passed into Knapp’s Br. L. S., 1850 and 1865. One has been tr. into English.

First the name auf Erden. For the Sick. For one during a sleepless night. 1st pub. 1841 as above, p. 34, in 10 st. of 4 l., repeated in Aephr. 1846. No. 2405 (1865, No. 2738). Tr. as “Now darkness over all is spread,” by Mrs Winsborough, 1848, p. 83. [J. M.]

Joy to the followers of the Lord. Anna L. Barbauld. [Joy.] Written about 1820, and pub. by her sister in The Works of Anna Letitia Barbauld, with a Memoir. 1825, vol. i. p. 339, in 6 st. of 4 l. In Dr. Martineau’s Hymns, 1840, and again in the 1853 ed. It is given as “Joy to those that love the Lord.” This is also in other collections. In Ellen Clarke’s Ps. Hymns & Anthems, 1860, it begins with st. 3., “Tis a joy that, sweeted deep,” altered to “Joy there is, that, sweeted deep.” [J. J.]

Joy to the world, the Lord is come [nigh]. I. Watts. [Ps. xcviii] 1st pub. in his Psalms of David, &c., 1719, in 4 st. of 4 l., as the 2nd pt. of his version of Psalm 98. T. Cotterill gave, in the 1st ed. of his Set., 1810, a much altered version of text, which was repeated in the authorized ed. of 1820 with the repetition of st. 1. as st. v. This arrangement is known by st. ii., which reads: “Ye saints, rejoice, the Saviour reigns,” &c. Bickersteth’s arrangement in his Christian Psalmody, 1833, is also in 5 st.; but the added stanza (iii.) is from Watts’s version of the 1st part of the same Psalm. Both of these texts have been repeated in later collections. In addition there are also the following: (1) “The Lord is come: let heaven rejoice,” &c. Hall’s Mithre H. Bk. 1836; and (2) “Joy to the world, the Lord is nigh,” in the Irvingite Hymns, for the Use of the Churches, 1844. In its various forms, but principally in the original, it is in use in most English-speaking countries. It has also been translated into several languages, including Latin, in R. Bingham’s Hymno. Christ. Lat., 1870, “Lastitas in mundo! Dominus nam venit Iesus!” [J. J.]

Joyce, James, M.A., was born at Frome, Somersetshire, Nov. 2, 1781, and was for some years Vicar of Dorinking, and d. there Oct. 9, 1850. He pub. A Treatise on Love to God, &c., 1822; The Lays of Truth, a Poem, 1825; and Hymns with Notes, 1849. The last is a small work which he compiled for his parishioners. It is composed of passages of Holy Scripture, Meditations, and 20 Hymns. Of his hymns, the following are in C. U.:—

1. Disowned of Heaven, by man oppressed. (on behalf of the Jews.) It is appeared in the Christian observer, Nov., 1849, in 5 st. of 4 l., headed “Hymn applicable to the present condition of the Jews,” and signed “J.J.” The form in which it is known to modern collections is, “O why should Israel’s sons, once bless’d?” This appeared in Bickersteth’s Christian Psalmody, 1833, and is widely used. The cento, “Lord, visit Thy forsaken race—vine,” in use in America, is Bickersteth’s (1832) somewhat altered.

2. High on the bending willows hung. (on behalf of the Jews.) This hymn was given in the December number of the Christian observer, 1849, in 6 st. of 4 l., as “A second hymn applicable to the present condition of the Jews,” and signed “J.J.”

3. Israel bewails her freedom gone. (on behalf of the Jews.) This is his “Third Hymn applicable to the present condition of the Jews,” and was given in the Christian observer, Dec., 1859, with No. 2. It is in 6 st. of 4 l., and signed “J.J.”

Jubatus et in praeceptis aquis. C. Coffin. [Tuesday] Pub. in his Hymni Sacri, 1736, p. 15, and again in the Paris Breveycy of the same year, for Tuesdays at Matins. It is also in the Lyons and other modern French Breve. In Carl. Newman’s Hymni Eclectivae, 1838 and 1865; and in J. Chandler’s Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837. Tr. as:—

1. He speaks the word; the floods obey. By J. Chandler, in his Hys of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 17. It was repeated in Dr. Oldknow’s Hymns, &c., 1850; and as “God speaks the word; the floods obey,” in the “Additional set. Hymns,” given in the Scottish Episcopal Coll., 1858.

2. The word is given, the waters flow. By I. Williams. Appeared in the British Magazine, July, 1834; and again in his Hys. Tr. from the Parisian Breve., 1839, p. 18.

3. He spake and gathering into one. By J. D. Chambers, in his Laudis Sion, 1857, p. 16; and the Sidebury H. Bk., 1857.
Jubilate [Prayer, Book of Common]

Jubilemus omnes una. [Adiect.]
This sequence for the 4th S. in Advent is found in a 12th cent. English Gradual in the British Museum (Reg. 2, B. iv, f. 65, and a Serenissimi, cir. 1199 (Calig. fo. f. 44). Also in two 14th cent. Masses in the British Museum (Add. 16, f. 16 b; and Addd. 30, f. 16 b). The printed text is in the reprints of the Sarum, York, Hereford, and Lincoln Missals; in Nalos's Sequenae, 1582, p. 174 (from Nalos); Kehrein, No. 5.

Honour and glory, thanksgiving and power. By E. A. Dayman, for the Hymnary, and pub. therein, 1872. It is repeated in the Lusses, 2.

Jubilemus pliens mente. [For the Dying. In Time of Peculiar.] This only form of this sequence we have been able to find is in a 15th cent. Sarum Missal in the Bodleian (Liturg. Miss., f. 261 b). It is also found in the eds. of the Sarum Missal printed at Venice, 1491; London, 1498, &c.; and in the Burlesques reprinted by all of 887*—889*.

This sequence occurs in a Mass, Pro missa bacakit evitanda (for escaping death by pestilence), which is introduced by a notice which states that Pope Clement, with all the Cardinals in concile, composed and arranged the Mass, and granted to all those who were truly penitent, and had made their confession, and had heard this Mass, 26 days of indulgence (i.e. remission of canonical penalties), and that all those who heard this Mass must carry in the hand a lighted candle while hearing Mass on the five days following; and should hold it in the hand, kneeling, throughout the whole Mass. And no sudden death could not hurt them. And this was certified and approved in Avignon and its neighbourhood. The Pope mentioned was Clement VI., elected Pope, May 7, 1342. The contagion alluded to was brought to Italy in 1347 by merchants from the Levant, and soon spread over Europe, causing a fearful amount of mortality. Clement, at Avignon, then the seat of the Papacy, distinguished himself by trying in various ways to alleviate and terminate this scourge, providing for the nursing and support of the sick, the burial of the dead, &c.

Translation in C. U.:—
Holy Trinity, before Thee. By Harriet Mary Chester, made for and pub. in the Hymnary, 1872, in 7 st. of 6 l., and signed "H. M. C."

Another tr. is:—
With this mind let us rejoice. C. B. Pearson, in the Sarum Missal in English, 1868.

Jucundare plebs fidelis. Adam of St. Victor. [Common of Evangelists.] A fine sequence founded on Ezek. i. 4—28, x. 9—22, and Rev. 4. 8—8. The "living creatures" are made symbolic of the Evangelists, St. Matthew being represented by the man, St. Luke by the ox, St. Mark by the lion, and St. John by the eagle. Then under another figure the Evangelists are compared to the four rivers which watered Paradise (by later writers St. Matthew is represented by Gibbon, St. Mark by Tigris, St. Luke by Enprumadas, and St. John by Euphrates). The sequence has generally been ascribed to Adam of the St. Victor, and is included in L. Gauthier's ed. of Adam's Opera poeticae, vol. ii., 1858, p. 425; but in his ed. 1881, p. 223, Gauthier says that the rhythm is unlike Adam, and as he thinks Adam's authorship is doubtful, he does not print the text, but merely refers to it in his Gradual of St. Victor before 1299 (Bibli. Nat., Paris, No. 14448), a Paris Gradual of the 12th cent. (B.N., No. 15615), and other sources. F. W. E. Ritt, in his Liederstheorie der Mittelalter, 1887, No. 225, gives the readings of a Gradual of the end of the 12th cent. (now at Darmstadt, where it is given as a sequence for SS. Mark and Luke. It is in a York Missal, cir. 1380, now in the Bodleian, but belonging to University College, Oxford, in an early 14th cent. Paris Missal in the British Museum (Add. 18031, f. 298); in the Magdeburg Missal of 1480 and others. The printed text is also in Daniel, ii, p. 84; Trench, ed. 1894, No. 62; Kehrein, No. 47; Bangham's Liturgical Poetry of Adam of St. Victor, 1881, vol. iii. p. 163. Portions of the hymn are also included in "Come, pure hearts in sweetest measure" (p. 250, &c.). (See also "Sing to God," in Various.)

Juddin, Thomas James, M.A., is, of a London tradesman, was b. at London, July 25, 1788, and was educated at Caius College, Cambridge (B.A. 1815, M.A. 1818), mainly at the expense of Sir William Curtis, an alderman of the City of London. After taking Holy Orders in 1816, he held various curacies, until 1828, when he was preferred as minister of Somers Chapel, St. Paul's, London. He d. Sept. 21, 1871. He pub. Twelve Signs of the Times; Papish Aggression; and other works, including a volume of sonnets by Bongra Moods. His hymns were published mainly for the use of his own congregation and appeared as:—

(1) "Church and Home Psalmody; being a Collection of Psalms from the Old and New Versions, and original Hymns, for Congregational and Domestic Purposes, 1831. In 1834 this was enlarged and issued as: (2) "Church and Home Melodies, being a New Version of the more devotional parts of the Psalms, together with a Version of the Collects, and original Hymns, for Congregational and Domestic purposes. This was divided into (1) "Spirit of the Psalms," (2) "Collects in Verse," (3) "Hymns on the Gospel," and (4) "Original Hymns." (3) The ed. was pub. in 1837. At the end of the volume two little-pages were supplied, that the book, if so desired, might be divided into two, one as The Spirit of the Psalter; The Collects in Verse; together with Hymns suggested by the Gospel for the day throughout the year; and the other, Sacred Melodies; or Original Hymns for Congregational and Domestic Use."
From the 1st ed. of his Coll. the following hymns are in C. U.:

1. Embraced is Jesus now. Ascension.
4. We are journeying to a place. Heavenly Road.
5. When in the dark and cloudy day. Jesus, all in all.

Judson, Adoniram, D.D., b. at Maldon, Massachusetts, Aug. 9, 1798, where his father was Pastor of Baptist Church. He graduated at Brown University, Providence, Rhode Island, 1807; and went in 1815, together with his first wife, as a Missionary to India. After encountering various hindrances from the East India Company, they began their mission in Burmah. On June 8, 1824, Rangoon having been taken by the British, Dr. Judson was imprisoned by the natives, and was kept in captivity until the Burmese capitulated to the British in 1826. His first wife dying on Oct. 21, 1826, he married the widow of his late colleague, G. D. Boardman (see Hull, below), April 10, 1834. He d. at sea, April 12, 1850, and was buried in the deep. He translated the Bible into Burmese, and wrote several tracts in that language. A Burmese-English Dictionary was compiled from his papers. His Memoirs, by Dr. Wayland, were published in 1853. His hymns include:

   The Lord's Prayer. This hymn is dated "Prison, Ava, March 1825," and was written during his imprisonment above referred to. It was given in his Memoirs, 1853, vol. i. p. 308. It is in C. U. in Great Britain and America.

2. Our Saviour bowed beneath the wave. Holy Baptism.
   This dates from 1829, or earlier, and is in 7 st.
   It is said to have been "sung at the Baptism of several soldiers at Mouluin, British Pegu." St. i.-iii. usually form the hymn.

   This is composed of st. vii., vi., vii of No. 2, and is found in Winchell's Coll., 1832.

Judson, Sarah, née Hull, daughter of Ralph Hull, was b. at Alnwick, New Haven, Nov. 4, 1800, and married first to the Rev. George D. Boardman, and afterwards to Dr. Judson (see above). She d. at St. Helena, Sept. 1, 1845. Her first missionary hymn, "Proclaim the lofty praise," is in W. Urwick's Dublin Coll., 1829, No. 142, in 4 st. of 8 l. Its appearance in America prior to this has not been traced.

Justus tyranni pro fide. Nicolas le Tourneaux. [St. John at the Latin Gate.]
   Appeared in the Cluniac Breviary, 1666, p. 188, and the Paris Breviary, 1736, as the hymn at Lauds for the Feast of St. John, Ante Portam Latinam. It is also in several modern French Breviaries: Carol. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiæ, 1838 and 1865; and J. Chandler's Hymns of the Primitive Church, 1857, No. 43. It is tr. as:

1. John, by a tyrant's stern command.
   By L. Williams. Pub. in his Hymn. Tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839, p. 203, in 5 st. of 4 l. It has been repeated in a few hymn-books, including the English Hymnal, 1852 and 1861, &c.

2. An exile for the faith.
   By F. Caswall. Pub. in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 289, in 6 st. of 4 l. and again in his Hymns & Poems, 1873.

Kämpff, Johann, was a native of Staffelstein in Franconia. After studying at the Universities of Wittenberg and Jena, he was appointed in 1694 deacon at St. Margaret's 2 R.
Keble, John, M.A., was b. at Oxford, in Gloucestershire, on St. Mark's Day, 1782. His father was Vicar of Coln St. Aldwin's, about three miles distant, but lived at Oxford in a house of his own, where he educated entirely his two sons, John and Thomas, at the time of their entrance at Oxford. In 1806 John Keble won a Scholarship at Corpus Christi College, and in 1810, a Double First Class, a distinction which up to that time had been gained by no one except Sir Robert Peel. In 1811 he was elected a Fellow of Oriel, a very great honour, especially for a boy under 19 years of age; and in 1811 he won the University Prizes both for the English and Latin Essays. It is somewhat remarkable that amid this brilliantly successful career, one competition in which the future poet was unsuccessful was that for English verse, in which he was defeated by Mr. Rolleston. After his election at Oriel, he resided in College, engaged in private tuition. At the close of 1813 he was appointed Examining Master in the Schools, and was an exceedingly popular and efficient examiner. On Trinity Sunday, 1815, he was ordained Deacon, and in 1816 Priest, by the Bishop of Oxford, and became Curate of East Leach and Burford, though he still continued to reside at Oxford. In 1818 he was appointed College Tutor at Oriel, which office he retained until 1828. On the death of his mother in the same year, he left Oxford, and returned to live with his father and two surviving sisters at Coln. In addition to East Leach and Burford, he also accepted the Curacy of Souton, and the two briefs, John and Thomas, undertook the duties between them, at the same time helping their father at Coln. It should be added, as an apology for Keble thus becoming a sort of pluralist among "the inferior clergy," that the population of all his little curies did not exceed 1000, nor the income £100 a year. In 1824 came the only offer of a dignity in the Church, and that a very humble one, which he ever received. The newly-appointed Bishop of Barbadoes (Coleridge) wished Keble to go out with him as Archdeacon, but for his father's delicate state of health, he would probably have accepted the offer. In 1825 he became Curate of Hurstle, on the recommendation of his old pupil, Sir William Heathcote; but in 1826, on the death of his sister, Mary Ann, he returned to Oxford, feeling that he ought not to separate himself from his father and only surviving sister. He supplied his father's place at Coln entirely 1827 was memorable for the publication of the Christian Year, and 1828 for the election to the Presidency of Oriel, which his friends, rather than himself, seem to have been anxious to secure for him. In 1829 the living of Hurstle was offered to him by Sir William Heathcote, but declined on the ground that he could not leave his father. In 1830 he published his admirable edition of Hooker's Works. In 1831 the Bishop of Exeter (Dr. Philpotts) offered him the valuable living of Tidworth, but it was declined for the same reason that Hurstle had been declined. In the same year he was also elected to the Poetry Professorship at Oxford. His Protezione in that capacity were much admired. In 1833 he preached his famous Auntie Sermon at Oxford, which is said by Dr. Newman to have given the first start to the Oxford Movement. Very soon after the publication of this sermon the Tracts for the Times began to be issued. Of these Tracts Keble wrote Nos. 4, 13, 40, and 89. In 1835 his father died, and Keble and his sister retired from Faitford to Cother. In the same year he married Miss Clarke and the Vicarage of Hurley, again becoming vacant, was again offered to him. He accepted, and the reason for his previous refusal of it no longer existed, he accepted the offer, and in 1836 settled at Hurley for the remainder of his life. That life was simply the life of a devoted and indefatigable parish priest, varied by intellectual pursuits. In 1864 his health began to give way, and on March 29, 1866, he passed away, his dearly loved wife only surviving him six weeks. Both are buried side by side, in Hurley churchyard.

In his country vicarage he was not idle with his p. p. in 1839 he published his Metrical Version of the Psalms. The year before, he began to edit, in conjunction with Dr. Pusey and Dr. Newman, the Library of the Fathers. In 1846 he published the Lyra Innocentium, and in 1847 a volume of Ascendental and Devotional Sermons. His pen then seemed to have rested for ten years, when the agitation about the Divorce Bill called forth from him in 1857 an essay entitled, An Argument for not Proceeding in the Impropriety of the Royal Church. The same year the decision of Archbishop Sumner in the Denison Case elicited another essay, the full title of which is The Worship of Our Lord and Saviour in the Sacrament of the Holy Communion. In 1857 he published his last work, the Life of Bishop Wilton (of Sodor and Man). This cost him more pain than anything he wrote, but it was essentially a labour of love.

In the popular sense of the word "hymn," Keble can scarcely be called a hymn-writer at all. Very many of his verses have found their way into popular collections of Hymns for Public Worship, but these are mostly centos. Often they are violently detached from their context in a way which seriously damages their significance. Two glaring instances of this occur in the Morning and Evening hymns. In the former the verse "Only, O Lord, in Thy dear love, Fit us for perfect rest above," loses half its meaning when the preceding verse, ending "The secret this of rest below," is excised, as it generally is in collections for public worship, and the same may be said of that most familiar of all Keble's lines, "Sun of my soul, thou Saviour dear," which has of course considerable reference to the preceding verse, "Tis gone, that bright and everblaze," &c. The Lyra Innocentium has furnished but few verses which have been adopted into hymn collections; the Psalter has been more fortunate, but the translations from the Latin are almost unknown.

Taking, however, the word "hymn" in the wider sense in which Dr. Johnson defines it, "as a song of adoration to some superior being," Keble stands in the very first rank of hymn-writers. His uneventful life was the very ideal life for such a poet as Keble was, but not the sort of life which would be best adapted to win a popular hymn-writer. The Christian Year and the Lyra Innocentium reflect in a remarkable degree the surroundings of the writer. They are essentially the works of a refined and cultured mind, and require a refined and cultured mind to enter into their spirit. Keble, all his life long, and never more than in the earlier portion of it, before he wrote, and when he was writing The Christian Year, breathed an atmosphere of culture and refinement. He had imbibed neither the good nor the evil which the training of a public, or even of a private, school brings. It was not even the ordinary home education which he had received. He had been trained, up to the very time of his going to college, by his father, who was clearly a man of culture and refinement, and had been himself successively Scholar and Fellow of Corpus. When he went to Oxford, he can scarcely be said to have entered into the whirl of university life. The Corpus of those days has been admirably described by Keble's own biographer, Sir John Calverley, and by Dean Stanley in his Life of Dr. Arnold; and the impression which the two vivid pictures leave upon the mind is that of a home circle, on rather a large scale, composed of about twenty youths, all more or less scholarly and refined, and some of them clearly destined to become men of mark. When he removed across the road to Oriel, he found himself in the midst of a still more distinguished band. Whether at home or at college he had never come into contact with anything rude or coarse. And his career was just what one would expect from such a career. Exquisitely delicate and refined thoughts, expressed in the most delicate and refined language, are characteristic of it all. Even the occasional roughnesses of verbatim may not be altogether unconnected with the absence of a public school education, when public schools laid excessive stress upon the form of composition, especially in verse. The Christian Year again bears traces of the life which the writer led, in a clerical atmosphere, just at the eve of a great Church Revival, "enjus pars magna fuit." "You know," he writes to a friend, "the C. Y. as far as I remember it everywhere supposes the Church to be in a state of decay." Still more obviously is this the case in regard to the Lyra Innocentium. It was being composed during the time when the writer was stricken by what he always seems to have regarded as the great sorrow of his life. Not the death of his nearest relations—and he had several trials of that kind—not the greatest of his own personal troubles dealt to him so severe a blow as the accession of J. H. Newman to the Church of Rome. The whole circumstances of the fierce controversy connected with the Tract movement troubled and unsettled him; and one can well understand with what a sense of relief he turned to write, not for, but about, little children, a most important distinction, which has too often been unnoticed. If the Lyra had been written for children it would have been an almost ludicrous failure, for the obscurity which has been frequently complained of in The Christian Year, is still more conspicuous in the latter work. The title is somewhat misleading, and has caused it to be regarded as a suitable gift-book for the young, who are quite incapable of appreciating it. For the Lyra is written in a deeper tone, and expresses the more matured convictions of the author; and though it is a far less successful achievement as a whole, it rises in success, and Keble did not expect it to be. "It was undertaken," he tells us, "in the first instance with a serious apprehension, which has since grown into a full conviction, that the thing attempted is, strictly speaking, impossible.
At the same time, if Keble did not achieve what he owned to be impossible, he produced a version which has the rare merit of never offending against good taste; one which in every line reflects the mind of the cultured and elegant poet, who had been used to the work of translating from other languages into English. Hymn compilers have hitherto strangely neglected this volume; but it is a volume worth the attention of the hymn-compiler of the future. There is scarcely a verse in it which would do discredit to any hymn-book; while there are parts which would be an acquisition to any collection.
His translations from the Latin have not recommended themselves to hymn compilers. Some of his detached hymns have been more popular.
But it is after all as writer of The Christian Year that Keble has established his claim to be reckoned among the immortals. It would be hardly too much to say that what the Prayer Book is to prose, The Christian Year is in poetry. They never pall upon one; they realize Keble's own exquisite simile:—

"As for some dear familiar strain
Umted we ask, and ask again;
Ever in its melodious store
Finding a spell unshared before."

And it would hardly be too bold to prophesy that The Christian Year will live as long as the Prayer Book, whose spirit Keble had so thoroughly imbibed, and whose "soothing influence" it was his especial object to illustrate and commend.

Keble's hymns, poetical pieces, and translations appeared in the following works:—

(1) The Christian Year: Thoughts in Verse for the Sundays and Holydays Throughout the Year. Oxford:
John Henry Parker, 1827. Preface dated "May 30th, 1827." The last poem, that on the "Communion," is dated March 9, 1827. The poems on the "Forms of Prayer to be used at Sea," "Expounder of Treason," "King Charles the Martyr," "The Restoration of the were added to the 4th edition, 1847. The Messrs.
Parker have pub. a large number of editions to date, including a fine-paper reprint of the first edition, and an edition with the addition of the dates of composition of each poem.
A fac-simile of Keble's ms. as it existed in 1822 was also lithographed in 1823, by Elliot Stock, but its publication was suppressed by a legal injunction, and only a few copies came into the hands of the public. Since the expiration of the first copyright other publishers have issued the work in various forms.

(2) Contributions to the British Magazine, which were included in Lyra Apologetica, 1836, with the signature of "y."

(3) The Poets or Psalmists of David: In English
Verse, by a Member of the University of Oxford.
Adapted for the most part, to Tunes in Common Use;
dedicated by permission to the Lord Bishop of Oxford, . . . Oxford: John Henry Parker, 1839, London, MIDSUMMER. Preface dated "Oxford, May 29, 1839."

(4) The Child's Christian Year: Hymns for Sunday and Holy-Day. Compiled for the Use of
This was compiled by Mrs. Young. Keble wrote the Preface, dated "Hursley, Nov. 4, 1841," and signed R
"J. K." To it he contributed the four poems noted below.

(5) Lyra Innocentium: Thoughts in Verse on Christian Children, their Ways and their Privileges . . .
Oxford: John Henry Parker; P. & J. Rivington, London, 1846. The Merton Address (in place of Preface)
"To all Friendly Readers," is dated "Feb. 3, 1844."

(6) Lays of the Sanctuary, and other Poems. Com-

The last cento from The Christian Year, 1827 and 1828.

Sunday, Saviour, strengthening Guide. (March 3, 1828.)

1. Creator, of Adams, what treasures of sweet thought, Church after God. (March 13, 1827.)
2. Holy Father, long suffering grace. 16th S. after Easter.
3. Lord's, mercy. (Jan. 31, 1827.)
4. Cæsar's from prayer, and mercy. (Feb. 21, 1827.)
5. Day, O who shall dare the heavens. (Aug. 22, 1827.)
6. In this frail scene. St. Mark's 12, 1827, Trinity. (March 29, 1827.)

The last cento from the setting sun. 23rd of the vernal skies. 16th S. after Easter. (June 29, 1827.)

The days of prayer are past. 4th S. after Pentecost.

When we hailed in vain, 8th S. of the fishers. (Aug. 23, 1827.)

Consecration of the Almighty's cloud. (Aug. 30, 1827.)

We will not go into Egypt. 22nd S. after Ascension.

Agais and ailing. 4th S. after Trinity.

For manhood's race. St. Matthew's 19, 1827.

Now press! St. Matthew's Day. 16th S. after Easter, Jerusalem. (1819.)

The editor of Keble's Miscellaneous Poems says regarding Nos. 53, 55, and 56:—

"The three hymns for Emigrants, for use at night, Morning, and evening, were written at 13, Whitehall, 1824, by order of the Secretary of the Board of Immigration. They were printed in the first edition of the 'Prayers for Emigrants,' which had been compiled, but were subsequently omitted, as being thought not sufficiently suitable for the class of people for whose use the Book of Prayers was intended," Preface, p. vi.

When, to the 56 centos and hymns above, are added those annotated elsewhere in this Dictionary, it is found that nearly 100 hymns (counting centos as such) by Keble are some in C. U. A. at the present time, and of these in the rank with the finest and most popular in the English language.

Keimann, Christian, s. of Zacharias Keimann, Lutheran pastor at Pankratz, Bohemia, and after 1816 at Ober-Uhersell, was b. at Pankratz, Feb. 27, 1607. In autumn of 1627 he entered the University of Wittenberg, where he graduated M. A., March 19, 1634; and in the next month was appointed by the Town Council of Zittau Conductor of their Gymnasia, of which he became Rector in 1638. He d. at Zittau Jan. 13, 1632 (Kneip, iii. 369; Allg. Deutscher Bilb. x. 335, &c.). Keimann was a distinguished teacher. He was the author of a... number of scholastic publications, of a few Scriptural plays, and of some 13 hymns. Almost all of his hymns came into church use. They take high rank among those of the 17th cent., being of genuine poetic ring, fresh, strong, full of faith under manifold and heavy trials, and deeply spiritual. Two have passed into English:—

1. From each, the Christian Alle, Christmass. This beautiful hymn is included in 4 ed. of 1691 as No. 34 in pt. IV. of A. Hammereschmidt's Musikalisches Andachtsbuch, pub. at Leipzig in Saxon, 1661, and is set to a tune by Hammereschmidt introduced by Halbleib repeated twelve times in the C. L. S., 1851, No. 34. According to Koch, v. 23, 1846, it was composed as part of a piece written for him by Johann Libmann for his scholars to perform at Christmas-tide, 1644, and pub. as Der meckeln ge Jesus, oder in Christil, 1616. Stanza IV. may refer to the trace of 1646 between Saxony and Sweden.

O regale, ye Christians, lend me a good and full tr. by Miss Winkworth, as No. 33 in her C. B. for England, 1863, where it is set to the original melody.

ii. Meinem Jesum laß ich nicht, Wei die ich für mich gegeben, Low to Christ. 1st appeared in A. Hammereschmidt's Predigt und Bahr der Christenheit, Zittau and Leipzig, 1640 (engraved title, 1639), pt. III., No. 4, in 4 ed. of 44. It is an acrostic on the dying words of Jesus on Oct. 8, 1634, by the Director Johann Georg L. of Saxony: Meinem (L.) Jesum (S.) laß (M.) ich (W.) nicht (W.) in (L.) pf handing it in the initials of letters 1-4 (J. u. C. L. S.) the name, via Johann Georg Church first zu Sachsen, and then in time the motto in full. Founded on the words of Jesus in Gen. xxxii. 26, it has comforted and strengthened many in life and at the hour of death; and has served as the model of many later hymns. Included as No. 373 in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1848. Tr. as Keinen hat Gott verlassen. [Trust in God.] Wackernagel, v. p. 275, gives this hymn from the Geistliche Lieder, Erfurt, 1611, and the Christliches Gesangbüchlein, Hamburg, 1612, in 8 ed. of 81. Also in Mittel, 1855, No. 590, and the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 847. In the 1612 it is entitled "A hymn on the name of the serene right honourable princess and lady, Katharina, by birth and marriage Margarucine Electress of Brandenburg." As also on Sept. 30, 1602, the hymn probably dates from the 16th cent. The initials of the 8 ed. form the name Katarina. The common assumption to Andreas Kessler, who was only b. in 1505, is baseless. Tr. as:

(1) "Haste, Lord, within my worthless heart." A tr. of st. vi. by C. Linchen, as No. 33 in the Moraviana H. Bk., 1762. In 1759 and later edn. (1804, No. 440, ascribed without ground to Catharina Grossman) begins "O Lord, accept my worthless heart." (2) "Amen, this the conclusion," a tr. of st. viii., as No. 607, in the Moraviana H. Bk., 1801 (1804, No. 719).

Keil, George. [Row firm a foundation.]

Kelly, John, was b. at Newcastle-on-Tyne, educated at Glasgow University, studied theology at Bonn, New College, Edinburgh, and the Theological College of the English Presbyterian Church (to which body he belonged) in London. He was ministered to congregations at Hoburn-on-Tyne and Statham, and is now (1887) Tract Editor of the Religious Tract Society. His translations of Paul Gerhardt's Spiritual Songs were pub. in 1860. Every piece is given in full, and rendered in the metre of the originals. His Hymns of the Present Century from the German were pub. in 1886 by the R.T. S. In these trs. the metres of the originals have not always been followed, whilst some of the hymns have been abridged and others condensed. His translations lack poetic finish, but are faithful to the originals.

Madeley, in Shropshire." They were reprinted, with a Preface, by D. Sedgwick, in 1861. Although most of these hymns are given in the older collections, only a few remain in modern hymn-books, and, including others, are:

1. O Lord, our God, our wandering past, Great God, to Thee our songs we raise, and Praise the Lord, ye heavens adore Him, which are usually ascribed to J. Kempthorne. These hymns, however, are not by Kempthorne, but are taken by him for his collection from the Foundling Hospital Ps. & Hymns, 1756 and 1801-9; and there is no evidence whatever that he had anything to do with that hymn-book. As that book is frequently quoted by hymnologists, we append the title-page of the 1801 ed., which is a reprint of that of 1797:

Psalm Hymns, and Anthems, sung in the Chapel of the Hospital for the Maintenance and Education of Foundling and Deserted Young Children. London, Printed in the Year 1801. At the end of each psalm of this edition there is pasted in a four-page sheet of hymns which include, with others, "Praise the Lord, ye heavens adore Him" (q.v.).

In the 1st ed. of his own Select Portions of Psalms &c., 1810, Kempthorne did not in any way indicate his own hymns, but in the 2nd ed. of 1813 (which is a reprint of the 1st ed., with an Appendix of 11 hymns) he says in his Preface:

"For Hymn 140 and Hymn 267, Appendix: for almost all of Ps. 43, 187, Ps. 54, 87 and 84; Ps. 84, 195; Ps. 87, 131; Ps. 115, 42; Hymn 127, and for a considerable part of Ps. 22, 184; Ps. 123, 165; Ps. 133, 141; Ps. 139, 38; Hymns 26, 13, 34, 81, 97, 161, 118, and several others, the Editor is responsible, and acknowledges his obligations to some kind friends."

Of these hymns and psalm versions, which Kempthorne claims as his own, only one or two are in C. U. [J. J.]

Kemp, Thomas. B.D. The bare details of Bp. Kemp's life, when summarised, produce these results:—Born at Bury St. Edmunds, July, 1637; Scholar of Winchester, 1651; Fellow of New College, Oxford, 1657; B.A., 1661; Rector of Little Easton, 1663; Fellow of Winchester, 1668; Rector of Brompton, 1661; Rector of Woodhay and Prebendary of Winchester, 1669; Chaplain to the Princess Mary at the Hague, 1679; returns to Winchester, 1680; Bp. of Bath and Wells, 1685; imprisoned in the Tower, 1688; deprived, 1691; died at Longleat, March 19, 1715.

The parents of Kemp both died during his childhood, and he grew up under the guardianship of Isaac Walton, who had married Kemp's elder sister, Ann. The dominant Presbyterianism of Winchester and Oxford did not shake the firm attachment to the Church of England, which such a home had instilled. His life until the removal of his connection with Winchester, through his fellowship, chaplaincy to Morely (Walton's staunch friend, then bishop of Winchester), and his prebend in the Cathedral, calls for no special remark here. But this second association with Winchester, there seems little doubt, originated his three well-known hymns. In 1674 he published A Manual of Prayers for the Use of the Scholars of Winchester College, and reference is made in this book to three hymns, "Morning," "Midnight," and "Evening," the scholars being recommended to use them. It can scarcely be questioned that the Morning, Evening, and Midnight hymns, pub. in the 1695 edition of The Manual, are the ones referred to. He used to sing these hymns to the violin or spinet, but the tunes he used are unknown.

He left Winchester for a short time to be chaplain to the Prince of Wales at the Hague, but was dismissed for his faithful remembrance against a case of immorality at the Court, and returned to Winchester. A similar act of faithfulness at Winchester singularly enough won him the bishopric. He stoutly refused Neil Gwynne's offer of his house, when Charles II. came to Winchester, and the easy king, either from humour or respect for his honesty, gave him not long afterwards the bishopric of Bath and Wells. Among the many acts of piety and munificence that characterised his tenure of the see, his ministration to the prisoners and sufferers after the battle of Sedgemoor and the Bloody Assizes are conspicuous. He attended Monmouth on the scaffold. James II. pronounced him the most eloquent preacher among the Protestants of his time, the judgment of Charles II. appears from his pithy saying that he would go and hear Ken "tell him of his faults." Among the faithful words of the bishops at Charles's death-bed, none were so, "... and we saw him die," as from his lips as his He was an English language. Several of his to rem. Of great merit still remain unknown were so many modern editors being appa-
At the accession of William III, after some doubt on the subject of oaths, and was at length (1689) his seer. His charities had left time only seven hundred pounds, as a means of subsistence; received hospitality for his retreat with his friend Lord Weymouth. The see of Bath and Wells offered him, but in vain, at the successor, Bp. Kidd. He was the deprived prebendary. His station as a nonjuror was remarkable for its effect. The sanctity of Ken's character is apparent in all his works, including the Catechism, entitled Divine Love. His poetic labours, after his death, in 4 vols. contents are, the Hymns for the middle of his life are said to have suggested the idea of The Christian Year; the English Hymnody. Early, § x. The best biography of Ken is The Life of Ken by a Layman, and, especially, Life, by the Very Rev. E. H. Plumptre, Dean of Wells, 1888.

[II. L.B.]

Bishop Ken is known to hymnology as the author of the Morning, Evening, and Midday, at least half the English collection of hymns known in the English language, and this collection is followed by most of the famous English writers, such as Lanier and Newton, and by many others.

For Winchester

A Manual of Prayers For the Use of the Scholars of Winchester College, and all other boys of the same age. London, printed for John Martyn, 1674, 12mo. 69. London.

In this work it may fairly be supposed that the author had already conceived the idea of the Manual. He says:—

"The Morning and Evening Hymn in the Manual, remembering that the Psalmist, assured you that it is a good thing to praise the Lord early in the morning, and to sing praises all the day long, and that the evening and midnight hymns, would be only used occasioned by the absence of the scholars, all the three hymns are added as a title, of the Manual—Help me, then, ye hosts of Heaven, to celebrate that unknown sorrow, &c." was claimed in a Roman Catholic pamphlet as a passage which "taught the scholars of Winchester to invoke the whole Court of Heaven." This passage Ken altered "to prevent all future misinterpretations," and prefixed an Advertisement to the 1687 ed. of the Manual explaining why he had done so. In looking through the texts of the three hymns for 1693, and 1709, and especially at the doxologies, and at st. x. and xi. in the Evening Hymn, "O my Blest Guardian, whilst I sleep," \( \text{St. x.} \) (1693); and "O may my Guardian while I sleep," \( \text{St. x.} \) (1709), do we not see a good and sufficient reason to account for the revision of the hymn?

4. With regard to the text given in the Conference, Lord Seaborne observes that it is not improbable that alterations and various readings, originating with Ken himself, might have obtained private circulation among his friends, long before he had made up his own mind to give them to the public: a suggestion which may possibly help to explain the fact, that a writer, patronised by Dodwell, was misled into believing (for such a writer ought not lightly to be accused of a wilful fraud) that the text, pub. in the Conference in Ken's name was really from his hand. That Ken occasionally altered passages in his writings when for any reason he considered it necessary, is certain; and there can be little doubt that the text of the three Winchester hymns was more or less unsettled before 1695. At any rate, before their first appearance in that year in the Manual the Evening hymn had found its way into print. It was pub. in

"Harmonia Sacra; or Divine Hymns and Dialogues... Composed by the Best Masters... The Words by several Learned and Pious Persons, The Second Book." London, Henry Playford, 1693.

The first volume of this work appeared in 1698, and was dedicated to Ken. It is not improbable therefore that Playford, when collecting materials for his second volume, obtained the words of the Evening Hymn directly from the author. The text is here subjoined:

"An Evening Hymn.

The words by Bishop Ken.

"Set by Mr. Jeremiah Clarke.

"All praise to Thee my God this night
For all the blessings of the light;
Keep me, oh keep me, King of kings,
Under Thy own Almighty Wings.

"Forgive me, Lord, for Thy dear Son,
The ill that this day has done,
That with the world, myself and Thee,
I ere I sleep, at peace may be.

"Teach me to live, that I may dread
The Grave as little as my bed;
Teach me to die, so that I may Triumphing rise at the last day.

"Oh may my Soul on Thee repose,
And with sweet sleep mine eyelids close,
Sleep that may me more vigorous make,
To praise my tired when I awake.

"When the night I sleepless lie,
My soul with heavy thoughts supply;
Let no ill dreams disturb my rest,
No powers of darkness me molest.

"My dear Lord, how am I griev'd
To lose so long of Thee so dear'd!
Dull sleep of slavery to deprive,
I am but half my days alive.

"But though sleep o'er my weakness reigns,
Let it not hold me long in chains,
But now and then let loose my heart,
Till it an Heav'rishaj dart;"
I wake, I wake, ye Heavenly Choir,
May your Devotion me inspire,
That I like you my Age may spend,
Like you may on my God attend.

May I like you in God's light,
Have all day long my God in sight,
Perform like you my Maker's Will,
O may I never more do ill.

Had I your Wings to Heaven I'd fly,
But God shall that Defect supply,
And my Soul wing'd with warm desire,
Shall all day long to Heaven aspire.

All Praise to Thee, who safe hast kept,
And hast refresh'd me whilst I slept,
Grant, Lord, when I from Death shall wake,
I may of endless Light partake.

I would not wake, nor rise again,
Even yet, I wish it self I Wish I never was;
And in Hymns to be employed.

Heaven be, dear Lord, 0 were e'er Thou art,
Never then from me depart:
For to my Soul, 'is Hell to be,
Not for one Moment need I be.

Lord, I say, renew my Zone to Thee
Scatter my Sins as Morning dew, Guard my first Sprins of thought and will,
And with thy self me

Direct, control, suggest this day,
All I design, or do,
That all my Power in thy holy might may Celebrate this day,
All I design, or do,
That all my Power with all their Might,
In thy holy Glory may

Praise God, from whom all Blessings flow,
Praise him all Creatures great and small,
Praise Father, Son, and Holy Ghost,
Among the host of angels, and
The glories of the Sun,

In the original misprinted as Night.
"But though sleep o’er my frailty reigns,
Let it not hold me long in chains;
And now and then let me lose my heart,
Till it an Hallelujah dart.

"The faster sleep the sense does bind,
The more unutter’d is the mind;
O may my Soul from matter free,
Thy univ’d Goodness waking see!

"O when, shall I in endless Day,
For ever chase dark sleep away.
And endless praise with the Heavenly Choir,
Incessant sing, and never tire:

"You my best Guardian, while I sleep,
Close to my Bed his Vigils keep,
Divine Love into me instil,
Stop all the avenues of ill.

"Thought to thought with my Soul converses,
Celestial joys to me rehearse,
And in my stead all the night long,
Sing to my God a grateful song.

"Praise God from whom all blessings flow,
Praise him all Creatures here below,
Praise him above ye Heavenly Host,
Praise Father, Son, and Holy Ghost."

8. A reference to the text given in Harmonia Sacra shows that the change from "Glory" to "All praise" in I. 1. is only a restoration of the original rendering; and without being aware of this fact, Lord Selborne points out that the expression "All praise" is remarkably consistent with Ken’s frequent use of it in other writings. The same alteration was made in 1709 in the Morning Hymn, st. 3, and in the Midnight Hymn, st. 7. while at the same time "Glory" in the Morning Hymn, st. 4, is changed to "High Praise."

As in the case of "Awake my soul," this hymn has been divided, subdivided, and rearranged in a great many ways during the last 150 years. In one form or another it will be found in most hymnals pub. during that period.

My God, now I from Sleep awake. [Midnight.

The texts of 1695 and 1709 are subjoined:

1695.

"A Midnight Hymn.

"Lord, now my Sleep doth forsake,
The sole possession of me take,
Let no vain fancy me trouble,
No one impure desire intrude.

Blest Angels! while we sleep,
you Hallelujah sing on high,
You Hallelujah sing on high,

You Joyful Hymn the ever Blest.
Before the Throne and ever rest.

I now awake do with you joyn,
To praise our God in Hymns divine,
With you in Heav’n I hope to dwell,
And bid the night and world farewell.

My Soul when I shake off this dust,
Lord, in thy Arms I will entreat;
O make me Thy peculiar care,
Some heavenly Mansions me prepare.

Give me a place at th’ Saints feet,
Or some fallen Angell’s vacant seat,
I’ll strive to sing as loud as they,
Who sit above in brighter day.

O may I always be prepared,
With my Lamp burning in my hand,
May I in sight of Heav’n enjoy;
When o’er I hear the Bridegroom’s voice.

Glory to Thee in height array’d,
Who light thy dwelling place hast made,
An immense Ocean of bright beams,
From thy All-glorious Godhead streams.

The Sun, in its Meridian height,
Is very darkness in thy sight;
My Soul, O lighten, and inflame,
With Thought and Love of thy great Name.

Blest Jesu, Thou on Heav’n’s intant,
Whole nights hast in Devotion spent,
But I, frail Creature, soon am tird,
And all my zeal is soon expir’d.

My Soul, how canst thou weary grow,
Of anointing Heav’n below,
In sacred Hymns, and Divine Love,
Which will eternal be above?

Shine on me Lord, new life impart,
Fresh anchors kindle in my heart;
One ray of thy All-quickening Light,
Disparts the sloth and clouds of night.

Lord, lest the Tempter me surprise,
Watch over thine own Sacrifice,
All base, all idle thoughts cast out,
And make my very dreams devout.

Praise God from whom all blessings flow,
Praise him all Creatures here below;

KEN, THOMAS

These are my drowsy days in vain
I do not wake to sleep again;
I wake that hour, when I shall never.
Sleep again, but wake for ever!

This is the dormant I take to bedward other than this to make me sleep, which I view mine eyes in security, content to leave of the sun and sleep unto the resurrection.

The poet James Montgomery drew attention to the striking similarity of thought and mode of expression between this hymn and the Evening Hymn by Ken. In his Select Christian Authors, 1827. This has also been pointed out by Montgomery in very few but to say that Ken deliberately stole Brown's work is to me with all acquaintance with facts and profound thinkers would venture to affirm.

The following is from sleep awake.

Awake my soul, awake mine eyes!
Awake my drowsy faculties;
Awake and see the new-born light
Springing from the darkness numb of night.

Look up and see the unclouded sun
Already has his race begun;
The very lark is soaring high,
And sings her matins in the sky.

Ari these soul, and thine, my soul;
In songs of praise early rise.
O great Creator, Heavenly King!
Thy praise let me ever sing.

Thy power has made me, Thy goodness kept
This fearless body while I sleep,
Yet one more have I been given
From all the powers of darkness free;
O keep my soul from sin secure,
My life unblamable and pure.

That when the last of all my days is come
Cheerful and fearless I may wait my doom.

Brooke suggests that this is the origin of Ken's Morning
Hymn. It is impossible to say that Ken never saw Platonian hymns, but certainly if he had any little of it, the subject is the same, and a significant expression of that thought the thought are essentially different.

Kennedy, Benjamin Hall, D.D., b. of the Rev. Rann Kennedy, sometime incumbent of St. Paul's, Birmingham, and editor of A Church of England Psalm-Book, &c., 1821 (12th ed. 1848), was b. at Summer Hill, near Birmingham, Nov. 6, 1804, and educated at King Edward's School, Birmingham; Shrewsbury School; and St. John's College, Cambridge. He graduated B.A. in 1827 (First Class Classical Tripos and First Chancellor's Gold Medalist). He was Fellow of his College 1828-36; Head Master of Shrewsbury School, 1836-66; and Regius Professor of Greek in the University of Cambridge and Canon of Ely, 1857. Dr. Kennedy took Holy Orders in 1832, and was for some time Prebendary in Lichfield Cathedral and Rector of West Felton, Salop. He was elected Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, in 1880. Besides his Public School Latin Grammar, Paraphrase Latin, and Latin Grammar selected and arranged in the Order of the Christian Seasons (quoted in this Dictionary as Kennedy, 1863).

at Eschenberg. He was then, in 1627, appointed Pastor at Ballstädt, d. there six days after his settlement. (Brückner’s Kirchen und Schulenstaat des Herzogthums Gotha, 1753, ii. pt. xii. p. 13; iii., pt. vii. p. 12, &c.) In 1721 some 60 of his hymns were extant in MS. The only one tr. into English is Herr Gott, nun schéue den Kimmel auf. For the Praying. In J. M. Altingen's Kirchenreisen, and Haupts- tings, Erfurt, 1629, No. 6, in 3 st., entitled "On the Festival of the Purification of Mary:" and in the Par. L. S., 1851, No. 513, as "Lord God, we lift our eyes," by Miss Winship, 1858, p. 215.

Killinghall, John. The date of his birth is unknown. He was admitted pastor of a congregation at Beccles, Suffolk, Oct. 13, 1697. Through some indiscretion of conduct he retired from the ministry for a time. Subsequently, about 1702, he became the pastor of the Congregational Church, Southwark, then meeting in Deadman's Place (the Church of the Pilgrim Fathers). He d. Jan. 1740. His memoir is included in the Brief Records of the Independent Church at Beccles, 1836, by S. W. Rix. (Miller's Singers & Songs, 1869, p. 156.) His hymn:

In all my troubles, sharp and long (Joy in Affliction) appeared in the Life of Faith, reprinted and recommended in a letter found in the Study of the Rev. Joseph Beischer, late of Dedham, in New England, since his Inauguration. An Answer to this question, "How to Live in this World to Do Harm to Heaven?" which is added a few Verses by the late Rev. Killinghall, upon reading the Life. It is in 3 st. of 4 l., and is found in modern hymn-books in the following forms:—(1) "In all my troubles, sharp and strong," in Roed's H. Bk., 1842, and others; (2) "In every trouble, sharp and strong," in several collections, including the Enhanced London H. Bk., 1873, &c.; and (3) "In every trying hour," in several American books, as Songs for the Sanctuary, N. Y., 1866, &c. In several of the older collections this hymn is attributed to "Oudemans,"—why we know not.

Kimbalt, Harriet McEwan, a native and resident of Portsmouth, Newhaven, is the author of Hymns, Boston, 1866; Swallows Flight's of Song, 1874, &c. Her hymns include:

1. At times on Tabor's height. Faith and Joy.
2. Dear Lord, to Thee alone. Lent.
3. It is an easy thing to say. Humble Service.
4. We have no tears Thee wilt not dry. Affliction. Appeared in the Poets of Portsmouth, 1864, and the Unitarian Hymns of the Spirit, 1864, and others. In Miss Kimball's Hymns, 1866, this hymn begins with st. iii. of "Jesus the Ladder of my faith."

Several of Miss Kimball's poems were included in Bayne's Illustrated Book of Sacred Poetry, &c.

Klopfstock ranks among the classic poets of Germany. In his Dichterliebe (published at Weimar, 1772), he is seen at his best, his earlier compositions of this class being the finest modern examples for perfection of form, lyric grace, majesty, and purity of rhythm. His most famous work is his Messias, which, on its first performance, created an enthusiasm such as had not been awakened by any German work for centuries. It was suggested by Mozart's *Vorlacht Lass, but Milten's calm majesty, firmness of touch, and unity of action were all foreign to Klopfstock's nature—his genius was lyric rather than epic. With all its defects of style and construction, it is still a noble work, and could only have been written by a true poet and a sincere Christian; though to its interest perhaps consists as much in its historical importance and results as in its intrinsic merits. (Books 1-3 written in prose at Jena, and then in hexameter verse at Leipzig, and pub. in the Neue Bauhinger, 1745-46. Books 4-6 added at Halle, 1151; 6-10 added in the Copenhagen ed., 1758; 11-16, Copenhagen, 1764; 16-20, Halle, 1783. Finally revised ed. in 4 vols., Leipzig, 1800.)

In his hymns Klopfstock is not seen at his best. He seems to have had little appreciation of the requirements which the writer of hymns for use in public worship has to meet. His hymns are emotional and subjective, little suited to congregational tunes, and not sufficiently simple or staid in style. In his first collection (1) Geistliche Lieder, Copenhagen, 1758, he included a number of indifferent recasts of earlier German hymns; his second collection (2) Geistliche Lieder, Copenhagen, 1764, consists entirely of original compositions. The only one of his hymns which is still much used in Germany is "Aufersteh'n, ja aufersteh'n, wirst du" (q.v.). The others which have passed into English C. U. are:

iii. Nicht nur streiten, sondern verwinden. Christian Warfare. 1st pub. in the *G. ix. Um Eden wandeln Mensch. In his Dichter, vol. II, 1768, written in 1769, and entitled "Psalm 30, 55 times, embodying and amplifying Song at his own funeral." Tr. as "their planets roll," by J. Sheppard, "Round their planets roll the moon's world's" (p. 308).

(x) Wenn ich einen von Jesum sehne. 1769, p. 57, in 5 st. In the Wurttemberg No. 562. The tr. are, (1) "When I" by W. Nind, in his Odes of Klopfstock (2) "When I wake from that silent" by Miss W. M. "in places..."

Besides the above consider Klopfstock's Oden are tr. by his Foreign Sacred Lyric, 1837 from the Oden with stock from 1747 to 1780. Text German by William Nind, London, 1848.

Knack, Gustav Friedr. a. of Christian F. L. Knack, sarius at Berlin, was b. at Saalfeld, 1868. He matriculated a theology at the University of 1828. In the autumn of 1 st in a private school at Halle, near Berlin, where fully for the sick and dying of year 1831. He returned to 1832, and served as one of the well-known Geistlicher Lieder in this Dictionary as the to which he contributed a full and for which he wrote the 11, 1832. In the autumn ordained pastor of Weinsburg, in Pomerania; and in was appointed Guassner's assistant of the Lutheran-Chemische Kirche in Berlin, visit to a married daughter Stolpmünde, he was taken d. there July 27, 1877; then moved to Berlin and laid to yard belonging to his house p. 266: *Allg. Deutsche Hymn..."
This was in 1860, when the Black Forest and the Eifel were still the heartland of German Romanticism. The songs of Propst, Schiller, and Brentano (among others) were sung throughout the Rhineland. The advent of the Romantic movement brought a new spirit of individualism and emotion to the expression of religion. This was reflected in the music of the times, with its emphasis on expressive harmony and melody. The songs of the time were often characterized by their simplicity and directness, as well as their emotional intensity. The conclusion of this favorite hymn, "O for a thousand tongues," is particularly moving. It expresses the desire for divine praise and the hope that one day all will sing of God's glory. The song was composed by John Hubert, and was intended to be sung at the inauguration of a new cathedral in Cologne. It was first performed in 1821, and has since become a favorite of Christians everywhere.

Komm heiliger Geist, Herre M. Luther. [Wackerwald.] Wackerwald, 11 p. 748, gr. as No. 985; a double form from two pts. of st. of the 15th cent., at Munich, 1499, No. 987 is from the Basel Pernsteiner, 1514; and as No. 988 is from the successor, Ingolstadt, 1570. This stanza is in an antiphon, not earlier than the 17th cent., which reads "Veni Sancte Spiritus: tuum coram fideli, et tuos amaras igniem accendens: qui pellet diversitatem linguam et gentem genetrix in multitudinem congregantium." Alleluia. Alleluia." (see Daniel, ii. 36-37.)

Bunseker, i. p. 643, 644, says the Latin stanza is an antiphon sung in many discourses in Germany on Sundays before High Mass, and cites the German in the Cradle-hymn of 1569. Martin Luther adapted this old German stanza with alterations, and a double form from 3 st., of st., with "Alleluias," is in ed. of Wackerwald, 11 p. 11, in Schick's Luther's Gospel Lieder, 1584, p. 26, and the First Lieder, 1591, No. 174. The hymn soon became popular in Germany, and says it was sung by the German people at the battle of Frankenhausen, May 25, 1525, and on the 26th, was sung in the church at Passau, Aug. 16, 1527, and thence into England, into the last pulpit utterance of Dillihorn, in March, 1639. Tr. as —

G. Tersteegen. [Christian Pilgrimage.] 1st pub. in the 3rd ed., 1788, of his Geistliche Blumenegleichen, Bk. 11, No. 62, in 19 of 8 l., entitled "Hymn of Encouragement for Pilgrims," Repeated in full in the Eur. L. S., 1851, No. 322; and, abridged, in many other German collections. Illustrating this hymn, Lauxmann, in Koek, viii. 364, says that Tersteegen "once said to some of his friends, who visited him on his birthday: My friends, if I should die to-morrow, I should only have three words to say to you as a last farewell. 1. Place your whole confidence on the grace of God in Christ Jesus. 2. Love one another. 3. Watch and pray." This is the quintessence of this noble travelling song for Christian pilgrims and strangers here below (1 St. Peter iii. 12, 13), whose course is a march through the Desert to Canaan. The whole life of Tersteegen is proof of the genuineness and sincerity of the spirit that breathes throughout this hymn.

Krummacher is best known as a preacher; and as the author of the well-known Parable, first pub. 1840, which passed through many eds., and ranks as the standard German work of its class. His hymns are little suited for church use, being often alliterative and high-flown, and not for the most part sufficiently simple and direct, though in some cases he does write in a popular, natural style, and with a beauty of his own. His hymns mostly appeared in his Festbuechlein, a work consisting of alliterative narratives, conversations, &c., with interspersed hymns. Of this the 1st part, entitled über Demogogie, was pub. in 1840, 2nd ed. 1842, 3rd ed. 1844; 4th ed. 1845; pt. II., entitled Das Christlichen, in 1840 (2nd ed. 1844, 3rd ed. 1847); and pt. III., entitled Das Neujahrscfand, in 1848.

Those of Krummacher’s hymns tr. into English are:—

1. Allgemeine aus Dämmerung und Nacht. Adv. In his Festbuechlein, pt. I., 1840 (1841, p. 154), in 5 st. of 4 l., entitled “The Prophets of Nature”; and given after the conversation on Zacharias, the father of St. John the Baptist. Included as No. 34 in J. P. Lange’s Deutsches Kirchenliederbuch, Zürich, 1843. The unity of idea is violated by the concluding lines of st. v.

“Wie die heiml. Loge dem Propheten/ Erst auf Herodes’ Feierrepsis umgewandelt.”

And thus in his preface, p. vii., Dr. Lange suggests that st. v. should read thus:—

“Alpenschlaf und siegreich fort und fort/Bringt durch unser Fleisch das ew’ge Wort;
Die Propheten geraten in durch Geschicht.
Dann wird’s Nebenz und Armundliche Geschichte.”

2. As now the sun’s declining rays. By J. Chandler, in his Hym. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 9. It was then incorporated in several hymn-books as an afternoon hymn, and gradually grew in favour until few modern hymn-books of the first rank are found without it. Usually the text is given without alteration as in the People’s H., 1867. The text of H. A. & M., 1861 and 1875, is Chandler altered by the Compilers, the changes being in st. i. and the dactyly. This text is repeated in Thring’s Coll., 1882, and others. In Kennedy, 1863, Chandler’s tr. is revised by the Editor.

Laetabundus exultet fidelis chorus; Alleluia. Begom regum. [St. Bernard of Clairvaux. Christmas.] The earliest form known of this Sequence is in a Gradual apparently written in England during the 12th cent. and now in the British Museum (Reg. 2 B. iv. f. 177), and another ms. in the B. M. containing a collection of Sequences, apparently written c. 1199. (Calig. A. iv. f. 50 b). It is in the St. Gall ms., No. 338, at p. 334, in a band of the 13th cent. Among Missals it is found in an early 14th cent. Paris, and a 14th cent. Senlis in the British Museum; in a Sarum, c. 1370; a Hereford, c. 1370; and a York, c. 1390, all now in the Bodleian; in the St. Andrews, the Magdelanar of 1480, and many French and German Missals. It was also used as a hymn in the Sarum Breviary, e.g. in a ms. of the 14th cent. in the British Museum (Reg. 2 A. iv. f. 187 b). The printed text is also in Daniel, ii. p. 61: Kehrlein, No. 13, and others.

Of this poem Dr. Neale says “This Sequence of Hymn 250 is of rare perfection in its kind, and perhaps as widely known as any hymn of the Church" (Med. Hymn. 1861, p. 49). As will be seen by the note above, its use was especially general in England and in France. In the Sarum Missal it was used as the Sequence on the Fourth Day in the octave of the Assumption of the B. V. M.; and in the Sarum Breviary as a hymn at the second Vespers of the Purgation and also of the Assumption of the B. V. M. In the Hereford Missal it is appointed for use within the octave of the Epiphany; and in the York Missal in the Mass at Baptism on Christmas Day. [J. M.]

In 1691 he was appointed judge in the Court of Danzig, and in 1694 a senator. At Danzig, Aug. 29, 1727 (Deutsche Biog., vii. 623, &c.), he died.

Lange's hymns which have passed into English are:

1. In the Abend blüht der Morgenstern. Epiphany, 1711, as above, p. 4, in 19 st. of 4 l., entitled "The Saviour Who appeared at Bethlehem to the Wise men from the East, set forth from Matt. ii. 1-12." A new st. was added a little later (probably from his hand), when the hymn included by Freylinghausen, 1714, No. 598, was repeated, abridged, in Knapp's Ec. L. S., 1846, No. 435 (1865, No. 414). in 10 st. of 14 l.; repeated in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. F. Schleiermacher called it "A masterpiece of sacred poetry." The tr. in C. U. is:

O God, Thou bottomless abyss.
A spirited tr., omitting st. vi., ix., in 8 st. of 12 l. by J. Wesley, in his Coll. of Ps. & Hymns, Charlestown, 1737, No. 18, and the Wesley Hymns and Sacred Ps.-ems, 1739 (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 143). The lines:

"Thy heavenly wrath doth slowly move, Thy willing mercy flies at once."

are adapted from the New Version of Ps. ciii. 8.

The hymn was passed into the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, in two parts, Nos. 231 and 232 (ed. 1875, Nos. 240, 241). In other hymn-books it has appeared in a variety of centos. In this form it is in the text of the Wes. H. Bk., more or less altered and transposed, it will suffice to give their first lines with references to the text of 1780. These centos include:

1. While Thee, Unsearchable, I set (I., 19 alt.).

Martinus's Hymns, 1740.

2. Unchangeable, all-perfect Lord (I., 9 alt.).

Longfellow & Johnson's Bk. of Hymns, Boston, U.S., 1848.

3. Thy parent-hand, Thy forming skill (III).

Amer. Meth. Epis. South Carol., 1847.

These details show the extensive use of this hymn in English-speaking countries.

Another tr. is: "O God, Thou bottomless Abyss. How shall I competently know Thee," as No. 453 in p. 1 of the Moravian H. Bk., 1794. In the ed. 1838, No. 174, it begins, "O God, Thou fathomless abyss."

[New Year.] In the Sienea Breviary, 1713, and 1834, this is the hymn at compline after the first vesper of the festival of the Circumcision of Our Lord. This would of course be said as the last office on Dec. 31. There is a rubric directing that at Mass v. all kneel down. So also in the Poetiens Breviary (Pietarien), in which it probably originated. Neale, in his Hymen Ecclesiæ, 1851, p. 162, gives the text sexta Breviario Melitensi, i. e. the Sienea Breviary. It is also in the Le Mans Brevi. of 1718. Daniel, iv. 319, repeats the text from Neale. Also in L. C. Biggs's annotated H. A. & M., 1867.

M. in his Hym.合作共赢的Order of Common Prayer, 1801, No. 48, in 6 st. of 4 l., and was repeated, unaltered, in the People's H., 1867, and others; and abbreviated and altered, in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871. In 1861 the compilers of H. A. & M. transposed Archdeacon Pott's L. M. tr. into c. m., thus necessitating many alterations. This text has been adopted by several hymnals, including Kennedy, 1885, Almon's Cong. Psal. Hymnal, 1886, and others. In these forms this tr. is extensively used.

Lasset Klag und Trauern fahren. J. Hermann. [Eternal Life.] This hymn is not found in any of the works of Hermann now extant. It appeared, with his name, in the Köninger H. G., 1636, p. 702, in 9 st. of 8 l. Then in Mütziew, 1838, No. 136. In Bünnes's Allg. G. B., 1846, No. 422, is st. 1, II. 1-4, II. 5-8, IV. 7. vi., vii. ix. The ascription to Hermann may have arisen from confounding with his "Lasset ab, ihr meine Lieben," 1st pub. in his Devoti musica corde, Leipzig, 1636 (1644, p. 185), then in Mütziew, 1838, No. 98, in 12 st. of 8 l. The Lasset Klag has been called a version of "Sic morsa quisque querela," but has greater resemblance to "Ad perpetuam viam Fontem." Tr. as:

Hymns of the Early Church.

"We find testimony of the Younger Pliny (2nd cent., under Trajan, that the Christians in the day, and to sing a hymn to Christ meet before as God by turns one after another: " and to the same effect is Tertullian (Apolog. 2.), and Epiphanius (Hist. Chir., i. 10, writing in the beginning of the third century against the Montanists, speaks of "psalms and odes: such as were from the beginning written by the faithful, hymns to the Chrest, the God, calling Him God." (Routh, Sacer., ii. 127.) So that very early the Jewish and Gentile Christian and not mere hymns must have been composed, which publicly sung in the congregations, and which were composed by the words used in Psalms and hymns were conducted by the means of several Psalms or Canticles. Lib. iv. c. 3; Socrates, Lib. v. Philo, in his "Vita Contemplativa," describes how the Ascetics in Egypt, then and his time (circa A.D. 40 to 68), "the hymns in various metres and rhythms in honour of the true God, in the trimeter; others newly composed.

Psalms usually begin, and the choirs follow in various modulations, with a chorus of all the two choirs of men and women, each its leader, but all equally joining at the end. The Christians of St. Mark there possibly followed this example. Eusebius (Lib. ii. c. 17, Histor.), quoting Philo, speaks of Therapeutes: "Not only do they sing the hymns, but they make new ones, assigning God, modulating them in metre and in a very excellent and sweet composition, which is also practiced in the Church and monasteries; and he subsequently adds: (Lib. v. c. 26) as "Canterbury," wherein "a primeris or cantilabrum, Edi, Odes, of Hymns, the Psalms, in his issue, 1. 82, has done this. So confounds the Psalms of David composed by spiritual men, St. Paul and his companions, distinguishes between the divine praises, "Speaking one of the Psalms and hymns and spiritual praises (i.e. Odes or Canticula). And this accordance with that made by Hippolytus. (De Cons. sub fin.-Routh, Reliquiae, iii. 314.) "I have prepared, giving glory and praise, and What then, were these from the other two species of hymns?

iv. Influence of Greek Hymns.

That these Hymns to Christ, whether trial or non-trivial, had their origin in the East, and thence travelled to the West, u evident historically. Eunapius (Lib. v. 28) speaks of the "Cantica frrorum a primordio a tidelibus conscripta"; so also Tertullian. So Sosipater (Lib. vi. c. 25) speaks of the "Sacros hymnos qui in ecclesia cani volent."
St. Chrysostom speaks of the hymns after the psalms in divine service; and the tradition related by Socrates is that Ignatius (who first came to Antioch A.D. 98) had learnt in a vision of angels "how in antiphonal hymns to hymn
the Holy Trinity"; to whom may be added Hieronymus, greatly commended by Dinnius and Nothius (see Gerbert, l. 75); Hippolytus and others of the second century. The rise and growth of Greek hymns, and the use made of the earliest by Latin writers on a later date, are fully set forth in the articles on Greek Hymnody, p. 486, 1.; Doxologies, p. 308, 1.;
Oraia in Excelsa, p. 505, 1., and the *Te Deum.
See also Syria Hymnody. If any proofs were wanting that Latin Hymnody originated in,
and was derived from, the East, it may be found in these articles; for, with a few exceptions, there are daily hymns for the Hours, and for the Festivals, Easter, and Seasons in each case; and the Apostles and Saints are celebrated by hymns in a similar manner and on the same occasions. Nor are the Spanish and Mozarabic Christians any exception, who originally received their hymnody partly from Rome and the East, partly from the Greek-speaking Christians of Africa. The very ancient Irish Latin Hymn of the Apostles, beginning Precamur Patrem (from the Anti-phonarium Beneventense—Bangor in the county of Down; and reprinted by Daniel, vol. iv.
p. 31), bears evident marks of a translation from an Eastern original. These early hymns soon made their way with Christianity itself, from the East to Rome, Africa, Spain, and all other parts of the Roman Empire; except, perhaps, Northern Gaul, where, as St. Jerome complains in his preface to the Second Book of his Commentary on the Galatians, hymns were unacceptable. They were very soon introduced into public worship, but were not originally sung in the Latin tongue; for, in the first Christian times, Greek, or dialects of it, continued to be spoken in Italy, the South of Gaul, Germany, and Africa; and even Latin had not yet come into common use;
nor was it possible to compress into classical measures the fervid devotion of the earlier converts.

v. Earliest Latin Hymns.

Gerbert (De Canto et Musica Sacra, vol. i., p. 80, pub. 1771), after examining all the authorities, finds that no name can be con-ected with any hymn in the Latin language till we arrive at St. Hilary and Pope Damasus, in the beginning of the 5th century. Isidore of Seville, who d. 636 (De Officiis, Lib. i., c. 6) says: "Hilary of Gaul, Bishop of Poitiers, was the first who flourished in composing hymns in verse," and St. Jerome, who d. 420, makes a similar statement. It would appear, from Hilary's own words, that he brought some from the East (Ps. cxviii., 114). Those beginning Lucis largior splendide; the Lenten hymn, Iam quaeram veni dem Ilucis, and In manus tuae ingenti, In matutinis surgimus, et jam meta neces transit, in the Mozarabic Hymn for Vespers in the Epiphany, *A.
D. 399*; another for Compline
Pentecost, Busta nobis quidem,
ascribed to Hilary by Fabretta Tommasi, and Daniel. To Hilary ascribed by the Antiphonarium [see Hymnarium] the noble mat praise of Christ, Hymnus de Christo; hymnum cessantem personae, in 8 measures, which is by Bede decus sacrati nomini, the other 2
short Latin hymns, one for
Decus sacrati nomini, the other
Malgratana.
The latter is the earliest hymn
Saint: it is in rhyme, and the Latin metre are ignored.

vi. St. Ambrose and Ambrosi

We arrive in succession at of St. Ambrose (b. at Trier, the main founder of the or dignified, objective school of Hymnody, which for so many without intermixture, prevails over the Roman Empire, and before it penetrated even into Spain.

St. Ambrose took care that, of the Eastern Fathers, psalms should be sung by the people previously they had only been sung at monasteries, and among the clerks only." St. Augustinian, Ambrose at Milan, says, "The psalms are sung after the master's lead, lest the people be we imitated by almost all the others in the world."

to Prudentius, but in error, and not found in his works, is:

This is in the Monumenta Hymnica, 1502. It may be observed, moreover, that in his sacred poetry Prudentius has made use of the Iambic trimetre and dimeter, the hendecasyllable, Alcaic, and Sapphic metres, the Trochaic tetrameter, Glycinean, and others.

To omit mention of Paulinus of Nola, Cecilia Sedulius comes in as a Christian lyrist in the first half of the 5th century, under Honorius and Theodosius II. Whether he was a layman or ecclesiastic is unknown: probably he was a Presbyter. He is said to have been a Greek, and again an Italian; and then again (confounding him with another Sedulius) an Irishman. He composed a hymn in acrostics (i.e. each verse beginning with consecutive letters of the alphabet), which is the beginning of his poem in Iambic dimeters on the Life of Christ: A solis ortus cardine, a part of which is the Epiphany hymn, Hostis Herodes impie. These were universally adopted into all Hymnaries. St. Magnus Felix Emodius (born in France 473, died 521), composed one or two excellent hymns; and Epiphanie, [See Epiphanie p. 511, 1.], that beginning Aurea luce et decore roseo, for the Festival of St. Peter and St. Paul.

Next, in order of time, we arrive at one of the noblest and most pleasing of the Christian lyrists, Venantius Honorius Clementianus Fortunatus (See p. 568, 4.). The time of his birth is unknown, but he himself tells us that he was born at a village called Duplabilis between Trevixo and Consula in Venetia. He was educated at Ravenna in grammar, rhetoric, and Roman law. He composed poetry as early as A.D. 555; he went to Tours to St. Martin's grave in 563, was at the wedding of Sigbert with Brunhilda; Rhadegunda, widow of Clothaire the First, was his friend. There he dwelt and became a priest, and was a friend of Gregory of Tours. In the year 597 he was made Bishop of Poitiers. The date of his death is not known, but it was probably about 609. He composed prose works, but his fame rests on his poetry. In the second book of his sacred poems we find the glorious ode, Vexilla Regis prodeunt, Fugit Crux mysterium, for Passiontide. It finds its place in most European Hymnaries, although sometimes (as in the present Roman) in a mutilated form; the penultimate stanza, for instance: is often omitted: but it has no worthy representative in our vernacular church hymn-books except perhaps in the Hymnary. Of equal complexity and fervour is his well-known Passion monody, mostly in trochaics, Pange lingua gloriosi Præsidii certaminis, which has been subjected to similar ignominious treatment in the Roman Br-viary. Then we have the Paschal Processional, in hexameters and pentameters, from his poem on the Resurrection, very universally adopted; the first verse of which, Salsus festa dies fo.to venerabilis aero, was in England generally prefixed to the processionals for the great feasts. The author, 600-650, is unknown.

"Vexilla regis prodeunt, tua sancta spes,\nVide clemens gloria,\nCuncta hominis,\nFragilis triumpho nobilis."

In the Hymnary of Luttrell, one by Cyril, for St. Thyrse and that on the Day of bit repetitis, both praised trochaics; we notice a r

To St. Gregory the Great we owe the best influence of Sundays and festal days, and for the Hours (in Sapphics speedily adopted into most by casual the early English). The morning especially, Primo die, found in all; but neither the Lenten or Passiontide has been in our vernacular choral to any appreciable extent. To appended the inscription of Holy Trinity at the end, which has been attributed to St. A new first, in various forms, to general use.

This list may be closed with the triumphant Urbe beata Jerusalem, a splendid psalm of the Apocalypse xxii., 19-21, appropriate to the dedication of a Church and the recitation, and sung throughout Europe, probably from the 8th century.

Anglo-Saxons used also Christus omnium dominator alicue of the 7th century, in many French hymns. The Gallican Breviary, and by Goelet and the other Gallican, was so-called restorers of Latin hymnody, but its main features have always been conserved. The Archbishop of Trier writes (Sacred Latin, p. 116): "This poem attests its own true origin in that it has proved the source of inspiration in circles beyond its own." It is in English and German. The fine hymn for the restoration of a church, O beatissima Jerusalem, is apparently an early Spanish hymn.

ix. Hymns of the XI. and XII. Centuries.

The period of the 11th and 12th centuries constitutes a marked epoch in the history of Latin Hymnody. By that time the primary usage of hymns in the various forms of the Western Church in different countries, dioceses, and religious communities, in their daily, weekly, and annual services and in the liturgy, had become fixed and settled, the Benedictines, as already intimated, settling the example; for, although Ambrosian hymns, it is not certain that the liturgical Offices of the Church. These have been considered the staple of the sacred song of the Missals, Breviaries, and other Offices of this date: such being from time to time added in each Country, Church, Diocese, or Conventional society as celebrated the founders and patrons of each, with peculiar solemnities, or in the prescribed responses in prose or verse, or after a time into poetry. Of this, the Spanish hymns are notable examples. By this time, however, with a few striking exceptions, the Clergy and Monks had become the principal poets. The comparative seclusiveness of the former, and the separation of the latter from all worldly affairs, exercised a marked influence on composition. They increased greatly in number; they became more specialized, subjective, devout and mystical, and were no longer confined to the direct worship and praise of the Creator, of Christ, Holy Ghost, to the honour of the Virgin, and of the Apostles and certain distribution of the accent and quantity of the syllable. Bede De Arte Metrica, says, "Rhythm formed composition of words, or arrangement (compositions), but a number of syllables according to the rule; or, as Ethelb. Bonifacii Epist. ix, Manessey elaborated by the measuring of eight syllables in the verse, fifteen under one and ten in equal paths of lines," ad before written that he had vyrms for a number of kinds; poetic measure of a dactylic hexameter rule, and adjusted into lines of one and half verse, fifteen under one and ten in equal paths of lines. The first verse of the hemistich of the Septemterarius was doubled, and correspondingly the

Thus was initiated the celebrated strophe of four, then of six, verses which were harmonious, and easy, and admitted of a number of syllables. The eight syllables might be tripled and quadrupled; and as many syllables added to each line as might be the case. To this measure the music was adapted. The tradition of the Prose of Sequences was that, differently from hymns, the melody should be varied from one end to the other, but that in them there be the same musical phrase for lines; the same number of syllables. The verse was varied throughout, but each musical period was chanted twice, or oftener, as need be. So far might be the case with the Prose of Notker. There was, however, one more wanted, and that was a verse by to have an invariable number of syllables, for a clausula or period, both for the words and for the music. Yet this verse had to be developed so that the musical phrase might be prolonged when required, these phrases might be, and always were, of unequal length. Another verse of 15 syllables would not be sufficient for this; hence the first hemistich being doubled, the neculatia was interposed, which thus admitted the enlargement of the melody required, as the two last verses of each clausula rhymed, Regem cum lactatia, the unity of the strophe was preserved. And thus, at last, sung of St. Victor, on St. Stephen:

"Hic mundus exstitavit, Et exsitans celebravit, Christi natalitia, Heri chorus angelorum, Procesus est colorum Regem cum lactatia."

Practical necessity, then, as much as created these brilliant and popular verses of the 12th and following century, the end of the 13th the mechanism and style were already becoming debased.

xii. Sequences.

In the 10th and 11th centuries a new description of Hymns denominated Proces, by the Germans Tropes or Sequences, were introduced into the celebration of the Mass. The Hymns having been previously usually fixed to the daily public Offices of prayer and praise; and in a general man by any verse or strophe introduced into the Mass for supplementary to, other ecclesiastical chants (Gerbert, de Cantuari, l. 340). According, however, to St. Cyril's life of Cæsarius of Arles (Gerbert, ibid., that Bishop ordained the laity to cling to sing, some in Greek, some in Latin, Proces and Antiphons in the Church of the later on, Proces came to mean kind of style of that composition: Sequences. Its place in the Service. In consequence of the destruction of Jumieges by the Normans in 851, some of its monks took refuge at St. Cind, bringing with them their Gregorian nary. Therein the Gradual (the anthem preceding the Gospel) in all Festal days and Seasons ended with a long Alleluia, being a musical jubilation on a certain number of notes, called Neumes, without words, on the final A; also called the Sequences as following thence. These Neumes (which were very difficult to remember) owed their origin to two chanteri sent by Pope Adrian to Charlemagne; Peter, who opened a school at Metz, and Romanus, who, having been detained by illness at St. Gall, commenced a school of music there also. In this monastery of St. Gall was domiciled a young religious named Notker (called Balbulus from his stammer), of refined musical taste. He was delighted to find that the Jumieges book had alluded to these Neumes certain words corresponding to their number, a contrivance which enabled him to remember the cadences of these Neumes much more easily; especially as new ones were constantly being introduced. Under the advice of his master Yon, he forthwith set himself to compose some new words for these musical Sequences at the different Festivals of the year, and began with that for Eastertide—

"Laudes bos concintat orbis utique totus"
(see Daniel, x. 62), wherein every note of the melody should have an accompanying word. After other lessons as to the melody and words from his master, he composed another in like form for the Dedication of a Church—

"Pallat Ecclesia mater illibata"
(see Daniel, xi. 23; MT, 1. 323; Noale's Sequences, 247); and others followed.

In general these early Notkerian Proses (with a few conspicuous exceptions), were not rhymed or with assonances, except accidentally; hence the peculiar appellation. That the Nativity, Eia recolamus (for the Circumcision in the Sarum Missal); for the Holy Innocents, Laos tibi Christe; that for the same day in the Sarum Missal, Ceteri quiem conserpit; the Veni Sancte Spiritus Et emitte, attributed to Robert King of France; a grand anonymous prose on the Holy Trinity—

"Benedicta sit beata Triasitas," retained in the Sarum Missal for Trinity Sunday; the well-known Alleluia Prose for Septuagesima, Cantemus canemus; another for Christmas, Natio canunt canunt; and St. Bernard's Lactateus, are amongst the exceptions and are all either rhymed or assonant. This non-rhyming gave rise to the idea (partly adopted even by MT, 3. 49) that they were vague, incoherent compositions, without determinate metre or melodies. Such was not the case. Dr. Neale (Daniel, v. 1) and the Abbe Gautier (Preface cxviii.) have given a series of canons by which the notation of them was grulated, the main principle of which was that each of the clauses or lines of the Prose should be nearly of similar length, and every syllable be closely accommodated to the musical notes of the jubilant Neumes to which they were set. If, then, the individual clause was double or treble, or more, the same musical phrase would be repeated, twice or thrice, &c. If somewhat longer, it would be lengthened out; if shorter contracted, till another phrase was arrived at. The Prose at last often consisted of a series of clauses, two the same plan, although the introductory verses had a special

We are now arrived at the end of the 12th century, and to a Victor; to the second period of rhymed metrical Sequences, and change which, increasing in beauty and power, held on the mind of the Church Europe for centuries. Northern it observed, for it must be not Spain nor Italy nor France, seem ever to have well. About the year 1155 may be a new epoch in the history (hereafter to be called Sequences) of St. Victor at Paris, founded by Louis VI. Therein resided a sacred poet and musician named compositions were destined to improvement (even a revolution song). The learned Jose Clément 1554, in the fourth and last dotorium Ecclesiasticum (who, however, particularly happy in the ex which seems to have been written after the removal of the cathedral to its present site. MS. Troparium, formerly belonging to Christ Church, Dublin, of the latter half of the 15th century, is in the University Library, Cambridge. It contains a series of these Sarum Sequences with the musical notation of the period attached to each.

The number of these compositions, increased almost indefinitely during the 13th and 14th centuries in every country, is one of the best manners of Adam, and fully exemplifies his style, to which may be added the imitation, Henrici Sacroii Cantorum.

"Praise of the Cross," by St. Bonaventura, contemporary, Recurvare Sanctae Crucis, is excellently done. Especially to be noted is the Sequence Deus sit laus, laus illa, for All Souls. This last is almost the only Sequence which Italy has produced, and, says Daniel (ii. ii. 112), "Omnium consentio sacros aures summae devotionis ex seculum aetatis sui per medium praebitionum." The inimitable Stabat Mater, Mysteriium, Monday of Jacobus de Benedictis (as it seems), on the Seven Dolours or Of Compassion of the Blessed Virgin, in the style of Adam, and probably composed in 1225, has been accepted by the whole Latin Church. In the unformed note Antiphonary this is placed as a Prose in the Passion, with the original simple and mournful melody which Rossetti adopted and enlarged. A noble Sequence for the Epiphany, Prompto genere animo, not found in the books, is in that Antiphonary.

By the beginning of the 14th century the composition of Proses and Sequences, that of Latin sacred poems in general, was regarded as having culminated. These were of course indefinitely in number, but not in excellence, and sometimes became, in the North, almost incunabula to the Divine Office. Many on various subjects were even composed in translated into the vulgar tongue, and sung by the people, often to secular tunes, on every possible occasion. There was almost a sense of relief in the Western Church when, in the 16th century, Pope V. and the Council of Trent reduced those to be used as part of the Missa to four, the Veni, Sancte Spiritus; Laudes Salvatorum, and the Ipsa quae, to which was added the Stabat Mater in 1727. Fuller details concerning Sequences, together with the first lines of more than seven hundred, and an account of over thirty missals and printed service books in which they are found, are given in the special article on Sequences.

xmb. The XIV. and XV. Centuries.

At the beginning of the 14th century the golden age of Latin hymnody may be said to have expired, and its sun to have gone down.
in glory. Among the latest gems were the Hymns and Sequences of St. Thomas of Aquino, the Dominican, renowned as one of the few Italian sacred poets. His hymns include the Adoro te devotionem; Pange lingua gloriosi Corporis; Laudate Sion; Sacris Sollemniis, and the Verbum supernum, all of which have been in extensive use either in their original or their translated forms from his day to the present time. Other fine hymns before the end of the 14th century are: Speratus Christus hostis, and Ecce tempus est eum salutari, both for Easter; and the O beata beatorum, for Martyrs. The grand and pathetic Salve Mater dolorosa, Juva crucem, although often associated with this period, is of a later date. It is found in the Paris Missal, 1481, and the Belgica Missal, 1483. [See Sequences.]

The sacred lyrical Latin poetry subsequent to the 13th century, of which there is an extraordinary quantity in every possible variety of metre, may be divided into four classes:

1. Hymns to God and the several Persons of the Holy Trinity.
2. For Festivals and Seasons, and to the Cross.
3. Of Saints and Angels.
4. Of the Blessed Virgin.

Of all these the authors are for the most part unknown. As to the first head, it would seem as if former Christian poets had exhausted these great subjects, and the praises became febler and less original. The old Hymns and Sequences keep their places, and to them are subjoined many variations and additions peculiar to each Country, Diocese, Church, and Conventual Order; but the new hymnody attains not to the grandeur and excellence of the more ancient. This may easily be verified in the volumes of Mone. The former spirit of Christian poetry, however, still partially survived, although the style is inferior and different. There are several hymns to the Holy Trinity of the 14th and 15th centuries, especially in Germany — Deus amor, paz, veritas; Summa Pater sancte Deus; Trinitatis altissimae, &c., most of them condensations or expansions of the Nicene and Athanasian Creeds. We find too "Hours of the Holy Trinity." The three Hymns and Sequences for the Transfiguration in the English Officebooks are fine. They begin Caelis formam gloriae; O nata rerum, reparator arci; and Omnata lux de lumine. There are rhymed summaries of the Life of Christ, besides such as were in use in the 11th and 12th centuries. There is an excellent rhymed hymn for Advent, with a melody, Veni, Veni, Exs. No.升级: A number of rhymed and assonant or acrostic Songs and Hymns for the Nativity: Dies es tactum: Apparuit benedictus, &c., precursors of Christmas and Epiphany Carols. We find many for the Passion, as Plange Sion Felix; Deus Jesu spec panopilis; Patris Sapientiae; Ad matutinum geminam, and several versions of the Hours of the Passion, mostly in rhyme, a method of devotion which began and spread widely in this age. There is also a devotion of the Holy Cross, Cruce tua, Christe, salve hominem; one for the Exaltation or Invention of the Cross, Salve Crucem sancta, Salve mundi gloria, in lusit acrostics Monoculum; and a Lament for Jesus, for private recitation, in eighty verses, each verse beginning with His Name. There are also "of the Face of Jesus," and salu- several members: Salve ora O; a double-rhymed hymn of the several Graces after Meals. Sac- tional Hymns and Sequences: Pentecost and the Holy Ghost.

of Aquino had many imitators: the Sacrament, in process, in vena- nantiments to the actions of the Holy Sacraments or hymned, such as: Lux indulgentis; O Pater in corde Christi caru; Tu es certe Quod in aera corinatur; Salve baptismus fulcrum; all of whom features of hymnody, were not in the churches, and also us.

There are also "Salutations of life beginning with Ave or Salve of Christ, the Pater of Jesus, Deus ducis Medietamen, with pre- the Goodness and spiritual be Angelorum et habemus, &c.: hy- rals, penitential hymns; many of life; in time of tribula- temp of the World, &c. The greatest change, however, place at this period in Chur- relation to the Blessed Virgin; 14th century several hymns; some of them in the subjective used in the Latin Church, such as: Stella; Cantemus in omni die pustus, scria; O quam gloriosum Domini (Nativity and Salve Regina; Alma Redempto Regina Coelorum, &c. vii, who did his best to accomplish the task with the Spanish Hymnody (Hymnodia Hispanica, 1786) in his Dissertation on Ecclesiastical Hymnus in the same volume, gives a history of all these proceedings, and warmly approves of them; as does Guyot, a Jesuit, in his Hymnodia, Paris, 1657 (Venice, 1729). The outcome was a parti-coloured mixture of doubtful character, in parts of which the old classical metres are again revived. It must, however, be admitted that among the later compositions are many of great beauty, power and devotional fervour, especially those of the brothers Santeuil. Those in the Paris Breviary of 1736 for ordinary Sundays at Matins and Vespers, and in Advent, for Matins at Christmas, and St. Stephen's Day, for the Epiphany, Quae Stelae sole palmarior at First Vespers, and Linguae Christi Magi at Lauds; those for the Five Wounds, Proce vocau, Quae te pro populi; those for Easter, and the Ascension, for Virgin Martyrs, for the Annunciation, are excellent. It is much to be lamented that Isaac Williams (Hymnus et from the Parisian Breviary, 1839), who fully appreciated their beauty, has rendered them for the most part into such crabbed and incomprehensible measures. The Roman hymnody is known to be few, yet the Proce for Christmas, Verum lumen de lumine; for the Epiphany, Prompata gentes anteri (already mentioned); that for the Ascension, Solum quae festivitas (Narbonne Breviary, 1769, and Daniel, ii. 367) are worthy of notice. Besides these there are some fifteen original hymns of much merit.

All these and many more in Germany and elsewhere are now, in fact, swept away, to the infinite regret of the Churchers to which they were appropriated, and the Latin Hymnody of the Western Church has thus been narrowed to the few, and in great part curtailed and formalized, compositions included in the modernized Roman Breviary, and the five Sequences in the Roman Missal. This is a conclusion must be deplored to so glorious a career; and our grief is increased when we find, as is the fact, that the ancient music for the same has undergone a similar transformation and reduction.

xviii. Expositions.

Notice must here be taken of the numerous Expositiones Hymnorum et Sequentiarii, which, commencing even before this epoch, continued to be produced till late in the 17th century. In the Liber Hymnorum of the ancient Irish Church, edited by Dr. Tohill, in the old Irish characters, for the Archaeological and Celtic Society, Dublin, 1835 and 1869, there are elaborate scholia and explanations of all the hymns, some of them in the original Irish language. In the British Museum are two English hymn-books of the 11th century (Jut. A. vi. and Egypt. D. xii.), which are examples of expositions. Both are apparently Benedictine, and the latter is headed:—

"Incepit hievs quod nobiscus atque diximus
Faciant irae et mors nostrae stabiat,
His animus concludat eorumque diem Aestimamus melius cogitans hie modus."

It contains an interlinear paraphrase in ordinary Latin prose of each verse of the hymn, thus:—

"Splendor et immortalitas Deorum
O. Lux beate Trinitatis
Et principalia Unitas:"

And there is also an interlinear paraphrase in Anglo-Saxon A. vi., the hymns themselves length, but only the first few there follows, as in the expansion of the hymn in ordinary Latin between the lines of this version with the translation into Anglo-Saxon:

"O Lux et O beata Trinitas
Et O principalia Unitas
Infunde lumen in nostris
Qua jam recedit igneux Sa.

with the translation into Anglo-Saxon:

"O Lux et O beata Trinitas
Et O principalia Unitas
Infunde lumen in nostris
Qua jam recedit igneux Sa.

These Expositiones became 1 century forward, plentiful on v and as soon as printing they multiplied everywhere.

Mr. Dickinson's catalogue, of twenty-seven editions were prand between 1691 and the 17th century, besides others in many, and France. Copies of the British Museum, Bodleian, Libraries, and elsewhere. The Liber Hymnorum, by Hilarinus, was 1485. It had already been the more ancient hymns, and Sequences of Adam of St. Victor, a profound and various know, of its minutest factu- cal and typical interpretation and martyrdoms of the Apostles; so that it is not wonderful when copies of the Holy Scripture books were rare and chief to the monasteries, where few could understand interpretations of the full massed songs should eagerly be commentaries of Wimpeling, 1492-1501; of Hermannus To 1388; the copious dissertation datorium Ecclesiasticum of Ciles, 1516; Rula, 1517-19, and in the Preface to Daniel's Thesaurus, show the continued receptacles. That the moderns rely easily proved by the Liber Hymnorum of Kohrel (Frankfurt, 1846) notes of Daniel, especially in fifth volumes; the lengthy, Moxe in his three volumes; a Abbe Gantier in his 1st edit 1828.

xii. Music.

With regard to the melodies to which Sequences were sung up to the beginning of the 16th century, the musical notation thereof, the general practice of all the Greek, the system of the Church, which, although originally derived from the music of the Greeks, they factoredly treated of in this.

Both are extensively dicit, Abbot of the Congregation in the Minster, De Gratia et Musica Sacra; melodia Gregoriae of Denney, of the Abbey of Soissons des Leferne & Cie., 1844. It is to be noted that these notes were an ancient and popular, and that, probably considered in all the Hymns of the Church remaining unsaved, without signs, the 6th century throughout.

When Psalms and Sequences were introduced into the Divine Office in the Reform at the manner above stated, either newly composed or others for them. Simultaneously the Benedictine Père Dom Joseph Pothier, of the Abbey of Solesmes, published similar inquiries elsewhere, and in 1880 published at Tournay Les Méthodes Grégoriennes d'après la tradition. Both of them have given plentiful examples of Neumes, and in tables and engravings have shown how they gradually became transformed into the more modern notation. It is not too much to say that they have established the true identity of the Hymnal melodies of the later age with those of the earliest period known.

The manner of chanting these hymns (p. 653, ii), was generally by the people, not by the clergy only, who nevertheless led them, singing one verse and the generation responding with the next verse, all of them last ascription of praise. The cantic Propers or Sequences are chanted in different places. According to the Benedictines (p. 270, Tit Cantora) with their assistant vanced and seated themselves on a desk (Lectirium) wherein the Gospel was to be sung, the clergy in their places. Having their strophe, the strain was a division and people, with organ ad join and so on with each strophe was finished.

Latin, Translations from the large proportion of the translations of Latin hymns into English are found at the pre-arranged time in the various hymnals in use in Public Worship. These hymns are annotated in the works under their respective Latin first line. A great number of recent translations remain, of which no use has been made, although many are of great merit, and insignificantly number are of higher excellence, and are better adapted for congregational use, than many of those now in hymn-books. The object of this article is to gather these translations together in such a manner as will enable the student to find what he needs with comparative ease.

i. In the first column the Author's Name is given, the opening line of each hymn, or portion of a hymn, which has been translated, is given in full.

ii. In the second column the Author's Name, when known, are indicated by Capital Letters, as follows:

m*, In Loeb’s Latin Year, 1873, p. 327.
n*, In Loeb’s Latin Year, 1873, p. 327.

We have also to note that—

1. The three trs. from St. Augustine (Aug.) in the foregoing list are musical paraphrases of portions of his prose works.

2. Those lines which are given thus: “De ascensione Domini,” are not the first lines of Latin hymns, but are Latin titles which preface English hymns in a few works. Those titles are retained in this list as the origin of the hymns prefixed may be clearly defined.

3. Those hymns marked A. V. (f) are noted by M. Lecan Carlier in his 2nd ed. of the Oeuvres Poétiques d’Adam de St. Victor, 1881, as falsely attributed to that author.

In addition to searching this first list for translations, the Index to Latin first lines should also be consulted, as numerous hymns (as known to the general reader) are either taken from longer hymns, or are altered forms of the authors’ texts. The following list of recent collections of Latin Hymns and Sequences, which are not indexed on p. 635, is added here for the convenience of students:—

Lauda Sion Salvatorem. [Holy Communion.] of Aquino. of the four Sequences which are in the revised Roman Missal, 15th edition. It seems to have been in 1269 for the Mass of the feast of Christ. For this festival St. Thos. request of Pope Urban IV., drew the title in the Roman Breviii. probably also that in the Roman form this Sequence is an imitation of Laudes crucis atolemmum” (q. s. of 3 stanzas of 6 lines, follow and then 1 of 10 lines. Among it is found in a French manuscript of the 13th cent. (Aodd. 239935 f. 18th cent. Sens (Add. 30038 f. British Museum: in a Sarum, c. 1356 p. 256); a Hereford, c. 1 c. 1859, and a Roman of the 13th cent. (Litur. LAUDA SION SALVATOREM

3. Praise high the Saviour, Sion, praise.

6. Sion, let thy voice, and sing.
By E. O. In his Lyra Catholica, 1844, p. 236; and in the Hymn and Poems, 1874, p. 124. A literal tr.

Praise, O Sion, praise thy Pastor.
By Beste, in his Church Hymns, 1849, p. 17. Literal tr.

Praise, O Sion, praise thy Pastor. In the 1863 Appendix to the Hymn & Note, No. 3. It is based upon the Wackerbarth's, and Chamber's tr. mostly written. This, slightly altered, is in Hymnals, 1863.

Praise, O Sion, thy Salvation. By J. D. Chamber.
In his Hymnals, 1857, p. 222. Slightly modified.

Praise, O Sion, thy Salvation. A cento in O. Shipley's Divine Liturgy, 1863; again, in different form, in the Alber Manual, by Littledale and Vaux, 1863, and again in the People's H., 1867. This cento is mainly from Dr. Pusey's Wackerbarth's, and Chamber's trs. mostly written. This, slightly altered, is in Hymnals, 1863.

Praise, O Sion, thy Salvation. A cento in the Hymnary, rewritten mainly from Wackerbarth, Chambers, and the People's H. trs., given in two parts, Part ii. being "O, bread which angels feedeth." Another tr. of st. xiii. in 7's metre, is given as Pt. ii., "Earthly pilgrim, joyful see."

Praise, O Sion, praise Him. In the Hymnals, 1863, and again, in two parts, in Lieder Dommis, 1864; Pt. ii. beginning, "Here the King hath spread his table."

Praise, O Sion, sweetly sing. By J. D. Aylward in O. Shipley's Annual Hymnals, 1864.

Praise, O Sion, thy Saviour King. By J. Wallace, in his Hymn of the Church, 1874. A literal translation.

Three versions from the older translators must be mentioned here:

16. Praise, O Sion! praise thy Saviour.
E. Southall, in his Hymnals, or Certain Excellent Poems and Spiritual Hymnals, &c., 1556.

18. Rise, royal Sion, rise and sing. By R. Crawford, in the 2nd ed. of his Step to the Temple, &c., 1848, and again in an altered form into the Belfagramme and His tr. editions of John Austin's

From the foregoing trs. and centos, st. xi.
and xii., beginning. Eos, panis Angelorum, are often used as a separate hymn. The following are the opening lines:

1. See for food to pilgrims given. E. B. Pusey.
   (No. 2.)
2. The Bread of angels, lo, is sent. Canon Oakley. (No. 3.)
3. Lo, upon the Altar lies. E. Caswall. (No. 4.)
   This is in use as tr. by Caswall, and also altered to "Lo, before our longing eyes," in the Dutch Reformed Hymn. of the Church, N. Y., 1869.
4. See the bread of angels lying. J. R. Best. (No. 5.)
5. Bread that angels eat in heaven. A. D. Wackerbarth. (No. 6.)
6. Lo, the Bread which angels feedeth. Hymn
   N. (No. 7), and the Hymnary, 1872.
7. Lo, the angels' Food is given. In the Psalms prefixed to some eds. of H. A. & M., S. D., and again in the People's H., 1867. This was repeated in the Appendix to H. A. & M., 1868;
   the Hymnary (with slight alterations), 1872;
   the Altar Hymnal, 1884. In H. A. & M., 1875, it is claimed on behalf of "The Compilers."
8. Lo, the Bread which angels feedeth. J. D.
   Chambers. (No. 9.)
   (No. 13.)
10. Behold, the Bread of angels, sent. J. D.
    Ayleward. (No. 14.)

Although the renderings in part and in whole of the "Lauda Sion" are thus numerous, the use of any of these trs. in public worship is very limited. [J. J.]

Laudes Christi redempti voce modularum supplici. St. Nokker. [Easter.] This is found in an Einsiedeln ms. of the 10th cent., 121, p. 556. It is also in the Prüm Gradual, written c. 1000 (Hdb. Nat. Paris Lat. 9448), and the Ecclermach Gradual of the 11th cent. (B. N. Lat. 10510); in the St. Gall mss., No. 376, 381, of the 11th cent.; in a ms. c. 1200, in the Bodleian (Litur. Misc. 340 f. 149 b); in a Gradual of the 11th or 12th cent.
   in the British Museum (Reg. C xiii. f. 12); and others. The printed text is in the Maplebry Missal, 1480, and other later German Missals; in Daniel, ii. p. 178, and Kehrlein, No. 92. Tr. as:

Praise to Christ with suppliant voice. By R. F. Litichowski, in Lyra Hymnica, 1864, p. 331; and again in the People's H., 1867, No. 119. [J. M.]

Laudes crucis attollamus. Adam of St. Victor. [Passiontide. Holy Cross.] This Sequence has been generally ascribed to Adam of St. Victor, and is given by L. Gaultier in his edition of Adam's Oeuvres poétiques, 1881,
   p. 224, as probably by him, and is there quoted from a Limoges Sequentiarum of the 12th or 13th cent. (Hdb. Nat. Paris, No. 1138), and other sources. It is found in a Gradual apparently written in England during the 12th cent., and now in the British Museum
   (Reg. 2 B. iv. f. 17b); in a ms. of the end of the 12th cent. now in the Bodleian (Litur. Misc. 341 f. 51 b); while Morel, p. 36, cites it as in a Fischingen ms. of the 11th cent., an Einsiedeln ms. of the 12th cent., &c. In a Missal in the British Museum; as also in the Sarum, York, Hereford, St. Andrews, and many other Missals (e.g. the Maplebury Missal, 1490); it is the 4th of the Invention of the Cross. The printed text
   p. 78; Kehrlein, No. 60 of 46, and others. Dr. N.

Laurentius, s. of Herni, a burgess of Huisum, in Lorraine, was born and died on October 23, 1831.

Laurentius was one of the leading figures in the Peculiar school of the Church in the 1860s, and his hymns are still popular in Catholic circles.

The following hymns are found in the English hymnal:

1. Awake, my heart, the night has come.
2. Flow my tears, flow still faster.

LAVATER, Johann Caspar, s. of Johann Heinrich Lavater, physician in Zürich, was b. at Zürich, Nov. 15, 1741. He entered the Aeademische Gymnasium at Zürich in 1758, and in the end of 1759 began his studies in its theological department. After completing his course he was ordained in the spring of 1762, but did not undertake any regular clerical work till April 1768, when he was appointed deacon of the Orphanage church at Zürich, where he became pastor in 1775. In July 1778 he was appointed deacon of St. Peter's church, and in Dec. 1796 pastor there. When, during the Revolutionary period, the French laid the Swiss Cantons under contribution, and then in April 1799 deported ten of the principal citizens of Zürich, Lavater felt compelled to protest in the pulpit and in print. Consequently, while on a visit to Bœun, near Zürich, he was seized by French dragoons, May 14, 1799, and taken to Basle, but was allowed to return to Zürich, Aug. 16, 1799. When on Sept. 23, 1799, the French under Masséna entered Zürich, Lavater was treacherously shot through the body by a French grenadier, who had just before thanked him for his charity, and from this wound he never entirely recovered. He resigned his charges in January 1800, and d. at Zürich, Jan. 2, 1801. (Koekh. vi. 499; Allg. Deutsche Biog., xivi. 783, &c.)

Lavater was one of the most celebrated and influential literary characters of his time; a most popular and striking preacher; and a learned, genuine, frank-hearted man, who was the object of an almost incredible veneration. His devotional writings (Ansatzen in die Erweiterung, 4 vols., Zürich, 1769-79, &c.), and his works on Physiology (Von der Physiognomie, Leipzig, 1772; Physiognomische Fragmente, 4 vols., Zürich, 1773-78), were eagerly read and admired all over Europe, but were very soon forgotten. He was a theologian, and his warm heart and fertile imagination led him into many untenable positions. His works on Physiology are without order or philosophical principles of connexion, and their permanent interest is mainly in the very numerous and often well-executed engravings. Of his poems the Schaeferlieder (Bern, 1761, 4th enlarged ed., 1778), are the utterances of a true-patriot, and are the most natural and popular of his productions. His Epic poems (1) Jesus Messiah, oder die Durchführung des Herrn, n. M., Zürich, 1770, a poetical version of the Apocalypse; (2) Jesus Messiah, oder die Evangelien und Apostelgeschichte in Genesis, 4 vols. Winterthur, 1764-66; (3) Jesus von Arnthath, Hamburg, 1786) have little abiding value.

As a hymn-writer Lavater was in his day most popular. His hymns are well adapted for private or family use. Many of them are simple, fresh, and popular in style, and evangelical earnest and devout in substance. But for church use he is too verbose, pious, and rhetorical. Of his hymns (some 700) a considerable number survive in German collections compiled before 1800, e.g., the Berlin cl. L. S., ed. 1840, has 13, the Wittweinburg G. R., 1802, has 15, the Hamburg G. S. 1842, has 23, &c.

Lead, Kindly Light

Through their ambiguity, have led to several ingenious interpretations, some of which appeared in Notes and Queries in 1880. The answer to each of these statements must be given, as far as possible, in Cardinal Newman's own words.

1. Cardinal Newman, in his Apologia Pro Vita Sua, 1884, pp. 94-100, notes how the Lead kindly Light, amid the circling gloom,

Carol, J. H. Newman

[Evening. Divine Guidance Desired.] This exquisite lyric has been the cause of much controversy, arising from the fact that, first, the statement has been made that it was the taking three days for the journey. Before starting from my inn in the morning of May 26th or 27th, I sat down on my bed, and began to subliterate. My servant, who acted as my nurse, asked what ailed me. I could only answer, "I have a work to do in England." I was asking to go home; yet for want of a vessel I was kept at Palermo for three weeks. I began to visit the Churches, and they calmed my impatience, though I did not attend any services. I knew nothing of the Presence of the Blessed Sacrament then. At last I got off in an orange boat bound for Marseilles. We were belated a whole week in the Straits of Bonifacio. Then it was that I wrote the lines "Lead, kindly light" (June 16, 1833), which have since become well known. I was writing verses the whole time of my passage. At length I got to Marseilles, and set off for England. The fatigue of travelling was too much for me, and I was laid up for several days at Lyons. At last I got off again and did not stop night or day till I reached England, and my mother's house. My brother had arrived from Persia only a few hours before. This was Tuesday. The following Sunday, July 14th, Mr. Kohl preached the Angel Sermon in the University Church. It was published under the title of "National Apostasy." I have ever considered and kept the day as the start of the religious movement of 1833."

In writing of further changes of thought which he underwent during the succeeding six years, Cardinal Newman says, Apologia,
p. 211:

"Now to trace the succession of thoughts, and the conclusions, and the consequent innovations on my previous beliefs, and the general conduct, to which I was led,
upon this sudden visitation, stated on the previous page.
And first, I will say, whatever comes of saying it, for I leave inferences to others, that for years I must have had something of an habitual motion, though it was latent, and had never led me to distrust my own conclusions, that my mind had not found its minimal rest, and that in some sense or other I was on journey.
During the same passage across the Mediterranean in which I wrote "Lead, kindly light," I also wrote verses, which are found in the Lyra under the head of 'Preservation', begun thus: "When I took back." This was in 1833; and, since I have begun this narrative, I have found a memorandum under the date of September 7, 1829, in which I read myself, as now in my room in Oriel College, slowly advancing, &c., and held on by God's hand blindly, not knowing a object. He is taking me."

This, then, is the author's account of the state of his personal feelings, and the circumstances which surrounded him at the time that he wrote what must be regarded as one of the finest lyrics of the nineteenth century.

Angry at the state of disunion and supineness in the Church he still loved and in which he still believed; confident that he had "a mission," "a work to do in England;"
passionately longing for home and the converse of friends; sick in body to prostration; and, as some around him feared, even unto death: feeling that he should not die but live, and that he must work, but knowing not what that work was to be, how it was to be done, or to what it might tend, he breathed forth the impassioned and pathetic prayer of one of the birth-pangs, it might be called, of the Oxford movement of 1833:

"Lead, kindly light, amid the encircling gloom,
Lead Thou me on;
The night is dark, and I am far from home,
Lead Thou me on.
Keep Thou my feet, I do not ask to see
The distant scene; one step enough for me.
I was not ever thus, nor prayed that Thou shouldst lead me so;
I loved to choose and see my path; but now
Lead Thou me on.
I loved the garish day, and, spite of tears,
Pride ruled my will: remember not past years.
So long Thy power hath blest me, sure it still Will lead me on.
Over moor and fen, over crag and torrent, till
The night is gone,
And with the morn those angel faces smile,
Which I have loved long since, and lost awhile."
LEESON, JANE E.

Leeson, Jane E. The earliest work by Miss Leeson with which we are acquainted is "Leads Us, Heavenly Father, lead us.

J. Edmonson. (Holy Trinity-Inscription of.)

Appeared in his Sacred Lyrics, set tooo, 1821; in 3rd ed. of 1831, and entitled "Hymns for the Children of the London Orphan Asylum (Air Lewes)." In 1858 it was included in the Bap. Ps. & Hys., No. 564, and from that date it has grown gradually in favour until it has attained to a foremost place among modern hymns in all English-speaking countries. It is generally given in a correct and complete form in Wright's Coll. of 1842. It has been rendered into several languages, including Latin. The Rev. R. Bingham, in his Hymno. Christ. Lat. 1871, has tr. it as "Duc nos, Genitor Coelestis." [J. J.]

Leader of faithful souls, and guide,
C. Wesley. [The Christian Race]. Appeared in Hys. for those that seek, and those that have rededicated life, 1747, No. 41, in 8th ed. of 61, and entitled The Christian Traveller" (P. Works, 1806-72, vol. II, p. 262). In 1776, Toplady included it, and in 1787, in his Psalms & Hys., No. 269, and of the Church of England, including Bicker. As found in the Wes. Hb. 1790, No. 6, and in the collections of other Methodists, st. v. and vii. are omitted. Its American use is great. [J. J.]

Leaston-Blenkinsopp, Edwin Clennell, M.A., D. of G. Leaston-Blenkinsopp, was b. Jan. 1, 1819, and educated at University College, Durham (b. 1833, M.A. 1842). Taking Holy Orders, he was, in 1844, Curate of Darley, and in 1851, Incumbent of St. James's, Lathom; in 1853 Chaplain to the English Army in Turkey, at Algiers in 1859, and in the Fortifications of Portsmouth in 1862. In 1863 he became Rector of Springthorpe, Lincolnshire. Mr Leaston-Blenkinsopp pub. The Doctrine of Development in 1867, and in the Church, 1869, and has contributed numerous papers to periodical literature. His original hymns, together with those from the Latin, appeared in Lyra Mystica, 1864; Lyra Mystica, 1865; and The People's Hymns, 1863. The four are annotated under their respective headings. His original hymns include:

1. O noble martyr, thee we sing. St. George.
2. The Tree of Life in Eden stood. The Tree of Life.
3. When Israel came from Egypt's land. Whitsun.
4. In Lyra Mystica, 1864.

His signature is "E. L. B."

Lebter Christen, so allhier auf Erden. [Following Christ.] Founded on 2 Tim. iv. 7, 8, and included in No. 552 in G. B., Berlin, Freylinghausen's Novo geistreiches, 1714, and repeated as No. 635 in the G. L. S., ed. 1863.

Tr. as: "The Psalter, that rough path to tread," by Miss Cox, in Lyra Anglo-Saxon, 1864, p. 301, and her B. from the Germ., 1864, p. 97.

Lees, Jonathan, sprung from a Nonconformist family in Lancashire, was educated at Ouseby College and the Lancashire Independent College, and in 1861 went as Congregationalist Missionary to Tientsin, in North China, where he has since laboured.

Mr. Lees was one of the band of young men who, about the year 1852, began the first Sunday Evening School in England, in Sharp Street, Angel, Manchester. For use in this school, he made a collection of hymns, which after a time was published as Songs for Home & School (Bremen, Manchester). Nine or ten of these hymns were compiled by Mr. Lees. During his residence in China he has pub. several collections of Temperance Hymns, the largest and most recent being entitled Original & Selected Temperance Songs, together with Select & Hymns, intended mainly for the use of sailors in the Far East. Without them, the subject of hymns and songs is not complete, as other hymn-books have appeared on leaves or in pamphlets.

One, a missionary hymn commencing "The coming, they are coming," is in W. R. Stevenson's Hymns, where by mistake it is attributed to another author.

One of the most widely used of Christian Hymns in the Chinese language was compiled by Mr. Lees in 1872 (London Missionary Society), and more recently he has prepared a smaller volume, consisting chiefly of translations of the more popular hymns in Sankey's collection. For particular concern regarding these books see Article on Missions, Foreign.

Leeson, Jane E. The earliest work by is her Infant Hymnals. Then followed Hymna and Scenes of Childhood, or A Sponsor’s Gift (London, James Burns; Nottingham, Dearden), 1842, in which the Infant Hymnals were incorporated. Concerning Pt. ii. of the Hymn and Scenes, &c., Miss Leeson says, "For the best of the Poems in the second part,
the Writer is indebted to a friend." In the Rev.
Henry Fornaby’s Catholic Hymns arranged in order of the principal Festivals, Feasts of Saints, and other occasions of Devotion throughout the Year, Lond., Burns and Lambert, s.d.
(1850), "Imaginatur, N Carolinis Wiseman,
May 3rd, 1855," her tr. of Eutychius Paschalii ("Christ the Lord is risen to-day") and her "Loving Shepherd of Thy Sheep" (also in Hym. & Scene, 1842), were given under the signature "M. I." Her Paraphrases and Hymns for Congregational Singing (most of which were re-written from the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, &c., 1781) were pub. by Wertheimer & Cie., Lond., in 1853. In the Iringite Hymns for the Use of the Churches, 1854, there are five of her original lyric and four of her trs. from the Latin under the signature of "J. E. L.;" and most of the were repeated in the 2nd ed. 1871. In addition Miss Leeson is the author of several other works, including The Christian Child’s Book, 1848, The Child’s Book of Ballads, 1849, Songs of Christian Chivalry, 1848, Margaret, a Poem, 1850, The Seven Spiritual Works of Mercy, and others. Her hymns in C. U. include:—

1. A little child may know. God’s love of little Children. In Hymns & S. of Childhood, 1842, No. 30, in 5 st. of 4 l.
2. Dear Saviour, to Thy little lambs. For Parity.
In Hymns & S. of Childhood, 1842, No. 19, in 4 st. of 4 l.
3. Father, I (we) love Thy house of prayer. Public

5. In the dark and silent night. Confidence. In The Christian Child’s Book, 1846, in 3 st. of 3 l. with the refrain, "Hallelujah." It is in the Irish Church Hymnal, 1872, and other collections.
6. Jesus Christ, my Lord and King. Child’s Praise of Christ. In Hymns and Songs of Childhood, 1842, No. 14, in 5 st. of 4 l.
7. King of Saints and King of glory. All Saints.
In her Paraphrases & Hymns, 1853, p. 4, in 7 st. of 9 l.
8. Saviour, teach me day by day. Devotion. In Hymns & S. of Childhood, 1842, No. 89, in 4 st. of 9 l.
9. Songs of glory fill the sky. Christmas. In the Irvingite Hymns for the Use of the Churches, 1844, in 3 st. of 1 l. with the refrain "Hail! Lord Jesus.
10. Stand we prepared to see and hear. Advent.
In the Irvingite Hymns for the Use of the Churches, 1844,
No. 172, in 4 st. of 9 l. Written in 1460.
11. Sweet the lesson Jesus taught. Christ blessing little Children. In Hymns & S. of Childhood, 1842, No. 1, in 5 st. of 4 l.
12. Wake, ye saints, the song of triumph. Ascension.
Written in 1641, and pub. in the Irvingite Hymns for the Use of the Churches, 1844, No. 60, in 4 st. of 1 l., with the refrain "Hallelujah." In st. 1, 2, 3, 4, and 6 are from C. Wesley’s "Hail, the day that sees Him rise."

Miss Leeson’s most popular hymn, “Loving Shepherd of Thy Sheep,” and her trs. from the Latin are noted elsewhere in this work.
Of Miss Leeson’s personal history we can gather nothing.

by the invaluable Hartford Selection (Congregational) of 1798. Its first appearance, so far as known, was in Philomela, or, A Selection of Spiritual Songs, by George Roberts, Potsdam, 1792, No. 82.

2. When shall I see Jesus? The Christian Riser. This vigorous lyric is ascribed to Dr. Hitchcock, in Hymns and Songs of Praise, 1784, to Leland. It has generally been regarded as anonymous, and of uncertain date, cir. 1807, or probably earlier.

3. Christians, if your hearts are warm. Holy Baptism. Adult. The only hymn by Leland which can be authenticated by date and circumstances in this familiar doggerel:

"Christians, if your hearts are warm, ice and snow can do no harm."

Dr. Belcher says, in his Historical Sketches of Hymns, &c., 1850, that it was written for one of Leland's large baptisms in Virginia, 1779.

[F. M. B.]

Leon, Johannes, was a native of Ohrdruf, near Goslar. He was for some time an army chaplain, then in 1557 pastor at Königsee (Schwarzburg-Rudolstadt), in 1560 at Gross-Mühlhausen, and in 1573 at Wölfis, near Ohrdruf. He d. at Wölfa, about Easter, 1597 (Augs. Deutsch. Bl., 1597; Wackernagel, p. 465, 654; v. p. 490, &c.). Leon's hymns appeared principally in his: (1) Handbuch, Frankfurt-am-Main, 1566, and (2) Trostbüchlein. The ed. printed at Nürnberg, 1611, has a preface of Dec. 9, 1588, so that the first ed. was probably 1589. His hymns are reprinted in Wackernagel, iv., Nos. 671-718. The only hymn ascribed to him which has passed into English is:

Ich hab mein Sach Gott hingestellt. For the Dying. Wackernagel, iv. p. 518, gives this, in 18 st. of 5 l., from the Paulinen, geistliche Lieder und Kirchenfeiertagen, Nürnberg, 1589; with a long note, in which he traces all the st. save xi., xiv., xv., to Leon's Trostbüchlein, and to his Leich-Predigten [i.e., Funeral Sermons], 1587-92. Netzeß, No. 347, cites it as in the Paulinen, geistliche Lieder und Lobeshymnen, Strasbourg, v., but apparently before 1587. In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 1460.

This hymn has been frequently ascribed to Dr. Johann Pappus (Feb. 16, 1449, at Linz) on the Lake of Constance; d. at Strasbourg, July 11, 1610; but this ascription has not been traced earlier than about 1640, e.g., in the Cantionale sacrum, Gota, pt. ii, 1644, No. 16, and the Königsberg G. R., 1680, p. 330. Leuckmann, in Eikl, vii., 409, thinks that Pappus may have inspired the hymn in its present form. It was probably suggested by a song beginning:

"Ich hab mein Sach gut gestellt." which Wackernagel, lit. No. 1342, 1343, quotes from a Leipzig broadsheet of 1553, and other sources.

This hymn has been tr. as:

LET EARTH AND HEAVEN 671

repeated, abridged, in Dr. Pagenstecher's Coll., 1864, and Kennedy, 1863, No. 156. Dr. Kennedy, also gives a ceuto, beginning with the tr. of st. x., "Few are our days and sad below."

3. My name is God's, and I am still. A good tr. of st. i., ii., iv., vii., x., xii., by Miss Winkworth, in her B. G. for England, 1863, No. 127. [J. M.]

Leslie, Emma. [Take, Emma.]

Leslie, Mary Eliza, is daughter of Andrew Leslie, for many years Baptist missionary in Calcutta, was b. at Mungghur, Jan. 13, 1834, became a member of her father's church, and having received a superior education, was for eight years Superintendent of an Institution for the education of Hindu young ladies. Since 1877 Miss Leslie has been engaged in various kinds of philanthropic work in Calcutta. Her publications include:

In the Heart Echoes from the East is a lyric beginning "They are gathering homeward from every land (Death contemplated), which has been exceedingly popular, and has been reprinted in many forms. It is in W. R. Stevenson's School Hymnal, 1880. Several of Miss Leslie's lyrics and sonnets are very good, and worthy of the attention of hymn-book compilers.

Let all the world in every corner sing. G. Herbert. [Praise to God, the King.]

First pub. posthumously in his Temple, in 1633, p. 45, in the following form:

"ANTIPHON.

"Cha. Let all the world in every corner sing.
My God and King.
"First. The heavens are not too high,
His praise may thither rise.
The earth is not too low,
His praise there may grow.
"Cha. Let all the world in every corner sing.
My God and King.

"Second. The church with psalms must shout,
No dove can keep them out.
But above all, the heart
Must bear the longest part.

"Cha. Let all the world in every corner sing.
My God and King.

Although admirably adapted for musical treatment, the original form of the text is not popular with modern editors. We have the original in Thring's Coll., 1882; and in the Hymnary, 1872, the same, with the addition of a doxology. Usually the text is re-arranged, sometimes, as in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymn., 1871; Horner's Cony. Hymn., 1884, &c., and again, in other collections in a different manner. This hymn is also in C. U. in America.

In whole or in part, it soon came into general use not only by the followers of the Wesleyan, but also by many who, on Calvinistic grounds, opposed them, and against, whom the Hymn on God's Everlasting Love were written. M. Madan included st. i.-iv. in his Ps. & Hymns, 1760, No. 90, and this form of the hymn was repeated by A. M. Toplady in his Ps. & Hymns, 1776; and again by others to modern hymn-books in the Church of England. Noneconformists also copied this form of the hymn. In the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, st. i.-v. vii. and ix. were given as No. 33. This is the form of the hymn most popular in Great Britain and America. The following verses are also in C. U.:

1. Jesus, harmonious Name. Composed in st. iii. iv. vii. and ix. in the American Andover Sabbath H. Bk., 1856, and others.

2. Jesus, transcendent sound. In the Hymnary, 1872, this is composed of st. ii.-iv. vi.-ix. and others.

In G. J. Stevenson's Methodist H. Bk., Notes, 1885, p. 42, several interesting reminiscences of this hymn are recorded, mainly from Wesleyan sources. [J. J.]

Let Jacob to his Maker sing. P. Doddridge. [God the Guide of Israel.] First pub. in Job Orton's edition of Doddridge's (posthumous) Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 102, in 5 st. of 4 l, and again in J. D. Humphrey's edition of the same, 1839, No. 118. It is in C. U. in its full form in America, and also beginning with st. ii. as "God knows our souls in all their fears," in the Boston Church Pastoral, 1864. [J. J.]

Let me alone another this only year. C. Wesley. [Death Anticipated.] Pub. in Preparation for Death in Several Hymns, 1774, No. 48, in 4 st. of 8 l. (P. Works, 1866-72, vol. vii. p. 396). In 1800 it was given in the supplement to the Wes. H. Bk. as "Let me alone another year"; and this has been repeated in a few collections. The hymn "Because for me the Saviour prays," in the American Meth. Episc. Hymns, 1840, No. 381, is from this hymn, and begins with the second half of st. i. with the lines transposed. [J. J.]

Let me be with Thee where Thou art. Charlotte Elliott. [Heaven Anticipated and Desired.] This hymn, which is usually attributed to the 1st ed. of Miss Elliott's Hours of Sorrow, &c., 1836, really appeared in her brother's Brighton Ps. & Hymns, 3rd thousand, 1839, No. 412, in 4 st. of 4 l, and signed "C. E." It was repeated, with slight alterations, in her Hymns for a Week, 1842; and again, slightly altered, in late editions of the Universal H. Bk. The text usually followed by modern editors is that of 1842, as in Lord Selborne's Bk. of Pray'r, 1872, where it is given with the change in st. iv., i. 3, of "life or death," to "death or life." The S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, is an exception in favour of several changes in the text, and Kennedy's, 1863, is the greatest departure from the original. The American books vary in their texts in common with those of G. Britain. [J. J.]

Let not your hearts with anxious thoughts. William Robertson. [Ascension.] First appeared as No. 14 in the Draft Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1745, as a version of John xiv. 1-5, in 5 st. of 4 l. In the Draft of 1781, No. 42, st. vii. was omitted; st. iv. rewritten; and st. i. slightly altered.

Thence, unaltered, in the pub. issued in that year by the Church and still in use. In the sonnet of William Cameron (p. 300) it is ascribed to Robertson, and in the 1781 text to Cameron. Text of 1781 is included in the Ps. & Hymns, 1857, and a few others. In Porter's Selection, it is altered to "Let not your heart sorrow, and in the G. Song Coll., 1815, p. 60, to "Let not your heart be burdened now."

Let party names no mor [For Unity.] First pub. in the Col. of Anti. and Evans, 1764, 4 st. of 4 l, entituled "Christ signed B. B." It was also added in the (posthumous) Hymns, 1838, but with the title communion of Saints. In some collections with st. ii. "Among earth," and in others the st. changed to "Let another this only year". In its various forms it is it amongst Nonconformists, America.

Let saints on earth ti [voices] raise. J. Evans. [as the Prince of Peace.] Pub. in Burder's Col. of Hymns, 1845, 4 st. of 4 l, and headed "P. It is found in several modes as Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., Songs of G. & J., 1872, and others.

Let songs of praises fi Cotterill. [Whitsuntide.] P. in his Selection, 8th ed., 1819, of 6 l; and again, with his homely's Christian Psalms It is in C. U. in most English tracts, and sometimes reduced New Cong., 1859 and 1874.

Let such as would dwell. William Cameron. First appeared as No. 14 in the Draft Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1745, as a version of Eccles. vii. 2-6. In the public worship ed. in by the Church of Scotland st. i. was reversed. II. 1, 2 and II. 3, 4; and II. 3, 4 were begun "While others crow mirth, " II. 1, 2 of st. ii. being and II. 1, 3 of st. iii. altered. of the Text of Paraphrases, by W. Cameron (p. 300) Cameron. The revised text included in the United Pre-Porter's Selection, Glasgow other collcctions.

J. Hart. [Pious].—Pub. in his Hymns, &c., 1790, No. 56, in two parts, the second being—Great High Priest, we view Thee stooping—and headed Faith and Repentance. Pt. 1, in 6 st. of 8 l., asks and answers the important question, "What is it to be a Christian?" And Pt. 2, in 3 st. of 8 l., is a Prayer based upon the answer given in Pt. 1. Both parts are in C. U., but the second ("Great High Priest, &c.") is by far the finer of the two, and is by far the more popular. It is in several collections in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

Let us love, and sing, and wonder.
J. Newton. [Praise for Redeeming Love.]—Appeared in his Twenty Six Letters on Religious Subjects, by Omeron, 1774, in 6 st. of 6 l., and headed, "Praise for Redeeming Love." It was also given in the Gospel Magazine, May, 1774, and in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. iii., No. 82. It is in C. U., in G. Britain and America, and sometimes in an abbreviated form. [J. J.]

Let us praise God this day. [The Annunciation.]—Included anonymously in Hymns for the Festivals and Saints' Days of the Church of England, Oxford, 1846. It was repeated, with the addition of a doxology, in Newton's Church Hymns, 1850, in Johnston's English Hymns, 1852, and other collections. The text of H. A. & M., 1875, is from Fawcett's Sel., 1847. In addition to the original, two altered forms of the text are in C. U.:—

1. Praise we the Lord this day. This slightly altered text was given in Murray's Hymnal, 1862; in the Salisbury H. Bk., 1871; in Kennedy's (with new doxology, 1843); the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, &c. The last-named has Murray's text with the omission of st. 10.

2. O praise we the Lord this day. This text in the Hymnal, 1872, is somewhat freely altered, and is in limited use. [J. J.]

Let us sing the King Messiah. J. Ryland. [Praise to Christ as King.]—This fine paraphrase of Ps. xvi., in 7 st. of 6 l., is dated by Dr. Ryland's son "July 31st, 1790." [A. M.]

It appeared in Hymns Included for the Use of the United Congregations of Bristol at their Monthly Prayer Meetings for the Success of the Gospel at Home and Abroad, begun in 1797, Bristol, 1798. The Preface is dated Feb. 20, 1798, and signed by eight ministers of whom Dr. Ryland is first on the list. This hymn was given, with omissions, in the Bap.

L. Peddle, in The Christian Observer, Oct. 21, 1738. This is frequently given as an original hymn, but from Peddle's own account, it is evidently a translation from another source. It is given in 5th ed. of 4th. W. C. M. S. 1740. This is a popular version, and the hymn was written for that purpose. It was first published in the Christian Observer, Oct. 21, 1738. It was also published in several other periodicals, and is found in several modern hymn-books.

very greatly altered form of st. xii. 6., as No. 856, in the Berlin G. B., 1829; retaining little either from Liebich or Diterich. It is repeated in Bunsen's Versuch, 1833, No. 606, and the Württemberg G. B., 1842, No. 543. The tr. in C. U. from this form is:—

We, some, our hearts with gladness glowing.
A good tr. from the text of 1629, by Miss Cox, in her Sacred Hymns from the German, 1841, p. 199; repeated, abridged, in the American Unitarian Hymn. for the Ch. of Christ, Boston, 1853, and in Archdeacon Potter's Cat., 1861.

Another tr. is:—"O Lord, Thy goodness we adore," by Lady E. Fortescue, 1843, p. 29.

4. Gott ist getreu! Sein Herz, sein Vaterland. Trust in God. 1768, p. 161, in 9 st. of 9 l., entitled, "The faithful God, 1 Cor. x. 13." It is a beautiful hymn, and has been specially appreciated in Württemberg, where it is found in the Württemberg G. B., 1791, No. 24 (1842, No. 45). Landmann, in Kold, viii. 416, says it was the favourite hymn of J. C. F. Steudel, Professor of Theology at Tübingen, who d. 1837; was sung by the Württemberg contingent at a field service near Toli, in August 1870, during the Franco-German War, &c. The trs. are:—

1. Our God is true! These He will ever foreseal.

2. My God is true! His heart, a Father's heart.
A good and full tr. by R. Maister, in his Lyra Domestica, 2nd Ser., 1864, p. 119; repeated, in full, in Reid's Prize Bk., 1872; and abridged in the Irl. Hym., 1871.

Self-surrender to God. 1768, p. 79, in 9 st. of 9 l. (11, 9 of each st. being "Hier ist mein Herr"), entitled, "Surrender of the heart to God," and suggested by Proverbs xxii. 26. Included, as No. 263, in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. Tr. as:

Here is my heart! my God I give it Thee.
A good tr., omitting st. iv., by Mrs. Findlater, in H. L. L., 1st Ser., 1854, p. 16 (1864, p. 21). Included, in full, in Boardman's Cdl., Philadelphia, U. S., 1861; Lyra Eucharistica, 1863 and 1864, &c. The trs. of st. i., ii., iii., reduced to 6 st., and beginning, "Here is my heart, I give it Thee," were included in the American Sabbath H. Bk., 1858; and, repeated, omitting st. iv., in the Christian H. Bk., Cincinnati, 1865.

1774, p. 204, in 12 st., entitled, "At the burial of a corpse." In the Bavarian G. B., 1854, No. 229, beginning "Nun bringen wir," Tr. as,

"This body, weary and distressed," by Dr. H. Harbaugh, in the German Reformed Churchin, June, 1863, p. 187.

Dearest Immanuel, Prince of the lowly.
A tr. of st. i.–iv., by M. W. Stryker, as No. 183 in his Christian Chorals, 1885.

LIEBSTER JESU du wirst kommen. [Advent.] Included in the Geistreiches G. B., Halle, 1697, p. 257, in 10 st. of 5 l. Repeated in Pforst's G. B., 1713 (ed. 1835, No. 561, ascribed to Christoph Pfeiffer, who was only born in 1880). The tr. in C. U. is:—

Jesus, Saviour, once again.
A good but rather free tr. of st. i.–iv., by Miss Dunn in her H. from the Ger., 1857, p. 47. Repeated in full in Dr. Pagenstecher's Cdl., 1864; and, omitting st. iii., in Curwen's Sabbath H. Bk., 1859.

Another tr. is:—"Precious Jesus: Thy returning," in the British Hymn, Oct. 1846, p. 344, and Bly's Prayer Bk., 1872, No. 228.

LIEBSTER JESU wir sind hier Deinem Worte nachzuleben. B. SCHMIDT. [Holy Baptism.] 1st pub. in his Heilige Flammen (ed. 1739, No. 115, p. 180, apparently first in the 3rd ed., 1706), in 7 st. of 6 l., entitled "Reasonable Reflections of the sponsors on their way with the child to Baptism." Included in many German collections, and recently as No. 462 in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. Tr. as:—

1. Jesus, Lord, Thy servants see.

2. Blessed Jesus, here we stand.
A good tr., omitting st. iv., by Miss Winkworth in her Sacred Hymns from the Ger., 1841, p. 63 (1844, p. 73). This version was sung, April 27, 1863, at the baptism of the Princess Victoria of Hesse at Windsor Castle.

3. Blessed Jesus, we are here.
A good tr., omitting st. iv., by Dr. Kennedy, as No. 294 in his Hymn. Christians., 1863.

4. Blessed Lord, Thy servants see.
This is No. 196 in Dr. Alton's Suppl. Hymns, 1868, and consists of trs. of st. i., ii., altered from Miss Cox, and of st. vii., altered from Miss Winkworth. Repeated in Dr. Dale's Eng. H. Bk., 1875; Horder's Cong. Hym. 1884, &c.

5. Dearest Jesus! we are here.
On Thy tender grace relying.
In full, by Dr. M. Levy, as No. 222 in the Ohio Lutheran Hym., 1889.

Other trs. are:—(1) "O blessed Saviour! here we meet," by Lady E. Fortescue, 1843, p. 29. 2) "According to Thy Gospel, we," by Dr. G. Walker, 1860, p. 34. (3) "Following Thy words of grace," as No. 94 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1866.

In 1634 he was a member of the new Council

Lindemann's Erfahrungen aus dem Leben Gott. are said to have been pub. at Erfurt, 1804 and 1806. The ed. of 1808 (Royal Library, Berlin) is entitled Anmerkungen zu den Erfahrungen; das ist, in 2 volumes, and goes under the title of Lebensweisheiten, and the

he was the composer of the melodies; but it is evident that he must have arranged and harmonised them. The

LITANIES, METRICAL

1. The form in which Metrical Litanies are given in the hymn-books now in use, is of modern growth. Several hymns with refrains are found in some of the older collections, as "in the hour of my distress," by Herrick; "Lord of mercy and of might," by Bp. Heber; "Saviour, when in dust to Thee," by Sir R. Grant; "By Thy birth, o Lord of all," by Mrs. Harriet Mozley; "Jesus, Lord of life and glory," by J. C. Furniss, and a few others. These however, were usually iterated not as Metrical Litanies, but as hymns, and as such were embodied in the collections.

2. The Metrical Litanies of the modern hymn-books began in 1834 with one or two in rhytmical prose on the Childhood and Passion of Jesus, one of the first, if not the first, being No. 63 below. By slow degrees these have been increased, written mainly in rhythm in metre, the first being No. 21 below, until provision has been made for most of the Fasts and Festivals of the Church. In a few instances, as noted hereafter, they are published as separate works from the hymn-books.
The usual practice, however, is to give them
as a separate division or section of the hymnal.

3. Amongst the earliest writers of Metrical Litanies were Dr. P. G. Larke, Dr. Littledale, and G. Moult; and amongst the later Bp.
H. E. Bickersteth, Sir W. H. Baker, and
T. R. Pulford.

4. In arranging the Metrical Litanies for reference great difficulty is presented in their sameness, and the habit which some authors and compilers have of beginning several Litanies with the same stanza. Another difficulty is created by compilers of hymnals breaking the Litany into parts which differ from those adopted by the authors. In the following list of Metrical Litanyes these difficulties have been kept in view:—

1. All our sins and their wages. Lent. By E. V. in Mrs. Brock’s Children’s H. Bk., 1861.
2. Bread of Life, the angels’ Food. Holy Communion. By B. G. Littlebridge in the People’s H., 1847, No. 250.
3. By the word to Mary given. The Birth of Jesus. In the Hymnary, 1832, this is given as “By the angel’s word of love.”
4. By the name which Thou didst take. The Childhood of Jesus.
5. By the blood that flow’d from Thee. The Passion of Jesus.
6. By the first bright Easter-day. The Resurrection of Jesus. Nos. 3-6 are by F. W. Faber in his Hymns, 1867, and the Roman Catholic Hymn, for the Year, &c.
7. By the prayer that Jesus made. For Unity. In the Eucharistic Hymnal, 1877.
12. Father, from Thy throne on high. For Little Children. By Mrs. Sarah A. Brock in Mrs. Carey Brock’s Children’s H. Bk., 1861.
17. God the Father, hear our cry. Lent. In the Eucharistic Hymnal, 1877.
24. Great, mysterious Trinity. For all Times. T. B. Pollock.
33. Jesus, dwelling here below, Life of our Lord. T. B. Pollock.
34. Jesus, from a throne on high. For Children. T. B. Pollock.
40. Jesus, Saviour, over all. For His Life. By R. F. Littlebridge, in H. A. & M., 1875, in People’s H., No. 593.
41. Jesus, Saviour, hear me call. Scottish Hymnal, 1844.
43. Jesus, Son of the living God. In the Ch. Extension Association’s Hymn.
44. Jesus, we are far away. Lent. Ti. Jesus. T. B. Pollock in H. A. & M.
47. Jesus, with Thy Church abide. By T. B. Pollock and others in H. A. & M.
49. Light that from the dark abyss Light of the World. By E. B. Birks, Camp, 1874.
50. Lord have mercy, Pity take. Ti. Jesus. T. B. Pollock.
51. My sins have taken such an hold. By J. S. B. Morrell.
52. My sin, my sin, O God, my sin. B. Morrell.
55. Pity us, heaven Father. J. S. B. Morrell.
56. Raise, Jesus, Thee we greet. Lent. And Ascension. By V. Hutton in Mrs. Brock’s Children’s H. Bk., 1861. Sometimes Lord, enthroned on high.”
57. Raise, Lord, enthroned on high. G. Moutrier, in his Primer, 1864, I.
59. Son of God, for man decreed. Word. By T. B. Pollock in H. A. & M.
60. Spirit blest, who art adored. T. B. Pollock.
63. Word Eternal, Uncreate. As printed in R. Collins’s Hymns for Music and again in the 1842 Appendix to the Bp.
64. Word made Flesh, Emmanuel. Eucharistic Hymnal, 1877.
65. When my feet have wandered. B. Morrell.

3. In many instances the order in this list is those of the several Litanyes. This was the main great majority of the Litanyes hymn-books with the Innocent Trinity. “God the Father, God the Son, God the Holy Ghost.” For the listing of the parts of Litanyes elided, nor are the first lines of the “Seven Words on the Cross” of parts 2-4 of the “Four (see No. 37).”

6. The Litanyes attributed to Baker appeared in H. A. & M. Hutton, in a Supplement to the old, pub. by him in 1875: W. P. & Hymn, for the Church, 13, first on broadsheets, then in the People’s H., 1867;
LITTLE CHILDREN, DWELL

Little children, dwell in love. H. Alfred. [St. John the Evangelist.] First appeared in his Hymns for the Sundays and Festivals throughout the Year, 1836 (see: The Life) in 4 st. of 4 l. In 1844 it was included in his Ps. & Hymns, No. 15, and marked, in error, as published therein for the first time. It is found in his Year of Praise, 1867; and in his Poetical Works, in the 8th ed. of which, 1868, it is dated 1855. It has passed into a few hymnals only.

[4. J.]

Little drops of water. [Importance of Little Things.] The original of this hymn, by Dr. C. Brewer, was first pub. in Reading and Spelling, 1848, in 8 st. of 4 l. Subsequently it reappeared in a very much altered and improved form in the American Journal of Missionary Magazine, also in 8 st. From that magazine it was copied into Hymns and Sacred Songs, pub. at Manchester by Fletcher and Tubbs, 1855, and from that collection it has passed into numerous children's hymnals in the United Kingdom. Where the version found in the greatest number of collections is compared with the original it is found that the leading thought of the hymn and the first stanza are all that remain of that first published by Dr. Brewer, thus:

Dr. Brewer, 1848.

1. Little drops of water,
Little grains of sand,
Make the mighty ocean,
Make the beautiful land.

2. Strain by strain the wavy stream,
Pours its easy west,
Leaf by leaf the forest stands in verdure.

3. Letter after letter,
Words and books are made;
Little and by little Mountains level laid.

4. Drop by drop is iron
Worn in time away,
Perseverance, patience,
Ever win their way.

5. Every finished labour
Once did but begin;
Try and go on trying,
That's the way to win.

The somewhat unfinished American text was extensively adopted to 1876, when H. Bickersteth, in the revised edition of his Hymns, comp. made it more complete by adding:

6. Little ones in glory
Swell the angels' song,
Make us meet, dear parents,
For their holy throng.

This last thought was taken up by Prebendary Thring, and in his Collection, 1880-92, was thus elaborated:

Little children's angels,
Happy in the sky,
See their Heavenly Father
On his throne in high.

Glory then for ever
Be to Father, Son
With the Holy Spirit
Blessed Three in One.

In this manner has been built up a very pleasing and popular children's hymn out of a short poem of no interest or merit save its one idea of the power of little things. [J. J.]

Littledale, Richard Frederick, L.L.D., D.C.L., F.S.A., of John Richard Littledale, merchant, was b. at Dublin on the 16th of Sept., 1838, and was educated at Belvedere House Seminary, and Trinity College, Dublin. His University career was distinguished. In 1852 he became an University Scholar; in 1854 he was First Class in Classics and Gold Medallist; in 1856 he won the Berkeley gold medal (for Greek), and other honours. He graduated B.A., 1855, M.A., 1858, L.L.D., 1859, and D.C.L. at Oxford, 1862. Taking Holy Orders in 1856, he was Curate of St. Matthew's, in Thorpe Hamlet, Norwich, from 1836 to 1857, and of St. Mary the Virgin, St. John's Hall, London, from 1857 to 1861. Through ill-health he retired from parochial work in 1861, and devoted himself to literature. Dr. Littledale's publications amount to about fifty in all, and embrace Theological, Historical, Liturgical, and Hymnological subjects chiefly. His prose works include:

1. Application of Colour to the Decoration of Churches, 1857;
2. Religious Communion of Women in the Early Church, 1863;
3. Orthodox Ritual in the Church of England, 1861;
5. Commentary on the Song of Songs, 1860;
6. The Psalter of the Church of Rome, 1870-84;
7. Plain Hymns and Psalms, against joining the Church of Rome, 1869, (a) Short History of the Council of Trent; and several articles in the Encyclopaedia Brit., 1852-90. His contributions to periodical literature have been also extensive and valuable.

Dr. Littledale's Liturgical, Devotional, and Hymnological works include:

1. Services of the Holy Eastern Church, in the original Greek, with translation into English, Notes, &c., 1853;
2. Orders for Christmas and Other Services, 1863;
3. The Priest's Prayer Book, with hymns, 1864, and with Bishop's Litany, 1878;
4. The People's Hymnal, 1861; (a) The Children's Catechism;
5. A Doctrinal Hymnary, 1856;
6. The Holy Orders and Translations, 1860-80;
7. Children of the Church: being The Stations of the Cross in metre for Singing, 1872;
8. The Christian Psalms, 1871;
9. The Silver Manual, 1865-77. He was joint Editor of Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, with the Rev. J. E. Vaux, and of No. 8, with Dr. Nott.

In addition to a large number of hymns, original and translated, in the above works, Dr. Littledale has also directly contributed original and translated hymns to:

1. Lyra Exegetica, 1863;
2. Lyra Mysica, 1844;
3. Lyra Mystica, 1861;
4. The Exegetical Hymnal, 1872;
5. The Roman Hymnary in English, 1878;
6. The Holy Hymnary, 1861;
7. The Catechis of the Church; (b) to the Night Hours of the Church; (c) to the The Holy Hymnal (Kent's Scottish), 1878; and (d) to The Church Times, The Guardian, &c., &c.

Dr. Littledale's Hymnological works in verse consist of translations of Danish, Swedish, Greek, Latin, Syrian, German, and Italian hymns, together with original Carol, Hymnus, and Metrical Litanies. His translations are annotated elsewhere in this Dictionary (see Index to Authors and Translators); his Carol under Carols; and his Metrical Litany under Litanies. Metrical. His original hymns remain to be noted. These include the following:—

i. In the Priest's Prayer Book, 1861:—
2. Christ, on Whose Face the soldiers. Passiontide.
3. Christ, Who has for sinners suffered Passiontide.
4. God the Father, from on high. For the Sick.
8. O Lord, to Whom the spirits live. All Souls.
9. The clouds of sorrow hang upon mine eyes. For the Mourning.

ii. In the People's Hymnal, 1867:—
10. Christ, our song a lift to Thee. R.V.M.
14. Eternal Shepherd, God most high. Fugacity of a See or Parish.
18. I believe in God the Father. The Creed.
In the Church Times, May 16, 1863.
22. Lord, Whose goodness is ever sure. In time of Plague.
23. Now the sun is in the skies. Morning. In the Church Times, Jan. 27, 1866.
24. O God, of mercy, God of love. For Rain.
25. O God, Whose Saviour is in Thee. For Rain.
27. O sing to the Lord, Whose bountiful hand.
Thanksgiving for Rain.
28. Set upon Sion's wall. Sabbath Day.
30. The flight is over, the crown is won. Burial of a Sister of Mercy.
31. The wintry time hath ended. Thanksgiving for Fair Weather.
32. We are marching through the desert. Processional.
33. When the day hath come at last. The Judgment.

In addition to these, a few of the more widely used of Dr. Littledale's original hymns, as "From hidden source arising," and others, are annotated under their respective first lines. In the People's H., 1867, Dr. Littledale adopted the following signatures:—

A. L. P., i.e., A London Priest.
B. i.e., An initial of a former address.
C. i.e., The initials of a former address.
D. i.e., Dr. Littledale.
E. i.e., Frederick.
F. i.e., Frederick Richard.
G. i.e., Littledale.
P. i.e., Priest of the Church of England.
P. i.e., Priest's Prayer Book.

Taken as a whole, Dr. Littledale's trio from the seven languages named above are characterized by general faithfulness to the original, great simplicity of diction, good metre, smooth rhythm, and deep earnestness. His original compositions are usually on special subjects, for which, at the time they were written, there were few hymns, and are marked by the same excellent features of a good hymn as his translations. His main object throughout is to teach through Praise and Prayer. [J. J.]

LO! AT NOON TIS SUDDEN

3. My [our] times are in Thine hand. My God, I wish them there. Resignation. (182.)
4. When is the time of spring? Spring.
5. Wait, my soul, upon the Lord. In Affliction.

(182.)

The date given above, 1835, is from Spurgeon's "O. O. H. Bk., 1886," and was supplied by D. Sedgwick. We have no other authority for that date. The earliest we can find is No. 3, which is in Hymns for the Poor of the Flock, 1838. That hymn is very popular.

[J. J.]

LO! at noon 'tis sudden night. Ann Gilbert, née Taylor. [Good Friday.] From Hymns for Infant Minds, 1819, No. 25, in 6 st. of 6 L., and entitled "Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners" (ed. 1863, p. 53). This is a kindred hymn to her "Jesus, Who lived above the sky," and is quoted in her Memorials, 1871, as an example of beautiful simplicity and accuracy (vol. 1, p. 224). It has attained to a good position among hymns of established worth, is in extensive use, and is one of the most popular of Mrs. Gilbert's compositions. (J. J.)

LO! He comes with clouds descending. Once for favour'd sinners slain.

[The Second Advent.] The hymn in modern collections which opens with these lines is a cento of a somewhat complicated character, and will need, for clearness and accuracy, the reproduction of the original text of several hymns.

1. The first form of the hymn is by John Cennick. There is evidence to show that it was sung by the congregation of the Moravian Chapel, in Dublin, on April 20, 1750; but the earliest printed text known appeared in the fifth (1752) ed. of Cennick's Collection of Sacred Hymns, &c., Dublin, [Samuel] Powell, and is as follows:—

[1] "Lo! He comes, countless trumpe tons Blow before his bloody sign!'
'Midst ten thousand saints and angels,
See the Crucified rise.

Alleluia!

Welcome, welcome bleeding Lamb!"

[2] "Now His merits by the harpers,
'Three' the eternal deeps resounds
Now resounding shine His nail-prints,
Every eye shall see His wounds:
They who pierced Him,
Shall at His appearing wait.

[3] "Every island, sea, and mountain,
Heav'n and earth shall flee away;
All who hate Him must, ashamed,
Hear the trumpet proclaim his day;
Come to judgment;

Stand before the Son of Man!"

[4] "All who love Him view His glory,
Shining in His bruised face.
His dear Person on the rainbow,
Now His people's bread shall raise:
Happy mourners:
Now on clouds He comes! He comes!

[5] "Now redemption long expected,
Now, in solemn pomp appear;
All Him people, once despised,
Now shall meet Him in the air:
Alleluia!

Now the promised kingdom's come!"

[6] "View Him smiling, now determined
Every will to destroy:
All the nations now shall sing Him
Songs of everlasting joy!

Alleluia! come Lord, come!"

2. The next form is by Charles Wesley. In 1758 was published the Hymns of Intercession for All Mankind, a tract of 40 hymns. (P. Works, 1868-72, vi. 143.) Of these there were three in the same metre, viz.:—

xxviii. "Rise, ye dearly purchased sinners."
xxix. "Lo! He comes with clouds descending."

The original text of the second of these two hymns is as follows:—

"1. Lo! He comes with clouds descending.
Once for favour'd sinners slain:
Ten thousand, thousand Saints attending,
Swell the triumph of His train:
Hallelujah,

God appears, on earth to reign!

2. Every eye shall now behold Him,
Kneel'd in dreadful majesty,
Those who set at naught and sold Him,
Pier'd, and nail'd Him to the tree,
Deeply wailing

Shall the true Messiah see.

3. The dear tokens of his passion Still His darling head retains,
Cause of endless admiration
To his ransomed worshippers;

Gaze we on these glorious scars!

4. Ye, Amen! let all adore Thee
High on thine eternal throne;
Saviour, take the power and glory,
Claim the kingdom for thine own:
Jehovah, come down."

3. The third form of the text is really the first form of the modern cento. It was given by M. Maden in his Coll. of Ps. &c., 1760, No. 42. The text, with Maden's alterations in italics, is as follows:—

From "Lo! He comes with Clouds descending.
Wesley. Once for favour'd sinners slain:
Those who set at naught and sold Him,
Pier'd, and nail'd Him to the Tree,
Deeply wailing

Shall the true Messiah see.

From "Every Island, sea, and Mountain,
Churich. Heav'n and earth shall flee away;
All who hate Him must, confessed,
Hear the trumpet proclaim the day:
Come to judgment;

Come to Judgment; come away."

From "Now Redemption long expected,
Churich. See! in solemn pomp appear;
All His Enemies, by Man rejected,
Now shall meet Him in the Air:
Hallelujah!

See the day of God appear!

From Answer thine own Bride and Spirit,
Wesley. Hasten, Lord, the general doom!
Hymn No. The New Heav'n and Earth inherit, excised. Take Thy going-exiting Home,
as above.
All Creations
Travails: groans: and bids thee come.

From "Ye! Amen! Let all adore Thee,
Wesley. High on thine eternal throne;
Saviour, take the power and glory;
Claim the kingdom for thine own:

Come quickly:
Churich. Hallelujah! come, Lord, come!"

4. This cento, with the omission of st. v.
came into general use, and was rarely altered until after 1830, when Hall, in his Mitre H. Bk., 1836, and others, began to tamper with the text. Several editors were assiduous in making their alterations and changes in the text through T. Oliver's hymn, "Come, Immortal King of Glory" (q.v.), first pub. in 20 ste. without date; and then in 36 ste. in 1763.

The fourth st. of the 1763 text reads:

"Lo! He comes with clouds descending;
Hark! the trumpet of God is blown;
And th'archangel's voice attending,
Make the high procession known,
Sons of Adam,
Rise and stand before your God."

A cento from this hymn, and beginning with this stanza, is given in Lord Selborne's Book of Praise, 1862. Either from the original, or from Lord Selborne's cento, several lines by Oliver are interwoven in some modern collections with Mudan's cento of 1760, as in Thring's Coll., 1862, where in st. iv. lines 3, 4 are from Oliver's st. xxx.

5. The alterations which are found in the Mudan cento in modern hymn-books are very numerous, and range from a single word to several lines. Of these altered versions more than twenty exist in the hymn-books now in C. U. in English-speaking countries. These alterations have not been made to suit any special school of thought, and in most cases they weaken, instead of strengthening the hymn. They can easily be detected by comparing any text with those given above.

6. Amongst the imitations of this hymn that are in C. U. we have "Lo! He comes with clouds descending," with st. ii., beginning "See the universe in motion." This imitation embodies a great many lines from Wesley's text. It is by M. Bridges, and was pub. in his Hymns of the Church, 1843, in 5 st. In 1855 it was printed in H. W. Beecher's Plymouth Pulpit, with the omission of st. iv., and attributed to Bridges in error. A second imitation is: "Lo! He comes with pomp victorious." This is given anonymously in the 1876 ed. of E. Harland's Church Psalter and Hymnal.

7. The Cennick-Wesley cento (Mudan's) is one of the most popular hymns in the English language, and is in extensive use in all English-speaking countries. It has also been translated into many languages. The tr. into Latin, "Nubes ventos et descendit," by the Rev. C. B. Pearson in his Latin Texts of English Hymns, 1862, p. 19, is from Wesley's text, with the addition of Cennick's st. iv.

8. The history of the tune "Oliver's" in its original form, and also in its recast form as "Helmley," both of which are inseparably associated with this hymn, is given by Major Crawford in Grove's Dictionary of Music, vol. ii. p. 161. It appears from this article that Thomas Oliver (who is named above, and is the author of the popular hymn "The God of Abraham praise") constructed a tune partly out of a concert-room song, beginning "Guardian angels, now protect me," and the same was published in Wesley's Select Hymns and Tunes Annotated, 1765, under the title "Oliver's." In 1769 it was restyled by M. Mudan, and published under the name of "Helmley," in his Collection of Hymn and Psalm Tunes. Four years afterwards a burlesque called The Golden Pippin (1769) was produced in London, and failed. In 1776 it was revived in a shortened form, and one of the actresses, Miss Catley, introduced into it the melody of "Guardian angels," adapted to the words of the burlesque. Although there is no indication of this in the books, it is most likely that Miss Catley, for the purpose out of the then prevailing musical fashion, and thus to "Miss Catley's Hornpipe," the tune out of the tune. (See Major article in the Dict. of Music, for music together with the music in its original form.

Lo, what a glorious sight appears. I. Watts. [The Kingdom of Christ.] 1st pub. in his Hymn A. S. Songs, 1707, as a paraphrase of Isa. xii. 1-4, in 6 st. of 4 l. (2nd ed. 1709, Bk. 1, No. 21). It was composed by Watts for the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts. It is in C. U. in G. Britain and America. The most popular hymn with the opening line is, however, a tune compiled from it and Watts's "We'll stand the test of God's command," Hymn A. S. Songs, 1709, Bk. 1, No. 43), which is in No. 57 of the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases of 1781. In the Draft Tr. & Paraph. 1745, No. 38, the cento was thus given:

St. vi., from Watts, No. 21, as above.
St. viii., from Watts, No. 44, as above.
St. xiii., from Watts, No. 21, as above.

In the authorized Tr. and Paraph. of 1781, this text was repeated with slight alterations, and has been in C. U. in Scotland and elsewhere to the present time. From the markings by the eldest daughter of W. Cameron (p. 44), we gather that the authorized Scottish text of 1781 was arranged and altered by Cameron. It should be designated I. Watts, 1707-9, Scottish Tr. & Paraph. 1745, and W. Cameron, 1781. In Miss Jane E. Lees's Paraph. & Hymns, 1833, the Scottish cento is re-arranged as a hymn in 4 st., beginning "From heaven, the glorious city comes." [J. J.]

Lobet den Herren, denn er ist sehr freundlich. [Grace after Meat.] Founded on Ps. cxlviii. 3, Bode, p. 516, cites this as in the Ludwig Schloßchoral zu Torquay, printed at Leipzig, 1565, where it has 9 st. of 4 l., and is printed after the instruction on the First Commandment. Weckermann, p. 226, quotes it from a Nürnberg broadside a.d. 1560 (Zwey Schönegeistliche Lieder), and from the Leipzig G. B. 1582, in 7 st., and this form is in the U. L., 1851, No. 499. The only tr. in C. U. is noted under "Lobet den Herren alle die ihm dienen." (see p. 411, fo.)

Lobwasser, Ambrosius, b. of Fabian, Lobwasser, inspector of mines at Schneeberg, Saxons, was b. at Selbeneberg, April 4, 1550. After studying law at Leipzig (1545) he returned there as University tutor until 1550. After acting as travelling tutor, he was appointed in 1557 Ruth and Chancellor at Meissen, and in 1562 made a tour in Italy, and received the degree of LL.D. from the University of Bologna. He was finally appointed in 1563 by Duke Albrecht of Prussia as professor of law and now at the High Court of Justice at Königskerberg. He d. at Königsberg Nov. 27, 1585 (Koch, ii. 384-401, &c.).

The principal poetical work was his version of the Psalter, which is noted under Psalters, German, p. 1, fo. 100. He has been translated into English in recent times, viz.: The Knecht des Herren all zugleich. [Pr. cxxviv.] The original is Leibniz's version of the Psalms, "On the services of the Highest," which first appeared in his Vierzehn-quadamantische Gedichte, Leipzig, 1651. Lobwasser's version is in his Psalter des königlichen Prophan-Preachers, Leipzig, 1653 (not passed), in 3 st. of 4 l., entitled "He encourages the people to fulfill their calling diligently, and assures them that God will grant them his grace." same. In 1835 he removed to Harvard, on his election as Professor of Modern Languages and Belles-Lettres. He retained that Professorship to 1854. His literary reputation is great, and his writings are numerous and well known. His poems, many of which are as household words in all English-speaking countries, display much learning and great poetic power. A few of these poems and portions of others have come into C. U. as hymns, but a hymn-writer in the strict sense of that term he was not and never claimed to be.
Hymns in C. U. as hymns include:

1. Also, how poor and little worth. Life a Race. Tr. from the Spanish of Don Jorge Manrique (d. 1479), in Longfellow's Poetry of Spain, 1833.

2. All is of God; if He but wake His hand.
God All and in All. From his poem "The Two Angels," pub. in his Birds of Passage, 1858. It is in the Boston Hymn. of the Spirit, 1864, &c.

From his Miscellaneous Poems, 1841, into G. W.
Conder's 1874 Appendix to the Leeds H. B. 4th

4. Christ to the young man said. "Yet one thing more." Ordination. Written for his brother's (S. Longfellow) ordination in 1848, and pub. in Seaside and Friends, 1851. It was given in an altered form as "The Saviour said, yet one thing more," in H. W. Beecher's Plymouth Colle., 1855.

5. Down the dark future through long generations. Peace. This, the closing part of his poem on "The Arsenal at Springfield," pub. in his Belfry of Bennes, &c., 1845, was given in A Book of Hymns, 1848, and repeated in several collections.

from the German (see Sails).

7. Tell me not in mournful numbers. Psalm of Life. Pub. in his Voices of the Night, 1839, as "A Psalm of Life: What the heart of the Young Man said to the Psalmist." It is given in several hymnals in G. Britain and America.
In some collections it begins with st. ix., "Life is real! Life is earnest."

The universal esteem in which Longfellow was held as a poet and a man was marked in a special manner by his bust being placed in that temple of honour, Westminster Abbey.

Longfellow, Samuel, m.a., brother of the Poet, was b. at Portland, Maine, June 18, 1819, and educated at Harvard, where he graduated in Arts in 1839, and in Theology in 1846. On receiving ordination as an Unitarian Minister, he became Pastor at Tall River, Massachusetts, 1846; at Brooklyn, 1853; and at Germantown, Pennsylvania, 1860. In 1846 he edited, with the Rev. S. Johnson
(q. v.), A Book of Hymns for Public and Private Devotion. This collection was enlarged and revised in 1848. In 1859 his Vesper was pub., and in 1864 the Unitarian Hymns of the Spirit, under the joint editorship of the Rev.
S. Johnson and himself. His Life of his brother, the Poet Longfellow, was pub. in 1886.
To the works named he contributed the following hymns:

i. To A Book of Hymns, revised ed., 1848.

ii. To the Vespers, 1859.
3. Again as evening's shadow falls. Evening.

iii. To the Hymns of the Spirit, 1864.
10. I look to Thee in every need. Trust in God.
11. In the beginning was the Word. The Word.
12. Love for all, and can it be? Lord. The Prodigal

13. O God, in Whom we live and move. God's Law and Love.
15. O will in accents sweet and strong. Missions.
16. O God, Whose liberal sun and rain. Commendation of Church dedication.
17. One holy Church of God appears. The Church Universal.
18. Out of the dark, the circling sphere. The Watcher.
19. Peace, peace on earth! the heart of man for ever.
Peace on earth.
20. The loving Friend to all who bowed. Jesus of Nazareth.

Of these, hymn No. 2 was written for the Ordination of E. E. Hale (q. v.), at Worcester, 1846. Several are included in Martineau's Hymns, 1873.

Look down, O Lord, and on our youth. T. Cottrell. [Confirmation.] Appeared in the 9th ed. of his Sel., 1820, No. 120, in 6 st. of 4 L, and headed, "Intercession for Children about to be Confirmed." It has passed into a large number of hymn-books, and is popular as a Confirmation hymn. [J. J.]

Look down, O Lord, with pitying eye. P. Doddridge. [Missions.] This hymn is No. 66 in the n. m., but is undated. It was pub. by J. Orrin in his ed. of Doddridge's (posthumous) Hymns, &c., 1755, No.
14. In 5 st. of 4 L, and again in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 14. It is based on Ezekiel's Vision of the Dry Bones, and is in C. U. in G. Britain and America.

Look in pity, Lord of Glory. E. Cas-wall. [Confirmation.] This hymn is composed from a "Hymn for the Renewal of Baptismal Vows," first pub. in his May Pa-gen and other Poems, 1855. It is written to be sung in parts, divided into a "Solo,"
"Chorus," and a portion to be sung by "All.
In the People's H., each of these parts has been laid under contribution to furnish hymn 346.
Caswall's revised text is in his Hymns & Poems
1873, p. 296.

Lord, at Thy Table I behold. S. Stennett. [Holy Communion.] Appeared in Hymns for All Denominations, Lon. 1782, No. 42, and in Rippon's Hymn. Sel., 1787, No. 482, in st. of 4 l., and entitled "A Sacramental Hymn." It was given as by "Dr. J. Stennett"; but the "J." is a misprint for "S." This error is repeated in most collections. The use of this hymn, usually in an abridged form, is somewhat extensive in G. Britain and America, and especially amongst the Baptists. [J. J.]

Lord, at Thy temple we appear. I. Watts. [Nunc Dimittis.] This is given as "The Song of Simeon: or, Death made desirable," in his Hymns & Spiritual Songs, 1709, Bk. 1, No. 19, in st. of 4 l. It is in use in G. Britain and America. In the Leets H. Bk., 1853, No. 647, st. v., vi. are given as, "Jesus, the vision of Thy Face." The use of this abbreviated form is limited. [J. J.]
The authorship of this hymn has long been a matter of doubt. From 1775 to 1780 it appeared in many collections, but always without signature, in common with all the hymns in the same collections; and from 1786 to 1800, when it was given in collections wherein hymns were assigned to their respective authors, as the composition of "F" and "Fawcett." The details taken the leading collections are:

1. In A Collection of Psalms and Hymns, published in London, J. & W. Oliver, 2nd ed., No. 234. In this st. 1, 4, is altered to Travelling thru this wilderness.

2. In A. M. Toplady's Psalms and Hymns, 1st ed., No. 168, with alterations as—

St. III. 2. 4. May thy presence
With us eternally be found.

St. VI. 1. 5, 6. In the Lady Huntington's collection, under the editorship of the Hon. and Rev. Walter Shirley. In this case we have the altered text of Toplady repeated for the first time.

To this date no indication of authorship can be found either in the above collections, or in contemporary literature. Thirteen years after its first appearance in Suppl. to the Shrewsbury H. Bk. the history is again taken up, but in a more definite form, thus:

St. I. 1. In A Selection of Psalms for Social Worsh., &c., published at York, by A. Ward. This Unitarian collection contains the first four lines only of st. I, and III, and these are signed "F." This initial we find from the list of authors given in the collection represents J. Fawcett (q.v.) a Nonconformist Minister formerly of Walsingham, Yorkshire, and then of Huddersfield Bridge, in the same county. A shade of doubtfulness, however, in throws over the appreciation of authorship in this collection by the editor preferring his list, with these words, "The approbation of names as it depended much on the compiler's memory, he wishes it to be observed, that there may probably be some mistakes, but he hopes they are not many." Preface, p. 212. In the 5th ed. of Harris's collection, No. 11, George Lamerton, Robert Green, and John Jones, it is given as in Dr. Conyers's Collection, and signed Fawcett.

St. IV. 1. In A Collection of Psalms and Hymns for the Nondenominational Church in the Parish of Charles, Plymouth, 9th ed. Published by the Rev. Edward Smith, 1820. In the Crawford and Eberle Index to the Irish Church Hymnal, 1876, p. 53, the editors say—

It is found also, but with considerable alterations, in the Rev. Edward Smith's Collection, Manchester, 1785.
of these two versions of that by Hawker seems to be the elder, and is possibly by Hawker himself. It is ascribed to him in Rugby-school Life of the Rev. R. & Hawker, where, however, Mr. Bronghton has inadvertantly quoted the hymn with Fanetti's text, which is found in the latest edition of the Charles collection (1841), but was then introduced in it for the first time by the editor, the Rev. H. A. Graves. If the eight-stanza is by Dr. Hawker, it must have appeared in his collection before 1793. He became Vicar of Chichester 1744, and the Sunday School was established in 1747.

From the time of its appearance in the Charles and the Manchester Collections to the present, it has been reprinted in numerous hymnals, including D. Simpson's Wesleyan
Col. 1785; the Hymns, 1800; Williams &
Boden, 1801; Bailey's Sion's Melodies, 1813-1860, and others. In the last case it is given in two stanzas from "Smyth's Manchester Collection" as noted above.

iii. The third hymn is:

"Lord, dismiss us with Thy blessing,
Thanks for mercies past receive;
Pardon all their faults confessing;
Time that's lost, may all retrieve!
May Thy children
Ne'er again Thy Spirit grieve!
Bless Thou, all our days of leisure
Sanctify our every pleasure,
Pure and spotless may it be:
May our gladness
Draw us evermore to Thee!
By Thy kindly influence cherish
All the good we here have gained;
May all aid of evil depart,
By Thy mightier power restrained;
Seek we ever
Knowledge pure and love unfeigned!
Let Thy Father-hand be shielding
All who here shall meet no more;
May their need-time past be yielding
Year by year a richer store;
Those returning
Make more faithful than before!"

This hymn is by the Rev. H. J. Buckoll, some time Adjutant Master in Rugby School;
and it appeared in the Ps. & Hymns for the Use of Rugby School Chapel, 1850, No. 56, and appeared "For the last Sunday of the Half-Year." It had a companion hymn by Buckoll
"For the first Sunday of the Half-Year" (No. 55), the opening stanza of which reads:

"Lord, behold us with Thy blessing,
Once again assembled here;
Ourselves in Thy grace resting,
In Thy love, and faith, and fear!
May Thy presence ever near!"

These hymns have been repeated in most of the modern public学校 hymn-books.

iv. The fourth hymn is the following:

"Lord, dismiss us with Thy blessing,
Guide us in Thy holy ways,
That Thy love and joy possessing,
May we ever sing Thy praise.
Hallelujah! Amen.
That Thy love and joy possessing,
We may ever sing Thy praise.
Low in supplication bending,
We adore Thine power divine;
Hallelujah! never ending
Through eternity be Thine?
Hallelujah! Amen
Hallelujah! never ending
Through eternity be Thine!"

This hymn is given in A. S. of Ps. & Hymns, published at Rugby, by J. T. Walters, in 1850.
The Preface is signed "F. E. P."

The hymns are given anonymously.

Lord, have mercy when we [pray] strive.
H. H. Milman. [Lent] 1st pub. in Bp. Heber's posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 94, in 3 st. of 8 l., with the refrain "Oh then have mercy! Lord!" and repeated in the author's Ps. & Hgs., 1837. In addition to its use in its original form, it is also given in several collections as "Lord, have mercy when we pray," as in the People's Hr., 1867; and, with st. ii. and iii. transposed, in the 1869 Appendix to the 8. P. C. K. Ps. & Hgs. Because of its refrain it is sometimes regarded as a Metrical Litany.

[J. J.]

Lord, her watch Thy Church is keeping.
H. Downham. [Foreign Missions] Written for a meeting of the Church Missionary Society, and first pub. in H. Downham's Psalms and Hymns, 1867, No. 179, in 3 st. of 8 l., and again in the author's Hymns & Verses, 1876, p. 1. It is also found in the 8. P. C. K. Church Hymn Book, 1871; H. A. & M., 1873; Thring's Coll., 1882, and many others in G. Britain and America, and ranks with the best of the author's compositions. It is sometimes given as "Lord, Thy Church her watch is keeping," as in Common Praise, 1879, and others.

[J. J.]

Lord, how shall wretched sinners dare.
Anne Steele. [In Time of War.] Appeared in the 2nd ed. of her Poems on Subjects chiefly Devotional, 1780, vol. ii. p. 128, in 8 st. of 4 l., as well as in the author's Hymns & Verses, 1876, p. 1. It is also found in the 8. P. C. K. Church Hymn Book, 1871; H. A. & M., 1873; Thring's Coll., 1882, and many others in G. Britain and America, and ranks with the best of the author's compositions. It is sometimes given as "Lord, may our souls Thy grace adore." It begins with st. iii., somewhat altered.

[J. J.]

Lord, I am Thine, but Thou wilt prove.
I. Watts. [Ps. xlviii.] 1st pub. in his Psalms of David, &c., 1719, in 6 st. of 6 l., and headed "The Sinners' Portion and the Sinners' Hope; or, The Heavens of Separate Sinners and the Resurrection." It is given in its original form in the H. Comp., and in a few other hymn-books. In addition there are also the following abbreviations in C. U.:

1. All, all is vanity below. This is an altered form of st. iv.-vi. It appeared in the 2nd ed. of Cowper's Sel., 1818, and is found in several modern collections, including that for the Harrow School Chapel, and others.

2. What woe is mine? I resign. This is the most popular form of the hymn, and is in extensive use in G. Britain and America. It appears in A. M. Toplady's Ps. & Hgs., 1775, No. 184.

[J. J.]

Lord, I am vile, conceived in sin.
I. Watts. [Ps. v.] 1st pub. in his Ps. of David, &c., 1719, in 7 st. of 4 l. In the American Church Hymnals, Boston, 1864, st. i., iv.-vi. are given as one hymn (No. 381), and st. iii. and vii. beginning "Great God, create my heart anew," as another (No. 306).

The hymn is also in use in its full form. Its original heading is "Original and actual sin confessed." [J. J.]

Lord, I believe a rest remains.
C. Wesley. [Holiness desired.] Pub. in Hym. & Soc. Ps. & Hgs., 1742, in 22 st. of 4 l., and headed, "The Spirit and the Bride say Come" (P. Works, 1869-72, vol. ii. p. 389). In its original form it is an expression of faith in the doctrine of "Entire Holiness," or "Perfection," as understood by the early Methodists, and a prayer for personal possession of the same. In the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, C. Wesley included a cento therefrom as No. 801, embodying the same doctrine and prayer, the second and third stanzas of which read:

"A rest, where all our souls' desires
Is fixed on things above,
Where fear, and sin, and grief expire,
God out by perfect love!"

"0 that I now the rest might know,
Believe, and enter in:
Now, Saviour, now the power bestow,
And let me come in from sin."

Wesley's theological opponents, however, had another cento from the same hymn in use for some years before, in which the rest was changed from a word which stood for the doctrine of "Entire Holiness," into a term descriptive of the eternal peace of Heaven. This is one of those changes in the text of the Wesley hymns which J. Wesley denounced in the Preface of the Wes. H. Bk. It was made by A. M. Toplady, and appeared in his Ps. & Hgs., 1776, No. 52. Stanzas ii., iii. read (with the changes in the text in italics):

"Then shall I sing and never tire,
In that blessed house above,
Where doubt, and fear, and pain expire,
God out by perfect love.

Celestial Spirit, make me know
That I shall enter in;
Now, Saviour, now the power bestow,
And wash us from my sin."

These two centos are in C. U. in most English-speaking countries, and are distinguished by the stanzas quoted above. In addition, st. xv. and xvii. of the original are given in the American Church Hymnals, Boston, 1864, as "Come, O my Saviour, come away." [J. J.]

Lord, I confess my sins to Thee.
C. Wesley. [Redemption desired.] Pub. in Hym. & Soc. Ps. & Hgs., 1742, in 22 st. of 4 l., and headed, "The Spirit and the Bride say Come" (P. Works, 1869-72, vol. ii. p. 383). In 1780 J. Wesley gave a cento therefrom in 9 st. in the Wes. H. Bk., No. 833, as "O joyous sound of soul's salvation! This has been repeated in several collections.

[J. J.]

Lord, I desire to live as one.
Charlotte L. Bancroft. [Holiness desired.] In Spurgeon's 2 Y
O. O. H. Bk., 1866, this hymn is given in 4 st. of 4 l., and dated 1861. This text is also in other collections. In her Within the Veil, 1867, Mrs. Bancroft gives it as the last hymn in the volume, in 6 st. of 4 l. with a note saying that the hymn was revised for that work. In this text the additional sts. are v., vii. [W. T. B.]

Lord, I have made Thy word my choice. J. Watts. [Ps. cxix. Pt. viii.] 1st pub. in his Psalms of David, &c., 1719, p. 319, in 4 st. of 4 l. and headed, "The Word of God is the Saint's Portion; or, The Excellency and Variety of Scripture." Its use has extended to almost all English-speaking countries, and it is found in a large number of hymn-books at home and abroad. [J. J.]

Lord, I hear of showers of blessing. Elizabeth Codner. [Divine Blessing desired.] Although we have the ms. of this hymn in Mrs. Codner's handwriting, sent to D. Sedge- wick from Weston-super-Mare, June 18, 1866, wherein it is stated to have been "written in the summer of 1860," (a ms.), we have no personal facts concerning Mrs. Codner and her work except that she published one or two small books, as The Missionary Ship; The Bible in the Kitchen, &c.; edited the periodical, Woman's Work in the Great Harvest-Field; and was associated for some years with the Mildmay Protestant Mission (London). "Lord, I hear of showers of blessing," was suggested by the news of the religious revival in Ireland, 1860-61. It is in 4 st. of 4 l., with the refrain "Even me," and is headed "Bless me, even me, O my Father." The original text is in Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1866, No. 697. That in I. D. Sankey's Sacred Songs & Solos, Pt. I, which is usually regarded as the original, is altered in several instances, and st. vi. is omitted. The hymn in full, or in part, is in extensive use, and is specially popular at Mission Services. In 1867 Mrs. Codner wrote a companion hymn of Praise, "Lord, to Thee my heart ascending," in 8 st. of 4 l., for the Rev. E. P. Hammond's Hymn specially adapted for Seasons of Deep Religious Interest, &c., 1867. [J. J.]

Lord, I magnify Thy power. C. Wesley. [For Daily Strength.] Given in his Hymn for Use of Families, 1767, No. 53, in 4 st. of 8 l. (F. Works, 1868-72, vol. vii. p. 60). In the Wesley Bk., 1780, No. 327, st. iii. and iv. were given as "Father, in the Name I pray," It has passed into other collections. G. J. Stevenson's annotations of this hymn in his Meth. H. Bk. Notes, 1883, p. 240, are of more than usual interest. [J. J.]

Lord, if Thou Thy grace impart. C. Wesley. [Ps. cviii.] 1st pub. in the enlarged ed. of the Wesley Ps. & Hymns, 1743, in 5 st. of 4 lines. It is one of C. Wesley's finest renderings of the Psalms: and although not admitted into the Wesley Bk. until the revised ed. of 1875, it has been in extensive use in the Church of England and amongst Nonconformists for more than a hundred years. During that time numerous variations have crept into the text. The first to illustrate it was M. Madan, in his Ps. & Hymns, 1790, from his version Church of England and Nonconformist compilers have taken their texts, and have added thereto, instance, something of their two collections are found to changes cannot be given in de- picting the full text from a hymn book in which the hymn is a peculiar feature of all is that in Church Hymns, 1871, No. 418. Of the 5 lines only are by C. H. 1, 2; st. ii. 1, 1: st. iv. l. being from Madan, 1790; Ben- net Psalms, 1833; Hall's 1836; and several others. Tho interleaved that no one else has hymnology can unravel the col- umn Common Praise, 1879, the hymn alterations and the omission of do Thou Thy grace impart.'

Lord, in the day Thou a Museon. A. Mason. [Security in God.] i Mason's Spiritual Songs; or, So &c., 1683, appeared in the Misc. Hymn (by J. H. Gurney and No. 118. It is thus composed:

Lord, in this Thy mercies. A. Williams. [Lent.] A Metrical hymn is taken from "Image of a poem on "The Day of Days: Manifestation," in 153 st. of 31 a part of his work, The Holy Way of Eternal Life, 1814. Its slight changes in the Book of Psalms, 1833, in 6 st. It has been reprinted in numerous collections in Britain and America, and is a metrical Litany for Lent.

Lord, in Thy kingdom. J. Anthony. [Unity.] Pri- nce in his posthumous Hymns, 1836. It is based on the Epistle for the Trinity, Eph. iv. In 1841 it was The Child's Christian Year, 1841. It has passed into a few collections; it was, 1863, where it is expanded 8 l. by the addition of a doxology.

Lord, in Thy Name to plead. J. Keble. [Redemption in Christ.] at Malvern, Aug. 4, 1856, and Salisbury H. Bk., 1857, No. 10 4 l., including a doxology. It is repeated with slight changes in Pott's Hymns, &c., 1861; the Church Hymns, 1871, and others, in the Salisbury H. Bk.; doxology another, and at other times with the Sarum Hymn, 1868. In (hymnous) Miscellaneous Poems. Its use is extensive.

LORD JESUS, WITH WHAT

Baker. [For a School Feast.] This hymn is dated 1822 in Bigge's Annotated ed. of Hymns, A. & M., but its first publication is traced only to H. A. & M., 1831. It has a slight resemblance to Faber's "O Jesu, Good Man," which was pub. in his Jesus and Mary, in 1842. Sir H. W. Baker's hymn is in seven stanzas, the last two of which are "Lord, Jesu, Good Man." It is sometimes given as "Lord Jesu, Good Man." [J. J.]

LORD JESUS, WITH WHAT

Lord, look on all assembled here. J. Hart. [Public Fast.] Pub. in his Hymns Composed on Various Subjects, &c., 1792, No. 96, in 4 st. of 4 L., and named "For a Public Fast." Two arrangements from the text are in the hymn-books. The first appeared in the 1st ed. of Cotterill's Sel., 1810, in 6 stanzas. This was reduced to 4 stanzas in Bickersteth's Christian Psalmody, 1833, and was repeated in this form in later collections of the Church of England. The second arrangement is in the Nonconformist hymnals. It was given in the Leeds H. Bk., 1833, the N. Cong., 1839, &c. [J. J.]

LORD JESUS, WITH WHAT

Lord, not unto me (The whole I disclaim). C. Wesley. [Lord.] 1st pub. in the Hymns on God's Everlasting Love, 1741, No. 2, in 6 st. of 4 L. (P. Works, 1766-72, vol. II, p. 6). In 1780 it was given in the Hymns H. Bk., with the omission of st. 1, as "Thy faithfulness, Lord. Each moment we find," and in this form it has been repeated in several collections in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

LORD JESUS, WITH WHAT

Lord, now the time returns. J. Austin. [Evening.] Pub. in his Devotions in the Ancient Way of Offices, &c., 1668, p. 370, hymn 29, in 8 st. of 4 L., including the doxology; again in the editions by Dorrington, and Hicks, and in the reprint by J. Masters, Lond., 1856. In its full form it is not in C. U.; but, abridged as "Blest be Thy love, dear Lord," it is given in a large number of hymnals in G. Britain and America. Sometimes it is found as "Blessed be Thy love," &c. The original text of this abridged form is in Lord Selborne's Book of Prize, 1862. [J. J.]

LORD JESUS, WITH WHAT

Lord of earth, Thy forming hand. Sir R. Grant. [God the Creator and Preserver.] Appeared in H. V. Elliott's Ps. & Hymns, &c., 1835, in 3 st. of 12 L., and again in Lord Glynne's edition of Grant's Sacred Poems, 1839, No. 3. It is based on Ps. lixii. 23. It is in C. U. in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

LORD JESUS, WITH WHAT

Lord of heaven, and earth, and ocean. J. Cross. [Holy Trinity.] Written for the Second Yorkshire Musical Festival, held at York on the 13th-16th of Sept., 1825, and first sung on that occasion by the Festival choir. On the 20th of Sept., it was printed in the Sheffield Iris newspaper, of which James Montgomery was the editor, together with an account of the Festival, and an estimate that £10,000 had been spent in one way and another in connection therewith; and of this £5,000 were expended in the purchase of Festival tickets. Cross's hymn was included in Bickersteth's Christian Psalmody, 1833, No. 338, and subsequently in a great number of hymn-books. Orig. text in Hy. Comp. [J. J.]

LORD JESUS, WITH WHAT

Lord of hosts, how lovely fair (How bright, how fair). D. Turner. [Public Worship.] 1st pub. in Rippon's Bap. Sel., 1st ed., 1787, No. 342, in 4 st. of 4 L. and entitled, "The Excellency of Public Worship." From Rippon's Sel. it has passed into several non-conformist collections, sometimes in its original form, and also as "Lord of hosts, how bright, how fair," as in the Bapt. Ps. & Hymns, 1838 and 1880. [J. J.]

LORD JESUS, WITH WHAT

Lord of hosts, to Thee we raise. J. Montgomery. [Laying the Foundation Stone, or Opening of a Place of Worship.] The foundation stone of St. George's Church, Sheffield (of which the Rev. W. Mercer was subsequently Incumbent), was laid on the day of the coronation of George IV., July 9, 1821. On that day Montgomery published in his Iris newspaper a leading article on Bonaparte, who died on the 5th of the previous May. Montgomery's original ms. of that article and a set of the coronation medals, and other usual memorials, were placed in a glass jar under the foundation stone (Memoirs, iii. p. 241). This hymn was composed for the occasion; was sung during the ceremony, and was printed in the Iris of Tuesday, July 24, 1821. It was included in Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 647, and in his Original Hymns, 1833, No. 361, and in both instances headed "On Opening a Place of Worship." [J. J.]

LORD JESUS, WITH WHAT

Lord of life, prophetic Spirit. J. Keble. [For Theological College.] A "Hymn for Easter-tide, written for the Book of Prayers at Cuddesdon College" [circa 1854], in 10 st. of 4 L, and repeated in the author's (posthumous) Miscellaneous Poems, 1869, p. 287. In the Sorum H. Bk., it is given in two parts. The first, beginning "Now Thou speakest, hear we trembling," and in other collections, as in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymn, 1871, it is abridged to 6 st., and sometimes less. It is suitable for Ember Days and Ordinations in addition to its Theological College use. [J. J.]

LORD JESUS, WITH WHAT

Lord of mercy and of might. H. R. Heber. [Quinquagesima.] Two forms of this hymn, and both by Heber, are found in his Hymns, &c., 1827. The first form, in 4 st. of 4 L, first appeared in the Christian Observer, Nov. 1811, p. 697, together with three additional hymns by Heber, and is set forth for the "Sunday after Christmas." In his Hymns, &c., 1827, it is given as No. 4, for "Quinquagesima," and reads, as in the Christian Observer:—
Lord of the harvest, once again

Anon. [Harvest.] 1st pub. in his (pseud.) Hymns, 1836, No. 34, in 4 st. o.
In the Child's Christian Year, 1841, repeated without alteration; and from that date it came into general use, but usual slight alterations. It is one of the most popular of Harvest hymns, and is in C. U. English-speaking countries. In this it has been, "O Lord, of once again." Orig. text in Lewis's Book of Praise, 1882.

Lord of the living harvest

Monsell. [Ornament, and Church.] This hymn appears in the hymn-books as a hymn for Ember Days and Ordination, and second, for Church Guilds and Associations.

1. It originally appeared in Dr. Monsell's Hymns and Prayers, 2nd ed., 1844, in 4 st. o. It was repeated in his Hymns, 1872, and the People's ed. of his Hymns, 1873. The last being the authorized text, this text (Hymns, 1st ed., 1846) differs slightly, especially in st. 3. In Monsell the hymn is for the Ordination, and omitting the prayer in support of the ordained themselves. For use at ordinations, Dr. Monsell's authorized form is the better.

2. In the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, it is given in an altered form for Church Guilds, with two slight changes in the text. There is an omission of st. 3, and this was given in the W. F. S. Hymn for the Ch. and Home, 1873, with a note that it was printed from manuscript, and later adopted by the author.

The authorized text of this hymn is (1) for Ordination—that in Dr. M. Parish Hymnal, and (2) for Church Guild Associations, that in Dr. Stevenson's Hymns.

Lord of the ocean, hear our prayers

R. H. Bickersteth. [For Use at Written in 1869 and 1st pub. in his H. Companion, 1870, No. 392, as a hymn used at sea, with the note in the August edition, "This hymn, by the Author, written for this work. It is to be sung by those who follow the rule of the East Indies and those who sail with the wind.] In Hymn Comp., 1870, and the revised ed., the second st. of the Bickersteth's hymn begins, "Amen. Father, hear our cry." Its original fo
LORD OF THE SABBATH

"Lord of the ocean, hear our cry," is in J. J. Bickersteth's Two Brothers, 1871, p. 229.

Mr. G. J. Stevenson, in his Math. H. Bk. Notes, 1883, p. 391, says of this hymn:

"It was probably written in 1756, previously to the post and his brother John sailing to America with General Oglethorpe and the Moravians. This seems to be plainly indicated by the language of the second verse."

"For Thee we leave our native shore,
In other climes Thy works explore."

This view, however, is not that of Dr. Osborn, the editor of the Wesley Hymnary, 1884-92. In The Hymns of the Wesley Family (1884), vol. i, pp. 228-231, there are given the following hymns:—

"Servant of God, the summons hear;"
"Lord of the wide-extended main;"
"Glory to Thee, Whose powerful word;"
"And the first of these ("Servant of God, &c.) Dr. Osborn adds the following note:

"The animating strains of this hymn and the two next are by no means in accordance with Charles Wesley's spiritual condition and mood of mind in December, 1737, when Mr. Whitefield first left England for America. They were more probably composed in preparation for his second voyage, which began in August, 1739. Nor can we imagine anything more suitable for the occasion while in the hymn: -- "To be sung at Sea" ("In the wide-extended main") — and "To a Storm" ("Glory to Thee, Whose powerful word") the Christian and the poet appear to equal advantage. It may be supposed if the full assurance of faith was ever more finely expressed, or at the same time more rationally vindicated, than in the second and third of the three hymns which follow one another here."

This suggestion by Dr. Osborn that the date is 1739 is made almost certain with regard to "Servant of God," &c., and presumably of the other two, by the fact that "Servant of God," &c., is found in Divine Hymns for the Use of the Societies, by Richard Wynn, 1739. This tract contains three hymns, two by Wynn (one addressed to Whitefield) and "Servant of God, the summons hear," by C. Wesley. The Wesleyans, by printing the three hymns, "Servant of God," &c., "Lord of the wide," &c., and "Glory to Thee," &c., as consecutive hymns in the Hymns and Sacred Poems, 1740, seem to fix the date of these hymns as 1739, when Whitefield went on his second voyage to America.

The hymn "Servant of God, the summons hear," is rarely used, whilst "Glory to Thee, Whose powerful word," is given in several collections in America, and as "All praise to Thee, Whose powerful word," in a few in G. Britain.

LORD OF THE WORLDS

I. Watts.

[Ps. lxix.] 1st pub. in his Ps. of David, &c., 1719, in 7 st. of 8 l., as the third version of the 48th Psalm. In addition to its use in its full form, there are also several arrangements of the text, the mote important being—

1. That in the West. H. Bk.. 1765, and many others derived from the same source. This appeared in the Westleys H. Bk., 1785; and in his Ps. and Hymns for the Church, 1783-93, &c. It is a few years earlier, and its use is not equal to its merit.

2. A cento composed of st. vi, iv, and vii. This was added in alterations in Whitefield's Cfts.. 1763; Madan's Ps. and Hymns, 1760; Toplady's Ps. and Hymns, 1778. It is not common in modern hymnals, as Newton, 1868, and Tissington's Cfts.. 1902, some of these alterations are still retained. Usually, however, the text is correct.

3. Other arrangements are given in many modern hymnals, the construction of which may be tested by reference to Watts's Psalms. It will be found in most cases that the original text is retained.

As a paraphrase this ranks amongst the best by Watts. The metre is an imitation of that employed for the first time by John Pulpin, in his Version of the 148th Psalm in G. Britain and America as separate hymns.
the English Psalter, 1560. [See Old Version, iv. ix.] [J. J.]

Lord, shall Thy children come to Thee? Bp. S. Hinds. [Confirmation.] In Sonnets and other Short Poems, chiefly on Sacred Subjects. By Samuel Hinds, D.D., Lond., B. Fellowes, 1834, p. 65, is the following:—

"Confirmation Hymn.

"Lord, shall Thy children come to Thee?
A boon of love divine we seek:
Brought to Thy arms in infancy,
Our hearts could feel no tongue could speak.
Thy children pray for grace, that they May come themselves to Thee this day.
"Lord, shall we come, and come again?
As we see you Table spread,
And, too near of Thy dying guest,
The wise pour'd out, the broken bread;
Bless, bless, O Lord, Thy children's prayer,
That they may come and find Thee there.
"Lord, shall we come, come yet again?
Thy children ask one blessing more—
To come, (not now alone and then,) When life and death and time are o'er,
Then, then to come, O Lord, and be Confirmed in heaven, confirmed by Thee."

When this hymn was included in the Ps. & Hys. for the Use of Rugby School Chapel, Edit 1843 (1850 ed. No. 51), the following stanza by H. J. Buckell, was added as st. iii., thus making a hymn of 4 st.:—

"Lord, shall we come? not thus alone
At holy fame, or solemn rite?
But every hour till life be flown,
Through weal or woe, in gloom or light,—
Come to Thy throne of grace, that we
In faith, hope, love, confirmed may be."

In addition to writing this stanza, Buckell made a few alterations in, and repunctuation of Bp. Hinds's text. Two forms of the hymn have thus come into use, the first the original, and the second the Hinds-Buckell text. The latter is that usually given in the Public Schools hymn-books. [J. J.]

Lord, solemnize our trifling minds.
G. Burder [Before Sermon.] Appeared in his Coll. of Hymns, &c., 1784, No. 299, in 3 st. of 4 l. as one of a number of hymns for use "Before Sermon," and again in later eds. of the same work. In modern hymnals, as the New Cong., 1853, No. 786, it is altered to "Great God, impress our trifling minds." [J. J.]

Lord, speak to me, that I may speak.
France R. Haverford. [Lay Helpers.] Written, April 28, 1782, at Winterlynd, and first printed as one of Partian's musical leaflets in the same year. In 1784 it was pub. in her Under the Surface, and in 1779 in Life Musical. In the original ms., it is headed "A Workman's Prayer. 'None of us liveth to himself.' Rom. xiv. 7." This hymn has become very popular, and is highly esteemed by those engaged in Christian work. [J. J.]

Lord, teach a little child to pray.
Thy grace betimes, &c. J. Ryland. [A Child's Prayer.] This simple prayer for a child's use is the most popular and widely used of Dr. Ryland's hymns. From his Memoirs of Andrew Fuller, 1831, pp. 442 and 453, we find that this hymn, and another beginning "God is very good to me," were written by him at the request of Mrs. Fuller for the use of her child Sarah, who died May 30, 1786, aged 6 years and 6 mont of the numerous collections in which it is erroneously attributed to Taylor." The Taylor hymn is on the same line, but the second is accept my prayer."

Lord, teach us how to pray.
J. Montgomery. [Prayer.] Writ and first printed on a broadsheet, the text appearing in the Nonconformist Sunday School field. In Cotterill's Sel., 8th ed. 280, it was repeatedly in full in and headed, "The preparations of man." During the same year with alterations and the omission of Bickersteth's Treatise on Montgomery's Christian Psalms 482, the text in Bickersteth w. with the restoration of st. ii., and 8 st. of 1 l. The text in his Orig. 1853. No. 65, is that of the Christ in the change of st. iv., ii. 1, 2:—

"God of all grace, we come to
With broken, contrite hearts to:—

"God of all grace, we bring to A broken, contrite heart."

This change is set down in the Montgomery's private copy of Ps., in his own handwriting. It is not or alleged, is in numerous The variations of text which are as are given in a great measure from copying from Cotterill's Sel. o others from the Christian Psalms. The first is the original, and the the above correction in Orig., the authorized text. In some Arcadian collections, including A. 1841., and the H. Lord, Thou hast been Thy people's rest. J. Montgomery. [Ps. xc.] Appeared in his Songs of Zion, 1822, in 7 st. of 7 l. In his Original Hymns, 1853, st. i., iv., v., and vi., are given as hymn No. xvi. In Dr. Kennedy's Psalter, 1860, a cento was given as the version of Ps. xc., and is thus composed:—

st. i., iv., v., and vi., J. Montgomery.

Dr. Kennedy's Hymno. Christ., No. 9, in two parts in this same text repeated with the addition of a doxology to Ps. i. In the Preface to this collection, the portion of this rendering of Ps. xc. taken from Montgomery is attributed to the Rev. A. T. Russell in error. [J. J.]

Lord, Thou hast won, at length, I yield. J. Newton. [Surrender to Christ.] Appeared in the Gospel Magazine, Jan., 1775, in 7 st. of 6 l., headed "The Surrender," and signed "Vigil." After a slight revision it was given in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. i., No. 121, in 7 st. of 6 l., with the extended heading "The Rebel's Surrender to Grace. Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" It is based on the words of St. Paul uttered on his way to Damascus, and recorded in Acts ix. 6. Although there is nothing in the Memoirs of Newton (so far as we can see) to justify us in saying that this hymn is autobiographical, yet its intense individuality suggests that it is so, and that he found in the fierceness of Saul the persecutor, and the submissive meekness of Saul the disciple, the embodiment of his own history and experience. Thus regarded the hymn is interesting, but for practical purposes it is far from being one of Newton's best productions. It is found in a few collections, but in an abbreviated form. [J. J.]

Lord, Thou in all things like wast [wast] made. J. Austin. [Passion tide.] 1st pub. in his (posthumous) Hymns, 1836, No. 21, in 6 st. of 4 l., and again in the Child's Christian Year, 1841. From the Child's C. Year it passed as "in all things like Thy brethren, Thou," into the Leeds H. Bk., 1853, No. 295. This form of the hymn has become popular, and especially with the Nonconformists. It is sometimes attributed to J. Keble. [J. J.]

Lord, Thy children guide and keep. Bp. W. W. How. [The Narrow Way.] 1st pub. in Morrell & How's Ps. & Hymns, 1834, in 5 st. of 6 l., and based on the words "Narrow is the way that leadeth unto life." It has become very popular with hymnal compilers, and, in full or in an abridged form, it is found in numerous collections in G. Britain and America. Orig. text in the 8. C. K. Church Hymn. 1871. [J. J.]

Lord, Thy glory fills the heaven. Bp. R. Mant. [Holy Trinity.] This hymn, extending from 1 st. of 8 l. in the Cooke and Denton Hymnal, 1853, to 3 st. of 8 l. in Laudes Dominii, N. Y., 1884, is from Bp. Mant's "Bright the vision that delighted" (see p. 574). It is in extensive use, especially in America. [J. J.]

Lord, Thy word abideth. Sir H. W. Baker. [Holy Scripture.] Written for and first pub. in H. J. & M., 1861. It has attained a great circulation, and is in C. U. in all English-speaking countries. It has also been translated into several languages. There is a tr. in German by Miss Winkworth, in Higg's Annotated H. A. & M., 1877, beginning "Hier, Dein Wort muss bleiben." [J. J.]

Lord, to me Thy ministers are. [The House of God.] This cento, which was given in W. J. Blew's Church Hym. & Tune Bk., 1852-55, is composed thus: st. i., ii., are from the late Archdeacon Churton's tr. from the Anglesaxon pub. in his Poeticals, and the remaining stanzas, ill.-v., are original by Mr. Blew. The cento has passed into several collections, including Kennedy, 1863; Rice's Sel. from Blew, 1870, and others. [J. J.]

Lord, we adore Thy wondrous Name. P. Doddridge. [Divine Composition.] Written Oct. 29, 1735 (d. Mass. No. v.), and pub. in Job Orton's ed. of Doddridge's (posthumous) Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 53, in 6 st. of 4 l., and again in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 68. The original heading is "The Tendernesses of human nature, and God's gracious regard to it. Ps. civ. 14." In modern hymn-books it is usually abbreviated. [J. J.]

Lord, we are blind, we mortals blind. I. Watts. [God Invisible.] Pub. in his Hymn & Spiritual Songs, 1708, Bk. ii., No. 26, in 4 st. of 4 l., and headed "God Invisible." In the American Plymouth Coll., 1855, it begins with st. ii., "Infinite leagues beyond the sky." [J. J.]

Lord, we come before Thee now. W. Hammond. [Public Worship.] 1st pub. in his Ps. & Hymns, 1745, p. 32, in 8 st. of 8 l. In 1760 M. Medad reduced it to 6 st. of 4 l., and as such it was given in his Ps. & Hymn. of that year, No. 121. From this arrangement of the hymn most modern editors have taken their text. Orig. in London Brit., 1867. [J. J.]

Lord, we confess our numerous faults. I. Watts. [Salvation by Grace.] 1st pub. in his Hymn & Spiritual Songs, 2nd ed., 1709, Bk. i., No. 111, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed "Salvation by Grace." It is in C. U. in its full form, and also abbreviated and altered as:—

1. This is not by works of righteousness. This arrangement begins with st. 1. Its use is limited.

2. How wretched was our former state. In the 1st ed. of the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1745, Watts's hymn was given with alterations to No. 19, but in the authorized public worship issue of the Ps. and Paraph., in 1771, it gave place to "How wretched was our former state," which was thus composed.—st. i., new; st. ii., new; st. iii., new; st. iv., Watts and 1745; st. v., from 1745; st. vi., Watts and 1745; st. vii., from 1745. This version has been in use in Scotland and elsewhere for more than one hundred years. It is sometimes attributed to W. Cameron (q. v.), but is assigned to him in the mark-ings, by Cameron's eldest daughter, of the Ps. and Paraph., as his authorship is therefore doubtful.

3. This is from the mercy of our God. This is a rewritten form of the Scottish Ps. and Paraph. text, by Miss Jane E. Leeson, and was pub. in her Paraph. and Hymns, 1853. [J. J.]

Lord, we have wandered from Thy way. P. Doddridge. [The Lost Sheep.] This hymn in the D., 1709, No. 62, is undated, but immediately precedes one written on Apr. 10, 1735, and may be dated circa 1735. It was included in Job Orton's ed. of Doddridge's
LORD, WE SIT AND CRY TO

(pseudonymously) Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 65, in 3 st. of 3 l., and again in J. D. Humphrey's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 79. In each case the original title, "The wandering Sheep recovered. Ps. cxix. 176," is retained. [J. J.]

Lord, we sit and cry to Thee. H. H. Milman. [Quinquagesima. Blind Man at Jericho.] 1st pub. in Bp. Heber's (pseudonymously) Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 49, in 2 st. of 4 l., and again in his Ps. & Hymn., 1837. It is based on the Gospel for Quinquagesima. In Hall and Lascar's American Evangelical Hymn, N. Y., 1846, it is altered to "Lord, we raise our cry to Thee." [J. J.]

Lord, what a feeble piece. I. Watts. [Ps. xc.] His s. m. version of Ps. xc., which appeared in his Psalms of David, 1719, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed "The Frailty and Shortness of Life." In Martineau's Hymns, &c., 1840 and 1873, it is given as "Lord, what a fleeting breath!" and in the Leeds H. Bk., 1833, as "Lord, make us know how frail." [J. J.]

Lord, what a wrecked land is this. I. Watts. [Pilgrimage of the Saints.] Appeared in his Hymn, &c., 1765. Bk. ii., No. 23, in 12 st. of 4 l., and entitled The Pilgrimage of the Saints: or, Earth and Heaven. In Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1866, st. viii.-xii. were given as "Our journey is a thorny maze." This arrangement, together with abbreviations beginning with "Our journey," is in several collections. [J. J.]

Lord, what is man? extremes how wide. J. Newton. [Man by Nature, Grace, and Glory.] Appeared in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. iii., No. 88, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Man by Nature, Grace, and Glory." It is the last of the longer hymns given in the Olney Hymn., and would appear to have been designedly placed there as a fitting close to the work, a few "short hymns," and four doxologies only, following. The closing stanzas is exceedingly appropriate:

"Nearest the throne, and first in song,
Man shall his Hallelujah raise;
While with a new re-trance round him throng,
And swell the chorus of his praise." Although lacking the general interest and popularity of Newton's hymns, it is given in several collections. [J. J.]

Lord, when Thou didst Thyself undress. H. Vaughan. [Passiontide.] Pub. in his Silex Scintillans; or, Soc. Poems, &c., Pt. i., 1650, and again in the reprint by the Rev. H. F. Lyte, 1846 (1858 ed., p. 46), in 5 st. of 4 l., and entitled "The Incarnation and Passion." In its complete form it is not found in modern hymnals, but st. iv. and v., as "Ah, my dear Lord, what couldst Thou spy," are given in Thring's Coll., 1862. [J. J.]

Lord, when we bend before Thy throne. J. D. Tzarly. [Lent.] This hymn appeared in a Coll. of Ps. and Hymn. by Various Authors, Chiefly designed for Public Worship, Carlisle, 1862. The editor was the Rev. John Fawcett, Vicar of St. Cuthbert's, Carlisle, an intimate personal friend of Professor Carlyle; and this hymn was written by the author for use before Divine Service in St. Cuthbert's Church, where he regularly attended when in residence as Chancellor of Carlisle. It is the first hymn in that collection, and is headed "Intructor Worship." (S. F. C. C. Church Magazine, 1863.) In 1866, it was reprinted in Carlyle's Poems Published chiefly for the Use of Asia Minor. Therein it is entitled "Before Public Worship." It is in the usual given in 4 st. by the st. iii. iv. To the fourth stanza a doxology is added, as in the Hymn a practice as old as Murray's Hymn if not older. It is well to note that of each of the three Christian: Hope, and Charity, in Public Worship in the original text; and omission of the st. iii. iv. that of ignored in the modern form of its use during the last eighty years. It is full or in an abbreviated form. It is extensive in all English-speaking Orig. text Lyra Brit., 1867, p. 288, also translated into several The H. A. & M. texts and has been rendered into Latin, as :

"Lamentations ad threnum Tuum, Domine," by Rev. Bingham, in his Hymnal, 1871. In Kennedy, 1861, version in 3 st. of 8 l. is given when before Thy righteous throne use is confined to that work.

Lord's Prayer in Verse. The Metrical paraphrase of the Lord's Prayer in English date from an early period, and are of varying length and merit. Several are annotated under their respective first lines, and may be found through the Index of Seasonal and Subjects Of those that remain we shall group in this article:

1. In Churton's Early English Church, 1840, two examples are given, which date from the 12th and 13th centuries. These are:—(1) The Lord's Prayer, "in metre sent by Nicholas Breakspear [Popel Adrian IV.] into England in the time of Henry II., a.d. 1150." It reads:

> Our Father, who art in heaven,
> Thy name be hallowed everlast;
> Thy kingdom come,
> Thy will be done on earth as in heaven.
> Give us this day our daily bread,
> And forgive us our sins,
> As we forgive those who do injuries to us,
> And lead us not into temptation.

(2) The second is of Henry III.'s time, about
A.D. 1250, and reads:

> Father, that art in heaven,
> Hallowed be Thy name.
> Thy kingdom come.
> Thy will be done on earth as in heaven.
> Give us this day our daily bread,
> And forgive us our sins,
> As we forgive those who do injuries to us,
> And lead us not into temptation.

2. In Camden's Remains (J. R. Smith's reprint, 1870), in the chapter on "Languages," there is the first of the above, and another which Camden dates as of the period of Henry III. This reads:

> Fader that art in heaven.
> Hallowed be Thy name.
> Thy kingdom come.
> Thy will be done on earth as in heaven.
> Give us this day our daily bread,
> And forgive us our sins,
> As we forgive those who do injuries to us,
> And lead us not into temptation.

3. The metrical versions of The Lord's Prayer which appeared in the Old Version were:

(1) In the Anglo-Saxon Psalter, 1591 [Old Version, § 311] (St. Paul's Cathedral Library, London), there were two versions by W. Whittingham, v.r.,

> Our gracious Father, which art in > Heaven, and hast all power and might.

(2) Our Father and most gracious Lord,
> Most rich in mercy grace and love.
> There is also a version by R. Cox, v.r.,

> "Our Father, which in heaven art,
> And make us not unto evil.

(2) In the English Edition of the Psalter [Old Version, § 47, v.] 1560, the version of R. Cox is also found; and, again, in the ed. of 1560-1.
In the Complete Psalter for use in the Church contained the version, already noted, by R. Cox, and an anonymous rendering which begins:

> "Our Father which is in heaven art,
> Hallowed be Thy name."

4. Between the O. V. and the N. V. several versions appeared, including:

(1) Henry Lok, in his Exegetes, otherwise
the Preacher, &c., 1597 [Psalters, Versions]:

> "Our Father which in heaven art,
> Hallowed be Thy name."

This is given in full in Far's Set. Poetry, 1845.
(2) Robert Holland, in his work, The holy Historie of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ's nature, life, acts, &c., 1594:

> "Pray thus, when ye do pray, therefore:
> Our Father which in heaven art."

This is given in full in Far's Set. Poetry, 1845.
(3) The Supplement to the New Version (Tate & Brady [New Version, § 12]), 2nd ed. 1702, contains two versions:

(1) "Our Father, who in Heaven art,
> Thy name be hallowed in each heart;"

(2) "Our Father, who in Heaven art
> Hallowed be Thy name."

These versions were retained in the "Hymns" printed at the end of the New Version, until the modern hymn-book caused the reprinting of the New Version to cease.

6. During the eighteenth century several paraphrases, some in full and others of portions of The Lord's Prayer, were published.

(1) A. Pope's Universal Prayer, 1738:—
> "Father of all! in every age," published in that year in his Works, and, separately, in folio.

(2) Charles Wesley's "Father of all, Whose powerful voice," 1742 (p. 268, I.):

(3) "Father of all, we bow to Thee" (p. 308,
I.). In the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases (Draf, 1745; authorized, 1781).
As altered in Cotterell's Set., 1819, it occurs as,
"Father of all, to Thee we bow."
(4) James Merrick's "Father of all, Whose seat of rest," his Psalms on Sacred Subjects, Oxford, 1763.

(5) J. Strahan's "Our Father, whose eternal way," in Ripken's Set., 1787.

7. The nineteenth century has produced several versions of The Lord's Prayer, many of which have come into C. U., and may be found in this Dictionary through the Index of Seasonal and Subjects (q.v.). In addition we find the following:

(1) James Montgomery. Two versions,—"Our heavenly Father, hear our prayer" (q.v.); and "Our heavenly Father! hear," in his Christian Psalms, 1825.

(2) A. Jackson. "Our Father God, Who art in heaven," p. 409, I.

(3) B. Barton. "Father of all, Who dwellst above," in his Devotional Verses, 1826.

(4) J. Cowper. In his Choir and Oratory, 1837, the whole Prayer is paraphrased in the following hymn:

1. Holy, holy, holy, Lord, in highest, &c. (p. 267, L)
2. Two, my God, in ceaseless lays.
3. Three from whom all: being sprang
4. Day by day the manna fell. (p. 268, 1.)
LOUDBALLELUJAHS

5. Father, to Thy sinful child. (p. 973, l.)
6. Heavenly Father, to whose eye. (p. 603, l.)
7. Father of spirits, God of heaven.

Some of these appeared in former works by Corder, and are noted in detail at the pages indicated above.

5) W. Williams. In his Cathedral, 1833,
"The North aisle" is devoted to The Lord's Prayer. The use of the Prayer in the various offices of the Church is made the groundwork of the following paraphrases:

1. H. Baptist. "Our Father, free from error's chain.

2. Daily Service. "Our Father, who dost dwell above.

8. Litany. "Like as a Father His own children loves."n
4. Comp. "Out of the world of grief and wrong."n
5. Post-Comp. "Our Father, knit in Thy dear Son.

6) Anon. "Our Father God, Who art in heaven. To Thee," &c. In Curwen's My Own

7) G. Morris. "Father of all, to Thee we pray,
"in his Hys. and Lyrica, 1867.

8) W. R. Worthington. In Lyra Preparatoria.
Six Hymns on the Petitions in the Lord's Prayer,
&c. By the Rev. W. R. Worthington, n.a.; Long, Masters & Co., 1874.

8. To these notes must be added those which are scattered throughout this Dictionary, and can be found through the Index of Subjects.
The result, although not exhaustive, will yet present a fairly good résumé of the English metrical versions of The Lord's Prayer.

Loud hallelujahs to the Lord. J.
Watts. [Ps. cxlviii.] This psalm version appeared with some 13 or 14 others in the 1st ed. of his Hys. & S. Songs, 1707, and was transferred in 1719 to his Psalms of David, &c., p. 392, as his 1st. paraphrase of Ps. 148, in 12 st. of 4 l. It is headed "Universal Praise to God." It is usually given in modern hymnals in an abbreviated form. [J. J.]

Loud to the Prince of heaven. P.
Doddridge. [Christ Triumphant.] 1st pub. in
J. Orton's ed. of Doddridge's (posthumous) Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 41, in 3 st. of 8 l., and headed "The Triumph of Christ in the cause of Truth, Meekness, and Righteousness." It was also repeated in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1830, No. 52. In its original form it is found in a few collections, but its most popular form, and that which is in extensive use in G. Britain and America, begins with st.
14, "Gird on Thy conquering sword." [J. J.]

Loud was the wind and wild the tide. H. F. Lyte. [Christ walking on the Sea.] Pub. in his Poems chiefly Religious, 1833, p. 133, in 2 st. of 8 l., and headed "It is 1, be not afraid." In 1833 it was given in the Leeds H. Bk., No. 292, and subsequently repeated in other collections, as "Who walks the waves in wondrous guise?" This form of the text is in 3 st. of 4 l., the additional stanza being by another hand. [J. J.]

Lowenstein, Mattheius Apelles von, was b. April 20, 1594, at Neustadt, in the principality of Oppeln, Silesia, where his father was a soldier. He early distinguished himself by his musical abilities, was appointed in 1625, by Duke Heinrich Wenzel of Münsterberg, as his music director and treasurer at Bernstadt; in 1626, director of the princely school at Bernstadt; and in 1631 Rath and Secretary and also Director of finance. Thereafter he entered the service of the Emperors Ferdinand II. (d. 1637), and Ferdinand III. as Rath, and was ennobled by the latter. Finally he became Staatsrat at Oels to Duke Carl Friedrich of Münsterberg, and d. at Breslau, April 11, 1648 (Koch, iii. 57–60; Allg. Deutsche Bär. xix. 318, &c.).

Lowenstein's hymns, thirty in all, are of very varied worth, many being written in imitation of antique verse forms, and on the motets of the princes under whom he had served. In the original obs they were accompanied with melodies by himself. When or where they were first pub. (cir. 1644) is not clear. They were bound up with the Breslau Kirchen und Haus-Musik, 1644, and there bear the title:

Symbola oder landesmannische kirchliche FPflissig.

Three of these hymns have been tr.:

1. Christe, du Reicbstand deiner Kreuzgemeinde. [In time of War.] 1644, No. xivii., in 4 st. of 4 L., entitled "Sapphic Odes. For spiritual and temporal peace," included in many later collections, and as No. 215 in the

2. Lord of our life, and God of our Salvation. Contributed by Philip Pusey to A. R. Reinecke's Psalms and Hymn Tunes, Oxford, 1840, p. 132, in 5 st. It is rather founded on the German than a tr. in st. i., ii., on st. i.; iii., vi., on st. iv. The tune to which it was set was marked by Bussen as an "old Latin melody," and so the Pusey hymn has sometimes been erroneously called a tr. from a Latin hymn of the 8th cent. From Reinecke it passed into the Salisbury H. Bk., 1857, and has been repeated in H. A. & M., Starum Hymnary, Church Hymn.; and in America in the Evangelical Hymn., N. Y., 1884, Lowell's Dominions, 1884, and others.

4. Christ, Thou the champion of the band who own. A good and full tr. by Miss Winkworth in her

5. Shall we gather at the river? Mutual recognition in the Hereafter. The origin of this hymn is thus set forth in E. W. Long's Illustrated History of Hymns and their Authors, Philadelphia, 1876, p. 64:

On a very hot summer day, in 1844, a pastor was seated in his parlour in Brooklyn, N. Y. It was a time when an epidemic was sweeping through the city, and draining many persons and dwellings in mourning. All Lucas of Prag, B.A. (Lucas Pragensis), was b. at Prag about 1460. He studied at the University of Prag, graduating B.A. in 1481. About 1482 he joined the Bohemian Brethren's Unity, becoming in 1490 a member of their Select Council; and was, in 1500, c. Bishop of the Unity. He d. Dec. 15th, 1510. He contributed 11 hymns to the H. Bk., 1501, and 106 others by his own hand. See further, under Hymnals, pp. 133-180; also note on the hymn "O salve sancta parens," in the Cluniac Hymnals, ed. of 1561. See, further, under Hymnals, pp. 133-180; also note on Lucas Creator optimus. St. George (23) [Sunday Evening.] This is the first hymn of the Benedictine Hymnals assigned to St. Gregory (Opera, Paris, col. 879). Mone gives it as No. 61 of the 8th cent. at Darmstadt and Heidelberg. He thinks it was written in the 6th cent., but not in Italy; certainly neither by St. Ambrose, who has often been ascribed to it, nor by St. Ambrose, who was only b. cir. 540. Daniel gives the text, and at I. p. 49, cites a 10th cent. Rheims ms. Among the Hymnals of the English Church in the 9th and 10th centuries, it is found in the English Hymnals of the 9th and 10th centuries, in the 11th cent. at Canterbury and in the 12th cent. at Winchester. It is also found in the Hymnals of the English Church in the 11th and 12th centuries, in the 13th cent. at Canterbury and in the 14th cent. at Winchester. It is also found in the Hymnals of the English Church in the 11th and 12th centuries, in the 13th cent. at Canterbury and in the 14th cent. at Winchester.

Translations in C. U.:
1. Father of lights, by Whom we speak. Newman, in the "Tracts for the Times," 1852, p. 79; and again in his "Tracts for the Times," 1858, p. 259. It is a slight add.
2. Blow the Church's Hymn, by a Churchman. It is given in some hymn-books in form, and sometimes as, "sources of light and life divine," in the English Hymnals of the 11th and 17th centuries, and in the English Hymnals of the 12th and 18th centuries, with some additional notes in Kennedy, 1863. It is given in "The Churchman," 1882, by the Editor.
3. O blessor, the light. By E. Caswall, in his "Tracts for the Times," 1849, p. 13; and in his "Tracts for the Times," 1852, p. 8. This is in several hymn-books, and is the most widely used form of the "Creator optimus."
LUDAMILLA ELISABETH

J. Chandler. It is really a cento thus composed, st. l. 3, 1. Carsewell, with "O" left out; II. 2-4, Compilers; st. ii., iii., iv., I. 1. 2, J. Chandler, very slightly altered; st. iv. I. 3. 4, Compilers; st. v. I. 1. Carsewell, altered; II. 2-4, Compilers. This cento has passed from H. A. & M. into a few collections.

7. Lord of all, Thy word divine. This tr. in the Parish H. Bk., 1863 and 1875, is J. Chandler's tr. altered by the Editors.

8. Darkness was on the deep, O Lord. By A. R. Thompson. In the American Reformed Dutch Hymn. of the Church, 1869.

9. Blind Maker of the light, by whom. This tr. in the Hymnary, 1872, is based upon Card. Newman's tr., as given in Blee's Church H. & T. Bk.; and J. D. Chamber's tr. in his Poet and his lamps. (see above.)

Translations not in C. U.:—

Ludmilla Elisabeth, second dau. of Count Ludwig Günther I. of Schwarzenburg-Rudolstadt, was b. April 7, 1840, at the castle of Heid-claiburg, near Rudolstadt, and was educated there along with her cousin Emilie Juliane (q.v.). In 1863 she went with her mother to the dowager castle of Friedensburg near Leutenberg; but after her mother's death, in 1870, she returned to Rudolstadt, where, on Dec. 20, 1871, she was formally betrothed to Count Christian Wilhelm of Schwarzenburg-Sondershausen. At this time measles was raging in the district, and her eldest sister, Sophie Juliane, was seized, and d. Feb. 14, 1872. By attending on her, Ludmilla and the youngest sister, Christiane Magdalene, caught the infection, and both died in Rudolstadt on March 12, 1872. (Koch, iv. 50-56; Allg. Deutsche Biog. xii. 365-367, &c.)

She received a careful and pains-taking education, was a good Latin scholar, and well read in divinity and other branches of learning. Her hymns show her to have been of a deeply pious nature, and of intense love to Jesus. They were composed rather for her own edification than for use in public worship. Ten of them were included in the Rudolstadt G. B., 1863. They were collected, to the number of 200, and edited by her cousin Emilie (probably assisted by A. Friths) as Die Wimmel der Freunds, das ist: Hebräische Lieder welche, aus fremder und bis an noch unbeherrschter Jesus-Liebe verfertigt und geprüft, von Rudolstadt, 1867. This was reprinted, with an introduction by W. Thiel, at Stettin, 1886.

Three of those hymns have been tr. viz.:—
1. Jesus, Jesu, nichts als Jesus. [Love to Christ.] 1867, No. 104, p. 312; in 3rd. of 6th, entitled "Reignation to the Will of God." The initial of the stanzas form the word Jesus, and each stanza ends, "Herr, wie du wilt." It seems to have appeared in the 2nd ed. of A. Friths's Jesus Lieder (not in the 1st ed. of 1868). No copy of the 2nd ed. is now known), and in the 3rd ed., 1875, is No. 43.

LUGETE, PACIS ANGELI 701

Bambach, iii. 188, gives it from the Vermecherte Gesang-Büchlein, Halberstadt, 1673. In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. The tr. in C. U. is—

Jesus, Jesus, Jesus only. In full, by A. Crull, as No. 282 in the Ohio Lutheran Hym., 1880.

Other trs. are:— (1) Jesus, Jesus, Jesus only; Shall my wish and thee, in the Supplement to Ges. Prof., ed. 1865, p. 11. (2) Jesus "He may be mine," by Miss Powicke, 1847, p. 107. (3) "The Jesus that's my sole desire," by Dr. H. Webster, 1860, p. 94. (4) "Jesus, Jesus, Jesus, caught up," by H. Mandt, in the British Elder, July, 1855, p. 163, and in field's Praxis Rel. 1872, No. 293. (5) "Jesus, Jesus, caught up, Shall my wish be," in Christliche Erinnerung, 1869, No. 97.

ii. Jesus stet komm über mich. [Holy Communion.] A Passiontide Hymn on the Blood of Jesus. 1867, No. 45, No. 14, in 8th. In the Blätter für Hymnodogen, 1886, p. 190, it is cited as in the 2nd ed., 1869, of A. Friths's Himmelsuch (1st ed., 1870, does not contain it); and as there marked "S. G. Z. S. V. H.," the initials of the elder sister, Sophia Juliane.

Tr. as:—"Jesus' Blood come over me," as No. 448, in p. 1 of the Moravian H. Bk., 1854.

Tr. as:—"Care, O Father, care for me," in the Monthly Packet, 1872, p. 171.

The hymn "Zehn uns nach dir," sometimes erroneously ascribed to her, is found under Unke, p., No. 601, u. (J. M.)

Lugete dura marmora. [Passiontide.] This is found in the Stirner Symposion, Cologne, 1678, p. 154; in the Paederium Centionum Catholicae, Cologne, 1722, p. 83; the Hymnologia Sacra, Münster, 1753, p. 89; and also in Daniel, ii. 351. It is probably the production of some German Jesuit, and was most likely written in the second half of the 17th. cent. It has been tr. by the Rev. H. C. Singleton, 1870, and pub. in the 2nd ed. of his Anglican H. Bk., 1871, as "O mourning, thou rigid stone!" and by H. M. Staggill in his Songs of the Christian Creed & Life, 1876, No. 71, as "Ye rocks of marble, melt and weep!" (J. M.)

Lugete, pacis Angeli. C. Coffin. [Friday—Lent.] Appeared in the Paris Breviary, 1736, for Fridays at Vespers, and also "Ad Officium Noctis. In Feste quinque plagiarum Christi." It was repeated in Coffin's Hymnals 1826, the same year, p. 28, and is found in several modern French Breviaries. The text is also in J. Chandler's Hymn. of the Primitive Church, 1857, No. 31, and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:—

1. Lament, ye saints, behold your God. By J. Chandler, in his Hym. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 28, and Dr. Oldknow's Hymns, &c., 1850. In 1861 it was given, with alterations, as "Angels, lament, behold your God," in H. A. & M., but omitted in the revised ed., 1876.

2. Angels of peace, look down from heaven and weep. By I. Williams in his Hym. tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839, p. 36. It was repeated in the Salisbury H. Bk., 1857; the Sarum, 1864; the Hymnary, 1872, and others, and usually with slight alterations.

1. Angels, look down and weep. R. Campbell, 1856.

Luise Henriette, Electress of Brandenburg, dau. of Friedrich Heinrich, Prince of Nassau-Orange and Stadtholder of the United Netherlands, was b. at ’s Gravenhage (The Hague), Nov. 27, 1827. She received a careful Christian training, not only in literature, but also in domestic economy and feminine handcrafts. On Dec. 7, 1846, she was married, at the Hague, to the Elector Friedrich Wilhelm of Brandenburg, who was then residing at Cleve, but remained at the Hague to nurse her father, who d. March 14, 1847. She then, in June, 1847, joined her husband at Cleve, where her first child, Wilhelm Heinrich, was b. in May 1848. In the autumn of 1849 she set out with her husband and child on the way to Berlin, but in the inclement weather the child sickened and d. at Wesel, Oct. 24, 1849, and it was not till April 10, 1850, that she entered Berlin. On the birth of her second son, Carl Emil (who d. 1871), at Oronenburg, near Berlin, on Feb. 15, 1855, she founded an orphanage there as a thank-offering (now the Oranenburg Orphanage at Berlin). On July 11, 1857, her third son, afterwards King Friedrich I. of Prussia, was b. at Köstingberg. After the birth of her youngest son, Ludwig, at Cleve, in 1866, she never entirely recovered. In the spring of 1867 she was conveyed to Berlin in a litter, and d. there June 18, 1867. (Koch, iv. 156; Allg. Deutseh. Bisch., xix. 623; Goedecke’s Grundrisse, vol. iii., 1887, p. 319, &c.)

Luise Henriette was a woman of noble character; a devoted wife who accompanied her husband in many of his expeditions, and was his right-hand counsellor in matters of state; and a true mother of her people, introducing the culture of the potato, founding medical clinics, establishing elementary schools, and in many ways interesting herself in the welfare of the poor. She was, like the Elector, a member of the Reformed Church, and earnestly desired to promote peace between the Lutheran and Reformed communions, and exerted herself especially on behalf of P. Terhejden (see p. 409, l.). Another of her efforts in this direction was by means of the Union Hymn Book, which Christoph Rungen edited at her direction, and pub. in 1853 (see p. 272, l.). In this book she herself contributed four hymns. In her dedication to the Electress, Rungen says she had augmented and amended with her own hymns, viz.: Ein ander-"stelle sein Vertraun; Gott der Richteunb deiner Gütter; Jesus meine Zuversicht; Ich will von meiner Minnestatt. Your Electoral Highness has not only in those four well-mentioned hymns (but presumably pointless ihren eigenen Lieder) made known to all the world your Christian spirit; your confidence is directed to God alone; how you sacrifice to him with thankful heart all the benefits you enjoy; and how you rest the hope of your future everlasting life in Heaven on Christ alone as on a steadfast rock, but how-"ne," &c.

The question however remains. Did Rungen here mean more than that she had sent for insertion certain hymns which were favourites of her own, perhaps written for her, but not necessarily written by her? Such cases were common enough at an earlier period (see note on Mag. lieh Unglück). It is certainly strange that her name should not be given in any of the many hymn-books in which the third of these ("Jesus meine Zuversicht") was included during the next century. It was not till 1833 that Rungen’s dedication suggested to D. G. Schiller, and, after him, to other compilers, the idea of the Electress’s authorship; but once was soon generally accepted. Fischer, in a variety of additional reasons that make this likely; such as that while in Rungen’s declination are mentioned above, yet her name is in the individual hymns in the body of the book; the funeral oration by her private chaplain is made of her personal gift; that Crüger, in his Praxis pietatis melica without her in 1664 and later eds. the first was omitted). In particular the third is too classic and not to have been written by so poor a German as the Electress. This last objection would not seem to be overcome were it possible to suppose with Koch (iv. p. 357), that the hymn was originally written in Dutch, or Italian, and was revised and corrected by Hans van Asig (b. 1650, d. 1694). In this state of uncertainty the case must remain open to be forthcoming.

Two of these hymns have passed into the church, viz.:—
1. Ich will von meiner Minnestatt. This beautiful hymn first appeared in the Rungen Bk. in 1655, No. 45, in 1663 is entitled, "Hymn of Penitence," and is now in the Erb. L. S., 1851, No. 380. The history of it is:

It dates from the early years of her marriage and the autumn of 1640 she lost her first child, Prince Wilhelm Heinrich, at Wesel, while on her way to Berlin, by which death for a long time succeeded in the Electoral House and in the Elector’s family line seemed to be lost. To the Electress, in the Almæk (on the Elbe), she had to a quiet winter months, and here probably the twenty-two-pounds poured out her heart in this hymn.

Henry Lunt, was b. at Newburyport, Mass.
the April 21, 1805. He entered Harvard College in 1819, and graduated in 1823.
After a year's study at a school in the city, and a term at Harvard Divinity School in 1823, he entered the Unitarian Ministry, 1828, and was the second Congregational Church, of which the Canterbury Divinity School in 1825, and was the second of the Congregational Unitarian Society of New York City.
In 1835 he became co-pastor of the Unitarian church at Quincy, Massachusetts, with the Rev. P. Whitney, and in 1843 sole pastor of the same congregation. During a tour in the East he d. at Akabah (the ancient Ezion-geber. March 21, 1857, and was buried a short distance from that village. Dr. Lunt was the author of several sermons, and contributed largely to the Christian Examiner and other periodicals. His hymns and poems, together with selections from his prose works, were pub. by his son as Gleanings. His most widely used hymn is "When driven by opposition's rod." It was "written for the public schools of Quincy, and sung by them on their Fourth of July Celebration, 1837." It is in 5 st. of 4 sl. This, together with several others, including one of more than ordinary merit for Sunday schools, "Hark! the little Shepherd's voice," (written in 1846), are given in full in Putnam's Singers and Songs of the Liberal Faith, 1872. To this work we are indebted for the above facts.

(b.a. 1502, m.a. 1503); became an August nian monk, 1505; ordained priest, 1507; ap pointed Professor at the University of Wiitenberg, 1508, and in 1512 d.d.; published his 95 Theses, 1517, and burned the Papal Bull which had condemned them, 1520; at ended the Diet of Worms, 1521; translated the Bible into German, 1521-34; and d. at Eisleben, Feb. 18, 1546. The details of his life and of his work as a reformer are acces-forms, and need not be repeated here.

\textbf{Lynch, Thomas Toke, was b. at Dunmow, Essex, July 5, 1818, and educated at a school at Ixington, in which he was afterwards an usher. For a few months he was a student at the Highbury Independent College; but withdrew, partly on account of failing health, and partly because his spirit was too free to submit to the routine of College life. From 1847 to 1849 he was Minister of a small charge at Highgate, and from 1849 to 1852 of a congregation in Mortimer Street, which subsequently migrated to Grafton Street, Fitzroy Square. From 1856 to 1858 he was laid aside by illness. In 1856 he resumed his ministry with his old congregation, in a room in Farmer Street, where he remained until the opening of his new place of worship, in 1862 (Mornington Church), in Hampstead Road, London. He ministered there till his death, on the 9th of May, 1871.}

The influence of Lynch's ministry was great, and reached far beyond his own congregation (which was never large), since it included many students from the Theological Colleges of London, and thoughtful men from other churches, who were attracted to him by the freshness and spirituality of his preaching. His prose works were numerous, beginning with \textit{Thoughts on a Day}, 1844, and concluding with \textit{The Mornington Lectures}, 1876. Several of his works were published after his death. His \textit{Memoir}, by W. White, was pub. in 1874.

Lynch's hymns were pub. in:

Lytte's hymns are marked by intense individuality, gracefulness and felicity of diction, picturefulness, spiritual freshness, and the sadness of a powerful soul struggling with a weak and enunciated body. Although The Hymn of the Pious was pub. for use by his own congregation. A supplement to Watts, more than one half of the hymns were designed for private use only, but were not so distinguished in the work. Its publication caused one of the most bitter hymnological controversies known in the annals of modern Congregationalism. Time, however, and a criticism, broader and more just, have declared emphatically in favour of his hymns as valuable contributions to cultured sacred song. [W. G. H.]

Lytte, Henry Francis, M.A. & B. of Capt. Thomas Lyte, b. at Ednam, near Kelso, June 1, 1738, and educated at Portola (the Royal School of Eton), and at Trinity College, Dublin, of which he was a Scholar, and where he graduated in 1811. During his University course he distinguished himself by gaining the English prize poem on three occasions. At one time he had intended studying Medicine; but this he abandoned for Theology, and took Holy Orders in 1815, his first curacy being in the neighbourhood of Wexford. In 1817, he removed to Marazion, in Cornwall. There, in 1818, he underwent a great spiritual change, which shaped and influenced the whole of his after life, the immediate cause being the illness and death of a brother clergyman. Lyte says of him:

"He died happy under the belief that though he had deeply erred, there was One whose death and sufferings would atone for his delinquencies, and be accepted for all that he had incurred;"

and concerning himself he adds:

"I was greatly affected by the whole matter, and brought to look at life and its issues with a different eye than before; and I began to study my Bible, and preach in another manner than I had previously done."

From Marazion he removed, in 1819, to Lynmouth, where he composed his Tales on the Lord's Prayer in verse (pub. in 1826); and in 1823 he was appointed perpetual Curate of Lower Brixham, Devon. That appointment he held until his death, on Nov. 20, 1847. His Poems of Henry Vaughan, with a Memoir, were pub. in 1846. His own poetical works were:

(1) Poems chiefly Religious, 1832; 2nd ed. enlarged, 1845.
(2) The Spirit of the Psalms, 1834, written in the first instance for use in his own Church at Lower Brixham, and enlarged in 1836; (1) Miscellaneous Poems (posthumously) in 1868. This last is a reprint of the 1845 ed. of his Poems, with "Abide with me" added. (4) Remains, 1856.

Lytte's Poems have been somewhat freely drawn upon by hymnal compilers; but by far the larger portion of his hymns found in modern collections are from his Spirit of the Psalms. In America his hymns are very popular. In many instances, however, through mistaking Miss Auber's (q. v.) Spirit of the Psalms, 1829, for his, he is credited with more than is his due. The Andover Sabbath H. Bk.

1858, is specially at fault in this; and as best known and most widely used positions are "Abide with me, eventide"; "Far from my heart, God of mercy, God of grace" are Thy courts above; "Praise, King of heaven"; and "There is a secret place." 13, 1851, In 1843 he entered the Wesleyan ministry, and was sent in 1859 to Wimendon, as the Wesleyan minister to Germany. On his return from Germany in 1865, he entered upon a regular circuit work in G. Britain, and later, other large towns and from the active work of the ministry. He d. on March 13, 1878. His principal prose work was a History of the Methodist Church in York. In 1843 he edited and published a small volume, entitled Wild Flowers; or, a Selection of Original Poetry, edited by J. L. This little work was made up of pieces by himself and members of his family, and the late Dr. Punshon. His hymn, "There is a better world, they say," (Harvey), appeared in the "Meth. Scholars' H. Bk., 1870, and his "We won't give up the Sabbath" (Sunday), in the Meth. S. S. Bk., 1879. Each of these is an imitation of an older hymn. Dr. Lyth informed the Rev. W. F. Stevenson, editor of Hymns for Ch. and Home, 1873, that the hymn "There is a better world, they say," was written at Sandown, in Wiltshire (30th April, 1844) for the anniversary of the neighbouring infant-school at Sandown, and to an air then very popular, called "All is Well." That it was written for the infant children will explain the simplicity of some of the expressions. It was speedily caught up, and I believe first appeared in the Home and School Hymn Book. (Log. MACDONALD, GEORGE

McAll, Robert Stephens, LL.D., was a Rev. Robert McAll, b. at Plymouth, Aug. 4, 1792, and educated at Aixminster, Devon; Hoxton, London; and Edinburgh University. He graduated M.A. at Edinburgh in 1813, and gave himself for a time to the study of medicine. He was for some time Chaplain of the Mackenzie School, and from 1814 to 1826 minister of St. George's Chapel in the same town. In 1827 he became minister of Mosley Street Chapel, Manchester, and held the same to his death on July 27, 1838. In 1812 he contributed to Dr. Collyer's Coll. 8 hymns, which appeared as by "J. M. W." Through one of these, "Hark! how the chord song of heaven" (The Song of Heaven), he is somewhat widely known to humanity. His Psalms and Hymns for Public Worship, Mackenzie, J. Swinnerton, n.d. (circa 1823), was pub. without Preface, or names of authors. Not one of the 8 hymns contributed by him to Collyer's Coll. is therein, and there is nothing to show which are his original compositions.

McCoyne, Robert Murray, s. of Adam McCoyne, W. S., was b. at Edinburgh, May 21, 1813, and educated at Edinburgh University. In 1835 he became Assistant at Larbert, near Stirling, and was ordained in 1853, Minister of St. Peter's Established Church, Dundee. In 1839 he went to Palestine as one of the Mission of Enquiry to the Jews from the Church of Scotland. He d. at Dundee, March 25, 1843. His hymn, a few of which were written in Palestine, appeared in his Songs of Zion to cheer and guide Pilgrims on the way to the New Jerusalem, by the late Rev. R. McCoyne.... Dundee, W. Middleton, 1843.

These hymns were reprinted in his Memoir and Remains, edited by Dr. Andrew A. Borr, 1844. The Songs as reprinted in September 14, and date from 1831 to 1841. The best known are, "I once was a stranger and to God," and, "When this passing world is done." In addition, "Beneath Mortal's rocky side," written at the "Foot of Carmel, June, 1839" (Sent from God); "Like on the mountains," written "Jan. 1st, 1832" (Children called to Christ), and "Ten Virgins, clothed in white" (The Ten Virgins), dated 1841, are in C. U.

Macdonald, George, LL.D., was b. at Hulton, Aberdeenshire, Dec. 10, 1824, educated at King's College, Aberdeen, where he graduated M.A., and from which he afterwards received the honorary degree of LL.D. For a brief time he studied for the Congregational ministry at Highbury College, London, and then became the Minister of the Congregational Church at Arundel, Sussex (1853-). He afterwards preached for a short time with a small company at Manchester and Bolton. Relinquishing the ministry, he became lecturer on English Literature at King's College, London, and ultimately gave himself entirely to literary work. Dr. Macdonald acquired a great reputation by means of his works, many of which were originally written in Scotland.
contributed to magazines, and the most notable of which are David Elginbrod; Robert Falconer; Alec Forbes of Howglen; and Annals of a Quiet Neighbourhood. He was some time Editor of Good Words for the Young, and wrote England's Antiphon for Macmillan's Sunday Library. His poetical works are:—

(1) Within and Without, 1855; (2) The Disciple, and Other Poems, 1860; (3) The Diary of an Old Soul (printed for private circulation), 1861; (4) Anima, a volume of trs. from the German (most of which first appeared in the Sunday Magazine), 1876; and (5) A Threefold Trust, 1883, part of which previously appeared in his Works of Fancy and Imagination, 1871.

Most of his original hymns were contributed to Hymns and Sacred Songs for Sunday Schools and Social Worship, &c., pub. by Fletchett and Tables, Manchester, in 1855 (2nd ed., 1856), and of which his brother, and the Rev. G. B. Bubier (p. 106), were the editors. The original hymns, which are signed "G. Macdonald," in this collection are:—

1. A quiet heart, submissive, meek. The Morn inerit the Earth.
2. Daylight fades away. Second Advent.
3. Father, I well may praise Thy name. Sunday Morning.
4. Father, some souls of ours have been. Blessed are the Pure in Heart.
5. If we were longing for the Lord. Blessed are they that Hunger and Thirst after Righteousness.
6. It was an awful hour that gave. Blessed are the Merciful.
7. Len Thy own voice, O Father, say. Blessed are they that maintain.
8. Son of Man, Thy Name by choice. Blessed are the Morn.
9. Our Father, hear our longings prayer. Blessed are the Poor in Spirit.

Some of these hymns were afterwards revised by their author. The next two are from The Disciple, and Other Poems, 1860:—
10. O God, whose day like summer. Evening.

Dr. Macdonald's hymns are rich in ideas, but are touched with a mysticism which renders them a little difficult of apprehension. They are however of great value in setting forth truths rarely expressed in hymns, and are likely to grow in favour. [W. G. H.]

Macduff, John Ross, D.D., second s. of Alexander Macduff, of Bonhard, near Perth, was b. at Bonhard, May 23, 1818. After studying at the University of Edinburgh, he became in 1842 parish minister of Kettins, Forfarshire, in 1849 of St. Madoes, Perthshire, and in 1855 of Sandyford, Glasgow. He received the degree of B.D. from the University of Glasgow in 1862, and about the same time also from the University of New York. He retired from pastoral work in 1871, and now (1887) lives at Chislehurst, Kent. He has published many practical and devotional works which have attained a wide circulation. In 1857 he was appointed by the General Assembly a member of their Hymnal Committee. His 31 hymns appeared in his Altar Stones, 1853, and were also included with his later poems in his The Gates of Praise, 1870. Of these hymns the following are in C. U.:

1. Christ is coming! Let creation. Second Advent.
4. From Thy habitation holy. Wildéventide.

5. Hasten, Lord, that morn of glory.
6. Jesus wept!' Those tears are ever.
7. Why should I mourn or repine? Of these hymns those dated it only of Dr. Macduff's originals.

Mackay, Margaret, was the only daughter of Ca Mackay, of Hedgefield, Inverness, married in 1829 to Major Will of the 89th Light Infantry (as Colonel) a distinguished officer w. Mrs. Mackay d. at Cheltenham. In addition to various prose works pub. Thoughts Redeemed, or La Hours, 1854, which contained hymns and poems. Of these, "As blessed sleep," is noted at p. 86.

He became a foreman, and then a partner, which has been known by the name of Mackellar, Smith, and Jordan, of Philadelphia. His publica
The American Printer, 1866, a prose work, and the following in verse—:

1. At the hour of mercy sighing, Lent. Pub. in his Hymns and Songs, 1872, as, "Lest of restful Jesus forsaken," and again in Dr. Hitchcock's Hymns & Songs, 1874, as, "At the hour of mercy sighing."

2. Burden of the present: Reconciliation. Written in 1854, and pub. in his for the Gentle and Loving, 1854, and Lyra Sacra American, 1856. Part of this hymn, beginning, "All unseen the rest, the Master walked," is in C. U. in G. Irland.

4. Daylight to the Holy: Jesus, the soul's Refuge. Written in Sumner, Lyra Sacra Americana, 1868, in 3 st. of 8, 6, 8, 8, 6, 8.

6. In the vineyard of our Father: Work for God. Written in 1845. It was given in the Church of Home, Philadelphia, 1860, and other collections.

7. Jesus! when my soul is aching: Continued presence of Jesus desired. Written in 1846. It was given in Lyra Sacra Americana, 1868, in 4 st. of 6, 1, and entitled "Jesus first and last."

8. There is a land immortal: Heaven. Mr. Mackellar says that this hymn was written "one evening as a fancy suddenly struck me of a religious nature. I lay aside the work in hand, and pursuing the new idea. I at once produced the hymn. There is a land immortal, and sent it to the editor of Neale's Magazine, who referred to it as a religious poem from "Tarn," my assumed name, under which I had already acquired considerable notoriety. This was in 1845. It was widely copied, and afterwards inserted in a volume published by me." Duffield's English Hymn, &c., 1866, p. 511.

Mr. Mackellar is an Elder of the Presbyterian Church.

for more of the same kind and quality. The following are in C. U.:

1. Again the trumpet sounds: Missions. Written a few years ago. Appeared in the H. A. & M. series of Hymns for Mission Services, 1871.

2. Be still, my soul, for God is near: Holy Communion. Fatt u. i. V. 12, was broken for my sake. Written for St. Mary's, Newington, in Thorn's Utter, 1872.

4. It is finished: blessed Jesus (Saviour): Good Friday. Written for H. A. & M., 1878. In several collections.

5. Lord, when Thy Kingdom comes: remember me; Gentleness and loving. Written for the 18th ed. of H. A. & M., 1872. Sometimes given in two parts: Pt. B., beginning "Lord, when with dying lips my prayer is said."

6. The Saints of God their conflict past: All Saints. First pub. in Church Hymns, 1874, and again in the Part C. K. Church Hymn, 1871.

7. What thanks and praise to Thee we owe: St. Luke. Written for the 1878 ed. of H. A. & M.

These hymns are of more than usual merit, being characterized by great simplicity, tenderness, and fervour. The special season or purpose is clearly indicated, and its lessons earnestly enforced.

Maclean, Norman, b. 1812, d. 1886. Mr. Maclean, was b. at Campbeltown, Argyllshire, June 3, 1812. He studied at the Universities of Glasgow and Edinburgh, then went to Germany, and subsequently completed his course at the University of Glasgow, from which, in 1858, he received the degree of B.D. In 1858 he was appointed parish minister of Loudoun, Ayrshire, in 1844, and was Moderator of the General Assembly in 1849. He died at Glasgow, June 16, 1872, and was buried at Campbeltown, June 20, 1872. His works are numerous and popular. He was a member of the Assembly Hymn Committee in 1854 and 1855. He was known as a hymn-writer, "Tract" publisher and "Tract" editor (Right Doing), appeared in January 1857, in The Edinburgh Christian Magazine, of which he was for some years the editor.

J. M.

Madan, Judith, née Cowper, was only daughter of the Hon. Spencer Cowper, and the mother of Martin Madan, and of Spencer Madan, sometime Bishop of Peterborough. She had some reputation as a writer. Her Burial Hymn, "In this world and in the world to come," appeared in the Appendix to her son's Ps. & Hymns in 2 st., 8, 8, 8, 8, 8, 8, 8, 8. It has been repeated in several collections in G. Britain and America, and given without alteration in Lyra Brit. 1871, p. 659. We have failed to ascertain the date of Mrs Madan's birth or death.

J. J.

Madan, Martin, b. of Colonel Martin Madan, and brother of Dr. Spencer Madan, sometime Bishop of Peterborough, was b. in 1726. He was to have qualified for the Bar, but through a sermon by J. Wesley on the words, "Prepare to meet thy God," the whole current of his life was changed. After sor... difficulty he received Holy Orders, and subsequently founded and became chaplain of the Lock Hospital, Hyde Park Corner. He was popular as a preacher, and had no inconsiderable reputation as a musical composer. He ceased preaching on the publication of his work Theophalaeon, in which he advocated the practice of polygamy. He died in 1790. He published a Commentary on the Articles of the Church of England; A Treatise on the Christian Faith, &c., and —

*Collection of Anthems and Hymns Extracted from Various Authors, and published by the Reverend Mr.
Madan.* London, 1790.

This Coll. contains 170 hymns thrown together without order or system of any kind.
In 1765 he added an Appendix of 24 hymns. This Coll., referred to in this Dictionay as Madan, and Madan's Ps. & Hym., had for many years a most powerful influence on the hymnology of the Church of England. Nearly the whole of its contents, together with its extensively altered texts, were reprinted in numerous hymn-books for nearly one hundred years. At the present time many of the greatest hymns of the last century are in use as altered by him in 1760 and 1765. Although several hymns have been attributed to him, we have no evidence that he ever wrote one. His hymnological labours were employed in altering, piecing, and expanding the work of others. And in this he was most successful.

Passionide. This hymn, which sometimes begins "Maerentes oculi," is the hymn at Vespers in the Office of the Passion of our Lord Jesus Christ, which has been added to the Roman Breviary since 1740 (see "Aspice infami Deus"). It is in the *Roman Breviary, [Cross and Consolation.] Wackernagel, iii. pp. 118–121, gives four versions from a Nürnberg broadsheet, circa 1526, the Erfurt G. B., 1531, &c. The text in the Umr. L. S., 1821,

No. 664, follows that in the 1531. It is in 3 st. of 11 i., the two initials letters of st. 1., ii.
and the initial letter of st. iii., giving the name Maria.

In the Nürnberg broadsheet it is called "Queen Maria of Hungary's hymn," and so in the Magdeburg G. B., 1534, and many other later collections, it is ascribed to her. She was sister of the Emperor Charles V., and wife of King Ludwig II., of Hungary, who d. in 1526, she surviving till 1536. Both Wackernagel, and Lauss mank in Rock, vol. 82, think it was merely adopted by her as her hymn of consolation, and may have been written for her by Martin Luther. Had Luther written it, however, it is hardly likely that he in the hymn-books edited by him or for him from King's C. B., 1829, to Sturz's C. B., 1548, it would always have appeared without his name.

The trs. are: —

(1) Can I my fate no more with stand, by Miss Winckelrodt, 1826, p. 170.
(2) I cannot ill suppress, or quell, by Dr. G. Wurster, 1860, p. 47.

Magnificat. Metrical paraphrases of the Magnificat are not numerous, and are very rarely used. In the 1500 edition of the Old Version (§ iv. v. q.v.), a version appeared in 10 st. of 4 i., at i. of which reads—

"My soul doth magnify the Lord,
My spirit exalts
Rejoiced in the Lord, my God.
Who is my Saviour."

This was repeated in subsequent editions of the Old Version, and was for some time the authorized metrical form of the Magnificat in use in the Church of England.

2. The New Version by Tate and Brady also contained a metrical paraphrase by Tate, which in time superseded that of the Old Version in public worship. In the Supply. of 1702 it appeared in 20 lines, beginning:

"My soul and spirit, all'd with joy,
My God and Saviour praise;
His good gift from poor estate
His humble handmaid raise."

This version continued in use until the New Version was swept away by the modern hymn-book.

3. The history of the paraphrase in the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1781, which is Tate's version rewritten by W. Cameron, is given under "My soul and spirit, filled with joy."

4. Very few of the versions of the Psalms have added a paraphrase of this Canticle to their version of the Psalms. Dr. John Patrick is an exception. His rendering of the Magnificat in his Ps. of David in Metre, 1691, begins:

"My soul doth magnify the Lord,
Transports of joy my spirits raise;
And God my Saviour shall be
The subject of my song of praise."

5. The version of the Magnificat by Dr. J. Irons, in his Ps. & Hymns for the Church, 1875, is a good rendering, and more in accordance with modern tastes than the above.

It begins:

"My soul doth magnify the Lord,
And God my Saviour sing;
His mighty power and grace hath wrought
For me this wondrous thing."

Montgomery. [Theology]: Written for Sheffield Sunday School Union, Whitsuntide gathering, April, 1830, and first printed in a fly-sheet for the occasion. [w. Ms.]. In 1833, it was included in the Cong. H. Bk. No. 33, and again in Montgomery's Original Psalter, 1853, No. 353, in 4 st. of 4.

Malan, Henri Abraham César. A family of Malans traces its origin to the veil of Piedmont. A branch of it settled at Mencol, in Dauphine, but was driven from France by the persecutions that followed the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes.
tion of the Edict of Nantes. Pierre Malan, after seeing his sister fall a victim to persecution, left Mérindol (1714), and arrived at Geneva (1722). Henri Abraham Cesar Malan was b. at Geneva in 1787. After an education at the College, he went to Marseilles, with the intention of learning business; but, soon after, entered the Academy at Geneva, as a preparation for the ministry, to which he was ordained in 1810. He had been appointed one of the masters at the College in the previous year. The National Church of Geneva was at that time almost Unitarian, and Malan's convictions were in accord with it. But the great movement known as the Réveil, of which the first products were the dissident church of Bourg de Four and a later date that founded by Malan himself, and which finally indubitably the whole Swiss Church with its spirit, was silently preparing itself. The germ of the movement may be traced in the Société des Amis (1810), of which Empeyta and A. Best were leaders; and in Malan's independent allegiance to the doctrines of the Divinity of the Saviour and the free gifts of salvation through Him (1816). But the human agency, which gave it force, and determined its Calvinistic direction, was the visit of Robert Haldane (in the autumn of 1816), to whom not only the pioneers of the movement, but F. Monod, E. Rieu, Guers, Thonidier, Merle d'Aubigné, and others, always pointed as their spiritual father. Empeyta and others sought to attain enfranchisement by the establishment of the "petite Église de Bourg de Four," Malan wished to reform the national Church from within; and a sermon at Geneva, which brought him the obloquy of the professors and theologians that composed his audience, and which Haldane characterized as a republication of the Gospel, was his first overt act (Jan. 19, 1817). But the opposing forces were far too strong for him. The Venerable Company excluded him from the pulpits, and achieved his dismissal from his regentship at the College (1818). In 1820 he built a chapel (Chapelle du Temoignage) in his garden, and obtained the licence of the State for it, as a separatist place of worship. In 1823 he was formally deprived of his status as a minister of the national Church. The seven years that succeeded were the palmy days of the little chapel of Strangers, especially from England, mingled with the overflowing Swiss congregation. But (in 1830) a secession to Bourg de Four, and then the foundation of the Oratoire and the Société Evangélique, which was in 1842 absorbed the congregation of Bourg de Four under the title of l'Eglise Evangélique, thinned more and more the number of his adherents. His burning zeal for the conversion of souls found a larger outlet along the tours of evangelization, subsidized by religious friends, in his own land and Belgium and France, and also in Scotland and England, where he had friends among many religious bodies, and where he preached to large congregations. The distinguishing characteristic of these tours was his dealing with individuals. On the steamboat or the diligence, in the mountain walk, at the hotel, no opportunity was lost. On one occasion an old man whom he visited drew from its sleeve a copy of his great hymn, de Sion, 1841, and told him he pray to see the author of it before it is as the originator of the movement in the French Reform that Malan's fame cannot perish. (Hymnody, § v.) The spirit of this movement was perpetuated in the annual congresses of the Réveil for Evangelical doctrine; phatic Calvinism, expressing itself the despondency of Newton and in contrast with them, in bright peace and gladness. French and pronounced his hymns unequal, literary defects; but their unaffected and fervent sincerity are universal. In the Chants de Sion, hymn 20, "Bien sait"; 165, "Mon cœur je d'esperance"; 199, "Du Rêveur 290, "Agneau de Dieu"; 239, "J'honh," are in every Protestant book; and several others are very popular. Besides his hymns Malan produced scattered tracts and pamphlets on the dispute between the National and Churches and the Church of Reas articles in the Record and reviews. He was a man of progress. His hymns were set to melodies. He was an artist, his little workshop had its forgotten corner, its printing press. In his life was the strong Calvinism and that external union in church-kept him distinct from all other church-comprehension. Thought communion with all the sect and heretical thought in Geneva and S one time there seemed a prospect rejoining the national Church, driven from her. One of the joys was the union of the Evangelical Church of Geneva (1861). He one of his most recent orders was the one he died, at the decayed chapel, in which he was for 43 years. He d. at Vande, Geneva, in 1864, leaving a number of whom, the Rev. S. C. Malan was Vicar of Bucklebutts, as a linguist and theologian of Church. (For further details see Les Trajets de Cesar Malan, et ses Frères.) To English readers M known as a hymn-writer through "Non, ce n'est pas mourir" (q.v. death to die); &c. C. Gregor and C. I. Latrobe.
This hymn is marked by the Eberle in his notes in the issue for June, 1868, as C. Gregor.
The original German has not been traced. The hymn was given as No. 1011 in the 1808 Suppl. to the Moravian H. Bk. of 1801 (1866, No. 72), in 6 st. of 8 1. It was adopted by Montgomery in his Christian Psaltier, 1825, and since then appeared in the Cong. H. Bk., 1836; N. Cong., 1859; Bapt. Ps., &c., 1858; Allon's Cong. Psalm. Hy. 1866, and others.

Mane prima Sabbati. [Easter.] This sequence has sometimes been ascribed to Adam of St. Victor, but Gutierrez in his Ocurrences poeticae, pp. 296, does not print the text, and says that this aspiration is false, for the piece is earlier than Adam and not in his style. Among the British Museum MSS. it is found in one of the 12th cent. (Reg. 2, iv. f. 101 b); in another, c. 1190 (Cali., A. xiv. f. 69 b); in a third of the 13th cent. (Add. 12194, f. 125 b), 1269, &c. It also is in the Sarum (Bodleian ms. 1370), York (ms. in the Bodleian, c. 1390); Paris (early 14th cent. ms. in the Brit. Mus. Add. 16905, f. 144 b), and other MSS. Morel, p. 43, cites it as in a 12th cent. ms. at Einneideln. The text is also in None, No. 98; Daniel, ii. p. 252; Rekeir, No. 93; &c. The Sarum and some other MSS. give it also for St. Mary Magdalen.

On the morr of Easter day. By J. M. Neale in the enlarged H. Noted, 1854. In the Appendix to the Antiphoner and Gradual, 1882; the Hymns, 1882; and the Altar Hymnal, 1884, this tr. is rewritten by M. J. Blacker, as "Dawning was the first of days." [J.M.]

Manington, Alice, daughter of Thomas Manington, of Hastings, was b. at Brighton, and in 1882 was residing in Vienna. She has published:

None of these versions appear to be in English C.U. They are noted under the first lines of the German wherever possible. [J.M.]

Mant, Richard, D.D., of the Rev. Richard Mant, Master of the Grammar School, Southamp ton was b. at Southampton, Feb. 12, 1776. He was educated at Winchester and Trinity, Oxford (B.A. 1797, M.A. 1799). At Oxford he won the Chancellor's prize for an English essay; was a Fellow of Oriel, and for some time College Tutor. On taking Holy Orders, then of one or two places, Vicar of Congresshall, Essex, and two other places, Vicar of Archbishop of Canterbury, 1813, Rector of St. Botolph, Bishopsgate, London, 1816, and East Horsley, 1818, Bishop of Killaloe, 1820, of Down and Connor, 1823, and of Dromore, 1842. He was also Bampton Lecturer in 1811. He d. Nov. 2, 1848. His prose works were numerous, and although now somewhat obsolete, they were useful and popular in their day. His poetical works, and other works which contain poetical pieces, are:

"Mant had little knowledge of hymns, and merely took those of the existing Roman Breviary as he found them; and, not unexpectedly, he had to omit many, and to add others that he in fact became different hymns: nor was he always happy in his manipulation of them. But he had much good sense and devout feeling, and has fallen into undeserved neglect."

His metrical version of the Psalms [See Psalms, English. § vii.] has yielded very few pieces to the hymnals, the larger portion his original compositions being from the work of 1837. The most popular of these is "Holy ground, my soul inspire, Spirit of God, delight thee, and thy original form of "Round the Lord in glory seated," and "For all saints, O Lord." His hymns in C. U. which are not annotated under their respective first lines are:

i. From his Metrical Version of the Psalms, 1824.

1. God, thy King, Thy might confessing, Ps. xvi. v. 1.
2. Lord, to Thee I make my vows, Ps. xvi. 4.
3. Blessed be the Lord most High, Ps. xvi. 4.
4. My trust is in the highest Name, Ps. xx.
5. reign, Jehovah, King supreme, Ps. xxii.
6. Thy listening ear, O Lord, incline, Ps. xxii. 2.
7. To God to my earnest voice I raise, Ps. cvii.
8. To Jehovah's hymn I lay the; Ps. cvii. v. centos in Spurgeon's o. H. Bk. 1866. (1) st. v. (2) "Thee, Jehovah, will I bless" from v. 1.

ii. From his Holydays of the Church, 1828-31.

9. Lo, the day the Lord hath made, Easter, v. 3
10. There is a dwelling place above, All Saints, Easter, v. 3

iii. From his Ancient Hymns, &c., 1837.

11. Before Thy mercy's throne, Lent, v. 1
12. Father of all, from Whom we trace, Unity, v. 1
13. For these who first proclaimed Thy word, Apostles' Creed, v. 1
14. No! when He bids me seek His face, Holy Eucharist, v. 1
15. Oft as in God's own house we sit, Divine Worship, v. 1
16. Put off thy shoes, to His holy ground, The House of God, v. 1
17. As a victor of men, our Hope [Life] and Rest, Greater Festivals, v. 1
18. Thy House each day of hallowed rest. Holy Communion.
19. We bless Thee for Thy Church, O Lord. Thanksgiving for the Church.
20. We deem and own it, O Lord, a proof Divine Grace.

When all Bp. Mant's i.e. original hymns, and versions of the Psalms in C. U. are taken into account, it is found that he is somewhat strongly represented in modern hymnody.

Maria mater Domini. [The Assumption of the B. V. M.] In the Durham Hymnarium of the 11th cent. (f. 326) this is given as a hymn "on the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary." It is also in two ms. of the 11th cent. in the British Museum (Vesp. D. xii. f. 88; Harl. 2361, f. 231 b). The printed text is in the Surtees Society's Lat. Hymn. of the Anglo-Saxon Ch., 1851, p. 109. Daniel, 1. No. 987, prints only the first stanza. Tr. as:

Mary, mother of thy [the Lord]. This tr. was given anonymously in the 18th c. Appendix to the Bk. N. c. No. 172; and again in Skinner's Daily Service Hymnal, 1834.

Mark the soft-falling snow. P. Bed-dridge. [Natural things emblematical of things Spiritual.] 1st pub. in J. Orton's posthumous ed. of Doddridge's Hymnals, 1755, No. 111, in 4 st. of 8 l., and headed "Fruitful Showers. Emblems of the salutary Effects of the Gospel." In that and subsequent editions to 1839, the opening lines read:

"Mark the soft-falling Snow, And the diffusive Rain; To Heav'n, from whence it fell, It turns not back again."

In 1839 J. D. Humphreys, in reprinting the Hymn from the original ms., corrected from the ms. of this hymn the grammatical error of "it" for "they," in these lines, and drew special attention thereto in the language of the Preface to the Hymnals, as evidence of his charge against Job Orton as a careless editor. Amongst modern collections the text of 1755 is retained in the Scottish Evang. Union Hymnal, 1878, and that of the original ms. in Martineau's Hymnals, 1840.

one he became valet de chambre to the prince de Valois. The passionate nature conceived for her turned his thoughts toward Huguenot doctrines, which were impressing themselves on her: an ridicule of the vices of the monks and the disorder of the Church, united with confessions of simple faith, were 1 of all the misfortunes that beset him.

He was wounded and taken prisoner with Francis I. After his return he married (1526?) about the same time.

he succeeded, at his father's death, as valet de chambre to Francis. Outrages of persecution obliged him to leave France and go to Ferrara, where for a time he must have met Calvin. From there he went to Venice; and was then called to France by the king. During the time that he remained in France the Edict of Nantes (1598) rested no sufficient ex cause. In 1536-9 he completed the transla tions of the psalms, which were circulated at Ferrara. They became the fashion of the hour, and were sung by the court and ladies at ballad parties.

Illum. rewarded Marot for a copy of 200 golden doubloons. The text of these psalms (1542) brought him fame. He fled to Savoy, then to Geneva. There, with the help of Francis and Calvin, he compiled 50 Psalms, published with a Dedication to the Ladies of France (1543). The state of Geneva must have been stiffening the mercenary nature. The only authority for his story that has come down is a dedication of Bonvay's to the king of England.

His Prosecution for Heresy led to one of the malicious inventions of the time.

He left Geneva (1543) for Savoy, then to Turin, where he d. in August 1544.

Reading Texts. Her autobiography was a book of Devotional exercises, with hymns appended, Breech, Exeter, of in the Autobiography as her "Unilateral

fecturer and wine merchant of Huguenot descent. After four years at the Norwich grammar-school, and two as a pupil of Dr. Lant Carpenter, at Bristol, and a short experience in the shops of a mechanical engineer at Derby, he entered as a Divinity student in Manchester College, York. His first ministry was at Eastace St. Chapel, Dublin [1828-32], as assistant to his uncle, the Rev. Philip Taylor. From 1832 to 1857 he was in Liverpool, as minister of the congregation meeting in Paradise St. Chapel, and from 1849 in the new Hope St. Church. In 1810 he was appointed professor of Mental and Moral Philosophy and Political Economy in Manchester New College, and in 1857 followed the college to London, becoming its Principal in 1863 and resigning in 1885. On settling in London he became also minister of Little Portland St. Chapel, first in conjunction with the Rev. J. J. Taylor, and afterwards alone till his resignation in 1873. He received the degree of D.C.L. from Oxford in 1888.

The chief of Dr. Martineau's works hitherto published are four volumes of sermons, Endearments after the Christian Life, 2 vols., 1843 and 1847; Hours of Thought on Sacred Things, 2 vols., 1872 and 1873; Studies of Christianity, 1858; Essays Philosophical and Theological, 2 vols., 1866 and 1868, collected from various reviews; A Study of Spaniard, 1862; and Types of Ethical Theories, 2 vols., 1868, 2nd ed. 1886. These contain the substance of his teaching as a Christian minister and an exponent of a spiritual philosophy of religion. By early training and matured conviction a Unitarian of the Catholic and spiritual type, Dr. Martineau has served not only the little group of churches with which he is immediately connected, but the Church Universal by his gifts of sympathy and insight into the deepest questions of human life. He has strengthened the foundations of faith in the light of modern knowledge, and added treasures, the worth of which have yet to be fully measured, to the rich store of the devout literature of the Church.

The Catholic spirit and deeply Christian temper impressed upon all Dr. Martineau's literary work give their distinctive character to the three hymn-books which he has edited, viz.:—

(1) A Collection of Hymns for Christian Worship, Dublin: Printed for the Congregation of Eastace Street, 1841. This collection of 271 hymns already clearly indicates the principles of selection afterwards to be more fully worked out. It was made for the use of a society, "whose worship is paid solely to the God and Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ," and in adopting the hymns of Dr. Watts and others, such changes are made as are required by theological consistency; but the prefatory note says: "This collection is not a successor to the collection of 1815, and was quickly recognised as pre-eminent among the books in use among the non-subscribing churches.

Dr. Martineau's last collection was:—

(2) Hymns for the Christian Church and Home, Collected and edited by James Martineau, London, 1879. This with his own congregation took the place of the old Paradise St. collection of 185, and was quickly recognised as pre-eminent among the books in use among the non-subscribing churches.

Dr. Martineau's last collection was:—

The character of the last two books, and the place they hold in the religious connection for which they were in the first instance prepared, are more fully described in the article on Unitarian Hymnology. It remains only to mention Dr. Martineau's own hymn:—

1. A voice upon the midnight air, (Par.)
2. Thy way is in (on) the deep, O Lord (Lirr.)
3. "Where is your God?" they say, J of God.

They have been hitherto published, but the authorship is un ledged. Nos. 1, 2, appeared first in 1840, and 3 in his Hymns They are also found in other editions. G. Britain and America.

composed the volumes containing The Songs of Praise, from which his paraphrase of The Song of Solomon and the Poem on Divine and Natural Philosophy are derived. He published several editions of Shepherd's Penitential Cries, which were reprinted with several alterations by Mason, and with which his own edition is supplied.

Mason's Songs are commonly presented in modern hymn-books in the form of cantos, and are sometimes compiled from a single Song, and in other instances from several Songs. Many of these are annotated under their respective first lines. The rest include:

1. Best be my God that I was born. Praise for the Gospel.
2. Lord, for the mercy of the day. Praise for Deliverance from the fear of death.
3. Lord of my life, Lord of my days. Praise for Deliverance from immediate danger of death.
5. My God, my only Help and Hope. Praise for Providence.
7. My God was with me all the day. Praise for Creation.
8. Thou wast, O God; and Thou wast blest. Praise for Creation.

Mason, William, M.A., was born at Kingston-upon-Hull, 1725, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge. He was some time a Fellow of Pembroke Hall. On taking Holy Orders he became Rector of Aston, Prebendary of York Minster. He d. April 5, 1797. His poetical writings, including Poems, Tragedies, Odes, and Hymns, published in 1811 as The Works of William Mason, M.A., Prebendary of York, and Rector of Aston.

Massie, Edward, M.A., was educated at Wadham College, Oxford, where he was an Ireland Scholar in 1828; B.A. 1830; M.A. He took Holy Orders in 1830; was Fellow Tutor of University College, Durham, from 1841 to 1845; and then for some time Curate of Gawsworth, Cheshire. He has pub. 1862, A First Hymn for Occasional use in Services of the Church, and Sacred Odes, Lond., 1866, vol. ii., 1867. The latter contains many translations from the German. Those are from German hymns, and within the range of the translations, was the original German lines or their author's names. See Index of Authors and Translators.

Massie, Richard, eldest s. of the Rev. Massie, of Coddington, Cheshire, and of Eccleston, was born at Chester, June 1000, and resides at Pulford Hall, Cheshire. Mr. Massie pub. a te of Martin Luther Spiritual Songs, Lond., 1854. His Lyra medicinal, 1st series, Lond., 1860, contains of the 1st Series of Spitta's Psalter und Hymne. In 1874 he pub. vol. ii., containing trs. of Spitta's 2nd Series, together with an Appendix of trs. of German hymns by various authors. He also contributed many trs. of German hymns to Mercer's Church Psalter & H. Bk.; to Reid's British Hymnal; to the Day of Rest, &c. Most of these are annotated in this Dictionary. See Index of Authors and Translators. [J. J.]

Master, it is good to be. A. P. Stanley. [Transfiguration.] 1st pub. in an article by Dean Stanley on the Transfiguration and hymns relating thereto, in Macmillan's Magazine, April, 1870 (vol. xxi. p. 549). It is in st. of 8. In a note which accompanies the hymn Dean Stanley says:

"I have endeavoured (as in a hymn written some years ago on the Ascension) ['He is gone—Beyond the skies,' p. 590, 4.] to combine as far as possible, the various thoughts connected with the scene."

It is given in full in the Westminster Abbey H. Bk., 1883, and other collections, and with the omission of st. i. as "O Master, it is good to be," in the Hymnary, 1872. [J. J.]

Master, where abidedst Thou? Elizabeth Charles, née Bundle. [Jesus desired.] Appeared in her work, The Three Walking and Other Poems, 1859, p. 182. It is found in a few collections only. [J. J.]

Masters, Mary. Biographical facts concerning Mrs. Masters are very few. In 1738 she published a volume of Poems; and again, in 1755, by Subscription, Familiar Letters and Poems on Several Occasions (Lon. D. H. Cave). These Poems include versified epistles on various subjects to her friends, Odes, and a few paraphrases of single Psalms, &c. From the Preface to her Poems, 1733, we find that Thomas Scott took an interest in her, and contributed some Poems to that volume. It is evident also from the following extract that she was in humble circumstances, and without a liberal education:

"The author of the following poems never read a Treatise of Rhetoric, or an Art of Poetry, nor was ever taught her English Grammar. Her Education rose no higher than the Spelling Book, or the Writing Master; her Genius to Poetry was always brow-beat and disheartened by her Parents, and till her Merit got the better of her Fortune, she was shut out from all Commerce with the more knowing and polite part of the world." Poems, 1733: Preface.

In her Familiar Letters and Poems, 1755, pp. 228-29, there are three "Short Ejaculations," the first of which is the well known:

"The Religion that can give, Sweetest Pleasures while we live; The Religion must supply, Solid comforts when we are dead; After Death its Joys will be, Lasting as Eternity."

When these lines were included in Rippon's Selection, 1787, the following were added:

"Be the living God my Friend, Then my bliss shall never end:"

and the 8 lines were divided into two stanzas. In this form the hymn is known to modern collections.

An ejaculation for use "At the Altar" is sometimes met with. It is also in the Familiar Letters, &c., p. 229, and reads:

"O my adored Redeemer! I design to be, Now present with the mystic Bread to me; May I the Blessings of Thy Blood partake, Who drink the Sacred Wine for Thy dear sake."

This volume also contains a which are worthy of attention.

Mathema, Walter John, widow, Oct. 30, 1853. Early in life she; but on returning through England he began to study for the ministry. In 1874 he entered the Regent's College as a Student, and was ordained to parishes in Scotland, and in 1888, at Preston. In England, he became, in 1883, whilst a student, he pub. a small collection of hymns and poems as At Jesus' Feet. He is also the author of several reprints of popular characters, as: Firerun, 1879; Sunday Parables, 1883, &c. The following are:

3. Go, work for God, and do not say. C.
4. God loves the little sparrows. Dar.
6. My heart, O God, be wholly Thine. C.
7. No room for Thee, Lord Jesus. C.
8. Reign in my heart, Great God. C.

Nos. 1 and 6 of these hymns were in his At Jesus' Feet, 1876. Mr. T. S. T. written several other hymns which appeared in magazines and elsewhere, and these, "Good has come from Nara," have been set to music by Dr. E. J. H. and 9 hymns named above are main hymn-books.

Mathesius, Johannes, a. Mathesius, town councillor at B. b. at Roehlitz, June 24, 1504, and in the University of Tübingen, near Munich, where he found Luther's Von den guten (Wittenberg, 1523); and then we meet with him again in Bremen, near the two of Luther's tractates on the Manichaean. Attracted thus to Wittenberg, he matriculated there May 30, 1529, great zeal and graduated M.A. in the end of 1530 he joined the school at Altenburg, and in the a. was appointed rector of the gymnasium at Bohemia. He was post in 1540, and returned to Wittenberg, complete his studies in theology, and was in, 1541, appointed diacon 1542, pastor at Joachimsthal. He was on the Gospel for the 16th S. a. Mathesius was of most lovable and a. a model pastor, who thoroughly studied the life of a mining preacher and mining business, and in the former years, as in the latter, he was the most famous for his elegies: Nebra, or Nebraide, Nürnberg, 1590; and those passages of Scripture referring to mining, the title being suggested by the prophet (1 Kings xvii. 9), the Hebrew meaning "smelling-place." Besides other volumes...
Matheson, Annie, eldest daughter of Rev. James Matheson, Congregational Minister, of Nottingham, was b. at Blackheath, March, 1833, and now (1888) resides at Notting Hill, London.

At an early age she showed considerable literary ability, her first poem, "Jesus, the children are calling," being composed when she was only 13 years old. This poem, attracting the attention of Dr. George Macdonald, who presented it to the editor of Good Words, who promptly published it in that magazine, a new work, which he exclaimed in its praise:

"Hymn by a Child." In 1879 appeared "I am weak and weary," Lord and from that time Miss Matheson has been a frequent contributor to Good Words, Macmillan's, The Spectator, St. James's Gazette, and other magazines. Her illustrated book for children, was pub. in 1887.

The following are the best known of Miss Matheson's hymns:

1. "Jesus, the children are calling.
2. "I am weak and weary, Lord."
4. "O God, my heart is full of praise." By Dr. J. R. McNeair, in 1884.

Miss Matheson's hymns are characterized by a pleasing combination of simplicity and refinement, both of thought and expression. [W. R. S.]

Matson, William Tidd, was b. at West Hackney, London, Oct. 17, 1853. He was educated first under the Rev. J. M. Gould, and then at St. John's College, Cambridge. Subsequently he studied under Professor Nesbitt, at the Agricultural and Chemical College, Kennington. In 1883 he underwent a great spiritual change. Leaving the Church of England, he first joined the Methodist New Connexion body, and then the Congregationalists. After the usual theological training, he entered the ministry, and held several pastorates, including Chavant, Hants; Gosport; Highbury; Portsmouth, and others. His pastoral works include:

1. A Summer Evening Euphony, and Other Poems, 1877; (2) Poems, 1864; (3) Pleasures of the Sanctuary, 1865; (4) The Inner Life, 1866; (5) Sacred Lyrics, 1868; (6) Three Supplemental Hymns, &c., 1873; (7) The World Redeemed, 1861, &c.

Several of Matson's hymns have been given in Allerton's Surprised. Hymn: Horder's Cong. Hymnals; The Baptist Hymnal; Dale's English H. Bk.; Barrett's Cong. Church Hymnal, 1887, others. The best known are:

1. Father of all, whose wondrous power. Prayer to the Holy Trinity.
2. Glory, glory to God in the highest. Christmas.

8. Teach me, O Lord, thy holy way. Guidance desired.

Mr. Matson's hymns show a considerable mastery of the form and style of hymnic expression, but are somewhat lacking in lyric energy. Those written for use with German chorales are excellent efforts, and rank with his best work. Taken as a whole his hymns far above the average, and deserve acknowledgment. [W. G. H.]

Maude, Mary Fowler, née Hooper, daughter of George Henry Hooper, M. A., and to whom she was married in 1844. She was a close friend of Mrs. Van Alstyne, who d. in Feb. 1887. Mrs. Maude's hymns were pub. in her Twelve Letters on Composition, 1848, and in Memorials of Past Years.
MAURICE, Jane

1852 (privately printed). Her best known hymn, is "Thine for ever, God of love" (Confirmation). Concerning it Mrs. Maude says:

"It was written in 1847 for my class in the Girls' Sunday School of St. Thomas, Newport, Isle of Wight, and pub. in 1848 at the beginning of a little book called 'Twelve Letters on Confirmation,' by a Sunday School Teacher, and reprinted in the 'Memorials,' 1852." [J. J.]

The original is in 7 st. of 4 l. It is usually abbreviated, and st. ii. iii. transposed, as in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871; the Hy. Comp.; H. A. & M., 1875, Thring's Coll., 1882, and most other hymn-books. As a hymn for Confirmation its use is extensive. The omitted stanzas are:

"Thine for ever in that day
When the world shall pass away
When the trumpet note shall sound,
And the nations underground

"Shall the awful summons hear,
Which proclaims the judgment near,
Thine for ever. "Nath Thy wings
Hide and save us, King of Kings." [J. J.]

Maurice, Jane, sister of the Rev. P. Maurice (see below), contributed to her brother's Choral Hymn Book, 1861, 20 hymns together with one or two additions to others, and all under the signature of "J. M." The best known is "Glory to God, for the Dayspring is dawning" (Advent). Taken as a whole, their hymns are limited to her brother's book. Miss Maurice was b. at Tyldyn Tudor, Denbighshire, Oct. 19, 1812. [J. J.]

Maurice, Peter, b. 1826, d. 1849, of Hugh Maurice, of Plas Gwy, Llanrug, Carnarvonshire, and a descendent of one of the oldest families in Wales, was b. at Plas Gwy, June 29, 1806, and educated at Jesus College, Oxford (n.a. 1826, d.d. 1849). He was Chaplain of New College, 1828-58, and of All Souls, 1857-58, and Curate of Kenington, Berks, 1829-54. In 1858 he was preferred to the Vicarage of Yanturn. He d. March 30, 1878. He pub. several pamphlets against Popery (Popery in Oxford, 1852), and was author and editor of:

(1) Choral Harmony, 1854; (2) Tunes in Four Parts for Congregational Worship, 1858; (3) Supplement to Choral Harmony, 1858; and (4) The Choral Hymn Book, Psalms and Hymns for Public and Private Use, Compiled, Prepared, and Composed as a Companion to the Choral Harmony, n.d. (1861.)

To this Choral H. Bk. Dr. Maurice contributed 23 hymns under the initials "F. M." Of these only two or three are found outside of his work, as: "Come, my soul, cast off all sorrow" (Confidence in God); and: "I lift mine eyes to Zion's hill" (Ps. cxvi. 1). To the Choral H. Bk. A. T. Russell and Dr. S. P. Tregelles contributed a large number of original hymns in ms., which are practically unknown elsewhere. This book should be consulted by hymnal compilers. [J. J.]

MAXWELL, James, was b. in Renfrewshire in 1729. In his youth he journeyed to England with a hardware pack, but eventually returning to Scotland, he followed the joint occupation of schoolmaster and poet. In 1753, during a famine in Scotland he was reduced to great destitution, and had to earn his bread by breaking stones on the highway. Most of his publications (from 30 to 40 in all) were produced after that period works in which we are interested

This is repeated in the 2nd ed. of 1863 of the Appendix to the H. Noted, No. 117. In Nicholson's Appendix Hymnals, 1866, it is divided into two parts, part ii., beginning "At the solemn midnight hour."

2. It is the midnight hour. By Elizabeth Charles, in her work The Voice of Christian Life in Song, 1858, p. 94, in 13 st. of 4 l. This, in a recast form by Canon W. Cooke, was given in the Hymnary, 1872, in 6 st. of 8 l., and opening with the same first line.

In W. J. Blew's Church Hym. and Tune Bk., 1852-53, st. i., ii., xv., xvi., xviii. of the "Jesu Defender Cunnium" form of the text are tr. as "Jesu, our Captain and our King." This is repeated in Rice's Sel. therefrom, 1870. [J. J.]

Medley, Samuel, b. June 23, 1738, at Cheshunt, Herts, where his father kept a school. He received a good education; but not liking the business to which he was apprenticed, he entered the Royal Navy. Having been severely wounded in a battle with the French fleet off Port Lagos, in 1759, he was obliged to retire from active service. A sermon by Dr. Watts, read to him about this time, led to his conversion. He joined the Baptist Church in Eagle Street, London, then under the care of Dr. Gifford, and shortly afterwards opened a school, which for several years he conducted with great success. Having begun to preach, he received, in 1767, a call to become pastor of the Baptist church at Watford. Thence, in 1772, he removed to Byrom Street, Liverpool, where he gathered a large congregation, and for 27 years was remarkably popular and useful. After a long and painful illness he d. July 17, 1799. Most of Medley's hymns were first printed on leaflets or in magazines (the Gospel Magazine being one). They appeared in book form as:

(1) Hymns, &c. Bradford, 1785. This contains 42 hymns.
(2) Hymns on Select Portions of Scripture, by the Rev. Mr. Medley. 2nd ed. Bristol, W. Pinn. 1787. This contains 34 hymns, and differs much from the first ed. edition both in the text and in the order of the hymns.
(3) An enlargement of the same in 1777.

Medley's hymns have been very popular in his own denomination, particularly among the more Calvinistic churches. In Denham's Sel. there are 48, and in J. Stevens's Sel. 30. Their charm consists less in their poetry than in the warmth and occasional pathos with which they give expression to Christian experience. In most of them there is also a refrain in the last line of each verse which is often effective. Those in C. U. include:

1. Come, join ye saints, with heart and voice. (1800)
2. Death is no more among our foes. Easter.
3. Eternal Sovereign Lord of all. (1793)
4. Far, far beyond these lower skies. (1789)
5. Father of mercies, God of love. (1749)
6. Great God, to-day Thy grace in every time and place. C. WEIGHT. Choral Festivals."
7. Hear, gracious God! a sinner's cry.

Meine, Johann Wilhelm. [Meine, J. W.] Mein Gott, wie du willst. D. Schmeltzer. [Trust in God.] A fine hymn founded on St. Mark xiv. 36. 1st pub. in his Heilig Flammen (ed. 1769, No. 1, p. 3; probably in the 1st ed., 1704), in 11 st. of 8 l, entitled "Ich Gott will ist mein him." Jesus, as Thou wilt. A good tr., omitting st. II, vi, vii, viii, by Miss Borthwick, in

H. L. L. 1st Ser., 1854, p. 58 (1884, p. 57). This was the favourite hymn of the Rev. Professor Skinner of New York (d. 1871), and many American Christians. It has been included in various recent English and American hymnals, but generally abridged, as e.g. in Dale's English H. Bk., 1874; Songs for the Sanctuary, N. Y., 1865; Lowes Domin, N. Y., 1884, and many others.

In addition to these it has also appeared under the following first lines:

2. 0 Jesus, as Thou wilt, in the B. T. S. Hymn for Christian Worship, 1866.

Meinhold, Johann Wilhelm, D.D. of Georg Wilhelm Meinhold, pastor at Notzelkow on the island of Usedom, was b. at Netzelkow, Feb. 27, 1797, and entered the University of Greifswald in 1813. He became rector of the Town School at Usedom in 1829. In 1821 he was appointed pastor of Cosserow in Usedom, and, in 1828, of Crummn in Usedom (d. d. from Erlangen in 1840). He finally became, at Ester, 1841, pastor at Rehquinkel, near Stargard. He was a staunch Conservative, and after passing through the revolutionary period of 1848, this feeling, coupled with his leaning to Roman Catholicism, made him resign his living in the autumn of 1859. He retired to Charlottenburg, a suburb of Berlin, and d. there, Nov. 30, 1851 (Allg. Deutsche Biog. xvi. 237; Me from Pastor Schmuck of Netzelkow, &c.).

Meinhold's hymn is of considerable interest. Those tr. into English are—

1. Out of Sight, in hast gestillt. Death of a Child. This magnificent hymn is in his Gedichte, Leipzig, 1835, vol. I. p. 38, in 3 st. of 6 l., and headed, "Sung in four parts besides the body of my little fifteen months' old son Joannes Ludius.

This has passed, unaltered, into many recent hymnals, as the "Pens, 1867, Hymnary, 1872, Hymn Comp., 1876, &c.; and in America, into the Presb. Hymn., 1874, Evang. Hymn., N. Y., 1880, and others. In the App. of 1868 to H. A. & M. it was included as No. 338, with 1 long in st. 1, 1.2, altered to brief, and beginning, "The Gentle Shepherd, Thou hast stillled." MELANCHTHON, Philipp, a. of Georg Schwarzw., armourer to the Elector Philipp of the Palatinate, was b. at Bremen, near Carlsruhe, Feb. 16, 1497. From 1507 to 1509 he attended the Latin school at Pforzheim, and here he was already, by Johann Reuchlin, called Melanchton (the Greek form of "Black Earth," his German surname). In October, 1509, he entered the University of Heidelberg (B.A. 1511), and on Sept. 17, 1512, matriculated at Tübingen, where he graduated M.A., June 25, 1514, and where he remained till 1518 as private lecturer in the philosophical faculty. On Aug. 29, 1518, he was appointed professor of Greek at the University of Wittenberg, and in January, 1526, also professor of theology. He d. at Wittenberg, April 19, 1560 (Allg. Deutsche Biog., xx. 268, &c.). Melanchthon is best known as one of the leaders of the German Reformation; as a theologian (Loci communis, 1521, &c.); and as the founder of the famous Conference presented to the Diet of Augsburg in 1530, and still accepted as a standard by all the sections of Lutheranism in Germany, America, and elsewhere. His poems and hymns were written in Latin, and experienced no appreciable influence on the development of German hymnody. They were edited by Grathausen in 1560, Vincent 1563, Major 1575, &c.; the most complete ed. being that of C. G. Breschneider, at Halle, 1842 (Corpus Reformatorum, vol. x.). One of his hymns is noted at p. 393, i., and a number of others are tr. by Miss Fry in her Echoes of Eternity, 1859. [J. M.]

MENNONITE, THE. [Greek Hymnody, § xiv.]

Mennchen, Lieder, l.L.d., was b. at Oldenburg, Dec. 14, 1638, and became a student of law at the Universities of Leipzig and Jena; graduating at Leipzig m.a., 1680, l.l.d., 1682. In 1682 he became tutor in the faculty of law at Leipzig, and was appointed ordinary professor of law in 1702. After a stroke of paralysis, on June 26, he d. at Leipzig, June 29, 1726. The only hymn ascribed to him is:

Mensch, will du leben seeliglich. M. Luther. [The Ten Commandments.] Written as a concise version for Catechetical use; and 1st pub. in the Gymnische Gesange Bachlyn, Wittenberg, 1524. Thence in Wackerhagen, altered form, beginning with st. iii., "O all ye powers that God implanted," is in Dr. Knight's "Colly., Dundee, 1871 and 1874.

5. I praise Thee, O my God and Father. By Miss Winkworth, in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 8. This is of st. vi., xi., xii., and follows the text of Bunyan's "Grace Abounding," 1833, No. 846, this st. beginning there, "Lob sei dir, treuer Gott, und Vater." Her tr. is repeated in Dr. Thomas' "Augustine's" H. Bk., 1866.

Other trs. are:

(1) "O that a thousand tongues were granted," by N. L. Proctor, in "The Church Journals," 1876, p. 225.
(2) "O that a thousand tongues were mine," by M. E. C. Winkworth, in "The Family Treasury," 1872, p. 462.

Other hymns by Mentzer, tr. into English but not in C. U., are:

Mercer, William, M.A., b. at Barnard Castle, Durham, 1811, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge (b. 1832). In 1840 he was appointed Incumbent of St. George's, Sheffield. He d. at Leavy Grave, Sheffield, Aug. 21, 1873. His principal work was:

The Church Visitor and Hymn Book, comprising The Psalms, or Psalms of David, together with the Canticles, pointed for Chanting; Four Hundred Metrical Hymns and Six Responses to the Commandments; the whole intended to appropriate Chants and Tunes, for the use of Congregations, compiled by the Rev. William Mercer, M.A., ... reprinted by John Goss, 1841. Enlarged 1856; issued without music, 1857; quarto ed. 1860; re-engaged ed. (Oxford edition) 1844; Appendix 1872.

For many years this collection was at the head of all the hymn-books in the Church of England, both in circulation and influence. Its large admixture of Wesleyan hymns, and of translations from the German gave it a distinctive character of its own, and its grave and solemn music was at one time exceedingly popular. To it Mercer contributed several translations and paraphrases from the Latin and German, the latter mainly from the Moravian hymn-books; but his hymn-writing was far less successful than his editing, and has done nothing to increase his reputation. [See England, Hymnody, Church of, § iv.] [J. J.]

Mercy alone can meet my case. J. Montgomery. [Lent.] In Holland's "Memoirs of Montgomery" this hymn is referred to under the following circumstances. Speaking to Holland on April 3, 1825, the Rev. Peter Haasen, Montgomery said:

On Sunday afternoon he was preached in Carver Street, halves myself and some servant girls. What were the best of the sermon, "Save me for Thy mercies sake" (Ps. vi. 1) has never since ceased to influence me; hundreds of times have I repeated it in meditation and prayer, and I feel at this moment that if I am saved at last, it must be through the free, unmerited mercy of God, exercised towards me for the Saviour's sake."—Vol. iv. p. 163.

To this Holland adds the note:

"How deep an impression these words made upon the poet's heart may also be inferred from his hymn of which they are the theme. It was composed under the influence of Leamington, October 30, 1819, in the midst of much desolation of soul, and is a just picture of the author's feelings at the time."—Vol. iv. p. 163.

The hymn was pub. in Montgomery's "Christian Psalter," 1825, No. 463, in 5 st. of 4 l., and heaped with Mr. Haile's text, "O save me for Thy mercies sake," and in his Original Hymns, 1853, No. 173. [J. J.]

Merrick, James, M.A., was b. in 1726, and educated at Oxford, where he became a Fellow of Trinity College. He entered Holy Orders, but his health would not admit of parish work. He d. at Reading, 1789. His publications include:

(1) "Messiah," a Divine Essay. Humbly dedicated to the Reverend the Vice-Chancellor of the University of Oxford and the Visitors of the Free School in Reading.
(2) The Destruction of Troy. Translated from the Greek of Pappus of Alexandria into English Verse, with Notes, &c., 1742.
(5) Psalms and Psalmodists. Oxford, 1766. A few of these paraphrases were divided into stanzas. In 1767 the Rev. W. D. Tatler published the work "Divided into stanzas for Parish Use, and paraphrased in such language as will be intelligible to every capacity, with a suitable Collect to each Psalm from the Works of Archbishop Parker.

Merrick's paraphrases, although weak and verbose, were in extensive use in the early part of the present century, both in the Church of England and with Nonconformists. They have, however, fallen very much into disuse. Those in modern hymn-books, mainly in the form of excerpts, include:

1. Blest instructor, from Thy ways. Ps. xxvii.
2. Descend, O Lord: from heaven descend. Ps. xcviii.
3. (In tune of National Pсалm.)
4. As creation's bounds extend. Ps. civ.
5. God of my strength, the hills. Ps. xix.
6. He who with generous pity rules. Ps. cxvi.
7. How pleasant, Lord, Thy dwellings are. Ps. levi.
8. Lift up thy voice and thankful sing. Ps. cxvi.
9. Lo, My Shepherd's hand divine. Ps. xii.
10. Lord, my Strength, to Thee I pray. Ps. xvi.
11. My heart is little: hence has found. Ps. xxxi.
12. O Lord, in me, (a gracious) God, is come. Ps. cxviii.
13. The morning and even. Ps. xxiv.
14. Thy praise O praise the Name divine. Ps. cxvi.
15. The morning and evening. Ps. cxvi.
16. (Sunday Morning.)
17. The morning and evening. Ps. cxvi.
18. To Thy pastures, fair and large. Ps. xxxiii.
From his Poems on Sacred Subjects, 1768, the following cantos have also come into C. U.:

19. Author of good, to Thee we turn. Resignation.
20. Eternal God, we look to Thee. Resignation.
21. 'Tis enough, the hour is come. Non Sumus.

Messiah! at Thy glad approach. M. Bruce. [Advent.] This hymn, which we have ascribed to M. Bruce (q.v.) on evidence given in his memoir in this work, was written probably about 1764–65, for a singing class at Kinnesswood, Scotland, and was first pub. by John Logan in his Poems, 1781, p. 118, No. 7, in 6 st. of 4 l. Although a vigorous hymn, and possessing much poetic beauty, it has not come into extensive use. In the American Church Praise Bk., N. Y., 1891, st. vi. and iv. are given as "Let Israel to the Prince of Peace." Orig. text as in Logan's Poems in Dr. Grosart's Works of M. Bruce, 1865, p. 144.

The Safety of God's people.] In Kelly's Coll. of Ps. & Hymns, 1802, No. 271, and again in his Hymns, 1st ed. 1804, and later editions, in 9 st. of 6 l. (ed. 1853, No. 290). In Hall's Mitre H. Bk., 1836, No. 121, appeared "Come, let us stand as Balaam stood," in 3 st. of 6 l. This has usually been attributed to E. Oster. It is a cento, st. i., ii. altered from this hymn by Kelly, and st. iii. is the first stanza of the first stanza of "The Rock." In the Hall Bk. there is no ascription of authorship.

Methodist Hymnody.—Methodism has made liberal contributions to the hymnody of the Christian Church. Before the first Methodist Society was formed, its founders saw the importance of singing in religious worship, and provided, out of the best available material then at command, a collection of Hymns and Psalms for that purpose. John Wesley made many excellent translations of German hymns, and his brother Charles Wesley, began to write serious songs immediately after his conversion. His father, the Rev. Thomas Wesley, and his elder brother, S. Wesley, Jun., had each written a few good hymns at a still earlier date, which remain in use at the present time. Charles Wesley continued to write hymns for nearly fifty years, and he has left over six thousand five hundred hymns and sacred poems, some of which are among those most frequently found in collections used in public worship. Some of the followers of J. Wesley have also contributed hymns, both in the last and in this century, which have been included in many collections, and are of permanent interest.

Before dealing with the hymnody of the various Methodist bodies, it will be necessary to present some details concerning the rise and development of the principal sources from which all Methodist hymnody is derived. These sources are the Poetical Works of John and Charles Wesley.

1. Poetical Works of John and Charles Wesley.—Charles Wesley pub. about fifty different works and tracts of hymns, from nearly all of which hymns have been selected for use in the churches. When M. A. "Missioner in Georgia," John Wesley prepared and published a Collection of Hymns and Psalms, which he described as an enlarged edition of Wood's Athens of the year 1736, but the unprinted title-page is "Charles-Town, printed by Timothy, 1787." This work was composed of hymns published for the Church of England. The volume was to be provided for the use of those to whom he ministered; his care and serious temper; and his ecclesiasticism. On his return to England, he prepared a new edition of that which issued in 1738. It is a 12m. 84 pages. Of the American book copy is known to exist; of the reprint of 1738 three copies are of which is in the Lambeth Palace.

[For details, see England, Hymnody.]

The first Methodist at Oxford was a member of the Church of England, and was at the present time, frequent, and that time had been an essential part of Methodism. To encourage this form of singing, as early as 1742, provided tune-books for his followers (some of which is in the present time); and that all men will now enumerate the original poems of J. and C. Wesley in detail.

1. The first collection pub. by John Wesley with the name of Wesley's Psalms and Hymns," 2m. 120 pages, contained 139 hymns. This was printed without the Poems, and the printing was also dated 1739. In this book is given Wesley's composition, and chosen 40 hymns were selected for the Wes. H. Bk. fourth ed. appeared in 1743, and another in 1748. In 1740 appeared Hymns and Psalms," an entirely new book of 369 pages, which amongst them some of the most popular hymns, including "O, for a thousand tongues," "And Jesus, lover of my soul," this volume supplied 53 hymns to the Wes. H. Bk.

3. In 1741 the Wesleys issued A Collection of Hymns and Psalms," a volume of 256 pages, containing 36 new hymns in the Wes. H. Bk. This edition was the 3rd is dated 1746.

5. In 1742 a new volume of Wesley's Psalms and Hymns," appeared, with 394 pages and 153 new hymns, of which were selected for the Wes. H. Bk.

7. In 1744 three tracts of hymns were published, titles of Hymns for the Nativity," 1m. 120 pages, for the Watchnight," 11 pages, and Hymns for the Watchnight," 11 pages, from these three tracts are in the 1744.

8. Four tracts and one volume of Hymns," 1745. From two only of these have been selected, A Short View of the Differences.
METHODOIST HYMNODY

Moravian and J. and C. Wesley contains 6 hymns, 3 of which are in the Ws. H. Bk. The second is a most important work: Hymns on the Lord's Supper by Charles Wesley, a volume of 141 pages and 166 hymns, "with a preface concerning the Christian Sacrament and Sacrifice of Christ extracted from Dr. Brevity." From this work 20 hymns were selected for the Ws. H. Bk. of 1747. The Hymns for the Lord's Supper have often been republished, but generally without the preface, which was never intended, as Charle Wesley has only verbatim portions of Dr. Brevity's remarks, in some of the hymns. In the extract, from Dr. Brevity, the doctrine of the True and Real Presence, in the Sacrament, and Charles Wesley embodies the teaching of the preface in his verses. In the fourth section "Concerning the Sacrament as a Means of Great Good," and paragraphs 5, 6, are these words: "In reference to the efficacy of the Death of Christ: This victim having been offered up in the fulness of times, and in the midst of the world, which is Christ's great Temple, and having been thence carried up to Heaven, which is His Sanctuary; from thence spreads Salvation all around, making no distinction did its smoke. And thus His Body and Blood have everywhere, but especially at this Sacrament, a true and real presence." Catching the same idea in at least seven of the hymns which follow —

Hymn 33. "Drink Thy blood for sinners shed.

Hymn 57. "Who shall say how bread and wine

Hymn 65. "Now is the hour when Thy flesh becomes our food.

Hymn 77. "Taste Thee in the broken bread.

Hymn 81. "Come with confidence to find

Hymn 116. "To every faithful soul appear

Hymn 124. "May we celebrate below

It is worthy of remark, that Charles Wesley, in his Journal, makes special mention of the publication of this volume of Hymns during the year 1746, but from February to July of that year, he makes special mention of several Sacramental Services, which are described as occasions of much blessing to himself and to others; and during the octave of Easter he communicated every day. The latter half of the year, the subject is scarcely mentioned. In justice to C. Wesley, it should be recorded, that the "real presence" is not alluded to in any of the six thousand hymns he wrote, apart from this 1746 book, nor did he ever speak of it in his private discourses. In his Journals, he names many instances of his baptizing adult persons, but the subject of Holy Baptism does not seem to have occupied his muse, except in God of eternal truth and love," in the Hymns for the Use of Private Devotion, 1767, and one of two others. This is the more noticeable when it is considered how strict he was generally in observing the ordinances of the Church.

The year 1746 was a remarkable one for the variety of subjects which occupied Charles Wesley's poetic mind: no less than nine separate tracts of hymns were issued during that year, including Hymns for Times of Trouble; Hymns and Prayers for Children; On the Holy Eucharist; Petition and Thanksgiving for the Support of the Holy Eucharist; Graces before and after Meat; and for the Public Thanksgiving. These introduced 154 new compositions, of which only 12 found their way into the Ws. H. Bk. of 1750. The Festival Hymns had Lampe's term of popularity.

Only one new work was issued in 1747: Hymns for the Holy Eucharist, containing 72 pages and 52 hymns, of which six were added to the 1750 book. Marriages, the object being then uppermost in his mind, but they were not then printed. He was married in the spring of 1748, and when the arrangements were made with his brother respecting his stipend, the question of house-furnishing was not considered.
City Road, London), he prepared out of those numerous works a collection for general use in all his societies, which was issued in 1780. The necessity for such a work was felt all over the country. It extended to 504 pages, and 16 pages of contents and index, and included 525 hymns. The contents were divided into the five parts and twenty sections as still retained in the revised ed. of 1875. The 2nd ed., corrected, appeared in 1781, the 3rd in 1782, the 4th 1784. 5th 1786. 6th 1788. 7th 1791. Up to 1791 it remained unaltered, although, every edition having to be set up afresh, errors had crept in. These increased till 1797, when a few of the preachers presumed to prepare a new edition, which they issued with an ornamental title-page. In it about 36 hymns were changed, and some of the favourite hymns of the people, designedly excluded by J. Wesley, were included, and at the end 25 additional hymns were given, making the total 550. This edition gave so little satisfaction to the people that the Conference of 1799 appointed Dr. Coke, G. Storey, H. Moore, and Adam Clarke "to reduce the large Hymn Book to its primitive simplicity," as in the second edition, with liberty to add a note in places to explain different passages for the sake of the unlearned, and with discretionary power in respect to the additional hymns." They rigidly revised the book, omitted 6 of the additional hymns, extended the work to 560 hymns and published it in 1800. The added hymns introduced a new and important feature into the collection, which is a distinct landmark (so to speak) in the history of Methodism, by including 7 hymns by C. Wesley on The Lord's Supper. All the unsold copies of the 1797 book were destroyed, and the revised edition remained unaltered for thirty years.

2. The publication at Manchester in 1825 of a practical edition of the Collection, together with copyright needs, and the desire for greater variety of hymns, led the Conference to appoint the Revs. Thomas Jackson and Richard Watson to make such a selection as would meet the wishes of the people, and in 1831 a Supplement was issued, containing the collection from 560 to 769 hymns. These were chosen from some of Charles Wesley's original ones; from his Festival Hymns and from the collection of Psalms and Hymns then known as the Morning Hymn Book. Many from Dr. Watts were also added, and a few of a popular character which were favourites with the people. The Preface is dated November 9, 1830, and in this Dictionary the date of this Supplement is given as 1830, the date of the Preface. Of the entire collection, including this Supplement, 668 hymns are by the Wesleys (father and three sons), and 101 by 20 other authors. Dr. Watts is represented by 66. Only two hymns in the book are specially adapted for Holy Baptism, one by Dr. Doddridge, commencing "See Israel's gentle Shepherd stand!" the other by C. Wesley, "God of eternal truth and love!" The copyright of the entire collection had for some years depended on only a few hymns, and when the right in these had run out, a new collection became a necessity. A collection was issued by a London publisher independently of the Conference, in 1873, an improvement on the 1831 book. It was printed by a layman at Bristol, and included 1076 hymns, amongst them being many best modern compositions, and 71 choral anthems. The Wesleyan Conference, it could not recognise the work, and the Committee were obliged to prepare an edition. A large conference took the book in hand, and devoted much time and labour to it. The edition of 1800 up to 1797 was retained, but each hymn was copied with the original, and rigidly criticised and either omitted altogether; others had been altered, or added; and in this way 49 hymns were changed in the standard part of the collection. The new Supplement includes 487 hymns, embracing what may be done as a poetical body of divinity. In this it is more complete than the book prepared by C. Wesley, in that it includes by Holy Baptism, the Lord's Supper, and hymns for children. It is divided into nine volumes, in each of which the hymns are classified according to their subject, or the season for which they are best adapted, a special feature being the Psalms. The authors and translators (120). Of these 74 contribute each one or more hymns, and of the rest 41 have hymns translated from the foreign languages, from 2 to 9 each. Book 11 by P. Doddridge, 13 by J. Montagu, and 61 by J. Watts, and 724 by C. Wesley.

First time the authors' names are added; index of first lines. The Methodistic Book, illustrated with Biography, Historical, and Anecdote, by George Johnson, M.A., 1833, deals with this collection by an exhaustive manner.

4. Taken as a whole, whilst allowing it to be a distinct and definite advocacy of Methodist doctrine, and admitting the other advantages, the preponderance of C. Wesley's hymns, we judge this book as ranking with the best among Protestant Christians. It is a book, and it is more. It retains the Standard Hymn Book, not wrongly which John Wesley gave to his people in 1780; and it has added thereto much choice and valuable material by the best of the Church of Christ. The wisdom of the Conference in retaining the 80 hymns of the old collection is realized, and we find that it has done more to conserve the essential doctrines of Methodism among Protestant Christians than the combined prose of all the volumes.

5. The provision for Children and Persons, which is an important feature of the modern hymnody, is not new, or elsewhere, for the Methodist. Hymns for Children pub. by C. Wesley in 1763. Many of these compositions beyond the comprehension of children, object was attained in drawing attention spiritual wants and education of the young. Joseph Benson, a preacher and high repute with the Methodists, published Hymns for Children and Young Persons, Principal Truths and Duties of Religion, selected from various authors, and arranged in natural and systematic order. London, 1814.

Joseph Benson also published a collection afterwards:
Hymns for Children, selected chiefly from the publications of the Revs. John and Charles Wesley, and Dr. Watts, and arranged in proper order. London, 1814.

From the Preface to the first of these collections (the second has no preface), we find that it was compiled and published "to meet the wishes of many persons in different parts of the United Kingdom," but there is no indication that it (or the second collection either) had the official sanction of the Conference, although "printed at the Conference Office." The Conference, however, took up the matter at a later date, and in 1835 Thomas Jackson and Richard Watson, compiled by the direction of the Methodist Book Committee in London:—

At the request of the same "Book Committee of the Wesleyan Conference," Dr. W. H. Rule compiled, and the Conference published, in 1857:—

This was followed in 1870 by a "Collection of hymns suitable for use in Day and Sunday Schools," made by a number of Ministers, at the request of the Wesleyan Methodist Book Committee," which was compiled chiefly by the Rev. Samuel Lee, and published as:—

Finally, in 1879, there was issued, after some delay which is apologised for in the preface:—

This collection of 599 hymns, by a very large number of authors, is not only the best hymn-book for children extant amongst the Methodist Societies, but it has no equal elsewhere except the Church of England Children's Hymn-Book by Mrs. Carey Brock.

Both the official hymn-books issued by the Conference have suitable tunes pub. with some of the editions. [See Children's Hymns, § iv.]

III. Methodist New Connexion.—I. The branch of the Methodist family originated in 1798; the cause being the exclusion of Alexander Kilham from the ministry by the Conference of that year. From the time of J. Wesley's death, those preachers whom he had ordained had occasionally administered the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. One of the old preachers who had done so, was much blamed for his conduct. Mr. Kilham wrote a defence of his conduct in An Address to the Members and Friends of the Newcastle Society, in which he also discussed the question of the right of the people to have the Sacrament from their own preachers. That address, in pamphlet form, was much commended by many of the old preachers, including Dr. Coke, H. Moore, J. Lawson, T. Taylor, W. Bramhall, S. Bradburn, and others, some of whom freely distributed the Address in their circuits. They also, by letters, encouraged Kilham to continue his advocacy of the rights of the people to the privileges asked for by them. Kilham wrote and spoke freely on the subject for a few years, and for so doing he was, at the desire of Mr. Mathew, censured by the Conference of 1798. Other preachers, including Mr. Taylor and Mr. Bradburn, had also published their opinions in support of Kilham's views, but they were not censured. For this act of partiality, the Conference was blamed, and Kilham was encouraged by many preachers who desired to consolidate the Societies rather than the Conference. At the Conference of 1798, some steps were taken to reconcile the contending parties, under the name of the "Plan of Publication," but it did not fully meet the case. Soon afterwards Kilham published a pamphlet entitled The Progress of Liberty, in which he pointed out the defects in the Plan of 1798, and sketched the Outline of a Constitution. This Outline included the following principles:—

1st. That the power to admit and expel members should be the act of the preachers with the consent of the people. 2. The members to have advice in choosing their leaders. 3. That local preachers be examined and admitted by preachers and lay officers conjointly. 4. That Quarterly Meetings should have a voice in recommending young men as preachers. 5. That the people have the right to representation in all the Church Courts, including the Annual Conference. 6. That religious worship be held in such houses as were most convenient for the people. 7. That the members of the New Connexion have the Sacraments of Baptism and the Lord's Supper from the hands of their own Ministers.

For publishing this pamphlet, and advocating the principles it contained, Kilham was tried and expelled from the ministry, in 1796. Those principles became the basis of the Methodist New Connexion, which took permanent form at a Conference held in August 1797, in Ebenezer Chapel, Leeds. Kilham's chief opponent was Alexander Matter, whom J. Wesley had ordained as a bishop to exercise authority in his Societies. The New Connexion commenced with 9 circuits, 7 itinerant preachers (3 of whom had belonged to the parent Society), and over 5,000 members. It was in defence of the principles advocated by Kilham that the new Society was formed; and the preachers and lay-officers have exercised equal rights in the government of the Society throughout its history.

2. At the first the New Connexion adopted the use of the Wes. H. Bk., but a few years later a Supplement was prepared by order of the Conference, and was designated The Small Hymn Book. It consisted of 276 hymns. This Supplement reached a 5th edition in 1810, and was used till the new hymn-book of 1835 was issued.

3. Soon after the Wesleys issued their Supplement in 1831, the New Connexion Conference appointed a committee to prepare a revised and enlarged collection for use in their Societies. The Revs. Thomas Mills and William Shuttleworth were the acting members. The Preface says that they took from the Wes. H. Bk. and from its Supplement the best hymns "for poetic merit, happy Scriptural illustration, and those which best expressed breathings after peace and holiness. With these were combined a number of other hymns from various authors, and a few by pious persons of poetic genius, composed for the work." Such hymns only were admitted as "gave prominence to those doctrinal and experimental truths which are the chief glory of Methodism." This work was divided into seven parts, and forty-one sections. All the copyright hymns in the Wes. H. Bk. were omitted, and, as far as the Committee knew them, the names of authors were added to the hymns. This was the first official Methodist Collection with authors' names. The total number of hymns was 684, and of these nearly 50 were new, and by 27 authors not found in the Wes. H. Bk. This book was in use for over a quarter of a century, when it was superseded by the Collection published in 1863.

4. This New Collection was undertaken by a Committee, with the Rev. Henry Piggin as chief acting member. It was first issued in May, 1863, and included 1024 hymns by 130 authors. A collection of suitable tunes for each hymn, prepared by the Rev. James Ogden, has since been published.

5. Whilst Mr. Piggin and his coadjutors were preparing a new collection for congregational use, the Rev. John Siokoe, then a New Connexion minister, now a clergyman in the Irish Church, was preparing a smaller collection for use in their Sunday schools and houses, which was pub. in December, 1862, with the title The Juvenile Hymn Book. It contains 315 hymns, classified under seventeen sections, with authors' names added to each where known.

iv. Primitive Methodists.—1. This branch of the Methodist family originated in 1816 by the expulsion from the Methodist Society of Hugh Bourne (q. V.). Previous to this H. Bourne had compiled a small hymn-book, which he published in 1809. What was long known amongst the Primitives as The Small Book was issued in 1821, and consisted of 154 hymns, most of which were by Charles Wesley, and William Sanders, a few by Dr. Watts, and 16 by Bourne. This Small Book was widely known in all parts of the land by the first couplet in the book—

"Christ he sits on Zion's hill,
He receives poor sinners still,"

with the chorus:

"I a soldier sure shall be Happy in Eternity."

2. With the growth of the Society, a larger number of hymns was required, and in 1824-25 Bourne prepared and issued what he called the Large Hymn Book, which included 536 hymns. Of these 16 were by William Sanders, 146 were the joint production of William Sanders and Hugh Bourne; a few were by Dr. Watts, Cowper, and Dr. Doddridge; 225 by Charles Wesley; and 20 new hymns by Bourne. A lengthy preface describes the Service of Song as set forth in the Old and New Testaments, and deals with Private Prayer, Preaching, Prayer Meetings, Class Meetings, Love Feasts, Camp Meetings, and Musical Instruments. Bourne says of the new hymns that they are "of a superior cast, and they lead into the mystery of faith."

3. As the Societies increased, a still greater variety of hymns was desired, and the Conference appointed the Rev. John Flesher to prepare an enlarged book. He acknowledges his own inability for performing the duty, but collected 522 hymns from numerous popular authors, living and deceased, and enriched with original hymns and selected ones, altered or re-made." Mr. Flesher adds: thought my lack of sufficient poetic and taste would save me from such an attempt, but when I considered I was surprised, and humbled, and durst not disobey unqualified editor proceeded to cor- mangle over 225 hymns. It need added, that few but himself have app his work. In his preface he remarks:

"Knowing that Providence had not stereo productions of any poet, I have freely altered a hymns from authors of different grades of reputation an important item in strengthening right."

This book, issued in 1854, may be described as the worst edited an severely mutilated collection of hymns published.

4. The Conference of 1882 appointed a Committee to prepare an entirely new one. This was published in 1887, Primitive Methodist Hymnal, compiled by the Committee appointed by the Conference. It contains 1582 hymns by over 300 authors and translators. It is divided into twelve sections, which subdivided: but the arrangement of is more after the manner of the Collected than that usually adopted in dist collections, and is the arrangement Flesher's book simplified. It is supped the usual Indices of first lines of "texts," of "subjects," &c., and a "authors and translators," with the names of their hymns. This last is in addition to the names of the authors being added to the hymn throughout the book. It is and intensely Methodistic, whilst it is one of its authors, in the comprehending its subjects, in the richness of its poetic care and accuracy displayed in the denominations of authors, equal in Methodist hymnody.

5. Provision for the children in the schools has been made by the publication of the Primitive Methodist Sunday School Book, in 1879. It was edited by G. B. and William Leechworth. It is an excellent collection, well edited, and is set to music. Its use is extensive.
fifty thousand adherents. Mr. Everett was expelled on suspicion of having written The Fly Sheets and Wesleyan Takings, and published them, and was Mr. Dunn for publishing The Wesley Banner, a monthly magazine, and for declining to discontinue the work as desired by the Conference; Mr. Griffith for reporting the proceedings of the Conference in The Wesleyan Times. The body then formed by those who adhered to those ministers, at their Annual Delegates Meeting held in Sheffield, August, 1852, appointed the Rev. James Everett to prepare a new edition of the Wes. H. Bk., with the addition of such new hymns as would replace the copyrighted hymns which could not be used. The preface to that book is dated July 1st, 1853. The Supplement contained 248 hymns in addition to the hymns in the Wes. H. Bk. In these were included the compositions of 15 authors not then in the Supplement to the Wes. H. Bk. At the end of this collection there is an index which gives the source whence every hymn in the book is derived, together with the author's name. The collection contains 894 hymns.

2. When the Wesleyan Methodist Association and the Wesleyan Reformers, who united in 1832, to form the Methodist Free Churches, held their annual assembly in Sheffield, in 1859, they resolved to have a new hymn-book, and appointed the Revs. James Everett and Matthew Baxter to prepare the same. They were to retain all the original Wes. H. Bk. of 1780, and add "A Supplement of 250 hymns, and also hymns suitable for a Sunday School." The preparation was dated October, 1859. Changes were made in 58 hymns, but none of the new hymns were by authors other than those who had already contributed. From No. 778 to 821 the hymns were all new. Five doxologies and two grace notes closed the collection of 828 hymns. The Supplement was issued in 1861 as a separate book, with the sub-title Miscellaneous Hymns. Their Sunday School Hymns, 1849, is a fairly good collection.

3. The Methodist Free Churches are compiling a new Coll. of Hymns, which may appear in 1889. A committee of ministers have been employed for a long time in its preparation. The Sunday S. H. Bk. appeared in 1888.

vii. Bible Christians.—The founder of this society was William O'Bryan, a Cornishman, born February 9th, 1778, at Gunwen, Luxelion. His father owned a farm and was a Cornish miner. Both his parents were Methodists, and had heard John Wesley preach. They had preaching services in their own dwelling-house. William had a fair education, and the curate of the parish offered to prepare him for college. He was converted under the Methodists in May, 1797, and was apprenticed to the drapery business, became worldly, lost his religion, and again gave his heart to God, November 5th, 1799. He heard J. Wesley preach twice, and received his blessing. He began to preach in 1801, was married in 1803, and made a local preacher in 1809. For preaching in villages beyond his own parish, where there was no Wesleyan preaching, he was expelled from the Methodist Society. Being urged to continue his preaching, he found in North Devon fourteen villages without any places of worship, and in November, 1814, he left his home to itinerate and preach in those places. In October, 1815, he preached in the house of Mr. Thomas Shebbeare, and, being urged to do so, he then formed those present into a religious Society. This Society was at first known by the name Arminian Bible Christians; afterwards the initial word was dropped, and they have since been known as Bible Christians, and sometimes, locally, Briantites. Their chief Societies are in Cornwall and Devonshire, but they have a few elsewhere. O'Bryan compiled the first hymn-book, about 1815, when their first Conference was held. In 1829 a separation took place. O'Bryan left the body in 1831, and went to America, where he died, January 8th, 1869. For his share in the copyright of the hymn-book, and for other claims, the Conference allowed him twenty yards a year till he died. The hymn-book is divided into six parts and twenty-eight sections. The hymns are mostly those in use in the Wes. H. Bk., but they are rearranged throughout, and several by other authors were added. In July, 1862, a 4th ed. was issued, with 9 hymns changed, the names of authors added as far as known, the index of Scripture texts enlarged, and an index of verses. The 5th ed. is dated 1882. The Conference of 1885 appointed a committee to prepare a new and more comprehensive collection, to be published in due course.

2. In 1852, a Sunday School Union for the Bible Christians was formed at Stibbein, in Devonshire, and they published The Child's Hymn Book for use in their schools. In 1859 a new ed. was prepared and published, containing 272 hymns, more than 60 of which were new. That book has served the Connection nearly a quarter of a century, and is still in favour. The hymns are carefully classified, but no authors' names are given.

vii. Conclusion.—When the Methodist (Ecumenical) Conference was held in our City Hall, in September, 1861, a suggestion was made to have one comprehensive hymn-book for all the branches of Methodist throughout the world. This course, however, has not been adopted.

Translations of English hymns into various European and other languages have been made for use by the various branches of the Methodist Societies on the Continent of Europe and on Mission Stations. In several instances these translations have been supplemented by original hymns in the vernacular, and composed chiefly by the resident missionaries. [See Missions, Foreign.]

The Methodist hymn-writers are very limited in number. The provision made by John and Charles Wesley for every aspect of Methodism, the stereotyped character of each book when issued, the great number of years it had to run before any omissions or additions could be made, and the intense affection of Methodists for their old hymns, have had much to do in producing this result. When at rare intervals outlets for pen-and-ink poetical life were made in new editions of old books, and in collections for children and the young, W. M. Hunt, W. M. Punshon, B. Gough, J. Lyth, G. S. Rowe, J. Briggs,
E. E. Jenkins, M. G. Pearse, and a few others, have produced lyrics of merit and usefulness, but no great singer has appeared in Methodism since Charles Wesley was gathered to his fathers. [See American Hymnody, p. 58.].

Metrophanes of Smyrna, was bishop of Smyrna towards the close of the ninth century. He was a partisan of Rome in her contest with Photinus, and an adherent of his rival, Ignatius. He d. circa 910. His chief hagiographical works are his Canons in honour of the Blessed Trinity, one of which has been published in Anth. Graec. Carm. Christ., 1871, p. 284. They are eight in all, one for each Tone, and are sung at Matins on Sundays, the Canon changing with the Tone on each succeeding Sunday. A cento only, and that from the Canon for the Sunday of the Second Tone, from the Octoechos, has been rendered into English. This is Dr. Neale's "O Unity of Threefold Light" (Holy Trinity), a tr. of a cento:—Τριφυλή Μονας Θεωρείων, pub. in his Hymns of the E. C. 1862, in 3 st. of 8 l. In 1867, it was given with a doxology of 4 l. and a slight alteration in the People's Hymnal; and again in the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hymns., the Hymnary, and other collections. [J. J.]

Meusel, Wolfgang, s. of Anton Meusel (Meuselin, Müsseen, Mössl, Mössl, Muscleus, &c.), cooper at Dieuze in Lorraine, was b. at Dieuze, Sept. 8. 1497. He studied for short periods in the schools at Rappolsweiler, Colmar, and Schléauthadt, between times wandering over the country and earning his way by his singing. In 1512 he happened to come to the Benedictine monastery at Lixheim near Saarburg, just as Vespers were being sung. His beautiful voice, his, he joined in, led the monks to recognize him, and here he studied music, and became organist to the cloister. In his 20th year he devoted himself to the study of theology, and soon after began to preach in the church at Lixheim, and in the neighbouring village churches. In 1518 he became acquainted with Luther's writings and embraced his views, but did not till 1527, after he had declined as prior. On Dec. 26, 1527, married at Strassburg to a niece prior at Lixheim. As they means she had to take a pleb servant, and he, after living as a linen-wafer, was an to get work as a day-labourer at times, when he was appointed village of Doritzheim, near 1529 he became deacon of church at Strassburg, and then ning of 1531, was sent to the court of the Cathedral. When the city of 1531, p. 374, was forced on the June, 1548, Meusel left Augsburg and had to flee from place to place for longer or shorter periods. Constanz, St. Gall, and Zürich he was invited to Bern as professor, and went there in April, 1549, for this timely help he refused on his deathbed. His apointments offered to him were as follows, A. (Koch, 1533, Allg. Deutsche 95, 3c.) Meusel's best-known Commentary on the Psalms, Eight hymns are ascribed to him are printed by Wackernagel, iii. A. A seventh, a tr. of the Christ dies" is noted at p. 237, ii. The.

Der Herr ist mein treuer Hirte. [Hats. Ps. xliii.] This appeared in the 1531, and thence in Wackernagel, iii. p. 7. It is also said, seeing that Meusel wrote of his birthplace, that the version also with his name till in the Nürnberg Gesangbuch as anonymous. It was included in 1549, in most subsequent collections on the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1563, No. 411, Berg G. B., 1569, and many later books. Herr ist mein treuer Hirte," Tr. by:

Meyfart, Johann Matthias, Nov. 9, 1590 at Jena, during a vocation as a brother (wife of Pastor Meyfart Kol, near Waltershausen, Gotha to her father. He studied at the Jena (M.A. 1611; D.D. 1624) and was therefor afterwards for some time the philosophical faculty at Jena. He was appointed professor in the faculty at Coburg and in 1623 director of his residence at Coburg was a power. When his colleagues in sum made a complaint to the theological faculty regarding a dissertation (De desinaietica), which he published in 1633 as the offer of the professorship of the newly-established University of Erfurt, on his work at Erfurt, July, 163, of the University in 1634, and in also pastor of the Prediger Kir.
MEYFART, JOHANN M.

at Erfurt, Jan. 26, 1842 (Koch iii. 117; Allg. Deutsche Abh. xi. 646, &c.).

Meyfart's devotional works (Paulus, propheticus, 1625; Paulus, pastor, 1628; Bibliothek Salisiana, 1629; Heimliche Jerusalem, 1630; Junges Geistl. 1632) passed through various editions, and produced a great interest, not only by their vivid picturing and their earnest calls to repentance and amendment of life. His well-meaning efforts, by books and otherwise, towards raised the tone of student life in Germany, and his exposition of the excesses and defects in both academical and churchly life at that period, brought him much ill will and opposition; and did not procure useful fruit till much later. His hymns were few in number, and appeared mostly in his devotional books.

Only one of Meyfart's hymns has passed into English, viz.—

Jerusalem, du hochgebaute Stadt. The New Jerusalem. This splendid hymn appeared in his Tuba Navis in Coburg, 1626 (Duval Library, Gotha), a volume containing four sermons preached at Coburg on the Four Last Things, viz. Death, Last Judgment, Eternal Life, and Eternal Punishment. It forms the conclusion of the third sermon (on St. Matt. xvi. 1-9) which is entitled "On the joy and glory which all the Elect are to expect in the Life everlasting." This conclusion is reprinted verbatim et literatim (i.e. with the introductory and closing sentences, and the connecting sentences between st. 1, iii. and iv.) in the Blätter für Hymnologie, 1883, pp. 120–124. The text of the hymn, in 8 st. of 8 lines, is, however, unaltered, according to the marginal directions of the original (save st. vi. i., where the original is "Man speilt "), as No. 1537 in the Berlin G. L. E. ed. 1863. Of it Lauxmann, in Koch vii. 665, says:

"The hymn is a precious gem in our Treasury of Song, in which one clearly sees that from it the whole heart of the poet shines out on us. Meyfart had his face turned wholly to the Future, to the Last Things and with a richly fanciful mysticism full of deep and strong faith, he united a flaming zeal for the House of the Lord, and against the abuses of his times."

He adds that the hymn was a great favourite with Charles Gützlaff, the apostle of China (d. at Hong-Kong, Aug. 9, 1851), whose last words were "Would God I were in thee" (st. i. 3) and of Julius Schnorr of Carolsfeld, the well-known painter, whose last work was illustrating of this hymn, and at whose funeral in 1872 it was sung. The popularity of the hymn was greatly aided by the magnificent melody, generally ascribed to Melchior Franck (st. 3, at Zittau, 1580; c. 1604, capellmeister at Coburg; d. at Coburg, June 1, 1639), but not yet traced earlier than to the Erfurt G. B. 1683.

Translations in C. U. —

1. Jerusalem, thou city built on high. A good tr. of st. i.–iv., vii., as No. 112 in the Dalston HymnBook, 1848.
2. Jerusalem, thou city built on high. A good tr. of st. i.–iv., vii., by A. T. Russell, as No. 261 in his Ps. & Hymn, 1852, St. i. 1, 2, 4 are from the 1848 tr. The form in Dr. Pagenstecher's Coll., 1864, No. 288, is in ll. 1–4, ii. at 1848; i. 3–5, viii. at 1851.
4. Jerusalem! high tower, thy glorious walls.

A good and full tr., by Bp. W. R. Whittingham, in the Amer. Epis. Hymn, for Church and Home, 1869, No. 414; and the Amer. Elys. Hymnal, 1871, St. i., viii., are in M. W. Stryker's Christian Chorals, 1885.

MIDDLETON, THOMAS FANASHAW, D.D., a. Thomas Middleton, Rector of Redleton, in Derbys., was b. there on Jan. 26, 1769. He was educated first by his father, then at Christ's Hospital, and finally at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge (B. A. in honours 1792). He was successively Curate of Gainsborough; Rector of Tunstall, Northamptonshire, 1795; and Vicar of St. Pasina, 1810; Archdeacon of Huntingdon, 1812; and the first bishop of Calcutta, 1814. He d. in Calcutta, July 8, 1822. Bishop Middleton's publications were mainly confined to various Sermons and Charges, and a work on the Greek Article. In 1824 his Sermons and Charges were collected and pub. with a short Memoir, by Dr. H. R. Bonney. At p. xiv. the only name ascribed to him is given with the explanation that it was composed by the Bishop "and always sung on new year's day, by his desire."

It is: "As once the past my enemy strays" (New Year), in 4 st. of 41. It was printed in the August number of Curus Wilson's Family Visitor, 1826; again in Hall's Mitre Hymnal, 1836, and later in several collections. The text is given in Bk. of Praise, 1862, p. 238. (J. J.)

Midlane, Albert, was b. at Newport, Isle of Wight, Jan. 23, 1825, and has been engaged in business in that town for many years. To his Sunday school teacher he ascribes the honour of prompting him to poetic efforts; and the same teacher did much to shape his early life. His first printed hymn, "Hark! in the presence of our God," was written in September, 1842, at Carlisbrooke Castle, and printed in the Youth's Magazine in November of the same year. Since then he has written over 300, and of these a large proportion are in C. U. They appeared in magazines and small mission hymn-books, including:

In addition to several small works in prose, Mr. Midlane has gathered his verse together from time to time and published it as:

Of the hymns contained in these works nearly 200 have been in C. U. from 1861 to 1887, the most popular being “There’s a friend for little children.” The hymn-books, however, in which many of them are found are usually very small, and are used in what are commonly known as Gospel Missions, and have gradually given way to other and more important collections. We therefore append only those hymns which are at the present time in use in official or quasi-official hymn-books, or such collections as have a wide circulation. Those hymns which are omitted from the following list may be found in the works given above, and especially in the Gospel Echoes. The bracketed dates below are those of the composition of the hymns.

2. Lord Jesus, save! (July, 1860) Lent.
22. If Jesus came to seek and save. (Oct. 1861) Salvation in Jesus.
iv. Given in Leaves from Olivet, 1864.
23. See the blessed Saviour dying. (Oct. 1860) Good Friday.
v. Given in Gospel Echoes, 1865.
25. Come and welcome to the Saviour. (June 8, 1862) Invitation.
26. Kind be gracious to a sinner. (May 21, 1861) Lent.
27. God speaks from heaven; in love He speaks. (July 6, 1862) Love and Mercy of God.
28. We have, because He will. (April 20, 1862) The “J. Willa” of Jesus.
31. Himself He could not save. (Sept. 1861) Good Friday.
32. I once was bound in Satan’s chains. Pardon.
34. Jesus never answered “Nay.” (May 13, 1862) Jesus always the same.
35. Jesus the blessed centre is. (June 8, 1862) Further glorified in the Sun.
36. Jesus, the risen Saviour. (July 31, 1862) Easter.
37. Jesus, the soul that trusts in Thee. (May 7, 1864) Salvation through Jesus.
38. Look, poor sinner, look to Calvary. Good Friday.
42. Scripture says Where sin abounded, (March 3, 1862) Abounding Grace.
43. Shall Jesus’ love be spoken? (May 4, 1862) Love of Jesus.
44. The Lamb was slain, the blood was brought. (Aug. 24, 1862) The Passover.
45. The silver trumpets sounding. (May 7, 1862) The Year of Jubilee.
46. There is a rest for weary souls. (Dec. 4, 1863) Rest. Peace in Jesus.
47. The voice of mercy calls thee. (Nov. 5, 1861) Mercy.
48. When the Saviour said “Tis finished.” (Oct., 1861) Good Friday.
49. When God begins His gracious work. (Dec. 27, 1860) God’s Endeavour.
54. Apart from every worldly care. (June 1866) Prayer Meetings. Written for Spurgeon’s O. O. H. Bk. 1866.
58. God bless our Sunday School. S. School Anniv. First printed in the Baptist Children’s Magazine, July, 1844. It has passed through several collections for children, but usually st. ii. is omitted, thus reducing it to 3 st.
59. He comes! He comes! The Bridgeman comes. (Sept. 9, 1856) Advent. In The Present Parousia, 1851.
62. Lord, our waiting spirits bow. (June, 1866) Prayer Meetings. Written for Spurgeon’s O. O. H. Bk. 1866.
64. Never perish! words of mercy. In Christ. Printed in the monthly Girdle, June, 1857, and in the British Messenger, Aug. 1857. In a double st. In the collections it is reduced to the first two stanzas.
66. Nought but the voice of God can speak. (Jan. 29, 1863) All things are of God. In the 1873 Appendix to Sharp’s H. of G. & Glory.
67. Now, O joy, my sins are pardoned. Pardon and Peace. (Nov. 9, 1866) Printed in the London Messenger, March, 1861, then in the Gospel Echoes, 1865, and then in several hymn-books. The original began, “Once I sinned, but not in earnest.” Usually st. ii., iii., of st. i., are given as “Now, O joy, &c.”
68. O art thou an hr. of glory? (June 4, 1861) Caution. In H. Bk. for Youth, 1865.
Midst scenes of confusion and creature complaints. D. Denham. [Heaven Anticipated.] This hymn appeared in the 1826 Appendix to J. Rees's Coll., No. 165, in 5 st., and again in Denham's Saint's Melody, &c., 1857, No. 740, in 6 st. of 4 l. It is given in a few collections in G. Britain and America.

Mighty Father! Blessed Son! J. S. B. Monseil. [Holy Trinity.] Appeared in his Spiritual Songs, 1867, in 9 st. of 9 l., as the hymn for Trinity Sunday. In the Hymnal Comp., 1876, and in the Prim. Meth. Hymn-1, 1887, No. 197. In Dr. Monseil's Hymns of Love and Praise, 1883, the same hymn is rearranged and partly rewritten (but still retaining the opening lines) in 9 st. of 3 l. Snyder, in printing this form of the hymn in his Songs of G. & G., 1872, has divided it into three parts, and added this note thereto:

"Note the Symphonic Form, three lines harmonizing in each verse; three verses in each division; three divisions making one hymn."

This form of the text, but usually without these divisions, is also in Thring's Coll., 1882, and others.

Miles, Elizabeth, née Appleton, was b. at Boston, U.S.A., March 28, 1867, and married in 1833 to Solomon P. Miles, Head Master of the Boston High School, and afterwards the Principal of a private school for young ladies in the same city. He d. in 1842. On leaving Boston, Mrs. Miles went to reside with her son at Brattleborough, Vermont. Her principal hymns are:

1. The earth all light and loveliness. Part i. Summer.
4. Father, direct my ways. Divine Guidance desired in Affliction. In the Boston Book of Hymns, 1846; the Boston Hymn. of the Spirit, 1864; and some other collections, it begins with st. ii., "Thou, infinite in love."

Three additional hymns were pub. for the first time in Putnam's Singers and Songs of the Liberal Faith, 1875.

J. F. M.

Millard, James Elwin, D.D., was b. May 18, 1823, and educated first at Magdalen College School, and then at Magdalen College, Oxford (B.A. in honours, 1843). Taking Holy Orders, he became Curate of Bradfield, Berks, 1846; Head Master of Magdalen College School, 1846; Fellow of his College, 1853; and Vicar of Basingstoke, 1864. Dr. Millard has pub.:

(1) The Island Choir, or the Children of the Child Jesus, 1847; (2) Historical Notice of the Office of Choir Masters, and a Short Account of Basingstoke, Basing and the Neighbourhood, 1847. He also contributed a few hymns to the Rev. T. F. Smith's Devout Charist, 1849.

From the Devout Charist the following hymns have come into C. U.:

1. God eternal, mighty King. Th Deum.
2. In deep humiliation. Ascension.
3. Last night I lay a-sleeping. Carol.

The first of these passed, with alterations, into Hymns & Introits (Masters), 1852, with further alterations into H. A. & M., 1881. The text was corrected in Biggs's Annotated H. A. & M., 1867. The hymn is widely known.

J. J.

Miller, Emily, née Huntingdon.

[Various]

Miller, Josiah, M.A., was b. at Putney, April 8, 1832, and educated for the Congregational ministry at Highbury College, and graduating M.A. at the University of London, 1855. After holding parishes in D. Whiston, Long Sutton, and Nork, he became Secretary of the "British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews," and subsequently of the "London City Mission." He d. in London, December, 1880. He pub.:

(1) Our Hymns: their Authors and origin, 1866. The groundwork of this volume was the leading hymn-books of the Congregational body. (2) Our Dispensations, 1866. (3) Singers and Songs of the Church: being biographical sketches of the Hymn-writers in all the Principal Collections. With Notes on their Psalms and Hymns, Lond., Longmans, 1869. This was an extension of our Hymns to twenty-five representative English hymn-books of various denominations. (4) Christians Organ, 1873.

Mr. Miller rendered great service to hynmology by the production of Our Hymns and Singers and Songs. These works, and especially the latter, furnished the fullest illustrations of hymnody, which up to the time of their publication had appeared in English, and embodied a great mass of information which had been gathered by the author and other workers in the same field, notably D. Sedgwick, C. D. Harcastle, G. J. Stevenson, and Dr. C. Rogers. Considering the wide ground which it covered, it was an accurate and painstaking work. Where it fails is usually in omissions, and not in positive errors. His statements are generally correct so far as they go, but recent researches in hymnody have shown that in numerous instances they did not go far enough. The Greek, Latin, German, and American portions of his work are especially weak. His main strength is in his Biographies. [W. G. H.]

Millions within Thy courts have met. J. Montgomery. [Sunday Evening.]
Pub. in his Poetical Works, 1841, vol. iv. p. 293, in 10 st. of 6 l. and again in his Original Hymns, 1835, No. 129, where it is headed "Evening Song for the Sabbath-Day." Its use, especially in America, is extensive, but it is usually abbreviated. In Kennedy, 1863, and one or two others it begins "Thousands within Thy courts have met." Also given as, "Within Thy courts have millions met."

J. J. Mills, Elisabeth, née King, dau. of Philip King, was b. at Stoke Newington in 1805; married to Thomas Mills, m.r., and d. at Finsbury Place, London, April 21, 1829. Her popular hymn:

We speak of the realms of the blest [Heaven] is thus annotated in Miller's Singers and Songs, &c., 1869, p. 483. "We are much indebted to John Remington Mills, Esq., m.r., for information about this hymn, written by his accomplished relative. The original has 6 st. and was composed after reading 'Bridges on the 119th Psalm' (in ver. 44, p. 116). 'We speak of heaven, but oh! to be there.' . . . Already deservedly a favourite, new interest will be added to this hymn when we know that the author was early called to the realms of the blest, of which she sang so sweetly, and that she wrote this hymn a few weeks before her death." The text of this hymn is usually given in an imperfect form. The corrections are supplied by W. F. Stevenson in his Hymns for Church and Home, 1873, "Children's Hymns," No. 161, and the note thereon. Few children's hymns have been received with more favour. It is found in almost every hymn-book published for Children in Great Britain and America during the last fifty years. In some collections it begins, "We sing of the land of the blest"; and in others, "We talk of the land of the blest." [J. J.]

Mills, Henry, d.d., s. of John Mills, was b. at Morristown, New Jersey, March 12, 1786, and educated at the New Jersey College, Princeton, where he graduated in 1802. After being engaged in teaching for some time at Morristown and elsewhere, he was ordained Pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Woodbridge, New Jersey, in 1816. On the opening of the Auburn Theological Seminary in 1821, he was appointed Professor of Biblical Criticism and Oriental Languages, from which he retired in 1834. He d. at Auburn, June 10, 1867. In 1845 he pub. Horae Germanicae; A Version of German Hymns. This was enlarged in 1856. The trans are not well done, and very few are now in use. In the New 18 and 9 doxologies were given in the Lutheran General Synod's Coll., 1850. Many are noted in the articles on German hymn-writers and hymns throughout this Dictionary. [F. M. D.]

Millman, Henry Hart, d.d., the youngest s. of Sir Francis Millman (who received his Barony as an eminent Court physician), was b. Feb. 10th, 1791, and educated at Dr. Burney's at Greenwich, and subsequently at Eton. His career at B. N. C. Oxford, was brilliant. He took a first class in classics, and carried off the Newdigate, Latin Verse, Latin Essay, and English Essay. His Newdigate on the Apollo Belvedere, 1812, is styled by Dean Stanley "the most perfect of Oxford prize poems." His literary career for several years promised to be poetical. His tragedy Fathio was played at Covent Garden. Miss O'Neill acting Bianca, was put on the play in the year of his appointment to St. Mary's, Reading (1817): The Fall of Jerusalem (1820); Belshazzar and The Martyr of Antioch (1822), and Anne Boleyn, gained a brilliant reception from the reviewers and the public. He was appointed Poetry Professor at Oxford in 1821, and was succeeded ten years after by Keble. It must have been before 1825, the date of Hobart's consecration to Calcutta, that the 18 hymns by which Hobart's Hymns were composed. But his poetry was only the prelude to his larger work. The Hampton Lectures (1827) mark his transition to theological study, and the future direction of it was permanently fixed by his History of the Jews (1829). This book raised a storm of obloquy. It was denounced from the University pulpit, and in the British Critic. "It was the first decisive inroad of German theology into England, and no doubt a valuable indication that the Bible could be studied like another book, that the characters and events of the sacred history could be treated at once critically and reverently." (Dean Stanley.) In 1835 he was presented by Sir Robert Peel to a Canonry at Westminster and the Rectory of St Margaret's. In 1839 appeared his valuable edition of Gibbon's Decline and Fall; and in 1840 his History of Christianity to the Abolition of Paganism in the Roman Empire. Amongst his other works in a different field were his Life of Keats and his edition and Life of Horace. It was not till 1854 that his greatest work—"vast and varied learning, indefatigable industry, calm impartiality, and subtle and acute criticism, among the most memorable in our language" (Quart. Rev.)—Latin Christianity—appeared. He had been appointed Dean of St. Paul's in 1840. The great services under the dome originated in his tenure of the Deanship. His latest work, published after his death, Sept. 24, 1868, was The Annals of St. Paul's. Though one of the most illustrious in the school of English liberal theology, he had no sympathy with the extreme speculations of Germany. The "criticism" of Tübingen "will rarely bear criticism." He "should like an Ewald to criticise Ewald." "Christianity will survive the criticism of Dr. Strauss," and the "bright flashing artillery" of Rémain. His historical style has been compared to Gibbon in its use of epigram and antithesis. His narrative is full of rapidity of movement. His long complex paragraphs have often a splendour of imagination as well as wealth of thought. All the varied powers of his mind found vent in his Milton, John, was b. in London, Dec. 9, 1608, and d. there Nov. 8, 1674. His poetical excellences and his literary fame are matters apart from his hymnology, and are dealt with in numerous memoirs. His influence on English hymn-writing has been very great; his 19 versions of various Psalms having lain for the most part unused by hymnal compilers. The dates of his paraphrases are:

Ps. cxxxv. vers. cxxxv., 1622, when he was 15 years of age. These were given in his Poems in English and Latin, 1645.
Ps. lxxxv. - lxxxv., written in 1646, and pub. as Nine Psalms in metre, 1647.
Ps. cxxxv., 1653; etc., Ps. cxlxi, Aug. 9, 1653; Ps. cxliii., Aug. 10, 1653; Ps. cxlv., Nov. 12, 1653; Ps. cxxvi., Aug. 13, 1653; Ps. cxl., Aug. 14, 1653; Ps. cxlii., Aug. 15, 1653.

These 19 versions were all included in the 2nd ed. of his Poems in English and Latin, 1673. From these, mainly in the form of canticles, the following have come into C. U.:
1. Come, Lord, etc. (Ps. cxlii.).
2. Awake, my soul (Ps. cxlii.).
3. God in the great assembly (Ps. cxlii.).
4. How lovely are Thy dwellings fair (Ps. cxlii.).
5. From this (Ps. cxlii.).
6. They pass refreshed (Ps. cxlii.).
7. Let us with a gladness (Ps. cxlii.).
8. Let us with a joyous mind (Ps. cxlii.).
9. The Lord will come and not be slow (Ps. cxlii.).

Of these canticles Nos. 4 and 5 are in extensive use. The rest are mostly in Unitarian collections. There are also canticles from his hymn on the Nativity, "This is the month, and this the happy morn" (q.v.).

Translators in C. U.:
1. The wonders of the Almighty hand. By J. Chandler, in his Hymns of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 20, in 6 st. of 4 lines; and again in his Hymns of the Church mostly Primitive, &c., 1841, No. 13. It is found in a few modern collections.
2. O God supreme! in rapt amazement. By J. D. Chambers, in his Laudis Scon, 1857, p. 20, in 6 st. of 4 lines. It was repeated in the Salisbury Bk., 1857; Martineau's Hymns, 1873 (in 5 st.), and in others.

Mirs probat sese modis. Jean Baptiste de Santeuil, [St. Stephen.] In the Cluniac Breviary, 1686, p. 182, in Santeuil's Hymni Sacri et Nori, 1689, p. 57, and the Paris Breviary, 1736. It is also in several modern French Breviaries, and Carl. Newman's Hymni Eclesiastici, 1836 and 1865. Tr. as:

1. Holy love towards her foes. Pub. in 1. Williams's Hymn. tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839, p. 81, 7. vol. of L, with a diction. In his preface Williams says that this tr. was made by a a friend.” In Johnston's English Hymnal, 1852, this tr. was altered to “Christian Love in wondrous ways”; and in the editions of 1856 and 1861 to “Holy love in wondrous ways.”

2. Holy Love herself displays. This tr. in R. Campbell's Hymns & Anthems, &c., 1850, is based upon the above by J. Williams's “friend.”

Another tr. is:—
What kindness slain to mortal foes. J. D. Chambers, 1857.

Missals. The Missal [Missale] is the Service-book of the Latin Church, which contains all that is said or sung in the service of the Holy Eucharist or “the Mass” [Missa]. It comprises within itself many and various elements which anciently were distributed in different volumes. Such were the Sacramentarium containing the Priest's part of the service in the unvarying Canon, with the varying Prefaces, Collects, Secret, and Postcom- mons; the Epistolarium or Lectionarium, containing the Epistles; the Evangelarium, containing the Gospels; the Graduale, containing all the choral portions of the service, viz., the Introits, Kyries, Gloria in Excelsis, Graduals, Tracts, Sequences, Creeds, Offertories, and Communions. Of these the Sequences frequently formed a separate volume called the Sequentiæ. Still more ancient and long obsolete books were the Benedictionale, containing the varying triple episcopal benedictions; and the Troparium, containing verses or verses, varying with each festival, devoted into or into the Mass, and attached to almost every chapter of the service. These verses, known as Tropes, went generally out of use in the 13th century.

Missal most widely in circulation in the present day, and gradually superseding all other Latin Uses, is the Roman Missal. It was carefully revised by Pius V. (1570) in accordance with the directions of the Council of Trent, and so revised its use was enjoined in all places and on all communities which could not plead a prescription of two hundred years in favour of a local or peculiar use. It subsequently underwent two slighter but careful revisions under Clement VIII. (in 1604) and Urban VIII. (in 1634), and has received, and will continue to receive from time to time, additional services necessitated by the institution of new Festivals.

Besides the Missale Romanum there were, and to a lesser extent than formerly still are, various Missals belonging to different Provinces, Dioceses, and Religious and Military Orders. Such were the Sarum, York, and Hereford Missals of the unformed Church of England, the Paris, Lyons, and many French Missals, the Augustinian, Benedictine, Premonstratensian Missals, &c. These may all be regarded as variations and offshoots of the Missale Romanum.

In addition to monastic or diocesan variations of the Roman Missal, there are two living Latin Liturgies which deserve special notice, because they are, the first probably, the second certainly, of a distinct genus or family, viz.: that known as the Ephesene or Hispano-Gallican. These are the Ambrosian Missal in use in the Church of Milan, and the Mozarabic Missal in limited use in the Church of Spain.

Most of these Missals form a quarry from which an immense amount of hymnological material can be drawn in the shape of Sequences or Tropes, for an account of which see Sequences.

But besides Sequences, there are other parts of the Liturgy, which sometimes, though rarely, assume a metrical or rhyming form. These are the Gradual with its Verses, the Tract, the Offertorium, the Communio, and possibly the more ancient Tropes. Details concerning these are given under their respective titles (q.v.).

Missions, Foreign. The hymnody of Foreign Missions is, as a whole, practically unknown. Most persons have some idea of the great work accomplished by Christian missionaries in the translation of the Holy Scriptures into almost all known languages; but few have ever thought how much has been done by them in the translation and composition of hymns, the preparation of hymn-books, and in general, in the introduction of Christian Hymnody among the various nations to whom they have preached the Gospel. It is the object of this article to set forth this as fully and accurately as the limits of our space will allow. Although Protestant Christians of several denominations in Great Britain and America have missions in various parts of Europe, we shall not include any of these in our notice, with the single exception of the missions in European Turkey. We propose to speak of Missionary Hymnody—

I. In various parts of America; North, Central, and South;
II. In the Islands of the Pacific, in New Guinea and Borneo;
III. In Asia, from Japan westward to Turkey;
IV. In Africa, East, South and West.

The following abbreviations will be used:

M. M. = Moravian Missions.
C. M. S. = Church Missionary Society.
S. F. G. = Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts.
B. M. S. = Baptist Missionary Society.
W. M. S. = Wesleyan Missionary Society.
L. M. S. = London Missionary Society.
K. S. M. = Church of Scotland Foreign Missions.
F. C. S. = Free Church of Scotland Foreign Missions.
A. B. M. = American Baptist Missionary Union.
A. B. C. = American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.
A. M. E. = Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church of America.
A. P. M. = Board of Foreign Missions of the American Presbyterian Church.

The names of other Missionary Societies, less frequently mentioned, will be given in full.
MISSIONS, FOREIGN

I. America.

i. North America.

This

extends over a vast extent of country

Greenland to Mexico.

The M. M. on the western coast
Greenland commenced in 1721. In 1738

the first convert was won by "the Cross," now the whole of the country is Christianized. Since 1772 the Greenlanders have had their own printed hymn-book, read ed, pub. in 1819, was received with great joy, and recent accounts show that they retain their fondness for hymns.

and only do they sing well in their churches and in the "humin," but the long coasting voyages in the ships, or women's boats, are enlivened by their sweet voices of the female rowers uniting in sacred song.

2. Labrador.—Crossing Davis Strait to the coast of Labrador we find the self-denying agents of the same society [M. M.] at work.

In 1770 Jona Haven, from Greenland, sang to the Eskimos of Labrador, a hymn in Greenland, a language which they understood, and charmed by it into silence. These Eskimos in the morning and evening sing Christian hymns at their from their rooms on their hunting, fishing, or had been by the Rev. Theodore Buirquin, who translated most of the modern hymns. The book contains about 300 hymns, and was printed in 1829 at St. John's, New found-dies with the words below the following are the first lines of a few

"Passa-pjakka ama nga toot."

"Karitt, kakkanginnit."

"Ate, tuckarene ekperta.

The number of syllables and accents is the same as in the English hymns, so that they do not rhyme.

3. Cree Indians.—Crossing

North America through British territory, more than 3000 miles, we traverse a region inhabited by Indian and European settlers.

Here, however, M. S. P. G. and M. S.

and being now sustained by the Wesleyans of Canada. We can here speak of only one spec-

Bishop Horden, on the behalf of the societies of

of the hymns, the last named

work of this region,

in the language of the Cree Indians, containing 150 hymns, all except three or four, being his own translations.

4. British Columbia.—We pass to British at Metlakatla, and other places in the north of that territory, and stations of the C. M. S.

the use of the Tsimshians a collection of translated hymns, made by Bishop W. Ridley,

Morrison, and Mrs. Ridley, and Mrs.

hymns as "How sweet the name of Jesus sounds." "Just as I am," "Jesus, Lover of my soul," &c. are included. In the report of the C. M. S. for 1887, we read how on one occasion the last hours of a dying Indian were soothed by the singing of the last named hymn.

In the Niska dialect, akin to the Tsimshian, a collection of hymns has been prepared by the Rev. W. H. Collison, to which Mr. J. B.

McCullagh, the present missionary on the upper Nass, has recently added additions, including a metrical paraphrase of Ps. xxxii.,

which is a great favourite with the people.

5. Queen Charlotte's Islands.—Among the Haidas of Queen Charlotte's Islands, just off the coast of B. Columbia, another mission of the

C. M. S. has been established by the Rev.

W. H. Collison. In their language, which differs greatly from the Tsimshian, Mr. Collison has composed some hymns, and translated others, which, although not yet pub. in book form,

are known and sung far and wide. The present missionary, Rev. C. Harrison, is adding to the number of these hymns.

6. Vancouver's Island.—The Rev. A. J. Hall, of the C. M. S., who is labouring among the Kaa Gollith tribe, in the north of Van-couver's Island, has prepared a number of hymns in the language of that people, and has taught them to sing them.

7. Various in the U. S. A.—Passing southward through the territories of the United States, where the Red Men still survive, we find them chiefly to the west of the Mississippi, occu-pating "Reservations." A recent Government return gives their number as 277,656, of whom only about 30,000 know English enough for ordinary intercourse. Ten American Missionary Societies are at work among them, and the following Hymnals have been prepared for their use by agents of the A. B. C.—Cherokees:

52 pp.; Creek, 33 pp.; Semino Indians (two books):

Ojibwa, 40 pp.; Choctaw, 84 pp.; Dacota or

Sioux Indians, 87 pp., by Dr. W. H. Riggs, and

8. Mexico.—From the United States territories we naturally pass to Mexico, where the American Baptists of the Southern Convention,

the A. B. C. and A. M. E. have vigorous Protestant missions, conducted for the most part in the Spanish language. But no replies have been received to our inquiries as to their Hymnody.

ii. Central America.

In connection with the M. M. in Central America various hymns have been rendered into the language of the Moskito Indians.

But these have not been printed, as the English hymn-book is mainly used in that mission-field.

In like manner in British Honduras, in Jamaica, the Bahamas, the Bermudas, and other places in the West Indies, where hundreds of congregations of Negroes and Indians have been gathered into the Church of Christ, the hymn-books used are chiefly those of their respective Denominations in Great Britain.

iii. South America.

1. British Guiana.—Here the missions of the

S. P. G. and L. M. S. The population consists of a great variety of nationalities: the Aborigines, British settlers, and Coolies from China and different parts of India. The Missionaries teach the Aborigines to sing in English. For the Chinese they obtain hymn-books from Hong Kong; for the Indians, classics of India in Tamil, Bengali, Hindi, and Urdu. [See on India, p. 746.]

2. Dutch Guiana, or Surinam has stations of the M. M. Being a Dutch possession the hymnal used for the services at Paramaribo is in that language, prepared in connection with the M. M. in South Africa. But a curious Creole dialect, called Negro-English, is the mother tongue of the negroes in many parts of Surinam: and a hymn-book in this dialect was issued from the mission press in 1826. A new ed. appeared in 1841. Yet another ed., revised and enlarged, has been recently pub. It contains 600 hymns, is attractively bound, and has met with a large sale.

3. Various.—More than a century ago the borderland of British and Dutch Guiana was the scene of a Moravian mission to the Arawak Indians, and there is still extant in x. a collection of hymns in that language. With regard to the hymnody of the greater part of South America, viz. Venezuela, Columbia, Peru, Brazil, Bolivia, the Argentine Republic, and Uruguay, we are able to give but little information. The English South American Missionary Society uses the B. P. C. K. Church Hymns for most of its English services, and the hymn-book of the B. F. Sailors' Society in services for seamen. The A. M. E. has missionary in Uruguay, the Argentine Republic, and at several places on the Western Coast. The Southern Baptist Convention of the U. States has missions in Brazil, and the A. P. M. in Columbia, Brazil, and Chili, but no answer to letters of enquiry has been received except from Chili. From Valencia the Rev. D. Turnbull, d.d., writes to say that two or three hymn-books have been pub. there, the hymns being in Spanish, mostly translations, probably made in Spain, and are not very satisfactory. Hymns are sung at Ooshoaia, in Tierra-del-Fuego, and we believe that some of these, probably composed by Capt. Allen Gardiner, are in the language of the Yalahcan Indians, but have not been able to ascertain particulars.

II. Islands of the Pacific, &c.

Modern geographers have arranged the islands of the great Pacific Ocean under three divisions: Micronesia, Polynesia and Melanesia. (i.) Micronesia, so called from the smallness of most of its islands, comprises all those lying north of the equator, from the Hawaiian group in the east to Malaysia in the west. (ii.) Polynesia, a name once used in a wider sense, is now restricted to the islands situated to the south of the equator, and between 180° of longitude and S. America. It includes the Marquesas, Tahitian, Samoan, and other groups. (iii.) Melanesia, so called from the dark colour of its inhabitants, includes the islands south of the equator, from long. 180° westward to New Guinea, such as the Fiji group, the New Hebrides, and others. Micronesia and Polynesia are inhabited by the Malay-Polynesian race, probably of Asiatic origin. The people are, for the most part, tall and well-formed, their skin is dark, their hair is black, and their language soft and melifluous. Micronesians, on the other hand, belong to the Papuan race, and are probably of African origin. Their skin is dark, their hair curly, and features plain. Their language is quite distinct from the Malay-Polynesian, and is endlessly diversified. Not only on every group of islands but on every island, a different dialect is spoken, and so widely different are they as to be almost, sometimes altogether, unintelligible to the inhabitants of an adjoining island. It may be conceived how much toil in the learning of languages and the preparation of distinct books, such as hymnals, this fact imposes on missionaries.

1. Micronesia.

1. Hawaiian Islands.—In our notice of hymnody in the Pacific we begin with the Hawaiian Islands, at the eastern extremity of Micronesia. These islands, mountainous and volcanic, and yet so lovely in scenery as to be likened to a terrestrial paradise, were once notorious for the barbarism and cruelty of their inhabitants. But now, chiefly by the labours of the missionaries of the A. B. C. they are Christianized and civilized. As early as 1823 a small hymn-book of 60 pp. was prepared by the Revs. H. Bingham and W. Ellis; in 1834 appeared a Hymn and Tune Book of 360 pp. edited by the Rev. H. Bingham, and a few years later a Child's hymn-book (72 pp.) by the same editor. In 1849 another Children's book with tunes was pub., and in 1845 appeared the Hawaiian Hymn. In 1867 the Rev. L. Lyons edited a hymnal for general use, containing 400 hymns, translated by himself. H. Bingham, W. Ellis, A. O. Forbes, R. Armstrong, and A. Bishop. This has been enlarged, and the last ed. (1885) contains 612 hymns. Mr. Lyons has also translated and pub. the Sacred Songs and Solos of Sankey, and other collections of popular Christian songs with music.

In connection with the Anglican mission in these islands, commenced in 1861, services are conducted in the Hawaiian language and hymns are sung, but we have failed to obtain information as to details.

3. Marshall Islands.—Sailing west from Hawaii, for about 1800 miles, we come to the Marshall Islands, in two groups, comprising about 30 coral islets, with a population of 12,000. For their use the Rev. E. T. Doane, of the A. B. C., prepared, in 1862, a Primer and Hymn-book of 44 pp. In 1863 appeared Hymns, by Mr. Doane (24 pp.), and in 1866 a similar book edited by the Rev. B. G. Snow, of the same society.

5. Caroline Islands.—Still more to the west are the Caroline Islands, claimed by the Spaniards, the chief of which is Ponape, or Ascension Island, 60 miles in circumference, and Kunsac, or Strong's Island, about 30 miles in circuit. In 1858 a hymn-book of 19 pp. was prepared in the Ponape dialect by Dr. L. H. Gulick, and enlarged in 1864-5 by the Rev. A. A. Sturges. Another collection of 32 pp. was prepared in 1865, by the Rev. B. G. Snow, in the Kunia dialect. All this was in connection with the missionary work of the A. B. C.

6. The Gilbert Islands.—Passing from the Caroline Islands in a south-easterly direction we come upon the Gilbert Islands, right on
We are not able to give information concerning the hymnody of more than two groups of islands in this part of the Pacific. In the Society Islands, the Tonga Islands, and the Hawaiian group, we are without any information. The Marquesas, the Tuamotuan group, and the Gilbert Islands, six in number, possess hymn-books, but we are without details. The Marquesas Islands, consisting of about 2000 inhabitants, have a hymn-book prepared in Marqueesian, a language of well-known English hymns, such as "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," "When Love and Mercy Around Me Dwell," and "Passion of our Redeemer." Passages of Holy Scripture are taken from the Holy Scripture. The missionaries of the L. M. S. have prepared hymn-books for the use of the natives of Patuca, Efaté, Anitua, and several other places, sung by the missionaries and to a considerable extent by the natives. In 1880, some additional hymns have been prepared for the Rev. J. Annand and J. Laurie. The Rev. John Annand, D.D., who was a missionary in Anitua, the most southerly island of the group, from 1852 until recently, has furnished us with the following particulars as to the hymnody:

(a) "The hymn used in Anitua contains 51 hymns—Norhiall Itup—partly translations or imitations of English hymns, and partly composed. Some were translated or composed chiefly by the Rev. Drs. Godbe and Inglis, a few by the Revs. J. Copeland and R. Webb. Also, since the printing of the hymn-book in 1880, some additional hymns have been prepared by the Revs. J. Annand and J. Laurie.

(b) "On the island of Riosa two languages are spoken, and there are two missionaries, the Revs. Messrs. W. Gray and Mrs. W. Gray. Mr. Watt has been from 20 to 30 hymns, chiefly composed, and all printed by himself, while Mr. Gray has a few, chiefly composed, and all printed by himself."

(c) "On Erobome, notorious for the murder of John Williams and of the missionary brothers O. S. and J. D. Gordon, they now sing about 20 hymns, prepared by Messrs. J. D. Gordon and Robertson.""}

(d) "Similarly, small collections of hymns have been prepared for the use of the natives of Patuca, Efaté, Anitua, and several other places, sung by the missionaries and to a considerable extent by the natives. In 1880, some additional hymns have been prepared for the Revs. J. Annand and J. Laurie."

All the hymns in the above-named collections are composed to English metres and sung to English tunes, but the language is different. The native poetry is a kind of elevated prose, cut up into divisions like verses, followed by chores which are chiefly single syllables with no meaning, such as "'il la, il la. And the native music is a kind of chanting, with "a loudnoise." Dr. Inglis is of opinion that the singing of Christian hymns would be more popular if they were composed more after the native style of song.

(3) Banks Islands, Santa Cruz Islands, Solomon Islands, Norfolk Island. All these islands, except Norfolk Island, are situated to the north and north-west of the New Hebrides, and were brought into notice as a scene of missionary labour through the self-denying devotion of the lamented Bishop Patteson. His plan was to make Norfolk Island, to the south, a base of evangelistic operations, and to visit the other islands periodically, the language of Mola, one of the Banks Islands, being used as a lingua franca. In his letters (see Life of Dr. J. C. Patteson, by C. M. Yonge) he were very interesting references to Psalms and Hymns translated or composed by him, and sung in various religious services. Thus, in 1867, the bishop writes from Norfolk Island: 'We sing the Venite, Magnificat, Nunc dimittis, &c., in parts, to single and double chants." Again, "and now they are practise hymns in Moto for our 11 a.m. service." And the following year he writes, "Every week we read in chapel about 40 psalms and sing 12 hymns.
These are pretty well known by heart." A number of hymns seem to have been in use for years, before being collected into a book. The Rev. Dr. Codrington, who was for some time
Bishop Patteson's colleague in the Anglo-Ale Melanesian Mission, has favoured us with the following account of the Moto hymn-book:

"This book, as lately reprinted, contains 67 hymns, and there are three more in use that I know of.
Of these, 25 are by Bishop Patteson. 21 are original compositions, most of them excellent. The rest are adaptations rather than translations. 20 are by myself, of which 8 are original; 12 are by the Rev. C. Rice;
6 by the Rev. J. Palmer, and 2 by Bishop Selwyn.
The hymns by the three last named are translations or adaptations. Among the hymns translated are, 'Then whose Almighty word,' 'Eternal Father, strong to save,'
'The Church's one foundation,' 'Vindicating Spirit, Holy Ghost,' 'How beautiful are the feet,' &c., &c. The most interesting hymns in the book are three by native composers, particularly one by a teacher named Clement Maras, a Banks Islander."

Several hymns were composed by the Rev. C.
H. Brooke in the language of Florida, one of the Solomon Islands; others, by Bishop Selwyn and the Rev. C. Rice, in the languages spoken in Ysabel (Solomon Islands), Aurora Island, Pentecost Island, and Leper's Island, in the New Hebrides.

(4) Loyalty Islands. — Between the New Hebrides and the French possession of New Caledonia is a small group, called the Loyalty Islands, the chief of which are Lifu, Mare and Uvea. In these islands the L. M. S. has for many years had a mission. In 1864 what is known as the Lifu Hymn Book was prepared and printed at Mare by the Rev. S. McFarlane, L.L.D. It contains 231 hymns. Most are translations of the best English hymns, but many are original. The metres and tunes are English, and the natives are said to sing very well.

(5) New Guinea. — A few years ago the L. M.
S. began a mission in the eastern part of New Guinea, and the labourers of the Rev. Dr.
McFarlane were transferred thither from the Loyalty Islands. Already three small hymn-books have been prepared, each containing 36 hymns, in 3 distinct dialects. These are bound up in one volume with the Gospel of St. Mark and a small catechism. Though belonging to the same Papuan or Melanesian group of languages, these dialects are distinct from the Lifuan both in words and in grammatical structure.

iv. Borneo and Singapore.

(1) Borneo, one of the largest islands in the world, is inhabited for the most part by a people called Dyaks, akin to the Malays, and divided into numerous petty tribes, with exceedingly barbarous usages. Near the coasts are many Malays proper, and the north-western portion of the island probably a quarter of a million of Chinese. For 40 years past the S. P. G. has had missions in Borneo, which now form part of the diocese of Singapore, Labuan and Sarawak. The Ven. Arch-deanseon Mecaney has supplied us with the following particulars in regard to Christian hymnody.

"Collections of hymns have been made in three languages — Malay, Land Dyak, and Sea Dyak.
These have been gradually formed, the 1st now containing about 100 hymns; the 2nd, about 50, and the 3rd, between 30 and 40. The hymns prepared in the early days of the mission were in simple Malay, and the first hymn was a metrical version of the Creed. Most of the hymns in all three collections are translations or adaptations of English hymns, such as "We love the place, 0 Jesus,"":
"Abide with me," "Rock of ages," "O come, all ye faithful," "Glory to Jesus," &c. The translations were Bishop Chambers; the present Bishop, G. F. Hore, D.D.; the Revs. W. H. Gomes, F. W. Ate, J. L. Zehnder, J. Perham, C. W. Fowler, and other missionaries. A few of the hymns are original, e.g. a harvest hymn in Sea Dyak, and others in Malay, by Bishop Chambers, and in Sea Dyak by the Rev. J. Perham. English metrical and tunes are used, and most of the hymns the lines rhyme as in English. The books are printed at the mission press, at Kuching, Sarawak."

(2) Singapore has a very mixed population of Malays, Tamils, and Chinese, all of whom the S. P. G. seeks to benefit. The Malay hymn book there used was arranged by the Rev. W. H. Gomes (named above), and was printed at Singapore.

III. Asia.

1. Japan.

In this remarkable country the development of Christian hymnody has been as rapid as that of other ideas and usages so recently introduced from Europe and America. At the close of 1873, when the Rev. C. F. Warren, of the C. M. S. (to whom we are indebted for much of the information contained in this section), arrived in Japan, contact was very few, and though attempts had been made to produce metrical hymns for Christian worship, some were of opinion that the use of hymns could never become general. The character of Japanese poetry presented one great difficulty, "It has neither rhyme, tassonance, or quantity. It is not marked by a regular succession of accented syllables, as in English, and is only distinguished from prose by metre." As a rule Japanese metre con-ists of lines of 5 and 7 syllables. What is called Short Poetry — the most common — consists of 31 syllables, divided into lines as follows: 5, 7, 5, 7, 7. There is a variation from this with lines thus: 5, 7, 7, 5, 7, 7, 7 and another, though this is not classical, of 17 syllables, 5, 7, 5. The Long Poetry con-ists of any number of lines of 3 and 7 syllables, regularly alternating and closing with a final line of 7 syllables, thus: 5, 7, 5, 7, 7, 5, 7, 7. Another difficulty was to find suitable tunes to these peculiar metres. A few English tunes, like "Home, sweet home, could be easily adapted, and one or two Japanese tunes were available. These, ever, were but few, and the effect was by no means pleasing. But, notwithstanding these initial difficulties, we have at this moment before us five Japanese Christian hymn-books, and have received information concerning yet others. Altogether there are now at least 350 hymns in the Japanese language. Most of these are translations or adaptations of English and American hymns. They are composed to English metres, though without rhyme, and are sung to English tunes.
Among hymnals at present in use may be mentioned the following:

(1) A hymn-book containing 76 hymns in Roman characters and 43 tunes in Jap-Psu notation was pub.
the dialects of Canton, Shao-tung, Amoy, and other districts. Some of these dialects differ so much that interpreters are needed between them. Some missionaries hold that hymn-books should be in the Wen Li, or classical form of the language, and that the people should be educated to the use of it. But the majority have maintained that the present needs of the multitude should be considered, and for this reason have published hymn-books in the various colloquial.

In the present article we shall mention, as samples, books published in North, Middle, and South China.

(1) North China. (1) The kindness of the Rev. Jon. Less of the L. M. S., we have now before us a copy of the hymn-book by himself and the Rev. J. Edwards, published at Tientsin in 1872. It contains 226 hymn-books, and from the English index of first lines it appears that almost all are translations often very free) of the best English hymns. Previous to this the Rev. W. C. Burns had published a small cut-off in, and translations, in many cases recast, are included in the 1872 book. In the preparation of this book Mr. Less had as assistants two very able Chinese scholars, the Rev. Ching-tsung and his son, Mr. Chiang-chin-san, It is used not only in the North China missions of the L. M. S. but also by Presbyterians and New Connexion Methodists.

(2) Another equally important work is the hymnal pub. at Peiping in 1872 by the Revs. D. Blackett, D.D. and Chauncey Goodrich. It is in the Mandarin Colloquial, and has been pronounced by one authority to be "the best hymn-book used in China." Nearly all the hymns are translations. Indeed the number of original Chinese Christian hymns in existence is very small.

(3) In the B. M. in North China, a book is used compiled from others, but including a few translations by the Rev. F. H. James (B. M. S.).

(4) The Rev. J. Less has pub. a small book containing 47 hymns, chiefly translations by himself from I. Sankey's Sac. Songs & Solos, but including one original hymn by Mr. Chiang-chin-san, and said to be a fine hymn.

(II) Mid-China. (1) A hymn-book in the Ningpo dialect was pub. about 1858, prepared by the Rev. Archdeacon Cobbold of the C. M. S.; Dr. Martin and H. V. Rankin, of the A. P. M.; J. Hudson Taylor, and others. This was revised and enlarged several times, until in 1875 it included 275 hymns, eleven being translations, or compositions by the Ven. Archdeacon Moule (C. M. S.). This hymn-book, printed at the Presbyterian Mission Press, Shanghai, has been used hitherto by Churchmen and Non-conformists in Ningpo, and in other parts of the province of Chekiang.

(2) In 1871 Bishop Moule prepared a book in the Hangzhou dialect for the use of the churches of the C. M. S. in that city and neighbourhood. It contains 82 hymns, and is printed in both Roman and Chinese characters.

(3) Archdeacon Moule (C. M. S.) has now (1887) in the press at Shanghai a collection which he hopes will be widely intelligible in China. It contains 221 hymns, some being translators by himself, others by his brother, Bishop Moule, and one hymn is original.

(4) The collection compiled by the Rev. Griffith John, of Hankow [L. M. S.], contains 200 hymns, all translations. Of these 8 or 10 are from the Welsh, made either by Mr. John or the Rev. Evan Bryant [L. M. S.]. In the later editions many expressions of the Mandarin Colloquial have been exchanged for others belonging to the literary style. This book is used by many missionaries of the China Inland Mission, and also at T. Chang, a station of the K. S. M.

(5) At the W. M. S. at Hankow a book is used, compiled by the Rev. W. Scarborough, and published in 1872. It was preceded by a hymnal prepared by the Rev. Josiah Cox. The 180 hymns in the present book are chiefly translations, many of them from Sankey's Sacred Songs & Solos. "We wait," says Mr. Scarborough, "for a Christian poet in China." The dialect is the Mandarin Colloquial.

(iii) South China. (1) The most flourishing missions in China up to the present have been those of the English Presbyterian Church at Amoy, Swatow, in Formosa and in the Hakka country. Two hymn-books have been prepared, one in the Amoy dialect, containing 70 hymns, the other, in that of Swatow, containing over 150. Some of these are translations of Psalms, others translations or adaptations of English hymns, and a few are original. The Rev. W. S. Swanston, of the E. P. Church, Amoy, Mr. Young, of the L. M. S., was the first successful composer of hymns in the Amoy dialect, and 13 of his hymns are still in use. To him succeeded the Rev. W. C. Burns, already mentioned. The Rev. Carstairs Douglas, LL.D., J. V. N. Talmage, D.D., and Alex. Stromach have also helped in the work. In connection with the Presbyterian Missions in this part of China many interesting facts might be related illustrative of the value of hymnody as an evangelistic agency, but for these we have no room.

(2) The great city of Foochow is the central station of three missions—those of the C. M. S., A. B. C., & A. M. E. In 1860 the Rev. W. C. Burns, named above, was here temporarily, and prepared in the Foochow Colloquial a translation of hymns written by Mr. Young and himself, which had previously appeared in the Amoy dialect. He added others, making a book of more than 30 hymns. These were deemed so excellent that they were adopted by all three missions, and superseded others previously used which were in the Wen-Li, or book language. In course of time more hymns were desired, and each of the missions, taking Mr. Burns's book as a foundation, published a Hymnal of its own. (a) The hymn-book of the C. M. S. contains 198 hymns, and was prepared by the Rev. J. E. Wolfe, B. W. Steward, M.A., and E. Lloyd, Mr. Wolfe being the principal contributor. (b) The hymn-book of the A. B. C. contains 165 hymns. Through the kindness of the Rev. C. Hartwell, one of the principal contributors to this book, a copy is now before us printed at Foochow, on native paper. It contains several original hymns by native converts. (c) The hymn-book of the A. M. E. has 180 hymns, and was prepared by the Revs. R. S. MacKay, B.D., S. L. Bahlin, B.D., and F. Ollinger. A large number of the hymns are common to all three books.

(3) We are indebted to the Rev. John Chalmers, LL.D., of Hongkong, one of the oldest and most learned missionaries now in China, for the following information concerning Hongkong and Canton. When he came to China in 1832 he found a book in use, pub. two years previously by Rev. Dr. Leggo, entitled Hymns for the worship of the Lord. The number of hymns was 81, with 7 doxologies. No hymn made a translation, and everything was done in regard to language and metre to command the respect of the literary class, and in so far it was a success. In 1860 Rev. Chalmers pub. an ed. of this book with tunes in the usual English notation, and for nearly 20 years this was the only book in use in the London Mission at Canton and Hongkong. In 1875 Dr. Chalmers published a new book for the worship of the Lord, as a Supplement to the previous book. This contained 15 translations of popular English and American hymns, and being translated by the people, received, in 1884, considerable additions. The volume thus finally produced is the one now in use.

(2) Hymns for Singing Praises. W. M. S., Canton, 1883. "This," says Dr. Chalmers, "was one of the most successful early attempts to translate English hymns." The translator was the Rev. G. Piercy. The number of hymns is 34. The translation is in no means literal, and the rhyming is somewhat adapted to Chinese tunes.

(3) Hymns for praising the Lord. A. R. M., Canton, 1876. It contains something of the L. M. S. hymns, nearly all the 34 of the W. M. S. in both cases much altered, and many other translations of English and American hymns, making up 246.

(4) Hymns for praising the Lord. W. M. S., Canton, 1887. A book much like the preceding, and containing 72 hymns, 296. It was compiled by the Rev. G. Piercy, before named.

(5) Hymn-book of the Gospel Mission. Hongkong, 1884. "This book," says Dr. Chalmers, "is exceptionally good." The number of hymns is 284. Many are translations from German hymns, and those taken from the Baptist and Wesleyan books are usually improved in beginning, about 1880, with a book of 55 hymns compiled by the Rev. J. Leclerc, it has attained its present size and arrangement through the arduous labours of Messrs. Pitaun, Genawr, Leclerc, Bender and others.

It remains to add a few words in regard to the music sung to these hymns and the metres employed. Chinese native music is quite unsuited to sacred song. English, American, and German tunes are therefore used and are commonly liked by the people.

In most of the books named above our metres are used and the lines rhyme as in English. But in the Canton book of the L. M. S. and one or two others, the rules of Chinese poetry are observed, some of which are as follows. "Sevens" is decidedly the "Common Metre," our c.m. and s.m. being regarded as irregular innovations. Next comes "Fives" and then "Eights" which is really "Fours," every four syllables making a clause. The same rhyme is kept up from the beginning to the end of a hymn, an arrangement made easy by the nature of the language. Let the following represent a hymn of eight lines, and the two kinds of marks, > and ≥, indicate the alternations of "tones required in a finished poem. The proper places for the rhyme syllable and changes of tone may be expressed thus:
Every native song is composed in lines of 11 syllables, but the Siamese learn western tunes readily, and seem to like them, especially tunes in 11's metre, and everything in a minor key.

iv. Burma.

Under the head of Burma we have to speak (1) of Burma proper, and (2) of certain tribes inhabiting the more mountainous districts, and known as Karens and Shanls.

(1) Burma Proper. In Burma the A. B. M., S. P. G. and W. M. S. have missions, but that of the last named has been commenced only recently. The A. B. Mission was begun in 1814, by the celebrated Rev. Dr. Judson [p. 609, l.], and in the early years of the mission there was no singing. Dr. Judson himself could not sing, and according to Burman ideas, singing in connection with worship was improper. In the native mind it was almost exclusively associated with theatrical and other similar performances. After a time, however, Dr. Judson composed the first Burman hymn—

"Shway pree koung-gin."

"Golden country of heaven."

and his fellow missionary, Dr. Wade, became responsible for the music. But it was not until long after, on the arrival of missionaries named Cutter and Hancock, who were good singers, that "the service of song" became popular as a part of worship.

The Baptists in Burma have now a hymnbook containing 294 hymns, 125 being translations and 169 originals. Through the kindness of the Rev. H. S. Burrage, B.D., of Portland, Maine, we are enabled to give the following particulars, supplied by the Rev. Dr. Cushing, the missionary in Burma:

Three of the hymns, and among these the best, are by Dr. Judson. They are almost the only ones in which a foreigner has endeavored to embody Burman ideas of poetry, which are very different from ours. In Burman songs the lines are usually short, and 'syllable runs riot,' it being quite common for every word in a line to rhyme with the corresponding word in the second verse complete. This arrangement is comparatively easy, owing to the monosyllabic character of the language. Fifteen hymns were written by Dr. Sarah Whitney, the doctor's second wife (d. in 1843), and one by his third wife Emily C. Judson (d. in 1844). Eighty-nine hymns, chiefly tris, or adaptations from the English, are by the Rev. E. H. Stevens, B. in Burma in 1838, contributed 27 Mrs. C. Simons (d. in 1843) composed 27 hymns, said to be very excellent. The Rev. J. H. Haswell (d. 1877) contributed 19 hymns. Burman was a mother tongue to him, and his hymns have much of the sonorous, stately movement which characterizes the language of the people. 14 hymns were composed by the Rev. L. Ingalls (d. 1846); 13 by the Rev. J. M. Haswell, D.D. (d. 1856), and 10 by the Rev. L. M. Sisson (d. 1844). The Rev. B. N. Brown, B.D., who d. at Yokohama in 1886 (see Japan), was the writer of 14 hymns in the Burman hymn-book, one of which, a translation of "There is a Land," has always been exceedingly popular. The Rev. J. A. Wade, D.D., colleague of Dr. Judson, was the author of 7 hymns. Others were written by Miss Kate F. Ryan, the Rev. A. R. C. H. and T. Allen, and Cephas Bennett, Mr. B. Le Goas, Mrs. Crawley, Mrs. A. Bailey, Mrs. H. C. Stevens, and Mrs. J. C. W. Lindsell. Several native Burmans have also composed hymns, some of which are written in lines of seven syllables, in accordance with the Burman style. One of these Burmans, named Siway Wasen, has a literary reputation, and assisted Rev. L. Sisson in preparing the 2nd edition of the hymn-book.

Besides the hymns just described, another has been put in connection with the A. B. M., containing more than 200 of I. Sankey's Sacred Songs and Solos. A few of the translations are by missionaries already named, but most are by Ab Bow and Ab Suce, two brothers of Chinese extraction on their father’s side, employed as teachers in a mission school at Maulmain.

In connection with the S. P. G. mission a hymn-book was published in 1873, edited by the Rev. J. Fairclough, but prepared chiefly by the Rev. James A. Colbeck. It contains, including the two Appendixes, about 120 hymns. One appendix was prepared by the Rev. T. Rickard. A few hymns are taken from the book of the A. B. M., but most are translations by the Rev. Messrs. Colbeck and Rickard. English metres and tunes are used, and the lines rhyme as with us.

(ii) Other parts of Burma.

(i) Karens, a semi-aboriginal people, of Mongolian origin, divided into three tribes, speaking distinct dialects of a monosyllabic language, Sgan, Bghai, and Pgho or Pwo. The missions of the A. B. M. have been remarkably successful among them, many thousands having embraced the Christian faith.

(1) For their use a hymn-book has been prepared in the Sgan Karen dialect containing 412 hymns, 216 of which are translations or adaptations of English hymns, by Mrs. Callista Vinton (d. 1895), wife of the missionary, the Rev. Justus H. Vinton. This lady has been spoken of as the “Wanda” of Karen hymnody. Her son, the Rev. J. B. Vinton, d. d., b. in Burma, contributed 60 hymns (chiefly translations) to the same book. 54 were written by the Rev. B. C. Thomas (d. 1895); 48 by the Rev. D. A. W. Smith, d. d., now President of the Rangoon Theological Seminary, and 9 by the Rev. E. B. Cross, k. B., the Rev. Francis Mason, d. d., translator of the Karen Bible, was the author of many hymns, only 9 of which have been preserved in the Sgan Karen hymn-book. He also prepared a volume of hymns in the Bghai Karen dialect, which was used until recently in the Bghai churches. Dr. Mason’s hymns are written in the style of native Karen poetry. Each line consists of seven syllables, and thought is expressed in couples resembling the parallelism of Hebrew poetry. They can be fitted only with the “plaintive, weird, strangely sweet” native Karen music, and hence at the revision of the hymn-book many of them were replaced by others which could be sung to Western tunes. The remaining hymns were contributed by other missionaries or their wives, or by native hymn-writers.

(2) Church Hymns. A book with this title was brought out in 1881 by the Rev. W. Edmond Jones, missionaries, among the Sgan Karens, originally comprising 98 hymns. In 1885 an Appendix was added containing 56 hymns. These are chiefly translations, 79 being by the Rev. W. Jones, 9 by the Rev. T. W. Windley, and 2 by J. Hackney; others are from the book of the A. B. M. Thirteen are original, 5 being composed by the Rev. W. Jones, and others by native laymen. A large number of the translations are from H. A. & M. English metres and tunes are used, and are appreciated by the natives.

(ii) Pgho Karen. The Rev. D. L. Brayton, of the A. B. M., is the principal translator and composer of hymns in this dialect. He translated the Bible into Pgho or Pwo Karen, and is the author of most of its Christian literature.

(iii) Shan. The Shans are a numerous people, occupying most of the region between Burma and China, the Siamese being one branch. They are Buddhists, and in their various branches speak the same language with little variation. Many are found in Burma, in the basin of the Irawadi and elsewhere; and for their use a hymn-book, containing 87 hymns, has been prepared by missionaries of the A. B. M. Seventy-nine of these are translations and four originals, by the Rev. J. N. Cushing, d. d. Three were composed by Shway Wa, a able man, who in the recent occupation of Upper Burma by the English, acted as chief Shan interpreter.

(iv) Khyian, or Chin. There is also a people related to the Karens inhabiting the hills separating Upper Burma from the Shan and Chinese territories, and speaking a language called Khyian. A small hymn-book has been prepared for them, but we are unable to supply particulars.

It may be added that in Burma are many Telugu, Tamil, and even Chinese immigrants whose religious needs are not overlooked by Christian missionaries. For their use hymn-books are brought from mission stations in India and China.

v. India.

In the collection of countries to which we give the general name of India, we have over 300,000,000 of people dwell, the various nations and tribes differing in colour, stature and the physical characteristics, having different customs and, what chiefly concerns us, speaking many different languages. In account of hymnody in India it will be convenient to treat the subject in sections according to the languages.

(1) The Northern and Central parts are inhabited chiefly by nations of the Anglo stock, the principal languages of this group being Bengali, Urdu, Hindi, Hindustani or Urdu, Marathi, Gujarati, Punjabi and Sindhi. Sanskrit, to which all in this group are related, is not a spoken language; it is the language of the learned and has no Christian hymnody. [See VARIOUS, under Missions, F.]

(2) In the South of India are nations and tribes of what is called the Dravidian group. Their languages belong to the agglutinative phase of human speech, as opposed to the inflectional stage, represented by the later Aryan migrations into India. The principal members of this group are Tamil, Telugu, Malayalam, Kannart, and Tulu.

(3) Tribes of common origin, though now widely separated, and whose languages belong to what philologists call the Dravidian group, occupy certain mountainous, wooded regions, usually remote from the coast. These are the Santals, Kochs, Jungs, and others. Descended probably from the most ancient inhabitants of India, they are often spoken of as Aborigines.

(4) Lastly, there are tribes occupying Assam, Sikkim, and the passes leading towards Thibet and China, whose languages form part of the Thibetan-Burman group. These are the Kacharis, Deori-Chutias, Bhutias, Lepchas, and others.

i. The Northern and Central Groups.

In these groups we have:

1. Bengali, the vernacular of nearly 50 millions of people.

Baptists.—The first to compose Christian hymns in this language was the celebrated Baptist missionary, Dr. Carey. In Dr. Wippin’s Annual Register is a hymn in Bengali, written by Dr. Carey about 1798, and translated into English by J. Fountain [Fountain, J., p. 339, i.]. The subject is “the Penitent’s Prayer and Resolve,” and the metre, the English 8.7.4, to be sung to the tune “Helmley.” Some time afterwards a hymn-book was prepared by the Serampore Missionaries, and in 1810 the missionary, J. Chamberlain, pub. a volume consisting chiefly of translations of English hymns.
The book at present in use at the Baptist mission stations appeared about fifty years ago, and was edited by the Rev. Geo. Pearce (d. 1887). It contains 475 hymns, chiefly in English metres. Among the authors named were Carey, J. Chamberlain, G. Pearce and A. C. Soutt. The names of 18 Bengal natives are also among the contributors, and Krishna, a well-known musician is included.

Church of England.—(1) The hymn-book used in the Anglican missions (C. M. S. and S. P. G.) entitled ‘Hymns Old and New,’ was prepared by a committee of the two Societies and has been revised and enlarged, and the last edition was published in 1884. It contains 546 hymns, 254 being in English metres, and almost all translations. The remaining 292 are in Bengal metres and are nearly all original. The chief and best translator was the late Rev. R. P. Greaves: others were J. J. Vaughan, A. Stern, C. Bonewitz, J. J. Linke, and Mr. J. K. Biswas, all of the C. M. S. A few hymns are taken from the Baptist collection. An original hymn in Bengal metres is appended in this book containing about 400 English verses, and was prepared by the Bishop’s College.

(2) The Sabbath School Hymn Book, was prepared by the teachers of the Trinity School, and contains 254 hymns in English metres.

In connection with the Baptist missions, the Rev. S. J. Hodge compiled a Hymnal (2nd ed., 1890), the compilers being the late Rev. Geo. Pearce and A. C. Soutt. It contains 322 hymns, some in English and many in popular Tamil, &c., used at various festivals, to the music of the cymbals, &c., by the missionaries of the C. M. S. and the Kraus, of the W. M. S.

The Calcutta Missionary Education Society has published a book called Gitarth, containing 138 selected hymns by A. M. E. This book has been very popular.

K. S. M.—In 1884 the missionaries of the K. S. M. adopted the Anglican Bengali hymn-books that time they had used two Chakravarty, prepared by Babu Bipro Charn. This gentleman has recently finished a collection of 28 lines of the kind mentioned above. Indeed, small collections of hymns by educated Christian natives are very common in Bengal. Such are the Gitamith (‘Imortal Songs’), by Amrit Lal Nath, said to be very good; the Khetum Hymns, by Gobinda Chunder Dutt; Gitamith (‘Song Germs’), Gitamith (‘Garland of Songs’), and Gitamith (‘Jewels of Songs’), by a Christian Evangelist, Modhu Sudon Sircar. The last-named collection contains many hymns very appropriate for Bazar preaching.

In connection with Bengal hymns and hymn-writing the following remarks by the Rev. G. H. House, M.A., of Calcutta (B. M. S.) are worthy of notice:

‘Native Bengal hymnology is abundant, but meagre. New hymns are being constantly added, but the range is limited; very little about the Holy Ghost, or Christian experience, except of the mundane order. ‘O my soul, how wretched thou art,’ is a sentiment we are always meeting; ‘How happy they that know the Lord!’ does not meet with much response. Joyous Christian experience is very deficient in the native church of Bengal, but things are improving.’

Perhaps these statements may be partly explained by the fact that in this part of India the native idea of music is wholly melodious.

2. Uriya. Travelling from Calcutta in a south-western direction for about 70 miles we leave Bengal proper and enter the province of Orissa, containing a population of 5,250,000. The language is called Orh or belongs to the Sanskrit group. At Puri in Orissa is the world-famous shrine of Jagannath, visited by 300,000 pilgrims annually. For many years the General Baptist mission has been in Orissa, their principal station being Cuttack. Since 1836 the Free Baptists of New England, whose doctrinal sentiments are similar to those of the General Baptists, have occupied Balasore and other stations in the northern part of the province.

The first Uriya hymn-book was published by the Rev. Amos Suttor, P.B., in 1843. (See Suttor, A.) It contained 310 hymns, 179 of which bear the initial of the compiler. Ghungo, the first Uriya convert, a Brahman by birth and education, composed 16 hymns. Thus far the hymn-books have been disused. The Christian community increased, hymn-writers and hymns increased rapidly, and a great many of the latter selections were made from time to time, and printed in tract form. The hymn-book now in use amongst the Baptists consists of both old and new selections bound together in one volume. The total number of hymns is 362, from 23 contributors, of whom 13 are now living. Forty hymns from the old book are retained, including some of Dr. Sutton’s and 23 of Ghungo’s. It is believed that several of these latter, from their superior quality, as regards both sentiment and poetry, will continue in use for a long time to come. Makunda Das, who has been called the ‘Dr. Watts of Orissa,’ composed 145 of the hymns in the present book. Shem Saha is the author of 21. Other Baptist contributors are Karkick Samal, Damodar, and Daniel Mahanty. In the first book a number of the hymns were in English metres. These have disappeared, and the present collection consists entirely of hymns in native metres adapted to the hollow tunes of the country. Makunda Das has also prepared, in conjunction with him, the Bengali and Rev. P. E. Heber, a selection of hymns for the ‘Feng, mostly translations from the English. A number of these are in English metres, and are sung to English tunes in the schools.

3. Hindustani and Urdu. Ascending the Ganges in a north-western direction we enter, as we pass the city of Bhagalpur, a vast and populous region in which two languages are spoken, Hindustani and Urdu, called also Hindustani. This region includes the North-West Provinces, Oudh, and the northern part of the Central Provinces of India, with a total population of 80,000,000. Some prefer to speak of these two languages as but different forms of one language, though they are almost as diverse as English and German.

Hindī, which is allied to the Sanscrit, may be regarded as the original vernacular; Urdu, literally, “Camps” language, came in with the Muhammadan conquerors of the country, and has Hindī for its basis, with a large admixture of Persian, the court language of the Moguls, and of Arabic, the sacred language of Islam. Hindī uses the Sanscrit characters, upright, square and block-like; Urdu employs the Persian script characters, which are distinguished by flowing curves and are written from right to left. Urdu is most common in large cities, and is used by Muhammadans; Hindī is preferred by the villages, and wherever Hindī influences prevail. The two languages, says Dr. Hooper, of the C. M. S., “act upon one another, and neither is spoken pure, except as a form of pedantry.”

The educated classes commonly understand both

(a) The mingling of the two languages is seen in the first hymn-book we notice, the Sat Sangrah, or Git Sangrah, issued in connection with the B. M. S., and used at their stations in Monghyr, Allahabad, Agra, Benares, Delhi, Patna and Dimapore. This book, which has reached a 4th edition, contains 267 hymns, of which 198 are in (a) Hindī, language and metre; 41 in (b) Urdu, language and metre; and 33 (c) Hindī language and English metre.

Most of the 1st class (a) were written by the Revs. J. Chamberlain (d. 1886), J. Parsons, of Monghyr (d. 1869), and Mr. J. Christian, an Ind. planter, a member of the Baptist Church at Monghyr (d. 1883). A few are by native converts. The whole of the 2nd class (b) are by Hindī composers. The 3rd (c), which are free versions of English and German hymns, are by various missionaries. Two eds. of this book with music have been pub. by Dr. Lzardes.

The hymns of Mr. John Christian, composed to Hindī airs and in Hindī metre, deserve special notice. Anglican, Baptist and Congregational missionaries all speak of them as being admirably excellent, and as likely to retain a high place in the affection of the Christian Churches of this part of India for a long time to come.

Before us is a collection of 100 hymns, called Satyā-Siṭaṭ, all by Mr. Christian, including, however, some in the hymn-book already described. This is not a book intended for use in the churches, but rather to be circulated as a tract. Indeed, tracts of hymns are much employed as a missionary agency throughout the population of India being extremely fond of anything in the form of poetry; and Mr. Christian’s hymns may often be heard sung in the streets, as snatches of songs are with us.

(b) Another collection similar to the one just named has been sent us by Col. Millett, of Dharmasala, India (to whom we are indebted for much of the information contained in this section). It is entitled Diffusion of Praise, a Book of Hymns, pub. by the North India Book and Tract Society.

And here it may be stated that the word Bhajan is the name usually given in this part of India to a hymn composed to a native Hindī tune, and it implies the tune as well as the words. Col. Millett says “there is no equivalent for this word in the English language. It may be termed a song in a savage state.” But speaking generally, Bhajan is the Hindī name, and Ghazal the Muhammadan name, for a Christian hymn in native style.

(c) An Urdu hymnal was compiled and printed eight years ago by the Rev. R. F. Guyton, for the use of the Baptist Mission in Delhi. It is entitled Kharazā n 1 Kharazma, and contains the 133 Hindi hymns of the Sat Sangrah (named above) transliterated; the 41 in Urdu, with about 70 additional, extracted or contributed.

(d) The A. P. M. pub. in 1872, Zobhir aur Gā ("Psalms and Hymns”). It contains 485 hymns in English metre, nearly all in Urdu, the few exceptions being in Hindī; also, 31 Bhajans, chiefly Hindi, with a few Ghazals in Urdu. An appendix of 72 tunes is added.

The editor of this book was the Rev. J. F. Ulmann, who also translated, from the English and German, the far greater number of the hymns. Some are by the Revs. Messrs. Brodhead, Dabue, Dhose and Janvier, and a few by Stallah Ali, a native poet of some eminence recently deceased. This book is printed in Roman characters, and is used in other missions besides the A. P. M.

(e) The Masād Gā ki Kitāb ("Christian Hymn-book"), printed in 1876 at the Secundra Orphanage Press, near Agra, was prepared at the suggestion of the Rev. J. Erhardt by a committee of missionaries of the S. P. G. & C. M. S., and is arranged according to the order of the Christian Year. It contains 387 hymns in English metre and 16 Bhajans. The translations are chiefly by the Revs. Messrs. Banil, Ulmann, Dabue, and Erhardt. Bishop French and others contributed single hymns. Many are identical with the hymns in the book of A. P. M. It is printed in both Roman and Persian Urdu characters.

(f) Gā ki Kitāb ("Book of Hymns") is the Urdu Hymnal of the A. M. E., and is printed in both Roman and Urdu characters. It contains 210 hymns in English metre, 73 Ghazals and Bhajans, and 16 hymns for Sunday-schools. The list of translators and composers of hymns contains the names of Ulmann, Fielden, R. A. Brodhead, Parker, Chasserain, Mansell, Gill, Janvier, Christian, Stallath Ali and others.

(g) The preceding are the principal books: others less important include: —

Gītīsāndhi, "Hymns and Songs for Children," by J. F. Ulmann; Int. aur Rota ("Tricks and Trickeats") Hymns for Children, with music, by the Rev. E. Dhose; Skāndra ki Choti Gitāmala ("The Little Skanda Hymnbook"), by the Rev. C. G. Dabue, a collection of 53 hymns and Anthems; Choti Gā ki Kīffā ("Sunday School aur Badal ne Lye"), containing 152 hymns, pub. at Lucknow, in 1874, at the Church Mission Congregational Press; Sāhī Tānaksh, a collection of 100 Hindī hymns by the Rev. W. F. Johnson, of the A. P. M.

It may be noted that the American United Presbyterian Church, which does not use hymns, has brought out, in connection with the Siākot Mission, metrical versions of many Psalms, by Licentiate T. D. Shah Bāz, and quite recently (1887), a collection of 100 Psalms in metre printed at the Secundra Orphanage Press, Agra.

In the broad tableland of Chota Nagpur, about 200 miles from Calcutta, are very successful missions of the German Evangelical Lutherans and of the S. P. G. The inhabitants are chiefly aboriginal tribes belonging to two distinct races, the Mundatā or Kolhs, of the Kolam group, and the Umbins, of the Dravidian group of South India. Of the former we shall speak again in the section devoted to the aborigines of India. Both are assumed to have been acquainted with Hindi, as are their own languages. Hence the following books have been prepared in Hindi.

(a) The Hymnal of the German E. L. Mission, revised and enlarged several times between 1850 and 1900, now containing 223 hymns, chiefly translated by the German, by the Rev. E. Schott, H. Baisch, and others.

(b) The English and Hindi Hymnal, containing many hymns from the German book, with 100 additional from the Michigan Book, translated by J. C. Whitley, together with Miss G. Negri. “Tell it out among the heathen,” and “Lord, speak to me,” by the same author. The metres and turns used are English and German, usually the same as in the originals.

(c) A Book of Hymns for Children, by the missonaries of the German E. L. Mission, now (1906) ready for publication.

small collection with the title Dharpma Gita, i.e., "Religious Songs," lithographed at Ahmedabad in 1851. This was reprinted two or three times.

(2) In 1856 a metrical version of the Psalms was pub. by the Rev. James Glasgow, B.D., of the Irish Presbyterian Mission, English rhyming metres being used throughout. But Gujarati, like other languages of the same stock, is unsuited to English metres. The accent must always be on the first syllable, and the number of syllables in a line of poetry is determined, not merely by the number of vowels, but by the number of consonants and vowels, which together make up the line. Another version of the Psalms, therefore, in native metres, and fitted to being sung to native tunes, was prepared by a Gujarati Christian named Wajji Bechan, and pub. at Surat in 1876.

(3) But the hymn-book now in general use is the Kājpāsāna, or "Poetic Offering," first pub. in 1862. The 7th ed. was pub. at Surat in 1877, and contains in all 187 hymns. About 210 of the hymns are original, the greater part being composed by the Rev. Joseph van Someren Taylor (d. in 1881); others are by the Rev. Dr. Glasgow and W. Clarkson, and several by native Christian poets. Forty are translations of Psalms of David, and others are versions of well-known English hymns. Both English and Gujarati metres and tunes are used.

7. Marathi.—Marathi (pronounced Marat-hi) is a language belonging to the Sanserit group, and is spoken in the region comprised in a triangle having Nagpore as its apex and the west coast of India from Goa to above Bombay as its base. The population is about 17,00,000, among whom six Societies are at work. (1) A hymn-book called Sacred Songs is used in the missions of the A. B. C., K. S. M., F. C. S., and probably others, the history of which is as follows:

The first book of hymns in Marathi was pub. by missionaries of the A. B. C. in 1819, and contained 16 small pages. The hymns were in native metres. Another book, called Psalms & Hymns, written in English metres, appeared in 1835. These books, enlarged and improved from time to time, were used until 1845, when Rev. H. Ballantyne, a man of fine poetic taste and culture, prepared a new collection of translations of the best English hymns in English metres. It contained more than 150 hymns, and was called Hymns for Divine Worship. Being received with great favour, Mr. Ballantyne was prompted to enlarge it considerably. The 4th ed. was pub. in 1845 by the Bombay Tract Society, whose Committee say in the preface: "336 of the choicest hymns in the English language are here rendered into flowing Marathi, with a success that leaves nothing to be desired." This hymn-book entirely superseded all previous ones. Mr. Ballantyne prepared, in addition, 64 hymns for children. Failing health, however, compelled him to leave India, and he d. at sea, Nov. 3, 1848.

In the meantime, in the years from 1846 to 1857, there was a gradual re-introduction of hymns in native metres. A priest of the Christian poet appeared, Mr. Krishnarao Ramaji Sangale, a catechist of the A. B. C. A collection of his compositions, with the title Gyanamrita, was pub. in 1857, and soon became very popular. When it became necessary therefore, in 1874, to pub. a 5th ed. of Mr. Ballantyne's Hymns for Divine Worship, it was resolved to combine the English and native metres in the same work. Other compositions by native poets, and other translations by Mrs. Bissell and Dr. Fairbank, were added; the name was changed to Sacred Songs, and now, in its 4th ed., contains 667 hymns. (Bombay Book and Tract Society.)

(2) The Bulbul is a collection of 161 hymns for children, including those by Mr. Ballantyne, with additions by Mrs. Bissell, Mrs. Bruce, Dr. Fairbank, Krishnarao, and others.

(3) The Ganaadhi, or "Song-Treasury," pub. at Bombay in 1886, is a collection of 215 hymns, with appropriate tunes, including more than 100 public native airs, all in European and Hindustani notation, edited by the Rev. C. Harding, of the A. B. C. Some of the hymns are new. The tunes, other than the native airs, are culled from other collections.

(4) The Rev. J. Taylor, of the S. P. G., pub. at Poona, in 1884, Hymns Ancient and Modern translated and compiled for use in the Church in Western India. Besides the hymns translated from the well-known English book, there are a few taken from the Sacred Songs noticed above, and from other sources. Translated hymns usually follow the English metre; the original hymns are for the most part in native metres.

Since it was in the Marathi-speaking country that Christian Kirtans were first performed, which have since become popular throughout India, we may here introduce a brief account of them.

The Kirtan is a musical performance in which the praises of some god are celebrated, with singing and instrumental music. In the year 1862 it occurred to Mr. Krishnaraw and others, that a Christian Kirtan might be made a useful evangelistic agency. The first was performed in Ahmednagar and the neighbouring villages, and everywhere met with an enthusiastic reception. The leader stood on a platform, and behind him four or five trained Christian singers joined in the choruses. There were Hindoos, musical instruments, including a kind of guitar,—a pair of cymbals,—a saz, ring, played like a violoncello, and a small drum, beaten with the ends of the fingers. First, a brief prayer was offered; then, the leader announced the subject of the Kirtan, and a chorus followed. The words of the chorus became the text of a brief exhortation, delivered in a musical tone, and leading the way to another chorus, the whole performance occupying about two hours.

The native Christian Marathi hymns, in which choruses are frequent, afford abundant matter for these Kirtans, as do lyrics among the Bengalis and Tamils, and Bhajans among the Hindis, and others.

ii. South Indian, or Dravidian Group.

1. Canarese.—Moving southward from the Marathi country we come to a people, 19,00,000 in number, speaking Canarese, a language of the Dravidian or South Indian group. These are found not only in Canara on the Western coast, but also through the Mangore, who extend northward as far as Bedar, in the Nizam's territory. Seven Societies have missions in this district, those in strongest force being the Basel Evangelical Society, the W. M. S., and the L. M. S.

(1) The hymn-book used by the W. M. S. and L. M. S. is entitled Canarese Hymns, originally selected, by the Rev. B. Rice (7th ed., revised and enlarged, 1st ed., 1851). It contains 250 hymns, sixteen of which are for children. Among these latter are "There is a happy land," "There's a Friend for little children," etc., and six others are chants, such as the Te Dum. Most are sung to tunes selected from H. A. A. M., the Bristol and Wesleyan Tune Books, etc.

The Rev. B. Rice was a missionary of the L. M. S. who d. in 1887, after 50 years of service. Other authors and translators were Messrs. C. Campbell, J. Paul, Coles, W. Arnot, and Ridbett. 63 hymns were taken from the book of the Basel mission described below. J. Paul is a native minister of the L. M. S.

(2) Bound up with this hymn-book, in a volume before us, is a collection of Christian Lyrics (Bangalore, 2nd ed., 1879) by the Rev. Abijah Samuel, a native Wesleyan minister, and very superior man, who d. in 1874. [For further particulars concerning Lyrics in the Dravidian languages, as distinguished from Hymns, see Malayalam and Tamil below.]

(3) The Basel missionaries, whose printing press is at Mangalore, pub. a Canarese hymn-book in 1845, which was revised and enlarged in 1855 and 1867. At the latter date it contained 166 hymns, composed or translated by Messrs. H. Munting, G. Weigle, J. Layser, F. Metz and others. The 7th revised edition (1885) contains 106 new hymns, or 279 in all. The translations are chiefly from the best German hymns, and are made to be sung to German tunes. Among the translators of the later hymns were Messers. Ziegenheinr, and A. A. Manner. The Basel missionaries have also pub. a collection of 46 Lyrics, composed by a native poet, and a
The tunes to the lyrics are somewhat wild and irregular, and cannot usually be expressed in English notation, because the intervals in Hindu music differ from ours, several being less than a semitone. [See Tamil.]

It may be added that in Cottayam and the neighbourhood are found the so-called Syrian Christians, for a notice of whom see Syriac Hymnody.

4. Tamil.—The most important of the Dravidian or non-Brahmanical languages of India is the Tamil or Tamiil, spoken by more than 13,000,000 of people in south India, as well as by probably 5,000,000 in the northern part of Ceylon, in Burma, and in the Straits Settlements. In India proper the Tamil country extends from about 20 miles north of Madras to Cape Comorin on the south, and from the sea coast, on the east, to the range of mountains called the Ghats, on the west. The first Protestant missionaries to India, sent in 1766 by the king of Denmark, began their labours among the Tamils. Their names were Ziegenbalg and Pluchacz. At the present time 14 English, German, Dutch and American Societies have missions in this part of India.

(1) The first hymn-book printed in Tamil was a collection of 46 hymns translated by Ziegenbalg, and published in 1711. This was repeatedly enlarged, by the missionaries Schultze, Pressler, and Walther, until it contained 360 hymns. Faberius, a German missionary, who came to India in 1745, still further enlarged it. The 14th ed., with the title Hymnologia Tammiana-Tamulica (called also Hindu Hymnbook, 1. ed.), was printed in 1741 at Tranquebar, by the Evangelical Lutheran Mission Press. It contains 375 hymns, nearly all translations from German by Freylinghausen, Herrmann, and other German writers. The next volume now before us contains also 171 German hymns to the tunes (Tranquebar, 1788). This hymn-book is used at the stations of the Danish and Leipzig Lutheran Missions in Tanjore and elsewhere.

(2) In 1813 the Madras Religious Tract Society pub. a Cull. of 42 hymns in English, edited by the Rev. C. T. Rhenius, a German employed by the C. M. S. This was from time to time enlarged. Its present representative, pub. by the same society (Madras, 8th ed., 1866), is entitled Tamiil Hymn-book, compiled by the Hymn-book revision committee. It contains 310 hymns and doxologies, mostly adaptations and free renditions of English and German originals and was edited by the Rev. Elias J. Gloria, a Tamilian, connected with the W. M. S. This book is in general use throughout the Tamil country, except in the Lutheran and some Anglican missions.

(3) In 1850 appeared the Tamil Church Hymn-book, containing 233 hymns, arranged according to the order of the festivals of the Church of England. It was compiled by Bishop Caldwell, of the S. P. G., and Sargent, of the C. M. S. In this collection several English hymns appear in Tamil for the first time, such as, "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty! "The Church’s one foundation;" "Jesus Christ is risen to-day.

(4) Several other Tamil hymn-books have been pub., as the Nagercoil Coll., and one ed. by P. S. M., by the Rev. F. Raylis, but have been superseded by one or other of those last mentioned.

(5) The Christian Vernacular Education Society has also pub. Hymns for Children in Tamil. The 2nd edit. (Madras, 1855) contains 166 hymns, selected from Fabricius, and the Nagercoil Collection, or from the assorted hymns of the G. B. M. S., Spalding, Welsh, Percival, Kilner, S. Niles and other of D. P. Niles (Tamilian), and others.

All compositions called Hymns in South India are in European metres, and made to be sung to European tunes; but perfectly distinct from those are Christian songs known as Rhymes, answering to the Bhajans of Northern and Central India. These compositions are different in style from anything heard in Europe. The rhyme is at the beginning of... the verse instead of the end. The substance of the Lyric is frequently given in a verse (cenda) at the beginning and is not sung. Then follows a chorus (pallavi) which is sung after each verse, and sometimes a sort of second chorus (anapallavi), which is sung only once. Lyric is written in a great variety of metres, and some of the tunes sung to them are such as have been used for ages past in the Hindu temples. The principal writer of Tamil Lyric was a native Christian poet, named Vethanayagam, who lived at the beginning of this century. Many of the Tamil Christians have since written, but few of their productions have equalled his. Some have been composed by Mr. R. C. Caldwell, son of the Bishop, and by the Rev. E. Webb, of the A. B. C., at Madura.

There are several collections of Tamil Lyric, pub. in Madras or Trinquevar, but the one most widely used was composed by the Rev. E. Webb, just named. It was pub. in 1863, and contained 226 pieces. Recent editions have been revised by the Rev. G. T. Washburn, of the A. B. C. mission at Madura. The 9th edit., pub. in 1886 by the Madras R. Tract Society, contains 360 Lyric. Two contents from this book have also been pub. for use in village congregations.

The use of Lyric in public worship was at first opposed by many missionaries, principally because the associations with the tunes were objectionable; but they are so much preferred by the people and suit well the genius of the language, that the opposition has almost ceased, and in many village congregations they are used exclusively.

[For information concerning Tamil hymnody in India we would express our great obligations to the Revs. J. L. Wyata (S. P. G.); G. O. Newport (J. M. S.); and J. M. Rase (P. G. S.). Concerning Tamil in Ceylon see section on Ceylon.]

5. Telugu.—Telangan, or the Telugu country, begins a few miles to the north of Madras and extends northward as far as the neighbourhood of Ganjam, in Orissa. It contains about 17,000,000 of people, most of whom speak Telugu, a language of the Dravidian group. In this region are missions, some very flourishing of the S. P. G.; C. M. S.; L. M. S.; A. B. M.; F. C. S.; the Canadian Baptists, the Lutherans of America; the Hermannsburg Lutheran Society of Hanover, and the Brethren.

(1) A hymn-book extensively used throughout the Telugu country is the one compiled by the Rev. W. Dawson of the L. M. S. of Visagapatam. The latest ed. was pub. in 1883, at the C. K. S. press in Madras. It contains 256 hymns, all in Telugu metres except the last 25. In the preparation of the first 152 hymns Mr. Dawson was assisted by Purushottam Choty, a native minister now connected with the General Baptist Mission in Orissa. The 15 hymns from 153 to 167 inclusive were composed by the Rev. P. Jagannadh of the L. M. S. of Visagapatam; the rest by various authors. At a recent conference of missionaries and others the opinion was expressed that this hymn-book needs revision and enlargement.

(2) The Brethren (represented in England by G. Miller, of Bristol) have a mission station in the Vellore district of the river Cauvery, and have pub. a collection of 110 hymns, known as the Delta Hymn-book, of which 100 are in native metres and sung to native tunes; the rest are in English metrical tunes.

(3) The collection pub. by the A. B. M. was first issued in 1869, and contained 60 hymns, the editors being Mrs. Lyman Jewett and Mrs. J. E. Chong. Three eds. have since appeared, but this book is now superseded by one pub. in 1887, the work of a committee appointed at the jubilee of the A. B. Telugu Mission held in Nellore, February 1894. The new hymn-book contains 153 pieces, many being taken from the book of Mrs. Jewett and Mrs. Chong, others from the Delta Mission collection, others from the Dawson hymn-book, the remainder being new and original compositions. A special feature of this book is a glossary at the foot of each page. Thirty-eight of the choicest hymns are by Purushottam Choty (named above), other members of the native churches. The preface is signed on behalf of the Committee, by Mrs. Anna H. Dowse, wife of the Rev. D. Dowse, B.D., Chon. J. B. Wardlaw, M.A. This is now out of print, but some of the hymns appear in No. 7.

(5) Also, many years ago Mr. Newill, of the Madras Civil Service, prepared a book of about 50 hymns. This was thoroughly revised, and the number of hymns increased to 129, by the Rev. J. E. Sharkey, an able and devoted missionary of the C. M. S., who died in 1847. Several editions of the enlarged book appeared, but it is now out of print.

(8) Besides the above, 18 new hymns in Telugu metres were composed and printed in 1867, by the Rev. P. Jagannadh, of Visagapatam. One of these is a translation of Miss Havergh's hymn, "Take my life and let it be." Others, by the Rev. Dr. Chamberlain, have been printed, with music, as leaflets.

In regard to India generally it is noted that with the progress of years the use of English metres and tunes has been increasingly superseded by that of metres and tunes belonging to the country, which have come down to our time unwritten, but have been long used in festivals, at weddings, and the like.

6. Ceylon.—In Ceylon, the name of which is so familiar to us from its occurrence in Heber's missionary hymn, three languages are spoken, besides English, viz., Tamil, Singhalese, and a patois of Portuguese. The S. P. G., C. M. S., W. M. S., B. M. S., and A. B. C., all have missions. For the use of the Tamil-speaking congregations the hymn-books are available which are prepared in connection with the various missions of South India. Besides these, however, may be mentioned:

(1) A translation pub. in 1862 of the entire Wesleyan Hymn-book, as it is now used in England, the Supplementary hymn being included. The volume is beautiful in type and general appearance. The principal translators were the Revs. J. Kelner, E. Holies, W. Mason, Osborn, P. Percival, W. M. Waiton, J. V. Benjamin, J. Benjamin, E. S. Adams, D. P. Niles (a Tamilian), D. Vaupili, Trigg, &c. The metre are the same as in English, only that the 's' is substituted for 't's'.

(2) For the use of the Eurasian population, speaking the patois mentioned above, a hymn-book in Portuguese was prepared some time ago, and quite recently published, in which most of the hymns are translations by Advocate J. H. Eaton, of Colombo.

(3) The Singhalese hymn-book used by the Wesleyans contains 259 hymns, the last ed. being pub. in 1888, under the editorship of the Rev. John Scott. Nearly all the hymns are original compositions, and in the task of translating the principal translators were J. H. Eaton, J. T. Scott, &c.

(4) Two small S. School hymn-books, containing respectively 74 and 65 hymns, have been brought out by the same editor, under the auspices of the various Tract Societies. They consist almost entirely of translations of popular English hymns for children.

(5) Mr. O' Rea was a Baptist missionary and author of Temperance and other moral poetry popular among the Singhalese. More than 40 years ago he pub. a book of hymns, some being set to native airs, others to English tunes. This book has passed out of use, its place being supplied by the "Gitiun Widma", or "Treasury of Song," prepared by the Rev. C. Carter, of the B. M. S., assisted by the Rev. J. S. Perera, a Singhalese missionary, and pub. in 1876. It contains 125 hymns original and translated, among the latter being such hymns as "Rock of Ages," "Let us with a gladsome mind."

(6) A Union hymn-book has just been pub. (1898) by...

iii. The Aboriginal and other scattered races of India.

1. Santal or Sauthalians, may be described as a strip of the great province of Bengal, about 100 miles in breadth, extending southward from Bhagalpur on the Ganges for about 250 miles until it touches Orissa. Its inhabitants dwell for the most part in villages among the hills. They belong to one of the aboriginal races of India, are free from the yoke of caste, and speak a language entirely different from Bengali or Hindi.

(1) The C. M. S. has a very successful mission among these. The principal translators belonging to the Rev. F. T. Cole, whose headquarters are at Tezapore, in the north of the Santal country. For their use a hymnal was issued in 1867, the Rev. F. T. Cole being the editor. The hymns were a collection of the principal translations of the C. M. S., entitled Dhurum Sreem, containing 174 hymns and two Hymns, and was printed at Bhagaulpore. The hymns are translations of familiar English hymns, and are sung to well-known English tunes.

(2) In the adjoining district of the Mungli, on the right bank of the Bhagaulpore river, the Rev. H. Davis, W. T. Serru, and J. H. Harrold, and J. Brown, have a mission.

(3) A native of the United States, J. S. H. Davis, whom the Rev. T. Cole, Maron, and other missionaries acquainted with the wants of the Santals, prepared a collection of 27 hymns in their language. The collection is now (1866), in the press for publication.

(4) The Bethel Mission, in the Mauwa, has a large number of new hymns.

(5) The Mission at Tezapore, in the north and south of the Chota Nagpoor, has also a collection of 77 hymns, many of which are translations of familiar English hymns. A small number of additional hymns have been composed, and a few books printed for the use of the Mission.

2. Kohl or Kundur, one of the aboriginal races of the Himalayas in Tibet, the stronghold of northern Buddhism, at present closed to the gospel. But the Tibetan language is spoken by some thousands of people in British territory, as well as by tribes inhabiting the provinces adjoining Tibet proper. For their spiritual benefit the M. M. has a station at Kyzelang, in the Himalayas, where a hymnal was prepared and printed by the late Rev. Heinrich A. Jäschke, one of the greatest of modern Tibetan scholars. It contains 136 hymns translated from the German.

iv. Tibet.

On the further side of the vast chain of the Himalayas is Tibet, the stronghold of northern Buddhism, at present closed to the gospel. But the Tibetan language is spoken by some thousands of people in British territory, as well as by tribes inhabiting the provinces adjoining Tibet proper. For their spiritual benefit the M. M. has a station at Kyzelang, in the Himalayas, where a hymnal was prepared and printed by the late Rev. Heinrich A. Jäschke, one of the greatest of modern Tibetan scholars. It contains 136 hymns translated from the German.

v. Persia.

Fifty years ago a mission was commenced by the A. B. C. among the Nestorian Christians near lake Orumiah in Eastern Persia, and in 1860 a hymn-book was printed, in the Modern Syriac language spoken by these people. This book has passed through several editions, but we have been unable to obtain further particulars. The language, however, differs from Ancient Persia, but is more than Arabic from Latin. In 1889 a small collection of Revival Hymns was printed at Oromiah. In 1871 the mission among the Nestorians was transferred to the A. P. M., which has several stations at Tabriz, Salmas, Teheran, and Hamadan; whilst the Rev. Dr. Bruce and his colleagues of the C. M. S. have been labouring at Julfa, Baghadad, and Bushire. Dr. Bruce informs us that in Baghadad (in Turkey, but on the borders of Persia) they use the Arabic hymn-book printed at the American press at Beyrouth (see Syria). In Julfa (Javahan) only Armenian hymns are used (see Turkey in Asia). There is a small Persian hymn-book which has been made by the American Missionaries in Teheran, but it is very imperfect. "A good Persian hymn-book," says Dr. Bruce, "is much to be desired. It is a most poetic language and it would be comparatively easy for one who had the gift to compose hymns in it." [See Various.]

vi. Constantinople, Asia Minor, and Armenia.

We class these places together, because the missionary work in all of them is done chiefly by one society, the A. B. C., the head-quarters of whose mission is at Constantinople. This work is a very noble one, especially in the departments of Christian literature and education, but, owing to the religious jealousy of the Muhammadan rulers, it is confined in these regions chiefly to the Armenians and Greeks.

In 1861 a hymn-book in the Turkish language, printed in Arabic characters, was pub. by the missionaries. But in the year 1884, after the sale of 1200 copies, the remainder of the impression was destroyed by order of the Government. This was in pursuance of its determination to prevent, as far as possible, the publication of Christian literature in a form accessible to Muslims. The Arabic characters made the book accessible to them. The following hymnals have also been pub. by the agents of the A. B. C.: (1) An Armenian H. Bk., with 432 hymns. (2) An Armeno-Turkish H. Bk., with 247 hymns. (3) An English H. Bk., with 247 hymns.

In explanation of these names it should be stated that the languages used in this region are Turkish, Armenian, and Greek, the latter being confined mainly to the parts along the sea-coast. In the interior of Asia Minor, and in Cilicia and Syria as far as Aleppo, the Armenians have largely lost their own language and use the Turkish, written with the Armenian alphabet. It is Turkish written or printed thus, which is called Armeno-Turkish. In like manner, the Greek parts of the interior have lost their language, and use Turkish, written in Greek letters. This latter is called Greeco-Turkish, or sometimes Karmania. The words in Turkish, Armeno-Turkish, and Greeco-Turkish are the same; only the characters are different.

The hymn-books mentioned above are pub. both with and without tunes, and the last ed. of each appeared in 1896. They have been the growth of nearly 40 years, the earliest Armenian Hymnal having been issued in 1849. Most of the hymns are translations of well-known English and American hymns, the few originals having been usually prepared for special occasions.

The chief translators into Armenian have been the Revs. Elias Riges, D.D., L.L.D., H. J. Van Lennep, D.D., O. Wright, u.s.t., J. F. Pettibone, A.M., C. C. Shemavonian, and Mrs. M. Shemavonian. The translators into Turkish were the Revs. Dr. Pratt, F. M. Dodd, and F. O. Powers, all now deceased, and the Rev. Dr. Dwight and Avedis Constantin.

The tunes used are English and American, especially "wedded" to the hymns in their original form. The Armenian hymn-books mentioned above are used by the A. P. M. in Persia; also, to some extent by the Lutheran Armenians in the Caucasus, and the Baptist and Campbellite missionaries in Asia Minor.

In the Orthodox Bulgarian Church ancient hymns are used in the services, but not sung by the congregation, only by the clergy and choristers, and it is rather chanting and intoning than singing. The Te Deum and various Doxologies are the most common, and there are also hymns for the following festivals:—

The Nativity of B. V. M.; Presentation B. V. M.; Circumcision; Epiphanon; Candlemas; Annunciation B. V. M.; Palm Sunday; Passion Week; Easter; Ascension; Pentecost; Transfiguration; Assumption of B. V. M.; the Mass; Marriage, Baptismal and Burial Services; and Saints' Days, as St. Dimitri, John of Rils, Nikicol, Vasilii, St. John Baptist, Cyril and Methodius, George, Ella, St. Peter and St. Paul, &c.

Two American Missionary Societies—the A. B. C. and the A. M. E.—are at work in Bulgaria, the former to the south, the latter to the north of the Balkan range of mountains. The same hymnal is used by both, as well as by the agents of a native mission, known as the Bulgarian Evangelical Society. This book, called Soyazhsliuene Pianoe ("Sacred Songs") was first pub. in 1872, and with music attached, in 1878. Several ed. have since appeared, each one an enlargement on its predecessor.

The present book contains 250 hymns, about one-fifth of which are translations of the best English and American hymns for both adults and children. The principal translators have been the Rev. Dr. Riege of the A. B. C.—who did most of the work of preparation—the Rev. Dr. Long of the A. M. E., and a native pastor, the Rev. Mr. Tondjoff. The same three persons have composed most of the original hymns forming the remainder of the volume. With few exceptions translated hymns have been so rendered as to appear in the same metre in Bulgarian as in English. The lines of a hymn as in English, and the tunes used are English or American, none are native. Since the last ed. of the hymn-book appeared 59 additional hymns have been pub. in a Bulgarian periodical called the Youth's Faver and Seasonal Leaflet, most of which will in due time be incorporated in the hymnal.

viii. Syria.

In this land, from whose ancient capital, Antioch, the first missionaries were sent forth for the conversion of the heathen, a number of societies, both British and American, as well as Christian ladies from Great Britain and Germany, are at work with a wise work to its enlightenment and spiritual elevation. But the hymn-book everywhere used by Protestants is the Arabic Hymnal, with Turner, pub. by the A. P. M. at Beyrouth. From the beginning of the mission 50 years, the hymns were from time to time translated or composed, but remained in ms. or leaflet form, until about 15 years ago, when the Rev. E. B. Lewis, M.D., Professor in the Syrian Protestant College at Beyrouth, collected them into a volume and pub. them as the first Arabic Hymnal.
The present book, though based on Mr. Newell's, is much enlarged and greatly improved. It was edited by the Revs. Samuel P. M. and George A. Ford, both of the A. P. M., and was issued Dec. 25th, 1885. It is a handsome volume of 234 pp.—the text being printed in a good musical type (European notation), but with notes running from right to left and occupying the upper portion of each page, whilst the hymns, in clearly printed Arabic characters, appear on the lower portion. The hymns are 336 in number, more than 80 of which are translations of compositions by M. and others who have been translated or compiled by the M. S. M. and others. The translation or Bible verses is a chief work of the English and American, a few only being original.

In Palestine, the Aramean language, and the hymnals used in Jerusalem, Tiberias, and other places above [Syria]. The report of the C. S. M. for 1887 states that the hymns in this book have proved a great attraction to the people. Translated Arabic hymns in Miss Walker-Arnott's Taibitha Mission School at Jaffa.

In passing from Asia to Africa it is natural to begin with Egypt. In this country the national language is still in use, though the Hebrew still prevails. The Chaldean churches have a flourishing public station, and the metrical version, the first of which was prefixed to the Rev. R. G. Hartley, in 1867, wrote the first rhythmic and rhyming Malagasy hymn, which was set to the tune—"Hail to the brightness of Zion's glad morning." This, and 11 other excellent hymns of his composition, were included in a new edition of the Hymn-book edited by him in 1870. Other missionaries also began to publish, and the more popular of their productions were printed as leaflets and sold by thousands. A number of these were in course of time incorporated in the hymn-book; disused hymns were dropped, and the net result was the present book, containing 247 hymns: 30 of these were by the Rev. J. Richardson, to whom the Malagasy owes much for his efforts to improve their hymnody, and also for the thorough teaching of the Sol-fa system and the preparation of Tune Books and School Song Books. Other hymn-writers have been the Revs. W. E. Cousins, R. Toy, A. J. Houlder, G. Cousins, R. Baron, and C. T. Price; and among the natives, J. Andrianarivoelona.

3 C 2
It is remarkable that in the promotion of Christian hymnody the Madagascar press of the Society of Friends has scarcely been behind that of the L. M. S. Mr. Joseph S. Sewell, a leading member of their mission at Antananarivo, translated "Abide with me," and the popular children's hymn, "Whither, are you going, pilgrims?"

In April, 1875, the Rev. A. M. Hewlett, M.A., has striven to promote Psalmody according to the Anglican forms of worship. The Psalter is arranged for chanting, many of the Psalms are sung, and the Te Deum and Veni Creator Spiritus have been translated,—the latter by the Rev. W. E. Cousin, of the L. M. S. But in the country districts, more especially, the Malagasies at present prefer the style of hymn and tune popular in English village congregations 50 years ago, with many repeats, fugues, and responsive parts.

iv. Mauritius.

550 miles to the east of Madagascar, like a gem in the ocean, lies the fertile and remarkably picturesque island of Mauritius. Though only 36 miles long and 23 broad, it contains a polyglot population of 365,000. Two-thirds are negroes of India, coolies working in the sugar plantations, under indentures, and so constantly coming and returning to their homes in India. The other third comprises a motley population of French, English, Negre, Creoles, Malagasy, Parsees, Chinese, Singhalas and Malays. Both the S. P. G. and C. M. S. have interesting missions under the superintendence of Bishop Royston, D.D.

The Indian coolies belonging to the last five different nationalities, hymnals have been introduced, prepared by missionaries in India, in the Tamil, Malayalam, Telugu, Bengali and Hindi languages. In an account of these books supplied to us by the Rev. R. J. French, of the S. P. G., we recognize hymnals described by us in the sections of this article devoted to those languages. Doubtless a similar thing has been done in the mission of the C. M. S. to the Chinese immigrants. Not the least want of the French-speaking inhabitants of Mauritius overlooked. In services instituted for their use the French hymn-book of the S. P. C. K. and Cantiques Populaires of the McAll Mission are both employed. Finally, in religious services established for the benefit of English residents, Hymns A. & M. and other well-known hymnals of our own country are used.

v. Matabeleland.

Twenty degrees south of the Equator, and about 400 miles from the eastern coast of Africa, is Matabeleland, where are stations of the L. M. S. The language, called Amatantelbele, greatly resembles the Zulu. The first hymn-book prepared was very small and imperfect, and is now out of use. The second, prepared by the Rev. W. Sykes, and printed at Cape Town in 1883, contains about 50 hymns, of half original compositions, and the remainder translations of such hymns as "All people that on earth do dwell," "Come to the Saviour, make no delay." English metres and tunes are used, and as a rule the lines do not rhyme.

vi. Bechuana.

The language of the Bechuana bears the name of Sechuana. Six societies are labouuring in this field, the L. M. S., S. P. G., W. M. S., the Berlin, the Hanoverian Lutherans, and the Dutch Reformed. The S. P. G. have a hymn-book prepared by the Rev. Canon Crisp, of Bloemfontein, and W. H. Bevan, M.A., of Phokwane. A copy now before us, and dated 1873, contains the translations of the Te Deum, the Magnificat, and various Psalms arranged for chanting, and 40 hymns, including, "Draw near, draw near, Emmanuel," "Abide with me," "The King of Love my Shepherd is," &c. Others have doubtless been added in later editions. The Wesleyans have a book edited by the late Rev. Mr. Lindor, containing about 150 hymns. The Hanoverian missionaries have also a Sechuana hymn-book of their own. The Dutch Reformed, which is working in the Transvaal, and the Berlin missionaries use the hymn-book of the L. M. S., of which the Rev. Roger Price, of Kuruman, gives the following account.

It now contains 327 hymns, having been reprinted and enlarged several times. The present edition, in 1883, in many instances the hymns are free translations from the English; in others, the sentiments of the English hymn is followed without any attempt at a verbal translation; a few, especially some by the late Rev. Dr. Moffat, are original compositions. English metres and tunes are used exclusively. Hymn is attempted, but this is often very difficult, over their great puerility of monosyllabic words, which are not mere particles, and to the fact that, with but one exception, Sechuana words end in an open syllable and take the main accent on the penultimate.

Upwards of 250 hymns in this collection were translated or composed by Dr. Moffat. The remainder were contributed by the following missionaries:—J. Hughes, W. Livingstone, J. Mackenzie, J. S. Moffat, E. Price, J. D. Hepburn, J. Good, A. J. Woodhead, and Morelong, a native teacher.

Besides this collection a considerable number of hymns have been recently translated and printed at the Kuruman press, and will be included in the next edition of this hymn-book. These are chiefly translations of L. Sankey's Sacred Songs and Solos.

vii. Basutoland.

Basutoland is situated between Cape Colony to the south and south-east, Natal to the north-east, and the Orange Free States to the west and north-west. The language spoken, called Setsuto, is one of the Bantu group, and was first reduced to writing by missionaries of the Paris Evangelical Society, who for the last 50 years have laboured there with zeal and diligence, and latterly with great success. The S. P. G. has also a small mission in this country.

The Paris missionaries began to prepare hymns in 1849. The present collection is a goodly volume of 384 pp. 8vo, containing hymns and also tunes in Tonio Sol-fa, the title being Lifsela ta Sione le Lippina ta Tsie, or "Sacred Hymns sung in the Churches of Basutoland, followed by some of our Songs and Solos of I. D. Sankey and P. Phillips" (London, 1881). It is a 5th ed. of the words, 2nd ed. of the music.

The first part of the book contains 283 hymns, mostly original. The translations are of well-known French and English hymns, and the following are the names of the authors and translators.—Premier Cahier, the late Arnaudet, Theophile Joussé, Samuel and Ermnud Rolland, F. P. Laurier, François Collard, Louis Davoain, untikana, one of the earliest converts to Christianity, composed in pure Kafir rhythm the remarkable hymn, "Ulo-Tixo ukuluk ngaziuli" ("Thou art the great God, He Who is in heaven"), which together with his music (traditional) is unique, all subsequent efforts in Kafir hymnody being subject to the trammels of European metres.

(1) Several editions of a hymn-book used at the Wesleyan stations throughout Kaffraria, and even in Natal, have been issued from the mission press at Mt. Cocks, near King William's Town.

(2) The Rev. T. D. Ogilvie, a gifted Kafir missionary educated by the United Presbyterian Church, and early removed by death, compiled a book of hymns, which was printed in Scotland.

(3) The principal hymn-book in the Kafir language was prepared by a committee of Presbyterian and other missionaries, and published in 1872. It was printed at the mission press in Loforale, and contains 219 hymns, and 30 psalms and passages of Holy Scripture arranged as chants. The hymns are in English metres, and, in most cases, rhymes are attempted.

(4) The first collection of hymns used at the stations of the M. M. was that of the Berlin Society, which contained some hymns translated by the Moravian Brethren. In 1869 a supplement containing 18 hymns was published by the Rev. T. Eichelt. But an entirely new hymn-book, compiled by Revs. R. Baer and H. Weitz, was printed at Hamburg in 1863. With hymns, choralar and services, 416 hymns and indices, it forms a volume of 422 pages. Most of the hymns are translations from the German; the remainder being chiefly selected from the hymn-books of the Wesleyans and Presbyterians.

(5) The book used in the Anglican Missions, with the title Incwadi. Tsukakweni, was prepared by missionaries of the S. P. G. in the diocese of Graham's Town. An early ed. contained 162 hymns. That now in use has 130 hymns, and bears date 1874. The principal translators were A. J. Newton, W. M. Cameron, and C. F. Patten. The following are translated:—B. S. Key, H. B. Woodward, D. W. Dobbs, J. N. Tooke, W. J. N. Wessels, T. Liefeldt.

x. Cape Colony

In the Cape Colony the English-speaking part of the community naturally uses the hymn-books of their respective denominations in England. But since the hymnody of the coloured races, and other residents speaking the Dutch language, is due to missionary enterprise, a brief notice of it will not be inappropriate here. Coloured and Kafir hymnals may be divided into two groups, one containing the German or English elements have chiefly predominated in their composition.

1. The books in which the hymns are for the most part translated from the German and sung to German tunes are found, as:

(a) The earliest missions in South Africa were those of the Moravians, commenced in 1824 and renewed in 1828. Of their hymnody previous to 1836 we have no knowledge; but in that year a hymn-book was pub., for the use of the coloured races, of which a new edition appeared 20 years later with an appendix containing new hymns. These new hymns are mostly translations by the Brethren, but also by Hartmann. The latest edition, revised and greatly improved, was pub. in 1888.

(b) The Dutch Missionary Society, whose headquarters in Europe are at Arnhem, commenced its African mission in 1829. A hymn-book was issued in 1844, revised in 1872, and is now in its 4th edition. It contains 290 hymns, taken chiefly from the Moravian and Dutch reformed hymnals, with 64 original compositions, or translations from the Arnhem Gesangbuch.

(c) The Berlin Missionary Society, founded in 1831, issued its first B. African hymnal in 1853. This was compiled by Rev. P. Schmitth, and the hymns are arranged in the order of the Church of Scotland, S. P. G., F. C. S., L. M. S., and language is allied to the Zulu.
(a) The first Dutch hymnal in which translations of English hymns appeared was that of the L. M. S., in use as early as 1829, but reprinted in 1847. It contained 40 translations of the English hymns of Watts, Doddridge, Steele and Newton. Some of these were by the well-known Dr. Vander-emp, but the majority by the Rev. G. Barker, missionary at the Paari. It was revised and enlarged in 1848, and after passing through 4 editions, came, in 1862, under the editorship of the Rev. F. W. Kolbe (L. M. S.), through whose skill as a hymn-writer and translator it has in successive editions been enlarged to 412 hymns, and enriched by admirable translations of many of the best known in Hymns A. & N.

(b) West-yan missions in S. Africa were commenced in 1816, and in 1817 a cheap edition of the Dutch Reformed hymnal was pub., with a Supplement suited to the native congregations. This contained some translations of Wesley's hymns by the Rev. Barnabas Shaw. The entire book was superseded in 1840 by a collection of 392 hymns, including 160 translations from Wesley by the Rev. R. Haddy. These translations, however, being deemed unsatisfactory, a new hymnal was prepared in 1855. The compilers were the Revs. R. Ridgill and B. Ridsdale, the former of whom, together with the Rev. H. Tindal, has made some valuable contributions to the store of Dutch translations from the English. The 6th ed. (1882) contains 266 hymns, of which at least one fourth are versions of well-known English hymns.

(c) The Anglican Dutch hymnal was compiled by the Rev. J. A. Hewitt, now Rector of Worcester, Cape Colony, and published by the S. F. C. E. in 1873. It contains 301 hymns, arranged in the order of H. A. M., and includes 26 translations from the Latin, and a very large number from the English, many of the latter being taken, by permission, from the L. M. S. and Dutch hymnals. This is the hymnal authorized for use by the mission congregations of the English Church in the province of S. Africa.

Further information on this subject is contained in a series of articles by the Rev. J. A. Hewitt, D.C.L., Rector of Worcester (Cape Colony), in the S. African Church Chronicle, vol. vii., 1886, to which, and also to Dr. Hewitt personally, we are largely indebted for this outline of the Cape Colony hymnody.

xi. Great Namaqualand.

If from the Cape Colony we proceed northward, keeping to the western side of the African continent, one of the first regions we enter is Great Namaqualand, a missionary field of the Rhenish Society of Barmen. Hymns in the Nama (Hottentot) language were first prepared, about 1845, by Rev. J. G. Krönlein, who, in 1875, edited a hymn-book containing 60 hymns, translated from the German and adapted to German tunes, the lines rhyming. Most of the translations were by Mr. Krönlein: the rest by the late Rev. H. C. Knudsen and the late Mrs. Kleinschmidt. Further north is a country, variously denominated—

xii. Dammaraland or Hereroland.

The first Herero hymns were prepared by the Revs. J. Rath and F. W. Kolbe (see § Cape Colony), and printed at Cape Town in 1849. The hymn-book now used was edited by the Rev. H. Brincker, and reached a 3rd ed. in 1873. It contains 123 hymns, some original, but chiefly translations from the German, and adapted to German tunes. The contributors were the Revs. J. Rath, F. W. Kolbe, C. H. Hahn, H. Brincker, G. Viebe, Mrs. Baumann, and other members of the Rhenish Mission.

xiii. Ovamboland.

As an interesting illustration of the fact that all the Protestant nations of Christendom are now engaged in missionary work among the heathen, reference may be made to the stations of the Finland Missionary Society in Ovamboland, a region of Western South Africa, to the north of the 20th degree south latitude. A small hymnal has been prepared in the language of this region, containing about 60 hymns, but we are unable to give particulars.

A few degrees further to the north is the country of Benguela, where the A. B. C. has recently planted stations. The language spoken is called Umbundu, but missionary work is at present in too elementary a stage for hymnody.

xiv. Congoland.

Few hymns as yet have been pub. in Kiski-Kongo, "the language of the Congo" itself. All are in Fula, the particular language spoken in the region of which San Salvador is the centre. First, in 1884, in connection with the B. M. S., ten hymns were printed at Stanley Pool; then a collection of 21 was made by the missionaries of the Livingston Inland Mission and printed in England; lastly, a collection of 20 hymns (including most of the first 10) was printed in 1887, at the B. M. S. Edwin Wade Press, Underhill Station.

With few exceptions the Congo hymns are all continental. The originals are by the Revs. T. J. Coomber and W. H. Bentley. The translations include "We have heard that God is love," "Open thy gates," "Ah the dear Saviour," "Stand up, stand up for Jesus," and "Father, in high heaven dwelling." Besides the missionaries in use, the Revs. J. H. Weeks, and H. Dixon, and two native converts, Kalembela and Maino, have translated hymns.

The Livingston Inland Mission has been transferred to the A. B. M. In their collection are included several hymns from the book just described, and others translated by the Revs. C. H. Harvey, H. Craven, and H. Richards. Among these are "Abide with me," "Jesus sinners will receive," "A few more years shall roll," English metres and tunes are used. Besides the hymns in these collections, others are in use. Printed on slips, which, when tested and improved, will be included in future editions.

xv. Old Calabar.

To the north of the island of Fernando Po, and about 100 miles to the east of the Niger, the Old Calabar river empties itself into the Gulf of Guinea. In this part of Africa the U. P. Church of Scotland has for the last 42 years had a mission, Creek Town and Duke Town being its principal stations. The language spoken is called Efik. Soon after the establishment of the mission a small hymn-book was prepared, which has been repeatedly enlarged, and now in its 7th ed. contains 309 hymns and 7 doxologies. The Rev. H. Goldie has been the editor and principal contributor, but the following have also assisted in the work: the Revs. Dr. Koff, and Messrs. Anderson, Campbell, Edgerley, Thomson and Wardell. Some of the hymnals are original, others translations or paraphrases of portions of Holy Scripture. A collection of 39 children's hymns has also been prepared, under the same auspices as the larger book, and printed at Creek Town in 1885 by a native printer. It includes "Little travellers Zionward" (Nkpi mendim enyin); "Jesus loves me" (Jesu amani), and other well-known English hymns, and a few originals by the Rev. S. H. Edgerley.
The metres are English and the lines rhyme as with us. The larger book above named is in connection with an Un denomina tion in Old Calabar, supported by the Rev. H. Grotan Gruinness.

Yoruba, Coast of Guinea. The Yoruba language is the east, the Lagos being the principal coast town, and the interior. The C. M. S., W. M. S., and American Baptists of the Southern Conference there. (1) In the early Church of England mission years of the 17th century, there were used; but in 1858, a German missionary in the service of the C. M. S., translated a few and composed others, using them in the same and increasing the number from time to time to 106, when in the year 1865 they were printed in London. About at the same time as Mr. Hinderer, the Rev. H. Townsend in another part of the field commenced a similar work, and in 1854 printed a small collection of 20 hymns. This was presently increased to 120, and printed at Ake, Beokuta, and several times reprinted in England, J. A. 1867 the Rev. J. V. B. D. Hinderer. Mention may be made of a collection of 99 hymns, chiefly for use in schools, prepared by the Rev. J. B. Wood, of the C. M. S. (2) The Wesleyans have a hymn-book of their own, containing about 150 hymns, and including many of the hymns in the above collection. The 2nd ed. was published in 1876. (3) It is believed that the American Baptists have also a hymn-book of their own, but we have no particulars.

In some of the Yoruba hymns there has been attempted, but there is some difficulty arising from the fact that all words must end in vowels. Lively English tunes are preferred by the people to grave German ones; their own native songs abound in choruses.

Sierra Leone. In Sierra Leone, and the neighbouring districts of Western Africa, several missionary societies are at work, but their religious services are conducted in English, and English hymn-books are used. But at Port Loko, a small mission of the C. M. S., among a people called Temne, and a small collection of 17 hymns in the Temne language has been prepared by the Rev. C. F. Schenken. These are partly original and partly translated. English metres and tunes are used, but the lines do not rhyme.

Y. Conclusion. With this brief notice of missionary work on the West Coast of the "Dark Continent," we close our paper. Beginning with Greenland, and proceeding westwards, we have made the tour of the world, and the reader will surely feel with us that the work we have looked upon—nearly all accomplished within the last 90 years—is great and marvellous, a work of most noble Christian devotion and industry. As our pages will show that the languages and dialects in which Christian hymns in connection with Foreign Missions have been written, or into which they have been translated, are nearly one hundred and fifty, and that in many of them, several hymn-books of considerable size have been prepared. The list includes languages spoken by all the greater divisions of the human race, Aryan, Semitic, Turkish, languages in all stages of formation, monosyllabic, as the Burman, agglutinative, as the Tamil and Turkish, inflectional, as the Sumerian group of Northern India; languages of extreme antiquity, as the Chinese, and of comparatively recent formation, as the Ural; languages harsh and guttural, as the speech of some African tribes, and soft and mellifluous, as that of the Polynesian islanders. All these by the energy and diligence of Christian missionaries have been mastered, their words have been arranged in tuneful measures, and in them God's praises are now sung, and His "wonderful works" declared. It has been observed that in regard to some parts of the world our story is incomplete. This is in part due to the fact that a number of letters asking for information have not been answered, probably in some cases because they failed to reach their destination, and in others, because the good men to whom they were addressed were prevented from writing by more pressing engagements. We have, however, to thank very many friends, mission-secretaries, missionaries, and others, both ladies and gentlemen of various professions, for the extreme kindness with which they have sent us, from nearly all parts of the world, letters of information and specimens of hymns. Want of space prevents the writer from appending full list of their names, but he begs to assure them, should their eye fall on these pages, that for all their help he is most grateful. It was his original intention to include in each section a list of the principal translated hymns in each language, but he soon found that this would entail constant repetition. The fact is, that the best hymns of Watts, Doddridge, Cowper, Newton, Wesley, Heber, Lyte, Keble, Bonar, Miss Steele, Miss Havergal, and other English authors,—the best German hymns,—the best hymns of American composition,—are now sung in China and South Africa, in Japan and Syria, among the peoples of India, and in the islands of the Pacific Ocean,—indeed, in almost every place where Protestant missions have uplifted the Gospel banner and gathered Christian Churches.

Missions, Home. [Various.] Missum Redemptorem pol. C. Coffin. [Christmas.] Appeared in the Paris Breviary, 1736; in several modern French Breviaries; in J. Chandler's Hymn of the Poor. Church, 1837, p. 168; and in all American Hymnals, 1888 and 1865. In Coffin's Hymns Sacred, 1736, p. 99, it is given amongst those hymns which are based upon older hymns. It is founded on the "A soleis curdon" of Sedulius (p. 4, 4). Tr. as:—
1. Behold from heaven a Saviour sent. By W. J. Blew, in his Church Hym. & Tune Bk., 1852-5, in 7 st. of 4 l. And in Rice's Sel. from the same, 1870.

Other trs. are:—
2. Let all the earth her King adore. J. Williams, 1839.

Mistaken souls that dream of heaven. I. Wattr. [Living and dead Faith.] Appears in his Hym. & Spiritual 8, 1769, Bk. I, No. 140, in 4 st. of 4 l. And headed "A living and dead Faith, collected from several Scriptures." In its original form it is in limited use. The most popular form of the text is "Deluded souls that dream of heaven," which was given in the 8th ed. of Cotterell's Sel., 1819, No. 94, in 4 stanzas, being Watter's st. 1–ll. and vi. altered. These two forms of the hymn are in use in G. Britain and America.

Mitt Fried und Freund ich fahr dahin. M. Luther. [Nunc Dimittis.] This free rendering of the Song of Simeon (St. Luke ii. 29–32) was first pub. in the Gesellscha foughten Buchlein, Wittenberg, 1524, and was included by Luther in 1542 as one of the six funeral hymns in Christliche Gesey... zugemend. In Wackernagel, iii. p. 17, in 4 st. of 4 l.; in Schirck's ed. of Luther's Geistl. Lieder, 1854, p. 88; and in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863.

This noble swan-song, as Bunsen calls it, has comforted many princes and pious Christians, in their last hour. Lauzunx, in Kirch., 1858, gives various instances of its consoling effects, stating, e.g., that Prince Charles of Anhalt, during his last illness in 1641, comforted himself with it, and if with trembling voice, yet with joyful heart, sung the whole hymn a quarter of an hour before his death.

The tr. in C. U. is:—

In peace and joy I now depart. According to A. full and good tr. by Miss Winkworth, in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 81, and her Christian Singers, 1869, p. 114. Considerably altered by Dr. Bacon, 1884, p. 41.

Mittig ad Virginem. [Annunciation of the B. V. M.] This sequence has generally been attributed to Peter Abelard, but is not found in the collection of hymns and sequences which he made for the convent of the Paraleote. Cousin, in his ed. of Abelard's Opera, Paris, 1849, vol. i. p. 328, gives the text from Chlotroveus, &c., and says his authorship is uncertain; though the hymn is not unworthy of him. Mone, No. 348, prints from a 13th cent. Ms. at St. Paul, in Carinthia, and other sources:—

Mohr, Joseph, was born at Salzburg, Austria, on Dec. 11, 1792. After being

It is also in the Sarum Ms. in the Bodleian, c. 1370, Barrow, 5, page 140; Hazford (ms. in the Bodleian, c. 1370); York (ms. in the Bodleian, c. 1390); Magdeburg of 1490; Paris of 1481, and other Missals. The text is also in Wackernagel i., No. 182; Kreheim, No. 199, &c. Tr. as:—

Another tr. is:—

"No one lower in grade To the Virgin," &c. C. B. Pearson, 1868.

[N. M.]

Museo Xyloste, Synesius, Bp. of Ptolemis. [Lent.] This is the last of ten hymns written by Synesius at various periods of his life (375–430). [See Greek Hymnography, § v.]

The full texts of the ten hymns are given in the Anthologia Graeca Carminium Christianorum (Leipzig), 1871; and from that work they were translated by the Rev. A. W. Chatfield, and pub. in his Songs & Hys. Of Earliest Greek Christian Poets, &c., 1876. The tr. of this hymn begins "Lord Jesus, think on me." It was given in H. A. & M., 1875, in 8 st. rv. 1792; and it was included in his Songs & Hys., 1876, in 9 st. of 4 l. From this No. 338, in Tirling's Coll., 1882, is taken. To his tr. Mr. Chatfield has added this note at p. 86:—

"In translating this Ode I have given my spirit more liberty. It may be considered as a paraphrase or amplification, rather than an exact translation of the original. A brief form of it appears in Hymns Ancient and Modern."

Another tr. was pub. by I. Williams in his Thoughts in Past Years, 1898. It begins:—

"Christ the Son
Of God most high,
Is in 15 lines, but is not in C. U. [J. J.]

Möckel, Johann Friedrich, was b. Jan. 16, 1661, at Culmbach in Franconia, and matriculated at the University of Jena in 1681. He was for some time private chaplain to Herr von Redwitz at Teisenort, and from 1685 to 1691 to Herr von Künzberg at Hayn near Bayreuth. In 1691 he became pastor at Neuhäus, and in 1695 at Steppach and Limpach, near Neustadt on the Aisch. He d. April 19, 1729 (Koeh, v. 523, &c.). Of his 11 hymns one has been tr. into English, viz.:—

Nun sich die Nacht geendet hat. Die Finsterniss seraheth. Morning. Wettel, iv., 357–359, quotes at length from a letter in which Möckel says this hymn was composed by himself in 1691 while at Neuhäus, and that it was written at the request of the widowed Frau von Künzberg (Kindsberg) in order that she might have a hymn for morning prayer as a companion to her favorite hymn for evening prayer, which was "Nun sicht der Tag geendet hat." (p. 116, l. 1). A copy, he adds, was sent to a sister in Bayreuth, and so inserted in the Prussian G. R., Bayreuth, 1691, included in Wagner's G. R., Leipzig, 1897, vol. iv. p. 1355, in 8 st. of 11, and in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 1122. Pr. as:—

Moller, Martin, son of Dionysius Moller, mason at Liesnitz (now Kropschütz), near Wittenberg, was b. at Liesnitz, Nov. 1517. He attended the town school at Wittenberg and the gymnasium at Görlitz, but was too poor to go to any university. In 1568 he was appointed master of the Latin school at Wittenberg, but in April, 1572, was ordained as Molther, Philipp Heinrich, was b. in Absace, Dec. 28, 1714. At Jena, where he studied theology, he joined the [Moravian] Brethren in 1737, and went to London 1739. He was minister of the Brethren's congregation at Liverpool from 1730 to 1751, and spent the rest of his life, 1762-1780, in Dublin and in Bedford. He d. at Bedford, Sep. 9, 1780, five years after his consecration as a Bishop of the Brethren's Unity. See "At God's right hand," &c., p. 99, i. [G. A. C.]

Mone, Franz Joseph, was b. May 12, 1796, at Mönchengladbach, near Bruchsal, Baden. He entered the University of Heidelberg in 1814, where in 1817 he became University lecturer, was in 1819 appointed extraordinary and in 1822 ordinary Professor of History, and in 1825 also director of the University library. In 1827 he became Professor of History and Statistics at the University of Louvain, but during the Belgian Revolution of 1831 resigned and retired to Heidelberg. In 1835 Duke Leopold of Baden appointed him Privy Recorder and Director of the General State Archives at Karlsruhe, and this post he held till his retirement on a pension in 1868. He d. at Karlsruhe, March 12, 1871 (Allg. Deutsche Biog., xxii. 165, &c.).

He interested himself specially in Celtic studies, in the history of the Upper Rhine, and in Liturgical (Lateinische und Griechische Meister, 1880, &c.). He claims notice here specially on account of his Latinische Hymnen des Mittelalters, pub. at Freiburg in Baden, in three vols., viz.:—(1) Lateinische Hymnen des Mittelalters, aus Handschriften herausgegeben und erklart von F. J. Mone, Director des Archivs zu Karlsruhe, 1853, with Hymns on the dead and the Angels (Nos. 1-320); (2) Hymni Latinii Medii Aevi, ed. J. A. M. edidit et Aedificavit, 1854, on the B. V. M. (Nos. 321-620); (3) Colloquium, vol. ii., 1858, on the Saints (Nos. 621-1215). The interest of this work, not unfortunately out of print, consists in its being rather the reverse of its title, and in the comparative ease with which, to one acquainted with German, it can be used. The information given is all printed together at the end of the individual hymns, and the abbreviations used are clear and intelligible, not symbols such as those employed by Daniel. The work throughout is arranged on a consistent plan, i.e., in order of subjects and not according to authors. Mone published no hymns except those found in manuscripts, of which he says he consulted "some hundreds from more than fifty libraries;" among the most valuable being those so nearly belonging to the Benedictine Abbey of Reichenau (not Rhenish), near Constans, and now at Karlsruhe. A large proportion of the hymns were here first printed; many of those in the second and third volumes being however not of much value. In Daniel's fourth and fifth volumes a large amount of space is filled by texts and notes which he transcribed from this work of Mone (see p. 379, i). [J. M.]

Monsell, John Samuel Bewley, LL.D., a. of Thomas Bewley Monsell, Archbishop of Londonderry, was b. at St. Columba's, Londonderry, March 2, 1811, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin (B.A. 1822, LL.D. 1856). Taking Holy Orders in 1834, he was successively Chaplain to Bp. Mant, Chancellor of the diocese of Connor, Rector of Hammon, Vicar of Egham, diocese Worcester, and Rector of St. Nicholas's, Guildford. He died, a consequence of a fall from the roof of his church, which was in the course of rebuilding, April 9, 1875. His prose works include Our New Year, 1867; The Winton Church Catechist, &c. His poetical works are:

(1) Hymns and Miscellaneous Poems, Dublin, 1837; (2) Parish Musings, or Devotional Poems, 1850; (3) Spiritual Songs for the Sundays and Holy Days throughout the Year, 1857 (People's Ed., 1875); (4) His Presence, not His Memory, 1854, 1856; (5) Hymns of Love and Praise for the Church's Year, 1863 (2nd ed. 1866); (6) The Passing Bell; Hymns to The Nightingale, and other Poems, 1847; (7) Litanies, 1864; (8) The Death of the Sinner, and the Order of the Book of Common Prayer, 1872; (9) Watchers by the Cross, 1874; (10) Simon the Cyrenian; and other Poems, (11) Nursery Carols.

In these works several hymns which appeared in the earlier books are repeated in the latter, and thus at first sight his compositions seem to be more in number than they really are. The total amount to nearly 300, and of these about one-fourth are in C. U. The most popular of these are, "God is love; that anthem olden;" "God of that glorious gift of grace;" "Holy offerings, rich and rare;" "Lord of the living harvest;" "Mighty Father, Blessed Son;" and "Sing to the Lord a joyful song" In addition to those which are annotated under their respective first lines, the following are in C. U.:

i. Appeared in his Hymns and Miscellaneous Poems, Dublin, 1837.

Montanus, superbum verticem. Jean Baptiste de Saintvil. [Visitation of the B. V. M.] Pub. in his Hymni Sacri et Noris, 1699, p. 34, and again in the Paris Breviary, 1736, and several modern French Breviaries. It is also in Carl. Newman’s Hymni Eclesiastici, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:

Ye mountains, bend ye low. By I. Williams, in his Hymn from the Parisian Breviary, 1839, in 6 st. of 4 l., and thence into the Hymnal for the Use of St. John the EC., Aberdeen, 1870. [J. J.]

Montgomery, Ignatius, younger brother of James Montgomery, was b. Sept. 3, 1776, at Gracehill, near Ballymena, county of Antrim, a settlement of the [Moravian] Brethren, to which his father, the Rev. John Montgomery, had moved in that year from Irvine, in Ayrshire. Ignatius Montgomery served as minister in four of the Brethren’s congregations in England and Ireland. He d. at Ockbrook, near Derby, April 28, 1841. See “At God’s right hand, &c.,” p. 99 l. [G. A. C.]

Montgomery, James, s. of John Montgomery, a Moravian minister, was b. at Irvine, Ayrshire, Nov. 4, 1771. In 1776 he removed with his parents to the Moravian Settlement at Gracehill, near Ballymena, county of Antrim. Two years after he was sent to the Fulneck Seminary, Yorkshire. He left Fulneck in 1787, and entered a retail shop at Mirfield, near Wakefield. Soon tiring of that he entered upon a similar situation at Wakefield, near Rotherham, only to find it quite as unsuitable to his taste as the former. A journey to London, with the hope of finding a publisher for his youthful poems ended in failure; and in 1792 he was glad to leave Wakefield for Sheffield to join Mr. Gales, an auctioneer, bookseller, and printer of the Sheffield Register newspaper, as his assistant. In 1794 Mr. Gales left England to avoid a political prosecution. Montgomery took the Sheffield Register in hand, changed its name to The Sheffield Iris, and continued to edit it for thirty-one years. During the next two years he was imprisoned twice, first for reprinting therein a song in commemoration of “The Fall of the Bastille,” and the second for giving an account of a riot in Sheffield. The editing of his paper, the composition and publication of his poems and hymns, the delivery of lectures on poetry in Sheffield and at the Royal Institution, London, and the earnest advocacy of Foreign Missions and the Bible Society in many parts of the country, gave great variety but very little of a stable foundation to his life. In 1838 he received a Royal pension of £200 a year. He d. in his sleep, at the Mount, Sheffield, April 30, 1854, and was honoured with a public funeral. A statue was erected to his memory in the Sheffield General Cemetery, and a stained glass window in the Parish Church. A Wesleyan chapel, and a public hall are also named in his honour. Montgomery’s principal poetical works, including those which he edited, were:

(1) Prison Attempts, 1791; (2) The Wonderer of Switzerland, 1808; (3) The West Indies, 1808; (4) The World before the Flood, 1812; (5) Other Poems, 1819; (6) Songs of Zion, 1822; (7) The Christian Psalmist, 1825; (8) The Christian Poet,

Dr. Molling’s hymns are as a whole bright, joyous, and musical in thought, and strong emotion. A few only are of enduring excellence.

[J. J.]
Of Montgomery's 400 hymns (including his versions of the Psalms) more than 100 are still in C. U. With the aid of Montgomery's ms. we have given a detailed account of a large number. The rest are as follows:

i. Appeared in Collyer's Collection, 1812.
1. Jesus, our best beloved friend. Personal Dedication to Christ.

68. Come ye that fear the Lord. Confirmation.
69. Home, kindred, friends, and country. These.
70. Let me go, the day is breaking. Jacob wrestling.
71. Not in Jerusalem alone. Observation of a Church.
72. Praise the high and holy one. God the Creator.

In common with most poets and hymn-writers, Montgomery strongly objected to any correction or rearrangement of his compositions. At the same time he did not hesitate to alter, rearrange, and amend the productions of others. The altered texts which appeared in Cotterill's Sel, 1819, and which in numerous instances are still retained in some of the best hymn-books as "The Rock of Ages," in its well-known form of three stanzas, and others of equal importance, were made principally by him for Cotterill's use. We have this confession under his own hand.

As a poet, Montgomery stands well to the front; and as a writer of hymns he ranks in popularity with Wesley, Watts, Doxbridge, Newton, and Cowper. His best hymns were written in his earlier years. In his old age he wrote much that was unworthy of his reputation. His finest lyrics are "Angels from the realms of glory," "Go to dark Gethsemane," "Hail to the Lord's Anointed," and "Songs of praise the angels sang." His "Prayer is the soul's sincere desire," is an expanded definition of prayer of great beauty; and his "For ever with the Lord," is full of lyrical fire and deep feeling. The secrets of his power as a writer of hymns were manifold. His poetic genius was of a high order, which more than one writer has called "the Rock of Ages." In its well-recognized form of three stanzas, and others of equal importance, were made principally by him for Cotterill's use. We have this confession under his own hand.

MOORE, THOMAS

Moore, Thomas, s. of John Moore, a man at Dublin, was b. in that city; May 28, 1779, educated at a private university College, Dublin; read at the Middle Temple, and the time, and
Journal, and
Lord John Russell in 1855. In that work every detail concerning himself and his numerous publications, most of them of high poetical merit, will be found. His connection with hymnody is confined to his Sacred Songs, which were pub. in 1816, and again in his Collected Works, 1866. These Songs were 32 in all, and were written to popular airs of various nations. Of these Songs the following have passed into a few hymn-books, mainly in America:—

1. As down in the sunny retreats of the ocean.
   Precious Prayer.
2. But who shall see the glorious day. The Final Blesses Man.
3. I saw the sea of glass; where’s your languish. Relief in Prayer. In American hymn-books the text is sometimes as in T. Hastings and Lowell Mason’s Sacred Songs, 1821. This may be distinguished from the original by the third stanza, which reads, ‘Here see the Bread of Life; see waters flowing.’
4. Fallen in thy throne, O Israel. Israel in Exile.
5. Like morning when her early breeze. Power of Divine Grace.
6. O Thou Who driest the mourner’s tears. Lert.
   Deliverance of Israel.
9. The bird ([dove]) let loose in eastern skies. Prayer for Constancy.
10. The turf shall be my fragrant shrine. The Temple of Nature. From this • There’s nothing bright above Thou art, O God, the Life and Light. God, the 12. The sin of Mary’s tears. Lert.

Of these hymns No. 11 has attained the greatest popularity.

in 1627, and three different sections of it can afterwards

MORAVIAN HYMNODY. By the name of the Moravian Church is signified the Church of the ancient Bohemian Brethren, who were founded in 1722 at Herrnhut in Saxony [see Bohemian Hymnody, § I. IV. 3.] The ancient Brethren lived in Moravia and Poland as well as in Bohemia, but because their main settlements were situated in Bohemia (until 1547), and the Bohemian language the one they employed in their writings, they received the general name Bohemian Brethren. They called themselves in Bohemian jednota hvezdinska, and in Latin Unitas Fratrum. In like manner the Brethren of the Renewed Church are commonly called Moravians, because the first founders of Herr-hut immigrated from Moravia. They assumed this name in England and America, but in the Act of Parliament under the 12th May, 1749,
they are acknowledged as the Evangelical Unitas Fratrum. The name of Unitas Fratrum or the United Brethren, and therefore their official name in: Unitas Fratrum (Brethren’s Unity), or the United Brethren.

1. History of the Moravians.

The history of the Moravians is required in an article on the Moravian Hymnody, only so far as it may help to further the better understanding of their hymns and hymn-books, their special character being modified by that Church from whose mislat they originated, and for whose use they were written and compiled.
The most prolific Moravian hymn-writer is Count N. L. von Zinzendorf, and nearly all the other Moravian hymn-writers were inspired by him.
After his death there arose but few Moravian hymn-writers, as Gregor, Garve, Albertini; and the hymn-book now in use among the Moravians is for the most part the same, which was edited towards the close of the last century. Therefore it may suffice to give a brief account of Moravian history up to Zinzendorf’s death in 1760.

Introduction. From the commencement of the Bohemian Brethren’s Unity, some of its members existed in Moravia, deputies from this land having already been sent as representatives to the constitutive Synod held at Loben (146). About 300 years ago several hundred Waldenses emigrated to Moravia from the Mark Brandenburg and joined the Unity. These, settled in Fulwik and Landisken, formed the only German-speaking part of the Unity, for whom Welsch edited the first German hymn-book. Nevertheless the Moravian branch of the Unity was fully incorporated with the whole body, stood under the same direction, and had the same doctrines, institutions, &c. After the persecutions in Bohemia in the early years of the 15th century, the fugitive Brethren in Moravia took refuge in Moravia, but in consequence of the battle of the White Mountain, near Prague, Nov. 8, 1620, the Unity in Moravia was destroyed, as it was in Bohemia, by a cruel and bloody Anti-reformation.

The ancient Brethren’s Church was already dissolved
in 1627, and three different sections of it can afterwards be distinguished, each with its peculiar fate.

independently and joined with the Reformed Church in their contest with the Lutherans, so much as that at first the brethren had the upper hand, and their constitution was accepted by the united church in Poland. Later, however, matters were reversed, and the brethren had to give up more and more of their peculiarities. With the union of the Evangelical churches in 1811, the Brethren's unity in Poland, Hungary, Silesia, and Prussia. Altogether there are said to have been, till 1856, about 100 congregations of the Brethren in these countries. After the destruction of the old town of Eisleben in 1666, this second branch, the Exile Church, which has no importance for the renewed Brethren's Church, disappeared. (3) Of great importance is the third branch, composed of those members of the Brethren's Church who remained in Bohemia and Moravia, whom Comenius calls the "hidden seed." Among Comenius, born at Coma, in Moravia, March 25, 1592, and from Selzau, the bishop of the Bohemian and Moravian branches, and he consecrated "in spirit contermini" his son-in-law, Peter Figlins, or Jablonsky, bishop of the Unity. To his death he maintained the hope that the expelled Brethren would be allowed to return to their fatherland, and that the Unity would be re-established. Before when Crowned, after having crushed the Czechs, intended to settle the homeless Bohemians and Moravians there as a Protestant colony. Comenius could not agree to it: "Ego quidem nostrum disiniernendum in hoc punico proximo semino leviter habeo at, quid sit, fidei intelligenter reme s se recollationibus in patria, quam plurique pertinaciter foret, et in his (ut verum fatuer) ego nocce." (See Vaughan's Parliament of the World, 116). Soon afterwards the Restoration of the Stuarts put an end to all such plans. Some of the Brethren, however, settled in England and Ireland, and their brethren and contemporaries, to this day, as John Comenius (properly Cennick), well known in hymnody and in Moravian history. In addition to his celebrated activity as teacher, Comenius was unceasing in strengthening the courage and faith of the emigrant Brethren, and even that of the remnant in their fatherland, by means of letters and writings. For example, he wrote a German catechism for the Moravians in those villages from which 60 years later the founders of Herrnhut emigrated. They used it secretly in their homes the whole time, through preserving it in their inward Evangelical views although externally Roman Catholics. (One of the only two extant copies was brought by them to Herrnhut.)

2. A revival of the Brethren's tradition among the German-speaking part of that "hidden seed" seems to have been carried forth by the church affairs in the neighbouring country of Silesia. Charles XII. by the Altranstädt convention, 1767, had compelled the Empire to restore 121 churches which had been taken from the Protestants. In connection with this Convention, six other churches ("Gnauden-Kirchen") were granted to them in 1769. The ministers who were appointed to these churches were mostly excellent persons. Their sermons had great effect, and as some of these Churches were not far from the boundaries of Moravia, some of the "hidden seed," the "Protestants" ("hidden seed") made use of the opportunity and often attended the services, especially in Teschin.

3. In Moravia the Brethren's traditions were kept alive particularly in the so-called "Kuhählenchen." One circle was in the villages of Skelen and Sedtendorf. George Jäckel in Skelen was the bearer of these traditions. His forefathers had fled in the 16th century from Bohemia to Moravia. He was a true descendant of the ancient Brethren, and is described as a real patriarch in appearance. In constant intercourse with this circle, formed by the families Jäckel, Naser, &c., was another in the neighborhood of Pulbec, in the villages of Künzvalde, where Samuel Schneider played the same part as J. Jäckel. To the assemblies held by Schneider belonged the families Kunz, Breyer, Gach, Selberger, Tannenberger in Zuckenthal, and the Mischnovians in Skelen.

In these circles Christian David appeared twice in succession. This remarkable man was a carpenter from Bohemia, resident in Poland. In contact with his Roman Catholic faith, had after long wanderings through Germany in search for true children of God, became a Lutheran, at 35 years of age. In the year 1717 he began to take journeys to Moravia and Bohemia, on which he sought out the hidden Protestants on his own account. During this time he made the acquaintance of the Count of Zinzendorf, the Brethren's Chief, who was already very fond of his willingness to receive all oppressed people. With Zinzendorf's permission David guided the first three emigrants with wife and child. The last one was in Moravia, to Zinzendorf's estate near Berthelsdorf in Saxony, which they reached on June 16th, 1722. Zinzendorf was in Dresden, but his steward Herren in the second branch of the "Blue Church." However, matters were reversed, and the brethren had to give up more and more of their peculiarities. With the union of the Evangelical churches in 1811, the Brethren's Unity in Poland, Hungary, Silesia, and Prussia. Altogether there are said to have been, till 1856, about 100 congregations of the Brethren in these countries. 2. A revival of the Brethren's tradition among the German-speaking part of that "hidden seed" seems to have been carried forth by the change in church affairs in the neighbouring country of Silesia. Charles XII. by the Altranstädt convention, 1767, had compelled the Empire to restore 121 churches which had been taken from the Protestants. In connection with this Convention, six other churches ("Gnauden-Kirchen") were granted to them in 1769. The ministers who were appointed to these churches were mostly excellent persons. Their sermons had great effect, and as some of these Churches were not far from the boundaries of Moravia, some of the "hidden seed," the "Protestants" ("hidden seed") made use of the opportunity and often attended the services, especially in Teschin.

3. In Moravia the Brethren's traditions were kept alive particularly in the so-called "Kuhählenchen." One circle was in the villages of Skelen and Sedtendorf. George Jäckel in Skelen was the bearer of these traditions. His forefathers had fled in the 16th century from Bohemia to Moravia. He was a true descendant of the ancient Brethren, and is described as a real patriarch in appearance. In constant intercourse with this circle, formed by the families Jäckel, Naser, &c., was another in the neighborhood of Pulbec, in the villages of Künzvalde, where Samuel Schneider played the same part as J. Jäckel. To the assemblies held by Schneider belonged the families Kunz, Breyer, Gach, Selberger, Tannenberger in Zuckenthal, and the Mischnovians in Skelen.

In these circles Christian David appeared twice in succession. This remarkable man was a carpenter from Bohemia, resident in Poland. In contact with his Roman Catholic faith, had after long wanderings through Germany in search for true children of God, became a Lutheran, at 35 years of age. In the year 1717 he began to take journeys to Moravia and Bohemia, on which he sought out the hidden Protestants on his own account. During this time he made the acquaintance of the Count of Zinzendorf, the Brethren's Chief, who was already very fond of his willingness to receive all oppressed people. With Zinzendorf's permission David guided the first three emigrants with wife and child. The last one was in Moravia, to Zinzendorf's estate near Berthelsdorf in Saxony, which they reached on June 16th, 1722. Zinzendorf was in Dresden, but his steward Herren
English hymns in addition to the contents of the first edition. All the editions till 1754 must be regarded as the undertakings of private individuals, in opposition to the sanction of the Church as such. On the 12th May, 1749, the Moravians were acknowledged by a Bill of the English Parliament as a "Protestant Congregation" (a term now known by the name of Unitas Fratrum or The United Brethren.

7. In the meantime, the Moravians founded new settlements in Germany, of which Herrnhaag in Wetterau (founded 1758) was the most important. In the year 1764, the Count of Zinzendorf had been exiled to Saxony, by which means his adversaries were at last unable to prevent the de facto settlement of the sect in Herrnhaag. But although Herrnhaag during the years that followed the Count's exile, yet this misfortune laid the foundation-stone of several new settlements in Germany. The Count, accompanied by his family and some of his most able followers, amongst others, the left Saxony, and formed the congregation's "sought refuge with a friend of Zinzendorf's, the Count of Bähringen, in Wetterau. Here they bought land, and founded Herrnhaag, which became the centre of the Brethren's Unity for the next 15 years. Here the pilgrim's congregation was stationed, visitors from all parts of Germany came and went continually, news from the Missions arrived every week from all parts of the world, while missionaries themselves, accompanied by convivial negroes, or Emigrants, or Indians, gave accounts of their work. Every inhabitant of this little colony, homeless on the earth, was every day prepared to be sent to any part of the world. No wonder that this remarkable congregation felt itself standing above all national, ecclesiastical or other distinctions, that it lost sight of the real relations of this life, and that in its midst a mystical and sentimental form of religion thought grew up. This was proved by the hymn-books, which were published in the years 1741-49, and which were later joined to the Moravians themselves. In 1756, a new Count of Bähringen, who was jealous of Zinzendorf, commanded the inhabitants of Herrnhaag to remove them by signing an edict; but they, all without exception, refused, preferring to leave Herrnhaag, and settled partly in New York (Silesia, founded 1742, partly in Pennsylvania, Herrnhaag thus deserted, fell to ruins, which stand to this day. In 1747, Zinzendorf was allowed to return to Saxony, and spent the last years of his life (1756-66) at Herrnhaag, where he died May 9, 1760. With his death the original period of the Moravian history, regarding their hymn-books ends, the next 40 years (1760-1800) being devoted to the constitutional and financial affairs of the Brethren's Church.

ii. Moravian Hymn-books.

(1) Zinzendorf's Collections of Hymns. The following books are sometimes but falsely taken for the first Moravian books. They have no further connection with Herrnhaag than that Zinzendorf edited them, and that most of the hymns in the Moravian H. Bk., 1735, are taken from them. (See i. § 3.)

1. Sammlung geistlicher und lieblicher Lieder (collection of hymns and spiritual songs) dedicated to his grandson, Catharina Catherine von Gersdorf. The dedication is dated: Dresden, May 26, 1735. It contains 469 hymns (26 by Zinzendorf). 2nd ed., unaltered, besides an "Anhang" (No. 896-1078), and a "Zugabe" (addition), No. 1079-1149 (17 hymns by Zinzendorf). 2. Einflüsse aber auch Wahrheiten... aus verschiedenen geistlichen und lieblichen Liedern denen Einflüssen und Kindern vergessen der Revolutionszeit von Zinzendorf (i.e. Simple but precious truths collected from various hymns and spiritual songs produced for simple folk, and children by Count von Zinzendorf) 1727, dedicated to B. W. Marpurer, 2 parts, 278 and 265 short hymns in alphabetical order, an extract from the preceding for the children, 2nd ed. 1726. Later hymn-books for the Moravian children, 1741, 1747 (London); 1789 (Barby).

3. Apostolisch-catholische Sing- und Bet-Büchlein nebst einem Anhange (a small Christian Catholic Prayer Book with an Appendix), 1727. Contains 79 hymns from the Betlreit Selbstdien, of J. Scheffler (q.v.). The "Anhange" contains 147 hymns, an extract from No. 1 for the Roman Catholics.

4. Sammlung geistlicher und lieblicher Lieder (collection of hymns and spiritual songs) published at Girlnitz.

The dedication to the Princess of Denmark Charlotte Amalie is dated Aug. 27, 1731. Contains 1462 hymns, and an "Anhange," No. 1463-1466. 1709.
2166 hymns, divided as follows:—(1) Anthems out of the Bible. (2) Scripture verses or stanzas for the primitive church. (4) Hymns of the ancient Brethren. (5) Hymns after the Reformation. (6) Hymns for all purposes.

1. Anhang zum Gebrauch der Evangelischen Brüdergemeine von 1732 zum drittenmal abgeändert und durch dessen Verfasser 1743. A Christian hymn-book of the Evangelical Brethren's congregations of 1732, edited for the third time and newly revised throughout. The hymns 164–170 are omitted; No. 171 follows on No. 163. In the preface stands: "The whole rubric on the "ansuing" is intentionally omitted, because some hymns in that rubric did not exactly express the meaning of the Holy Scripture, others contained some documents which we could never defend." All other deviations from 2. No. 1 consist only in single words and expressions.

2. Anhang zum Gebrauch der Evangelischen Brüdergemeine von 1732 zum drittenmal abgeändert und durch dessen Verfasser 1743. A Christian hymn-book of the Evangelical Brethren's congregations of 1732, edited for the third time and newly revised throughout. The hymns 164–170 are omitted; No. 171 follows on No. 163. In the preface stands: "The whole rubric on the "ansuing" is intentionally omitted, because some hymns in that rubric did not exactly express the meaning of the Holy Scripture, others contained some documents which we could never defend." All other deviations from 2. No. 1 consist only in single words and expressions.

The editions are—

7. The same, revised and enlarged; Manchester, 1801, with 1000 hymns. 3rd ed., London, 1749, 126 hymns and several "single verses out of several German hymns." The same, 2nd ed., London, 1749, 126 hymns and additions, No. 127–161.

8. The same, revised and enlarged; Manchester, 1801, with 1000 hymns. 3rd ed., London, 1749, 126 hymns and several "single verses out of several German hymns." The same, 2nd ed., London, 1749, 126 hymns and additions, No. 127–161.

9. New edition with supplement incorporated and revised; Ashton-under-Lyne, 1826, 1300 hymns. In the reprints of this edition it was amended.

11. New and revised issue of the 1826, edited by James Montgomery and others; London, 1849, 1266 (1341) hymns. Many of the Brethren's hymns were in this edition replaced by standard English non-Moravian hymns.

12. Appendix to the hymn-book; London, 1846, with 82 mostly modern English non-Moravian hymns. The same, revised and enlarged; Manchester, 1867, with 82 mostly modern English non-Moravian hymns.
(4) Moravian Languages.

1. Bohemian. Three Hymn-books in other European languages, 1745.

3. Dutch. Two Hymn-books, one from 1740, and the other from 1747.

4. Estonian. Two Hymn-books, each from 1744.

(5) Moravian Hymn-books for Missions among the Heathen.

Brusafligel, Adam von, b. Aug. 23, 1732, at Riga, d. 1772, at Herrnhut.

Büttner, Gottlob, 1740 missionary among the North American Indians. d. 1745.

36. Schmidt, Joseph, from Sweden, Pomeraenia, c. 1740 assisted in the schools at Herrnhut.

37. Schrautenbach, Ludwig Karl, Baron von, b. 1726, d. 1765, on his estate              in Wettinavia.

43. Waterfield, Nathaniel, b. March 7, 1706, at Stolberg. 1732 the first missionary bishop in St. Thomas, W. I. 1747.

44. Waterfield, Nathaniel, from Dutch, d. 1740, at Herrnhut.

47. Zander, Johann Wilhelm, b. 1716. 1745-1761 Moravian missionary in Suriname. 1748, d. 1790, at Herrnhut.

More, Henry, d.d. was b. at Grantham in 1614, and educated at Eton and Christ's College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1635, and became a Fellow of his College in 1639. He declined various offers of high preferment. He spent his time mainly in the study of philosophy and as a private tutor. He d. in 1687. In 1640 he pub. his Psychopia, or the First Part of the Song of the Soul, containing a Christiano-Platonic display of Life. In 1647 this was re-pub. with additions as Philosophical Poems. His poems, collected and edited by Dr. Gifford, are included in the Chertsey Works Library. His "Philosopher's Devotion," beginning "Sing aloud! His praise raise," is given in Macdonald's England's Antiphon. His Memoirs were pub. in 1710. His Divine Dialogues with Divine Hymns added thereto were pub. in 1668. From a hymn in this work, beginning "When Christ His body up had borne," J. Wesley took 10 st. and moulded them into two hymns, which he included in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, as "Father, if justly still we claim." (The Holy Spirit desired), No. 444; and "On all the earth Thy Spirit shower." No. 445. These hymns are in C. U. in G. Britain and America. [W. T. B.]

Morell, Thomas, was b. in 1781, and educated at Homerton College for the Congregational ministry. About 1800 he became a Pastor at a Congregational church in St. Neots, Huntingdonshire, where he remained till 1821, when he was appointed divinity tutor at Wymondley Academy (subsequently removed to London, and known in later years as the Coward Academy). He retained this appointment till his death in 1840. His Studies of History were pub. in a series of volumes; and his Christian Pastor (a poem in three books) in 1809. His hymns are not widely known. The best are:—
1. Father of Mercies, condoescend. Departure of a Missionary.
2. Go, and the Saviour's grace proclaim. Departure of a Missionary.

These hymns were given in the Evangelical Magazine, Dec., 1818, p. 544, as "Hymns composed for a Missionary Ordination Service. Sung at the Rev. Mr. Morell's Chapel, St. Neots, Oct. 28, 1818, at the ordination of Mr. C. Mault, Missionary to India." Both hymns are signed "T.M." They were included in Condor's Cong. H. Bk., 1836, and from thence have passed into other collections. [J. J.]

Morison, John, D.D., was b. in Aberdeen in 1749. He studied at the University of Aberdeen (King's College), where he graduated M.A. in 1771. In 1780 he became parish minister of Canisbay, Caithness. He received the degree of D.D. from the University of Edinburgh in 1792. He d. at Canisbay, June 12, 1798. He was one of the members added on May 26, 1781, to the Committee appointed by the General Assembly of 1775 to revise the Translations and Paraphrases of 1745. To him are ascribed Nos. 19, 21, 29, 30 and 35, in the 1781 collection, and he is said to have been joint author with John Logan of Nos. 27 and 28. [See Scottish Translations and Paraphrases.] [J. M.]

Morn hath brightened slowly. T. Davis. [Sunday. Autumn.] The author has published this hymn in two forms. The first form is a hymn for Sunday, and was given in his Hymn Old and New, 1864, No. 6, in G of 1., and the second, for Autumn, in his Aeneas Sancius, 1877, p. 221. The only difference in these two forms of the hymn is in st. i., 1-4:— For Sunday: "Calm, and sweet, and holy, be our Sabbath day." For Autumn: "Calm and sweet and holy, be our Autumn day." The first form only is in C. U. [J. J.]

Morning breaks upon the tomb. W. B. Colyer. [Easter.] 1st pub. in his Hymnz partly Collected and partly Original, 1812, No. 960, in 4 of 4., entitled "Jesus rising—An Easter Hymn," and signed "W. B. C." Its modern use is mainly confined to America. [J. J.]

Morris, Alfred John, was b. at Hampstead, London, March 6, 1814. Educated privately at Cheltenham. Ministered to Congregational Churches at Warrington (1833 to 1839), Manchester (1839 to 1842), Holloway (1842 to 1862), and Bowdon, Cheshire (1862). He d. Nov. 15, 1868. His principal works were: Hymns of Jesus, Christian and Business, Words for the Heart and Life, The Shepherd and his Lambs, and a posthumous volume of sermons, The Open Secret. He was an extensive contributor to the Congregational periodicals. He wrote a large number of hymns for friends which appeared in various magazines. One hymn by which he will be remembered is "Blest Saviour, let me be a child." (A Child's Prayer), which was appended to one of the discourses in The Shepherd and his Lambs, 1868. This is a hymn of great distinctiveness both of thought and expression, and has been included in many hymnals, especially those for children. [W. G. H.]

Morris, Eliza Fanny, née Goffe, was b. in London in 1821, and married in 1849 to Josiah Morris. She gained the prize for a poem on Kindness to Animals offered by the Band of Hope. Her pub. works are: The Voice and the Reply, Worcester, 1858, and Life Lyrics. She also edited a Bible Class Hymn Book, and contributed the words to School Harmonies, pub. by her husband. Her hymns in C. U. include:—

1. Come unto me and rest. Christ's Invitation. From The Voice and the Reply, 1858, into the 1874 Hymn. to the New Song, in an altered form.
2. God of pity, God of grace. Lent. This hymn in Latin form appeared in Pt. II. of The Voice and the Reply, 1856, entitled "The Prayer in the Temple." From Miller's Singers and Songs of the Church, 1869, we gather that this hymn was written on the 4th of Sept., 1857. It is in extensive use.

Morris, George Perkins, was b. in Philadelphia, Oct. 10, 1802. In early life he removed to New York, where, in 1822, he became the editor of the New York Mirror magazine. On that magazine, together with the Home Journal, he was associated with N. P. Willis. His works include: The Deserted Bride, and Other Poems, 1843; Poems, 1853; American Melodies; and some prose pieces. He is best known as a writer of songs, one of which, "Woodman, spare that tree," is very popular. His hymns, "Man dieth and wasteth Concerning the authorship of one of these original hymns much uncertainty has existed.

The hymn is:

1. Where earth, nor half my soul can move (Jesus All's). In 5 st. of 4 lines with refrain. Mr. Mote's explanation, communicated to the Gospel Herald, is—

"One morning it came into my mind as I went to labour to write a hymn on the 'Gracious Experience of a Christian.' As I went up Holborn I had this chorus, 'On Christ the solid Rock I stand. All other ground is sinking sand.'

In the day of the Lord and King..." etc.

In the first verses complete, and wrote them to Mr. Kinnaird on the Sabbath following I met brother Kinnaird at St. Martin's Lane Street Meeting Place, and informed me that my wife was very ill, and asked me to come to see her. I had an early tea, and called after dinner I went to see my wife. He said that it was his usual custom to sing a hymn, read a portion, and engage in prayer, before he went to meeting. He asked for my hymn-book but could not find it anywhere. I said, 'I have some verses in my pocket; if you liked, I would sing them.' We did, and his wife enjoyed them so much, that after service he asked me to leave a copy of them. On the 23d, I went home, and by the fireside composed the last two verses, wrote the whole off, and took them to the Rev. Mr. Mote, then of Little Bedingfield Street. As these verses met the dying woman's case, my attention to them was the more arrested, and I had them printed and distributed. I sent one to the Rev. Mr. Mote, who inserted it into the 'Spiritual Magazine,' without my initials, which appeared some time after this. Brother Rea, of Cow Street, brought out a new edition of hymns [1834], and this hymn was introduced in it. David Denham introduced it [1837] with Rea's name, and others after... Your inserting this brief outline may influence much in the future to me from the charge of stealth, and be a vindication of truth fulness in my connection with the Church of God.

The form in which the hymn is usually found is:

2. My hope is built on nothing less (st. 11). Sometimes the refrains, that others in 5 st., and usually without the refrain. The original in the author's 'Days, Kain of a Sinners Hope,' 1834, and its extensive use. [W. R. S.]

Motte, de la [Pouquet, P. E. G.]

Moultrie, Gerard, M.A., 5. of the Rev. John Moultrie, was b. at Rugby Rectory, Sept. 16, 1870, and educated at Exeter College, Oxford (B.A. 1851, M.A. 1856). Taking Holy Orders, he became Third Master and Chaplain in Shrewsbury School, Chaplain to the Dowager Marchioness of Londonderry, 1855-59; curate of Brightwaltham, 1859; and of Brinfield, Berks, 1860; Chaplain of the Donative of Barrow Gurney, Bristol, 1864; Vicar of Southleigh, and Rector of St. James's College, Southleigh, 1875. He d. April 25, 1885. His publications include:

Mr. Moultrie's hymns include trs. from the Greek, Latin, and German, in addition to original compositions. A large number appeared in the Church Times, and other papers: and many were written for special Saints' Days, and Other Festivals, for the People's Hymnal, 1867, in which some were signed 'D. P.' (i.e. Desiderius Pastor). In addition to those annotated elsewhere in this work (see Index) the following are in C. U.:—
Moutrie, John, M.A., father of Gerard and Mary D. Moutrie, was b. Dec. 31, 1799, at London, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1822), where he was Boll's University Scholar, 1820, and Trinity College Scholar, 1822. Taking Holy Orders in 1825, he was presented the same year by the Earl of Craven to the Rectory of Rugby, where he remained till his death, on Dec. 26, 1874.

His publications included:

(1) My Brother's Grave, and other Poems, 1837; (2) Dream of Life, Lay's of the English Church, &c., 1842; (3) Memoirs and Poetical Remains of Rev. Mr. Walker, 1852; (4) Sermons, 1852; (5) Almara, Heart's, and Graces, 1854; (6) Psalms and Hymns as sung in the Parish Church, Rugby, 1851.

In his Preface Mr. Moutrie says of the Ps. & Hymns, 1851:

"The present collection of Psalms & Hymns is founded on the basis of that which has been in use during the last twelve years in the Parish Church of Rugby, and for which the congregation of that Church are indebted to the kindness and taste of the Rev. H. J. Bickerstott."

Further on in the same Preface he says:

"More than twenty original compositions—some altered or abridged from my former publications, others written expressly for the present collection, and (I am sorry to add) on the spur of the moment—have thus been introduced into company with which they have perhaps but slender claim to associate. Several of these are little more than paraphrases of the Epistles or Gospel for the day."

These hymns, most of which are in Kennedy, 1863, include the following:

1. Blest are the eyes of those. Gospel, 23 S. after Trinity. (The Good Samaritan.)
2. Bring the infant to the font. Holy Baptism.
4. Dear Lord, a lonely life was Thine. Gospel, 4 S. after Epiphany. (Still of the Sheep.)
5. Friends and parents linger weeping. Gospel, 21 S. after Trinity. (Shall his Father's joy be greater.)
6. God, who dost the increase grant. New Year's. (The Sower.)
8. In the beaming brow of Moses. Epistle, 13 S. after Trinity.
9. Lord, with praised and grateful spirits. Epistle, 1 S. after Trinity. (Perfect Love.)
10. Meek to suffer, strong to save. St. Mark.
12. No act of sin our Saviour wrought. Collect, 3 S. after Easter. (Christ the Example.)
13. O Lord, a wondrous story. For Sunday Schools.
15. Source of wisdom, past and present. For Sunday Schools.
17. Thou gavest, Lord, the life we live. Holy Communion.
18. When our hearts with grief are sore. Epistle. Ash Wednesday.
These hymns, from the special subjects of which they treat, are of greater interest to hymnal compilers, and are worthy of attention. Nos. 4, 6, 7, 12, 16, 18, 19, are from his Lays of the English Church, 1813; the rest were written expressly for the Pr. & Hymns, 1851 (8th. ed.). [J. J.]

Moutrie, Mary Dunlop, dau. of John and Mary Moutrie, was b. at the Recottery, Rugby, July, 1837, and d. there, June 15, 1841. These hymns were included in her brother's Hymns and Lyrics, 1857, with her initials "M. D. M." [J. J.]

Μούτρη μονα διά θρήνος περιστετο. [Πός δέ άγγελος περιστετα.]

Möewe, Heinrich, was b. Feb. 25, 1798, at Magdeburg. After passing through the Academy at Magdeburg, he entered the University of Königsberg in 1812, and in 1814 volunteered for service against Napoleon and fought in a Westphalian Jager Battalion at the battle of Ligny and Waterloo and before Paris, gaining the Iron Cross for his bravery. Thereafter he resumed his studies (now at the University of Halle), and was then for a year assistant master in the Cathedral School at Magdeburg. In 1818 he was appointed pastor at Angerm und Wenddorf; and in 1822 Altenhagen, all near Magdeburg. On account of a weak chest, and bleeding from the lungs, in January, 1822, he was compelled to cease preaching for a time, and finally had to resign his charge in June, 1823, retiring to Magdeburg. Failing to obtain suitable work, he returned, in July, 1824, to Altenhausen, where he remained ever after. In January, 1824, he had so far recovered that he began to try to obtain preferment; and in the beginning of October was offered the appointment of Pastor at Woerlingen, near Neuenhausen. But meantime, in April, his illness had returned with redoubled violence and, after great suffering, he died Oct. 11, 1834 (Koehl, vii. 247; Allen Deutsche Biog. xxii.; biographical sketch prefixed to his Gedichte, 1836, &c.).

After the spiritual change which Möewe experienced in his first pastorate he became a most earnest and devoted pastor and preacher, and greatly interested himself in the work of Foreign Missions. He bore his long continued sufferings with great fortitude and patience. His hymns, not numbering more than ten, and all written after the beginning of his illness, bear the stamp of heroic Christian faith, childlike submission, and deep affection for the Almighty Hand that loves even when it wounds. They are great favourites in Germany with the sick and sorrowing; but are too subjective, and too unfashioned in style to be employed otherwise than for private use. Only one or two have passed into German hymn-books. They appeared, along with his other poems, and with a prefatory memoir by Friedrich Bredt of Berlin, as his Gedichte, at Magdeburg, 1836.

Nine of Möewe's hymns have passed into English, viz.:

1. Der Rimmel hängt voll Weinen schwer. [Cross and Coronation.] Written Oct. 9, 1831, at Magdeburg under sufferings during which he supposed to have come; and when his daughter Mary appeared also in peril of death. In a letter to a friend he says:

"My soul strove with all her might to soar away from the tortured body, and sent the clouds with her prayers, to obtain by entreaty the order for departure from the Heavenly Master... But, while my body would suffer, she sang what I send to you."

(*Life prefixed to his Gedichte, 1836, pp. 81-84).
In 1827 Mrs. Bethia Fuller-Maitland compiled and published Hymns for Private Devotion, Selected and Original (London, Harding), In this work an enlarged form of "Much in sorrow, oft in we," made by her daughter Frances Ann Fuller-Maitland, then but 14 years of age, was given as No. 106. White's i., ii., iii., iv., 1, 2, were given as above, and the following lines were added thereto:—

"Will ye flee in danger's hour?
Does not your Baptist's power?

4. Let your drooping hearts be glad;
March in heavenly armour clad:
Fight, nor think the battle long,
Then soon shall tune your song.

5. Let not sorrow dim your eye,
Soon shall every tear be dry;
Let not fear your course impede,
Strengthen'd with the bread of life.

6. Onward then to battle move,
More than conquerors ye shall prove:
Though opposed by many a foe,
Christian soldiers, onward go.

This text was republished by Mrs. Colquhoun, nee Fuller-Maitland, in her Hymns and Chimes (Lond., Macmillan), 1876. We may add that of the "original" compositions in the 1827 Hgs. for Private Devotion, &c., one was by Miss F. S. Fuller-Maitland, and two others were by her sister Esther.

In his Christian Psalmody, 1833, No. 125, E. Bickersteth gave the White-Fuller-Maitland text in 4 st., with several alterations, the most important being in st. i., which read:—

"oft in sorrow, oft in woe,
Onward, Christians, onward go;
Fight the fight, maintain the strife,
Strengthen'd with the bread of life."

Another version of the same text was given in Hall's Mitre H. Bk., 1836, the opening lines of which are:—

"oft in danger, oft in woe,
Onward, Christians, onward go."

From these four sources H. K. White, 1806; W. B. Collyer, 1812; F. S. Fuller-Maitland, 1827; E. Bickersteth, 1831; and W. J. Hall, 1833, the most widely used form of this hymn has been manipulated. In translating the hymn varying texts have been used. Those in Latin are (1) "Iste sepe pectorolam," by Bingham, in his Hymn. Christ. Lat., 1871, is from the S.P.C.K.'s & Hgs., No. 273; and (2) "Vos dolores tolerantes," by Maegill in his Songs of the Christian Creed and Life, is from the Kirk: White Fuller-Maitland version. [J. Mudie, Charles Edward, the founder of the well-known library which bears his name, was b. at Cheyne Walk, Chelsea, Oct. 18, 1818. In 1822 he collected his poems and pub. them as Stray Leaves (2nd ed., 1873). Several poems on Scriptural subjects, and a few hymns are included in the volume. The hymn by which he is best known is "I lift my heart to Thee, Saviour divine" (Hs and Mine). It is from the Stray Leaves, and is in several hymn-books, including the Scottish Eeanc. Union Hymn., 1878; Horder's Cong. Hgs., 1884, and many others. It is marked by great beauty and tenderness of expression. Several of Mr. Mudie's hymns, which are not in C. U. are worthy of attention. [W. G. H.]

Mühlenberg, William Augustus, d. of the Rev. Dr. Mühlenberg, and grandson of Henry Melchior Mühlenberg, the patriarch of Lutheranism in America, was b. in Philadelphia Sept. 16, 1796. He graduated at the University of Pennsylvania in 1814. Entering Holy Orders in 1817, he was successively Assistant Rector of St. James's Lancaster, 1823; Rector of the Church of the Holy Communion New York, 1843; St. Paul's College, Flushing (1828); St. Luke's Hospital, New York (1835); St. John's and Long Island (1855), were established by him. He d. April 6, 1877. His poetical gift was genuine, but not largely used. In 1826 he contributed 4 hymns to the Prayer Book Coll. (of which he was one of the Committee). His Poems appeared in 1839. He had previously pub. Church Poetry, 1823; and The People's Psalter, 1838. I would not live alway followed in 1859 (revised in 1871). This last contains 26 pieces, the hymns in the Prayer Book Coll., 1826, with the exception of "I would not live alway," being omitted. The following are his principal lyrics:

"Maid for the boys of St. Paul's College—the Chorus adapted from one of the Rev. [Bp. A. C. Coxe's Christian Ballade”—in 1840.

3. I would not live alway. Eternal rest desired. Four texts of this poem are extant: 1st the Original; 2nd the version given in the Prayer Bk. Coll., 1826; 3rd the author's revised version of 1859; and 4th his rewritten version of 1871, the second of these being that known to the hymn-books. The history of the poem is somewhat complicated. We quote it here as given by us in the History of the American Episcopal Church, 1885, p. 637, as we have nothing further to add thereto:

"The most famous of these (Dr. Mühlenberg's hymne) was probably first written: 'I will not live alway' has an intricate history, which was not simplified by the author's lapse of memory in his later years. In his brief story of the hymn, printed with his 'evangelized' text in 1871, every date is wrong both as to years and to the circumstances. The legend that it was written on an occasion of private grief is a fancy, hardly agree with the clear and minute recollections of scenes and the highest character, still living, and who knew the circumstances thoroughly. The date of composition assigned, 1824, is probably (not certainly) correct; it was written at Lancaster, in a lady's album, and began—

"I would not live alway: no, no, holy man, Not at a day, not an hour, shou'd lengthen any span."

In this shape it seems to have had six eighth-leaf stanzas. The album was still extant in 1875, at Petersburg, Pa., and professed to contain the original manuscript. Said the owner's sister, 'it was an impromptu. He had no copy, and, wanting it for some occasion, he wrote for the occasion.' In 1826 he entered the poem to a Friend. 'Jim,' he called on him on the way from Harrisburg to Phila- delphia, to carry to the Episcopal Recorder, and in that paper it appeared June 3, 1826 (not June 2, as given). For these facts we have the detailed statement of Dr. John B. Clemson, of Claymont, Del., the Bishop mentioned, who also chances to have preserved that volume of the paper. Thus appearing (without name) it was accepted by the sub-committee (of the Prayer Bk. Coll., 1826). When their report was presented to the entire committee in 1826—not 1829, as Dr. Mühlenberg has it—the original of the hymn was passed upon. When this came up one of the members remarked that it was very sweet and pretty, but rather sentimental, upon which it was unani mously thrown out. Not suspected as the author, I voted against myself. That, I supposed, was the end of it. The committee, which sat until late at night at the house of Bishop White, agreed upon their report to the Convention, and adjourned. But the next morning Dr. Underdown (who was not one of their number, but who, on invitation, had acted with the sub-committee, which
4. Jesus' Names shall ever be. The Holy Name, Jesus. This is entitled "The Blessed Name of Jesus. An Evangelical Rosary." It was written in 1842, and revised for Schaff's Christ in Song in Aug., 1868.

7. Saviour, Who Thy flock art feeding. Holy Baptism. This is the most widely known of Dr. Mühlenberg's hymns. It was contributed to the Frayer Bk. Coll., 1826, No. 86, in 4 st. of 4 l. It is sometimes given as "Jesus, Who Thy flock art feeding."

8. Shout the glad tidings, exultingly sing. Christmas. Contributed to the Frayer Bk. Coll., 1826, No. 49, in 3 st. of 4 l., with the chorus:

"Shout the glad tidings, exultingly sing. " Jerusalem triumphs, Messiah is King;"

the opening lines, followed by the first stanza, and a repetition of the chorus, and so on to the end.

Sometimes the hymn opens with st. i.: "Zion, the marvellous story be telling," or as "Sion the marvellous story be telling," instead of the chorus. Dr. Mühlenberg says that the hymn was written—

"at the particular request of Bishop Hobart, who wanted something that would go to the tune of Ave, Maria, popular, to the words of Moses, "Sound the loud timbrel," &c. He liked the verses I made—so well that he had them struck off before the hymn [Frayer Bk. Coll.] were published, and sung in Trinity Church on Christmas day."

10. The dewy eve is gliding. Evening. Dated 1825 (?) and pub. in his Poems, 1859.

11. The throe of his glory—as snow it is white. Adoret. Dated 1839, and pub. in his Poems, 1859.

12. Thine handmaid, Saviour, can it be! Admission of a Nursing Sister. Written on the words, "Come, follow me," for the reception of a Sister at St. Luke's Hospital, New York, 1859.

for some time Saturday preacher at St. Thomas's Church in Leipzig. In 1859 he was appointed dean of the St. Wenzel Church in Naumburg, and in 1861 pastor at Lancia on the Unstrut. In the end of 1904 he became archiconocent of the St. Nicholas Church at Leipzig, and, in 1670, was also appointed Professor of Theology in the University, and b.d. in 1612. He d., of cythras, at Leipzig, Nov. 14, 1613. (Allg. Deutsche Bibl. xxiii. 485; Goedeke's Grund- riss, vol. iii., 1887, p. 151, &c.)

Mühlmann was a staunch upholder of Lutheran orthodoxy, alike against Romanists and Calvinists. He was a great lover of the Psalms; his published sermons, as well as his hymns, are based on them, and all his last words were Ps. 112, 3, "Thy lovingkindness is better than life." Wackernagel v. p. 443-447, gives five hymns under his name, all of which are found in the Gesammt Psalmen, &c. pub. at Nürnberg in 1618, by J. Laufer. [The only known copy, in the Royal Library, Berlin, has lost its titel-page.]

Two of Mühlmann's hymns have passed into English, viz.:

1. Dank sei Gott in der Höhe. Morning. The most popular of his hymns. Appeared 1618 as above, with his initials, and thence in Wackernagel v. p. 444, in 7 st. of 8 l. Also in the Urv. L. S., 1851, No. 443. Tr. as:

While yet the morn is breaking. A good tr. of st. i., ii., vii. by Miss Winkworth, as No. 163 in her C. B. for England, 1863. Repeated in full in the Ohio Luth. Hymnal, 1889, and abridged in the Marlborough College H. Bk., 1889.

Another tr. "Christ is the vine, we branches are" (st. v.). By J. Swartwout, as No. 436, in the Moravian H. Bk., 1759 (1849, No. 612).

2. O Lebens-Brunnen tief und gross. Ps. 119. Appeared 1618 as above, with his initials, in 9 st. of 9 l., entitled "a hymn from the 65th Psalm." Thence in Wackernagel v. p. 446; also in the Urv. L. S., 1851, No. 426. It is really a hymn on Christ as the Fountain of Life here and in Eternity, and with Ps. 119. 10 as its motto. Tr. as:

O spring of Life, so deep, so great. A good tr. of st. i., ii., vi., ix. by A. T. Russell, as No. 186 in his Ps. & Hymns, 1851.

For the hymn "Wer Gott vertraut," sometimes ascribed to Mühlmann, see Magdeburg. J. [F. M. B.] Mühlmann, Johannes, s. of Hieronymus Mühlmann, or Mühlman, pastor at Pegau, near Leipzig, was b. at Pegau, July 28, 1753. He studied at the Universities of Leipzig (M.A., January, 1597) and Jena, and was then

MÜLLER, HEINRICH 775
This is however an oversight, as it is found in the Ros-true G. B., 1531, where it is entitled "A New hymn on the Word of God and His bitter sufferings," and begins "Help God me much gelling." It is in 13 st. of 71.

The initial antiphon in the stanzas giving the name Heinrich Müller, and the two concluding lines being "Hat Heinrich Müller gewunge / In dem Gefangniss sein."

From this clause note it is clear that the hymn was written by a Heinrich Müller during an imprisonment, and was in print at least as early as 1531. The ascription to Heinrich Müller, professor at Wittenberg, is therefore impossible, seeing he was only b. in 1530. The ascription to Heinrich von Zitzen (b. at Zitzen in Goeckel-and, c. 1486, became an Augustinian monk, and d. in 1513 prior of the Augustinian monastery at Dorndorf; began to preach as a Reformer in Bremen, Nov. 9, 1523; murdered at Heide near Melsdorf, Hirofingen, Dec. 16, 1524) is also untenable, for neither by himself nor by his contemporaries he was ever styled Heinrich Müller, and there was during his life no period of imprisonment during which he might have written this hymn. The history of the Nürnberg Müller noted above is not indeed very clear, but his claim has at least much more appearance of truth than that of any other.

The hymn was a great favourite during the Reformation period, was included by Luther in V. Bätz's u. K., 1547, and passed into many later books. It is a ballad rather than a hymn properly so called, and has now fallen out of use in Germany. The only tr. is: "Help, God, the formar of all thing." In the Ode and Goodwill Bullates, ed. 1856, f. 23 (1858, p. 37).

See also note under Gesammt., J., p. 418, ii. [J. M.]

Müller, Ludwig Ernst Siegmund, was b. Nov. 29, 1766, at Stroppen, in the Principality of Oels, and in 1786 became dean of the Frauenkirche at Liegnitz. He was canon in 1801, appointed archdeacon of the Church of SS. Peter and Paul, at Liegnitz, in 1814 pastor primarius, and in 1818 superintendent. He d. at Liegnitz, Nov. 7, 1830 (ms. from H. Ziegler, pastor primarius of SS. Peter and Paul, Liegnitz, &c.). His hymn "Traurum und mit bangem Sehen" is noted under Neunherts, J. [J. M.]

Müller, Michael, s. of Zacharias Müller, brewer at Blankenburg, in the Saxon Harz, was b. at Blankenburg, January 12, 1763, studied theology at Halle under Francke and Breithaupt, and received license as a Candidate of Theology (general preacher). Just after completing his university course, in 1797, he was seized with violent hemorrhage. He so far recovered as to be able to accept the position of house tutor in the family of Gaisberg (Geysberg) at Schauenberg, near Klein-Bottwar in Württemberg, but after a time his illness returned and he d. there March 13, 1804 (Koch iv. 105; Blätter für Hymnologie, 1856, p. 140; ms. from General Superintendent G. Schinnenmark, Blankenburg, &c.).

Müller's principal work is his excellent version of the Psalter (be Psalmen Davids, Arn, Stuttgart, Paul Treuher, 1740), noted under Psalter, German, § 3. To this the Psalter of this work in the Royal Library at Berlin there is appended (without separate title-page or date, but by the same printer) his Auffwunndender Neun-Jahrs-Zuruf an die Braut, &c. This contains a hymn which is appended in the Foestische Empfindungen, dated 1766, but without name of publisher (Wernigerodeische Library). This last work contains 61 hymns on the Gospel for Sundays and Festivals, followed by hymns 62-81, on miscellaneous subjects. The first lines of all these hymns are given in the Blätter as above. Many of Müller's psalm versions came deservedly into favour in Germany, but of his hymns few are found except in the hymn-books of the Separatists from 1710 to 1750. In Freylinghausen's u. K., 1704 and 1714, there are 21 of Müller's hymns, and 3 of his hymns.

Those of Müller's hymns which have passed into English are—

MUNDI RENOVATIO

1st pub. as No. 4 in his Zurfug as above, in 34 st. of 4 l. entitled "The way to Life. On the Gospel for the Three Holy Kings Day, Luke ii."

In Freylinghausen's G. B., 1704, No. 682, st. viii., xxvi. were omitted, and the same form is No. 205 in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. The tr. in C. U. i.—

Up, up, new light upon thee breaks. A free tr. of st. i. iv., xvii., xxii., xxi., xxxii., xxxv., by Dr. Kennedy, in his Hymn, Christ., 1863.

Brotherly love. The original form of this hymn is a version of Ps. cxxviii. by Müller, in his Psalmen Davids, 1700, p. 244, in 4 st. of 4 l. In Freylinghausen's G. B., 1704, No. 390, these are i.-iv., while st. v.-xiv., (on the subject of brotherly love) are added from the ms. of J. C. Noshing (q.v.). This text, in 14 st., is No. 1045 in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. The form tr. into English is that in Bunsen's Versuch, 1853, No. 534, being st. i., iv., viii., x., of the above text and the following three st.:

1. Sonne der Gerechtigkeit,
Gehe auf zu unserer Zeit,
Brich in dein Kirche in der Leere.
Dass die Welt es sehen kann.

2. Jesu, Haupt der Kreuzung,
Mach uns alle, gross und klein,
Durch dein Evangelium
Ganz zu deinem Eigenthum.

3. Lasst die ganze Bruderschaft,
Lieben, loben innendurch,
In dir ruhen allezeit,
Immer und in Ewigkeit.

These three st. are from the Brüder G. B., 1778, No. 711, and are by Christian David (see Herran, Hymnology, § iii. 9). The first and third had previously appeared in the Kleine Brüder G. B., London, 1754, pt. ii., Hk. ii., on the church of God, section 7. The only tr. in C. U. is—

Good and pleasant 'tis to see. A good tr. from Bunsen, by Miss Cox, in her Sacred Hymns, from the German, 1841, p. 143, repeated in Bridgewater Ps. i Hy, 1844, and Year of Praise, 1867, and in the Rev. F. Pott's Coll., 1861.

Other tr. are, both from Bunsen's text—(1) "Behold how sweet it is to see," by Lady E. Fawcett, 1843, p. 64. (2) "Lo! how sweet it is to see," by W. A. Arnot, in the Family Treasury, 1872, p. 264.

Mühlmann, J. [Mühlmann, J.]

Mundi renovatio. Adam of St. Victor. (Easter.) A beautiful poem on the coincidence of the Easter of Nature and the Easter of the Church; and on the joys of returning Spring. L. Gauthier, in his Oeuvres poétiques d'Adam de Saint Victor, 1881, p. 348, gives it from a Gradual of St. Victor before 1230 (Bibl. Nat. Paris, No. 14,452); a Missal of St. Genevieve also apparently before 1229; a 13th cent. Paris Gradual (B. N. Paris, No. 15,615), &c. It is in two early 14th cent. French Missals in the British Museum, apparently the Paris use (Add. 16,903, f. 154; Harl. 2931, f. 343 b). The printed text will be found in Daniel, ii, p. 68; Morel, No. 70; Trench, ed. 1864, p. 153; Kehr, No. 90; Maugill, 1876-9; and Wrenshall, 1881. The use of St. Victor and of Paris was on Sunday in Easter Week, that of St. Genevieve on the Friday. Tr. as—
MUNDI SALUS AFFUTURA

Le! the world from slumber risen. By Mrs. Harriet M. Chester, in the Hymnary, 1872, under the signature of "H. M. C."

Other trs. are:
1. The renewal of the world. Mrs. Charles, 1858.

MUNDI SALUS AFFUTURA. [Visitation of the B. V. M.] This is the hymn at Matins in the Office of the Visitations of the B. V. M. in the Sarum and Aberdeen Breviaries. The Office was sanctioned by Convocation in 1490, was printed by Camden the same year, and was incorporated in the Sarum Breviary, Venice, 1495, pars Estis. pt. ii., where this hymn is given at f. 136 b. The text of the hymn is also in Carl. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:

1. What the just by faith believed. By W. J. Blew, in his Church H. and Tune Bk., 1852-55. This tr. begins with st. iv. ("Sic in mundi praemier me vocem"), and adds trs. of st. v. and of stanza iv. of "Festum patriae gloriae" (p. 376 l.).

2. Lo! the frost of earth's salvation. By J. D. Chambers, in his Lauda Sion, Pt. ii., 1865, p. 84, in 7 st. of 6 l. In the Antiphoner and Gradual, 1880, p. 126, and again in the Hymner, 1882, it is given in an altered form of 5 st. as "Portal of the world's salvation." [J. M.]

MUNDI SALUS QUI NASCERIS. C. Coffin. [Christmass.] Given in the Paris Breviary, 1736, and again in Coffin's Hymni Sacri, 1736, p. 94. It is also in J. Chandler's Hymns of the Primitive Church, 1887, No. 13, and Carl. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:

Infants born the world to free. By I. Williams, in the British Magazine, Jan., 1833 (vol. v. p. 31), and in his Hym. tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839, p. 50. In 1864 it was repeated in Skinner's Daily Service Hymns, No. 49.

Other trs. are:
2. Lord of all, Thy glory velling. R. Campbell, 1856.

MUNDUS EFFUSUS REDEMPTUS. [Holy Communion.] In the Civilianus Breviary, Paris, 1686, p. 356; this is the hymn at First Vespers for the Octave of Corpus Christi, and consists of 5 st. and a doxology. Also in the Narbonne, 1709: the Sivas, 1726; and other French breviaries. Tr. as:

Sing: O earth, for thy redemption. By E. Caswall, in his Musaeus of Mary, &c., 1858, p. 304, and his Hymn & Poems, 1873, p. 157, in 5 st. of 6 l. In the Hymny, 1872, it is given for "Ascensiontide," and in others as a general hymn. [J. M.]

MÜNTZ, BALAHAZ, s. of Lorenz Münter, merchant in Lübeck, was b. at Lübeck, March 24, 1735. He entered the University of Jena as a student of theology in 1754, graduated M.A. in 1757, and thereafter became lecturer and adjunct of the philosophical faculty. In 1760, Duke Friedrich H., of Gotha, appointed him assistant court preacher, and preacher at the Orphanage in Gotha, and then, in 1763, Superintendent at Tonna (Graefen-Tonna) near Gotha. In 1765 he became first preacher at the German Church of St. Peter in Copenhagen, receiving, in 1767, the degree of D.D. from the University. He d. at Copenhagen, Oct. 5, 1793 (Koch vi. 348; Allg. Deutsche Biog. xxiii. 33, &c.).

Münter was a very popular and influential preacher, a true pastor and teacher of practical Christianity, a successful religious instructor of children, an active friend of the poor, a man of culture and one of the most prominent figures in the literary society of Copenhagen. His hymns, 100 in number, are among the best of the period, were highly esteemed by his contemporaries, and many still survive in German hymnals printed before 1870 and still in use. They appeared in his two works: (1) Gesammt Lieder. Leipzig, 1772. (2) Zweite Sammlung Gesammt Lieder, Leipzig, 1774. (Both in Royal Library, Berlin.) In 1773, the first 50 were republished at Leipzig set to melodies composed for them by the most famous musicians of the day; and the second 50 were republished at Leipzig in 1774 set to melodies composed for them by J. C. F. Bach, of Halle.

Of Münter's hymns the following have passed into English:

1. Seht welch ein Mensch! Wie lasset mich erzählen. Christ before Pilate. 1774, No. 6, p. 15, in 9 st. of 7 l. Included in full in the Schleswig Holstein G. B., 1780; and, reduced to 5 st., in the Berlin G. B., 1829. Tr. as:

2. Zitternd, doch voll sanfter Freuden. Holy Communion, 1772, No. 19, p. 67, in 9 st. of 8 l., entitled "Communion Hymn," in the Berlin G. B., 1780, No. 126, st. ii., was omitted, and the rest considerably altered, beginning "Voller Ehrfurcht, Dank und Freuden." Tr. as:

Full of reverence at Thy Word, Lord, I near. In full from the text of 1790, as No. 271 in the Ohio Luther. Hymnals, 1880.

Hymns not in English C. U.:

2. Der letzte, meinster Tag. Prospect of Death, 1773, No. 21, p. 12, in 4 st. Tr. as: "My day without a sorrow." By J. L. Proctinghao, 1870, p. 187.

4. Vor der Macht, des Macht, der Macht. Easter, 1774, No. 44, p. 164, in 7 st. Tr. as "Who is this with glory gleaming." By Dr. H. Mills, 1845 (1856, p. 320).

MURE, SIR WILLIAM, eldest s. of Sir William Mure of Rowallan Castle, Ayrshire, was b. at Rowallan in 1594. In the Civil War he sided against the king; and in 1644, accompanying those sent under the Solemn League and Covenant to the help of the Parliament, was wounded at the battle of Marston Moor. He d. at Rowallan in 1657. In 1628 he pub. a tr. of Robert Boyd's Hevocatumbre Christiana, at Edinburgh, in a volume containing also an original poem entitled Doomsday, and three sonnets entitled Faneces Farewell. His MS. Version of the Psalms, which seems to have been begun in 1629 and completed in 1639, was recommended to the use of the committee who compiled the Scottish Psalter of 1650. A complete MS. of this ver-
My blessed Saviour, is Thy love.

J. Stennett. [Holy Communion.] Appeared in his Hymn on the Lord's Supper, 1837, No. 22, in 10 st. of 4 1., and again in his Works, 1792, vol. iv. p. 111. It is usually given in 3 stanzas (st. i.-iii.) somewhat altered, as in the Leeds H. Bk., 1853, and others. Another arrangement is, "O blessed Saviour, is Thy love."

In some collections this extends to 6 stanzas, as in Snepp's Songs of G. & G., 1872, but a shorter form is in more frequent use. [J. J.]

My Father, for another night. Sir H. W. Baker. [Morning.] Contributed to the revised ed. of H. A. & M., 1875. It is repeated in a few collections, including the Additional Hymn, added to the Leeds S. S. H. Bk., 1878. In this last case it is ascribed to "Oakes" in error. [J. J.]

My former hopes are fled. W. Cooper. [Seeking God.] Appeared in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. iii., No. 8, in 5 st. of 4 1., and headed "The Shining Light." It was passed into C. U. in G. Britain and America, its use in the latter being somewhat extensive. [J. J.]

My God, accept my heart this day. M. Bridges. [Confirmation.] 1st pub. in his Hymn, for the Use of Catholics, 1848, in 4 st. of 4 1., and entitled "Confirmation." In some collections it begins, "My God, accept my heart, I pray," in others, "O God, accept my heart, &c.," and in others, including the Unitarian Hymn [& Tune] Bk. for the Church and the Home, Boston, U. S. A., 1868, it opens with st. ii., "Before the Cross of Him Who died." In these various forms it is in extensive use in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

My God and Father! while I stray. Charlotte Elliott. [Restoration.] The uncertainties with regard to the text of this popular hymn have arisen out of the fact that four forms of the text were pub. by Miss Elliott, and each of these has been taken in turn as the original. The facts and texts are as follows:

i. The original hymn was pub. in the Appendix to the 1st ed. of the Infallible Hymn Book, 1834, No. 17, as follows:

1. My God and Father: while I stray
   Far from my home in life's rough way,
   O! teach me from my heart to say,
   Thy will be done!

2. Though dark my path, and sad my lot,
   Let me be still, and murmur not;
   Or breathe the prayer divinely taught,
   Thy will be done!

3. What though in lonely grief I sigh
   For friends beloved, no longer nigh;
   Submissive still would I reply,
   Thy will be done!

4. If thou shouldst call me to resign
   What most I prize, it ne'er was mine;
   I only yield thee what was thine;
   Thy will be done!

ii. The 2nd form of the hymn appeared in Miss Elliott's Psalter's (H. V. Elliott), Ps. and Hys., 1835, as follows:

1. My God and Father, while I stray
   Far from my home, in life's rough way,
   O! teach me from my heart to say,
   Thy will be done!

2. If but my fainting heart be blest
   With thy sweet Spirit for its guest,
   Thy God: to thee I leave the rest—
   Thy will be done!

3. Renew my will from day to day,
   Blend it with thine, and take away
   All that now makes it hard to say:
   Thy will be done!

4. When on earth I breathe no more
   The prayer oft mixed with tears before,
   I'll sing upon a happier shore,
   Thy will be done!

iii. The 3rd form of the hymn was given in Miss Elliott's Hours of Sorrow, &c., 1836, pp. 130-1, as follows:

1. My God and Father: while I stray
   Far from my home in life's rough way,
   O! teach me from my heart to say,
   Thy will be done!

2. Though dark my path, and sad my lot,
   Let me be still, and murmur not;
   Or breathe the prayer divinely taught,
   Thy will be done!

3. What though in lonely grief I sigh
   For friends beloved, no longer nigh;
   Submissive still would I reply,
   Thy will be done!

4. Should grief or sickness waste away
   My life in premature decay,
   Thy will be done!

iv. The 4th form is in the 1839 ed. of Elliott's Ps. & Hys. and later editions. In this the text of the Ps. and Hys., 1835, has undergone one change only, and this in the opening line, which reads, "My God, my Father, while I stray."

The great diversity in these texts, and all
MY GOD, AND IS THY TABLE

Pub. by Miss Elliott, or with her sanction, accounts for the curious anomaly that Lord Broughton, in his Bk. of Praye, gives one form of the original, by W. Bickersteth, in his H. Comp., another, and some one else a third. In varying forms it is in extensive use in all English-speaking countries, and of all Miss Elliott's hymns it ranks next to her "Just as I am" in popularity. It has also been tr. into several languages, including Latin, German, French, &c. [J. J.]

My God, and is Thy table spread? P. Doddridge. [Holy Communion.] Pub. in Job Orton's posthumous edition of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 171, in 6 of 4 l., and headed "God's Name profaned, when his Table is treated with Contempt. Malachi i. 12. Applied to the Lord's Supper." The same text was repeated in J. D. Humphrey's ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1839. The extensive use of this hymn, and especially in the Church of England, is due to a great extent to the fact that it, with a few others, was appended to the English Version of the Psalms. The history of that circumstance is given in the article on the New Version (q.v.). The only changes in the text are st. i., 2, of "doth" into "doth," and 1. 3 of the same stanza of "its" into "thy." In addition to its use in this form, and in the original (often abbreviated), it is also found as:

1. Father, and is Thy table spread. This is adopted by some of the American Unitarian collections.
2. Lord Jesus, is Thy table spread. This is as early as the 1815 Appendix to Cotterill's Sl., and is found in Buckmaster's Christian Psalter, 1833, and later hymn-books of the same type.
3. O God, and is Thy table spread. This is in the Hymnary, 1877, in 4 st., together with a doxology which is not in the original.

The only alterations of any moment which have crept into the text, and are sometimes adopted, are:

"Rich banquet of His Flesh and Blood!"
to:
"Memorial of His Flesh and Blood!"
and:
"Why are itsainties all in vain?"
to:
"Why are its bounties all in vain?"

In full or in part this hymn has been tr. into several languages. One in Latin (of 4 st., the fourth being very much altered), by Bingham, in his Hymn. Christ. Lat., 1871, is "O Deus, anna patet nobis Tuam mensa referta?" [see English Hymnody, Early, § xiv.]

My God, how endless is Thy love.
I. Watts. [Morning or Evening.] Pub. in his Hym. and Spiritual S., 1709, Bk. 1., No. 81, in 3 st. of 4 l., and headed "A Song for Morning or Evening." It was included in J. Wesley's Ps. & Hymn., Charles-town, 1786-37, and subsequently in a large number of hymn-books.

In addition to its use under its original first line, sometimes with slight changes, but usually unaltered, it is also found as:

1. O God, how endless is Thy love. This form appeared in G. Whitehead's Hymns, &c., 1873, No. 27; M. Madison's Ps. & Hymn., 1876, No. 193, and many later collections.
2. O God, how constant is Thy love. This was given in the 1819 ed. of Cotterill's Sl., p. 2, in 4 st., the 3rd stanza being an addition by Cotterill, &c.
3. O God, how bounteous is Thy love. This form is in the Irvingite Hymn, for the use of the Churchers, 1864 and 1871.

Through the original and in these various forms this hymn is in use in all English-speaking countries. It is a beautiful example of Watts's tender style, but somewhat tinged with sadness. [See English Hymnody. Early, § vi. 3, xiii.]

My God, how perfect are Thy ways.
W. Cooper. [The Lord our Righteousness.] Appeared in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. i., No. 67, in 5 st. of 4 l., and entitled "Just as I am; our Righteousness." It is generally given in its original form, but its use is limited. [J. J.]

My God, how wonderful Thou art.
P. W. Faber. [The Eternal Father.] 1st pub. in his Jesus and Mary, &c., 1848, No. 2, in 9 st. of 4 l., and entitled, "The Eternal Father," and again in his Hymns, 1861, p. 22. Its use is very extensive both in G. Britain and America, but it is often given in an abridged form.

In some of the American collections, including H. W. Beecher's Plymouth Coll., 1853, The Baptist Praise Bk., &c., another version of it begins with st. i.: "How dread are Thine eternal years," but this does not equal the original in popularity in America, and is almost unknown in G. Britain. Another cento in C. U. in America begins with st. iv., "O how I fear Thee, living God." [J. J.]

My God, I am Thine; What a comfort divine.
C. Wesley. [Peace with God.] Appeared in Hymn. and Soc. Poems, 1749, vol. i., as No. 16 of "Hymns for Believers," in 6 st. of 3 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. v. p. 24). It was republished in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 197, and thence passed into most of the Methodist hymn-books throughout all English-speaking countries. Few hymns amongst the Methodists have equalled it in the influence which it has had upon the sick and dying. Numerous instances of great interest are given in G. J. Stevenson's Meth. H. Bk. Notes, 1883, p. 167. The stanzas most frequently adopted are, i. "My God, I am Thine," and iv. "My Jesus to know; And feel His blood flow." Outside of the Methodist bodies its use is limited.

My God, I know, I feel Thee mine.
C. Wesley. [Peace and Holiness desired.] Pub. in Hymn. and Soc. Poems, 1749, p. 156, in 12 st. of 4 l., and entitled, "Against Hope Believing in Hope" (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 328). In the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 351, st. x. is omitted, and slight changes in the text are introduced. This form is repeated in the revised ed., 1875, and has passed into several collections. In addition there are also the following arrangements of the hymn in C. U.:

1. Father, Thy all-victorious love. This opens with st. iv. altered, and is used in American Unitarian hymn-books.
2. Jesus, Thine all-victorious love. This also begins with st. iv. altered, and is in American C. U.
4. In me the sacred fire. In the Primitive Methodist Hymnal, 1847, and a few American collections. This opens with st. viii.

My God, I love and I adore.
I. Watts. [God, the Creator and Preserver.] This poem of 63 lines, appended to an essay on "Searching after God," is in Watts's Reliquia Juvenilia: Miscellaneous Thoughts in Prose and Verse, &c., 1734. In the Coll. of Hymns & Ps., &c., by Kippis, Rees, and others, 1795, a hymn in 4 st. of 4 l., No. 62, beginning "Who can by searching find out God?". The opening stanza is based on II. 1-4 of the poem, whilst st. ii.-iv. are almost word for word from II. 5-20.

This same hymn, with the substitution of II. 1-4 of the poem for the first stanza as in Kippis, is No. 118 in The Bap. Praise Bk., N. Y., 1871. Thus, together with the text as in Kippis, is in other collections. Another arrangement, beginning with the same first line, is in 4 st. of 4 l., No. 177 in W. Beecher's Plymouth Coll., 1855, but it is not equal to either of the former in purity or beauty. The hymn, in either of those forms, is very poetical and of more than usual excellence. [J. J.]

My God, in Whom are all the springs. I. Watts. [Ps. iv.] 1st pub. in his Psalms of David, 1719, in 6 st. of 4 l., and entitled, "Praise for Protection, Grace and Truth." In some collections, as in Dr. Alexander's Augustine H. Bk., 1849 and 1865, it begins with st. iii., "Be Thou exalted, O my God." Both the original and the abridged form are in limited [J. J.]

My God, is any hour so sweet. Charlotte Elliott. [The Hour of Prayer.] Pub. in her Hours of Sorrow, &c., 1836, p. 43, in 7 st. of 4 l., and entitled "The Hour of Prayer"; again in her brother's Ps. & Hymns, 2nd thousand, 1857, in 6 st., and again in her Morning and Evening Hymn, for a Week, 1839. The text in each of these works is different from that in the rest. The text in the H. Comp., 1876, which is generally received as the original, differs slightly from each of the above. The 1836 text is in Lyra Brit., 1867, p. 219, with "There for," changed to "Here for," in st. v. l. 2. In Kennedy, 1863, and in Thring's Coll., 1882, it is altered to "Sweet is the morning light to me." The use of this hymn is more frequent than the use of these two hymns is extensive. [J. J.]

My God, my Father, blissful Name. Anne Steele. [Humility and Trust.] Appeared in her Poems on Subjects chiefly Devotional, 1760, vol. i. p. 114, in 8 st. of 4 l., and headed "Humble Reliance." It was repeated in the 2nd ed. of the Poems, 1780, and in Sedge- wick's reprint of her Hymns, 1863, p. 70. In its full original form it is not usually found in C. U.; but the following versions therefrom are given in several hymn-books in G. Britain and America:

1. My God, my Father, blissful Name. Composed of st. i.-iv. in the Bap. New Selection, 1826; the Bap. Ps. & Hymns, 1854; the New Cong., 1850, &c.
2. My God, my Father, charming Name. This is usually No. 1, with the alteration of the opening line.
4. My God, what'er Thy will ordains. In Kennedy, 1863, No. 1211, is a cento from this hymn and Miss Steele's "Dear Refuge of my weary soul." [J. J.]

My God, my Father, dost Thou call? Bp. E. H. Bickersteth. [Home Missions.] Written for the London Church Mission, 1874, and printed in the Guardian, and afterwards pub. in his H. Comp., 1876. It has since passed into several hymn-books, including the Prim. Methodist Hymnal, 1887, &c. [J. J.]

My God, my Portion and my Love. I. Watts. [God's only Happiness.] Pub. in the 1st ed. of his Hymns and Spiritual Songs, 1707 (ed. 1709, Bk. ii., No. 94), in 8 st. of 4 l., and headed "God my only Happiness." It is in C. U. both in full and in an abridged form. In Dale's English H. Bk., 1874, No. 689. "My God, my life is in Thy love," is also from this hymn, and is composed of st. iv., v., vii., viii. slightly altered. [J. J.]

My God, the Covenant of Thy love. F. Doddridge. [The Divine Covenant.] This hymn is No. 86 in the n. ms., but is unpublished. The latest date in the ms. is given to No. 83, as "Jan. 9, 1778." This hymn is, we judge, c. 1740. It was included, unaltered, in Job Orton's posthumous ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1758, No. 24, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed "Support in God's Covenant under domestic troubles;" and again in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 26. It is in extensive use in G. Britain and America, but usually with the omission of st. ii., "What tho' my house be not with Thee." [J. J.]

My God, the Spring of all my joys. I. Watts. [God, Light in darkness.] 1st pub. in his Hymns & Spiritual Songs, 1707 (ed. 1709, Bk. ii., No. 54.), in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed "God's presence is Light in darkness." In 1841, J. Wesley included it with alterations in his Ps. & Hymn., p. 118, but did not introduce it into the Wes. H. Bk. in 1780. It is in the 18th ed., 1803, as No. 87, with an asterisk to denote that it was not placed there by Wesley. In its original form the hymn is about God, and He is spoken of in the third person thus:

"In darkest shades if He appear."
The Wesley version is an address to God:

"In darkest shades if Thou appear."

Both versions are in extensive use in all English-speaking countries; the original, however, being the more popular of the two. In a few collections it is altered to: "My God, the Source of all my joys." [J. J.]

My God, Thy service well demands. P. Doddridge. [Thanksgiving for Recovery from Sickness.] In the p. ms., this hymn is No. 53, is dated "Nov. 14, 1737," and headed, "A Thought on recovery from Sickness in which much of the Presence of God had been experienced. Particularly intended for the use of Miss Nancy Rise." This heading is altered in Doddridge's handwriting to "Thought on recovery from a dangerous sickness in which much of the presence of God had been experienced. Particularly intended for the use of a friend who had been in extreme danger by the bursting of an artery in her stomach." It was included in Job Orton's posthumous ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 364, in 7 st. of 4 l., as one of the "Hymns on Particular Occasions, and Uncertain Measures." It is headed therein "On recovery from Sickness, during which much of the Divine Favour had been experienced." In J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the Hymns, &c., the title and heading as in Orton's ed. were repeated. When the nature of the sickness is remembered, the original ms. is more intensely vivid than the printed text. In the Ms. st. ii., 1. 3, 4, read:
MY GOD, 'TIS TO THY

"When life in purple torrents flowed
From every gushing vein;"

st. iii., 1. 3:
"And teach me with my quivering lips;
and st. v., 1. 4:
"That made salvation mine."

The personal character of this hymn has limited its use. It might, however, be casily adapted for special or general thank-sing after sickness. [J. J.]

My God, 'tis to Thy Mercy-seat.
Anne Steele. [The Mercy-seat.] 1st pub. in her Poems on Subjects chiefly Devotional, &c., 1760, vol. i. p. 133, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed:
"Refuge and Strength in the Mercy of God."
It was repeated in the 2nd ed. of the Poems,
&c., 1780, and in Sedgwick's reprint of her Hymns, 1863. It is in C. U. both in its original form and as "Dear Father, to Thy Mercy-seat." The latter form is chiefly in use in America. [J. J.]

My God, what silken cords are by Job Orton in his posthumous ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 332, in 5 st.
of 4 l., and entitled "Gratitude the Spring of true Religion;" and again in J. D. Humphrey's
ed. of the same, 1839, No. 171. It is in C. U.
in its original form, and as "My God, what cords of love are Thine," in the London H. Bk., (1st ed.) 1773, and others. [J. J.]

My gracious Lord, I own Thy right.
P. Doddridge. [The Service of Christ a del-ght.] Pub. by Job Orton in his posthumous
ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, 1755, No. 284, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed "Christ's Service the fruit of our Labour on earth," also given in
J. D. Humphrey's ed. of the same, 1839,
No. 320. Its use, especially in America, is tensive. Sometimes it is given as "All-gracious Lord, I own Thy right," as in the Unitarian Hys. of The Spirit, Boston, U.S.A.,
1864. [J. J.]

My heart is resting, O my God.
Anna L. Waring. [The Lord the Portion of his people.] Appeared in the 4th ed. of her Hys. and Meditations, 1854, p. 83, in 11 st.
of 8 l., and based upon Lam. iii. 24, "The Lord is my Portion, saith my soul; therefore will I hope in Him." (ed. 1871, p. 62.) It is also in her Additional Hys., 1838. Being too long to be used in full, various arrangements of lines and stanzas have been suggested for C. U.
Most of these begin with the opening line of the hymn. One exception is, "I have a heritage of joy," in the American Unitarian Hys.
[& Tune] Bk. for Church & Home, Boston,
1868, which begins with st. iii., 1. 5. [J. J.]

My Helper, God, I bless His name.
P. Doddridge. [New Year.] This hymn is almost entirely unknown under its original first line, but altered as "Our Helper, God, we bless His [Thy] name," it is found in several collections, including Horder's Cong. Hys., 1884. It was 1st pub. in Job Orton's posthu-momous ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1755,
No. 19, in 4 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Ehe-uezer, or God's helping hand reviewed and acknowledged. 1 Sam. vii. 12. For New-Year's day." It is also in J. D. Humphrey's
ed. of the same, 1839, No. 23. [J. J.]

My Maker, and my King; to Thee
my whole I owe.
Anne Steele. [God, Creator and Benefactor.] 1st pub.
in her Poems on Subjects chiefly Devotional, &c., 1760, vol. i. p. 48, in 6 st. of 4 l., and entitled,

MY MAKER, AND MY KING 781
"God my Creator and Benefactor." It was repeated in her Poems, &c., 1780; and in Sedgwick's reprint of her Hymns, 1863. Two forms of this hymn are in C. U. (1) The first is the original in its full or abridged form. This came into C. U. through the Bristol Bap. Coll. of Ash & Evans, 1769, where it is No. 23, and sign'd d 't.' (2) The second is:

"My Maker and my King!
What thanks to Thee I owe!"

This appeared in Hall's Mitre H. Bk., 1836, No. 286, in 4 st. of 4 l.; and again in E. Oster's Church and King, June 1, 1837. It was rewritten from Miss Steele's hymn by Oster for the Mitre H. Bk., and should be given as Anne Steele, 1760; E. Oster, 1836. [J. J.]

My Saviour, be Thou near me, Through life's night. Mary Duncan, née Lundie. [Suppl.] 1st pub. in her Memoir, 1841, in 2 st. of 8 l., and thus introduced:

"To a Greek air, which a dear friend loved to hear her sing, she composed, at the pianoforte, the annexed stanzas, not being satisfied with the trifling words attached to it. They bear date the 26th December, 1839; the first effusion of her muse, and the prayer of their petition was about to be answered speedily" (ed. 1843, p. 294).

The hymn is included, set to this air, in the Rev. J. H. Wilson's Songs of Zion, 1877, and without air, in other collections. [J. M.]

My song shall be of mercy. H. Doxenton. [Ps. cxlv.] Written for his congregation at St. John's Church, Chatham, and first printed at the close of his Sermon, preached in 1832, on "God, the Refuge of His people" (Chatham, A. Etherington); and then in Barry's Ps. & Hymns, 1857. It was also included in his Hymns & Verses, 1873. [W. T. B.]

My song shall bless the Lord of all. W. Cooper. [The Godhead of Christ.] 1st pub. in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. ii., No. 38, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed "Jehovah Jeus." Although not in extensive use, it is a dogmatic hymn of more than usual merit, and is worthy of greater attention. [J. J.]

My soul and spirit all'd with joy. N. Tate. [Magnificat.] This metrical version of the Song of the Blessed Virgin was given in the Appendix to the New Version of the Psalms appended to the Book of Common Prayer, 1762 (licenced 1763). It is not found in modern collections of hymns (full text in old P. Books). In the Draft of the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1745, it was given with very slight alterations as No. ii. In the adoption, however, in the authorised issue of the Translations, &c., of 1781, it underwent further revision, and as No. xxxvi. stands thus:

St. i., N. Tate; st. ii., rewritten, 1761; st. iii., rewritten, 1781, with 1st line from 1748; st. iv., N. Tate; st. v., 1761; st. vi., 2 altered; st. vii., 3, 4, N. Tate.

This recast, which has been in use in the Church of Scotland for more than 100 years, is claimed for W. Cameron (p. 300, 4th.) by his daughter in her list of authors and revisers of the 1781 issue. Full recast text in modern editions of the Scottish Translations.

[J. J.]

My soul doth magnify the Lord. J. Mason. [Whitsuntide.] 1st pub. in his Spiritual Songs, or Songs of Praise, 1683, p. 52, in 5 st. of 8 l. and 1 st. of 4 l. and entitled "A Song of Praise for Joy in the Holy Ghost"; and again, in Sedgwick's reprint of the Spiritual Songs, 1853, p. 38. The hymn in its full form is not in C. U. The following centos however are in C. U.:

1. A living stream as crystal clear. This begins with st. iii., and, as altered by J. Keble, it appeared in the St. Albans H. & Bk., 1857, and subsequently in other collections.

2. My soul doth magnify the Lord. This, as No. 354 in the Dutch Reformed Hymns of the Church, N. Y., 1869, is composed of st. i., ii., iii. 1-4, and a doxology not in the original.

3. There is a stream which issues forth. This, as No. 104 in Lord Selborne's Book of Praise, 1862, is st. vi. to the end of the hymn unaltered.

These centos, especially No. 1, are in several collections; but their use is not equal to their merits. [See English Hymnody, Early, § xi.]

[J. J.]

My soul, go boldly forth. R. Baxter. [Death Anticipated.] This poem appeared in Baxter's Additions to the Porrical Fragments of Richard Baxter. Written for himself and Communicated to such as are moved to a serious Vindication of the Church. London: Printed for B. Simmons, &c., 1688, in 31 st. of 6 l., dated "Decem. 19, 1682," and headed "The Exit." In the American Plymouth Coll., 1853, st. i., iv. and xxxi. were given as No. 887, and in Kennedy, 1863, st. i., iv. xxi. and xxxi. as No. 1735. Both the original and these centos are admirably adapted for private use.

[W. T. B.]

My soul, inspired with sacred love. C. Wesley. [Ps. cxliv.] 1st pub. in The Arminian Magazine, 1798; again in Fish's collection of C. Wesley's Psalms, 1854; and again in the P. Works, 1868-72, vol. viii. p. 290, in 8 st. of 6 l. In 1830, it was given in the Supp. of the Wes. H. Bk., with the omission of st. iii. and vi., and retained in the revised ed., 1875.

[J. J.]

My soul, repeat His praise. I. Watts. [Ps. cxlv.] 1st pub. in his Ps. of David, &c., 1719, p. 267, in 5 st. of 4 l., and entitled, "Abounding Compassion of God; or, Mercy in the Midst of Judgment." It was given with the omission of st. ii., iv. and vi., in G. Whitefield's Hymns for Social Worship, &c., 1753, No. 9. This abbreviated form was repeated in M. Madan's Ps. & Hymns, 1760, No. 117, and others, and thus came into C. U. in the Church of England. It is also given in full in some collections, and again, altered in another way, in others. Its use is extensive.

[J. J.]

My soul, there is a country. H. Vaughan. [Heaven—Peace.] This poem on "Peace" appeared in 20 lines in his Silur Scenitans, or Sacred Poems, Pt. i., 1655 (2nd ed. 1658); in Lyte's reprint of the same, 1847, and in the Bell and Daldy reprint, 1858. In the reduced form of 4 st. of 4 l., it was given in the People's H., 1867; and in its full and unaltered form, as a hymn for "Private Use," in Tringe's Coll., 1882.

[J. J.]

MY SOUL, WITH JOY ATTEND

in 28 st. of 4 l., and headed "The glory of God in Creation and Providence." In a note he says:—

"Several Lines in this Psalm I have borrow'd Sir John Denham, if I have made the Connection more evident, and the Sense more easy and useful to an ordinary Reader, I have attained my End, and leave other to judge whether I have dishonour'd his Verse, or improved it." p. 274.

The lines borrowed from Sir J. Denham's version of 1714 are st. i., ii., iii., vii., il., 1, 2; xxxviii., il., 4, 3, 5. 4. The paraphrase naturally from its great length is not in C. U., but the following centos therefrom are in several hymn-books in G. Britain and America:

1. Great is the Lord, what tongue can frame! This cento, in the Andrewes Sabath H. Bk., 1658, and other American collections, is made up of old lines from Watts's paraphrase of the paraphrase somewhat freely altered. In some hymnals st. ii. of this cento is omitted.

2. My soul, thy great praise give. This cento in the Loeia H. Bk., 1683, 4 stanzas, is thus composed: st. i., il., Sir John Denham, and the rest by Watts; in the New Cong., 1699, 9 stanzas, st. i., ii., are by Denham, and the rest by Watts; and in Dale's English H. Bk., 1874, st. 1-4, are by Sir J. Denham, and iv. v. by Watts.

3. Vast are Thy works, Almighty Lord. Of this cento in Martin's Hymns, 1840, No. 127, il., 3 st. iii. arc by Sir J. Denham, and the rest by Watts.

These centos, taken together, are in some what extensive use. [J. J.]

My soul, with sacred joy survey. T. Kelly. [Mission.] 1st pub. in his Coll. of Ps. & Hym., &c., Dublin, 1602, No. 264 [there are two hymns in the collection with this number], in 7 stanzas, 12 lines, and based on Isa. xliii. 5, 6. It was repeated in the 1st ed. of his Hymns, &c., 1604, and again in all later editions (ed. 1853, No. 575). In addition to appearing in a few collections under its opening line, two centos therefrom are in C. U., both beginning: "Arise, arise; with joy survey." These are: (1) In Hatfield's Church H. Bk., N. Y., 1872, No. 1219, composed of st. i., iii., vi., and vii. in the order named; (2) In the Bap. Praise Bk., N. Y., 1871, where st. iv. form No. 1294. [J. J.]

My stock lies dead, and no increase.
G. Herbert. [Divine Grace Desired.] Appeared in his posthumous work The Temple, 1633 (ed. Chandos Classics, 1887, p. 107), in 6 st. of 3 l., with the refrain "Drop from above!" It is given in its original form in a few collections, and again in several American hymnals, as "My heart lies dead, and no increase." It is a sweetly pathetic hymn for private devotion. [J. J.]

My times of sorrow and of joy. B. Beddome. [Resignation.] Written on Jan. 4, 1778, and pub. in Rippon's Bap. Sel., 1787, No. 276, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed "Resignation; or God's Portion." In R. Hall's posthumous edition of Beddome's Hymns, &c., 1817, No. 222, it is simply entitled "Resignation." It is a striking coincidence that, unknown to Beddome, his son, Dr. Benjamin Beddome, died of a fever in Edinburgh on the day that this hymn was written. Dr. Rippon says, in the Baptist Register, 1794, that the father preached on that day (Sunday) from Ps. xxx. 15, "My times are in Thy hand," and that this hymn was sung at the close of the Sermon. It is very plaintive, and well suited for private use. It is in several modern collections, including the Bap. Ps. & Hys., 1858 and 1880. [J. J.]

My whole, though broken heart, O Lord. R. Baxter. [Resignation.] Appeared in his Poetical Fragments, 1811, p. 51, in 8 st. of 8 l., and entitled, "The Covenant and Confidence of Faith." To it is appended the note: "This Covenant, my dear wife, in her former sickness, subscribed with a cheerful will." The hymn was republished in Pickering's reprint of the Poetical Fragments, 1821. In its complete form it is not found in modern hymn-books. The following centes therefrom are in C. U.:

1. Christ leads me through no darker rooms. This is in the Cooke and Denton Hymnal, 1853, and several American collections.

2. Come, Lord, when grace has made me meet. In The Church Praise Book, N. Y., 1892.

3. Lord, it belongs not to my care. This is the most popular of the centos. It is in extensive use in all English-speaking countries.

4. Lord, it is not for us to care. This ranks in popularity next to No. 3.

5. Lord, may we feel no anxious care. This appeared in Hall's Minstrel H. Bk., 1836, No. 248, and is found in a few modern collections.

6. Now it belongs not to my care. This also is somewhat limited in use.

When all these centos are taken into account the popularity and acceptableness of this hymn are very marked. [J. J.]

Myddleton, William, an eminent poet and grammarian, was the third s. of Richard Myddleton, of Denbigh, an elder brother of Sir Hugh Myddleton. W. Myddleton was educated at Oxford, and served as a soldier in the armies of Elizabeth. He subsequently joined the navy. He was the means of saving the English fleet which was sent in 1591 to the Azores to intercept the Spanish galleons when Philip II. sent another fleet of ten times the English force to defeat the design.

Myddleton's first publication was Barddsonaeth; or, the Art of Welsh Poetry, London, 1593. His chief work is an elegant version of the Psalms in the higher kind of Welsh metre, or "Cynganedd." It was finished January 24, 1595, and pub. in London by T. Salaman in 1596. A 2nd ed. was pub. by the Rev.

MYSTERIUM mirabile, Hac luce nobis panditur. [Passiontide.] This is the hymn at Matins in the Office of the Most Holy Winding Sheet of our Lord Jesus Christ—an office added to the Roman Breviary since 1740. In the Roman Breviary, Bolognæ, 1827, Pars Vena, Supplement, it is assigned to Saturday after the 2nd S. in Lent, and marked as a Greater Double; the text of this hymn being given at p. 274. It is also found in later eds. of the Roman Breviary. Tr. as:

This day the wondrous mystery. By E. Caswall. 1st pub. in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 80, in 7 st. of 4 l.; and again in his Hymns & Poems, 1873, p. 45. It is in several collections, including the Hymnary, 1827, &c., but usually in an abridged form.

Other trs. are:
2. A wondrous mystery this day. J. Wallace, 1874.

Nachentiöber, Caspar Friedrich, s. of Caspar Nachentiöber, advocate at Halle, was b. at Halle, March 5, 1624. He entered the University of Leipzig in 1647, as a student of theology (M.A. 1651). He was then for a few months tutor in the house of the Chancellor August Carpizov at Coburg. In the end of 1651 he was appointed diocesan and in 1655 pastor, at Meeder near Coburg. He was then, in 1671, called to Coburg as pastor of the Holy Cross Church, and dean of the St. Moritz Church. He afterwards devoted himself wholly to St. Moritz, and d. as second senior in charge Nov. 23, 1685 (Wetzel ii. 203; Allg. Deutsche Biog. xxiii. 192, &c.) He pub. a metrical history of the Passion under the title of Erklärung des Leidens und des Werthes Giess Christi, at Coburg in 1685. Four hymns are ascribed to him, two of which have been tr. viz.:

i. Dies ist die Nacht, da mir erschienen. Christmas. This is in J. H. Hävecker's Kirchencho, 1829, No. 406, in 5 st. of 6 l., marked as by M. C. F. N. It had previously appeared in the Coburg G. R., 1663 (Coburg Gymnasium Library), and is included in the Cons. L. S., 1841, No. 31. The tr. in C. U. is:

This is the night wherein appeared. A good and full tr. by A. T. Russell, as No. 56 in his Hymns, 1851.

ii. So gehst du dann, mein Jesu, hin. Passiontide. This appears in the New Valentinian Corps, Margrafi, Brandenburgisches Gesang-Buch, Cumbach and Bayreuth, 1668, p. 81, in 4 st. of 8 l., entitled "A beautiful hymn for Lent." It is also in the Coburg G. R., 1668, Appendix, p. 4, entitled "Christ's Death the sinner's Life." In both books it is without name of author. Wetzel ii. 206, ascribes it to Nachentiöber, and says it was written in 1663, while he was tutor at Coburg. It is a hymn on Christ's way to the Cross, and in the form of a dialogue between the soul and Christ. In order to complete the sense an additional stanza was inserted between the original iii. and iv., and this is the form in the Cons. L. S. No. 741. This new form, according to Wetzel ii. 210, is by Magnus Daniel Omeke, Professor at Altdorf (b. at Tübingen, Sept. 6, 1646; d. at Altdorf Nov. 22, 1708), and was included in the Altdorf G. R. of 1699. The tr. in C. U. is:

So, Lord, thou goest forth to die. A good tr. of st. 4, v. by A. T. Russell, as No. 92 in his Ps. & Hymns, 1861.

NATO CANUNT OMINIA

Naios Iowas en mwy?oi. [Touos Aevos]

Naked as from the earth we came. I. Watts. [Submission.] 1st pub. in his Hymns and Spiritual Songs, 1707 (ed. 1709, Bk. i. No. 21, v. Job i. 21, in 5 st. of 4 l., and entitled "Submission to affluent Providence." In this form its use is limited. In the 1745 Drift Translations and Paraphrases of the Church of Scotland it was included, unaltered; but in the authorized ed. of 1781, No. iii., it was given in a recast form, in which st. i.—iii. were Watts's rewritten, and st. iv. was new. This recast, which has been in use in the Church of Scotland for more than one hundred years, is claimed for W. Cameron (p. 300, l.) in the markings by his daughter of the 1781 Trs. & Paraphrases.

Nason, Elias, a Congregational minister, lecturer, and writer, was b. at Wrentham, Massachusetts, April 21, 1811, and was educated at Brown University, where he graduated in 1835. He was a teacher in Georgia for some time, and from 1840 to 1849 in Newburyport, Massachusetts. Subsequently he entered the Congregational ministry. He is the author of several biographies. In 1855 he pub. Songs for the School Room; in 1857 his Congregational Hymn Book; and in 1863, in conjunction with Dr. Edward Kirk, Songs for Social and Public Worship. His hymn, "Jesus only, when the morning," was written at Natick, Massachusetts, about 1856, and was pub. with music by the author in the Boston Wellspring.

Nato canunt omnia. [Christmas.] This sequence is found in the Boilian MS., No. 775, written about the year 1000 (f. 139 B); in an 11th cent. Winchester Sequenarium, row at Corpus Christi, Cambridge (MS. No. 1753); in an 11th cent. MS. at Munich (Lat. 1408, f. 7), &c. In the Sarum, Hereford and York Missals it is placed in the Midnight Mass ("Missa in Galliaca") of Christmas Day. The printed text is also found in Daniel ii. p. 565, and Kehrein, No. 9. Clichoraeus represents it as describing the joy of Christmas, announced by the angel to the shepherds, and sung by the angelic choir; and as inviting the whole human race to rejoice in God made Man.

Adam of St. Victor. [Christmas.] This fine sequence is given by L. Gautier in his Oeuvres poetiques D'Adam de Saint-Victor, 1881, p. 237, among the "Proses attributed to Adam." According to Gautier it is not found in the Gradual of St. Victor or of St. Genevieve; but is in a 13th cent. Paris Gradual in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris (No. 15,615), and other sources. He says the ascension is at least "very probable," and so prints the text in full. The text is also in Daniel, ii, p. 222: Neale's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1851, p. 64; Kerina, No. 23; Wrennham, 1881, i. 31, &c. St. i, II. 4-6, of this sequence:

Neale, John Mason, b. 1810 in Conduit Street, London, on Jan. 24, 1810. He inherited intellectual power on both sides: his father, the Rev. Cornelius Neale, having been Senior Wrangler, Second Chancellor's Medallist, and Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, and his mother being the daughter of John Mason Good, a man of considerable learning. Both father and mother are said to have been "very pronounced Evangelicals." The father died in 1823, and the boy's early training was entirely under the direction of his mother, and his deep attachment for whom is shown by the fact that for some time after his death he wrote of her as "a mother to whom I owe more than I can express." He was educated at Sherborne Grammar School, and was afterwards a private pupil, first of the Rev. William Russell, Rector of Shepperdon, and then of Professor Chaliss. In 1830 he went up to Cambridge, where he gained a scholarship at Trinity College, and was considered the best man of his year. But he did not inherit his father's mathematical tastes, and had, in fact, the greatest antipathy to the study; and as the strange rule then prevailed that no one might aspire to Classical Honours unless his name had appeared in the Mathematical Tripos, he was forced to be content with an ordinary degree. This he took in 1840; he had been one year later, he might have taken a brilliant degree, for in 1841 the rule mentioned above was rescinded. He gained, however, what distinctions he could, winning the Members' Prize, and being elected Fellow and Tutor of Downing College; while, as a graduate, he won the Sceatonic Prize no fewer than eleven times.

At Cambridge he identified himself with the Church movement, which was spreading there in a quieter, but no less real way, than in the sister University. He became one of the founders of the Ecclesiologist, or, as it was commonly called, the Cambridge Camden Society, in conjunction with Mr. E. J. Boyce, his future brother-in-law, and Mr. Benjamin Webb, afterwards the well-known Vicar of St. Andrew's, Wells, Street, and editor of The Church Quarterly Review. In 1842 he married Miss Sarah Norman Webster, the daughter of an evangelical clergyman, and in 1843 he was presented to the small incumbency of Crawley in Sussex. He, however, prevented him from being instituted to the living. His lungs were found to be badly affected; and, as the only chance of saving his life, he was obliged to go to Madeira, where he stayed until the summer of 1844. In 1846 he was presented by Lord Delawarr to the Wardenship of Sackville College, East Grinstead. This can hardly be considered as an ecclesiastical preference, for both his predecessor and his successor were laymen. In fact the only ecclesiastical preference that ever was offered to him was the Provostship of St. Ninian's, Perth. This was an honorary office, for the Provostship is equivalent to a Densary in England, but it was not a lucrative one, being worth only £100 a year. He was obliged to decline it, as the climate was thought too cold for his delicate health. In the quiet retreat of East Grinstead, therefore, Dr. Neale spent the remainder of his comparatively short life, dividing his time between literary work, which all tended, directly or indirectly, to the advancement of that great Church revival of which he was so able and courageous a champion, and the unremitting care of that sisterhood of which he was the founder. He commenced a sisterhood at Rotherfield on a very small scale, in conjunction with Miss S. A. Green, daughter of the rector of the parish; but in 1856 he transferred it to East Grinstead, where, under the name of St. Margaret's, it has attained its present proportions. Various other institutions gradually sprang into existence in connection with this Sisterhood, viz., an Orphanage, a Middle Class School for girls, and a House at Aldershot for the reformation of fallen women. The blessing which the East Grinstead Sisters have been to thousands of the sick and suffering cannot here be told. But it must be mentioned that Dr. Neale met with many difficulties, and great opposition from the outside, which, on one occasion, if not more, culminated in actual violence. In 1857 he was attending the funeral of one of the Sisters at Lewes, when a report was spread that the deceased had been decoyed into St. Margaret's Home, persuaded to leave all her money to the sisterhood, and then purposely sent to a post in which she might catch the scurvy fever of which she died. To those who knew anything of the scrupulously delicate and honourable character of Dr. Neale, such a charge would seem absurd on the face of it: but mobs are not apt to reflect, and it was very easy to excite a mob against the unpopular practices and sentiments rife at East Grinstead; and Dr. Neale and some Sisters who were attending the funeral were attacked and roughly handled. He also found opponents in higher quarters, he was inhibited by the Bishop of the Diocese for fourteen years, and the Aldshott House was obliged to be abandoned, after having done useful work for some years, in consequence of the prejudice of officials against the religious system pursued.

Dr. Neale's character, however, was a happy mixture of gentleness and firmness; he had in the highest degree the courage of his convictions, which were remarkably definite and strong; while at the same time he maintained the greatest charity towards, and forbearance with, those who did not agree with him. It is not surprising, therefore, that he lived all opposition down; and that, while from first to last his relations with the community at East Grinstead were of the happiest description, he was also, after a time, spared any molestation from without. The institution grew upon his hands, and he became anxious to provide with a permanent and fitting home. His last public act was to lay the foundation stone of a new convent for the Sisters on St. Margaret's Day (July 20), 1865. He lived long enough to see the building progress, but not to see it completed. In the following spring his health, which had always been delicate, completely broke down, and after five months of acute suffering he passed away on the Feast of the Transfiguration (Aug. 6), 1866, to the latter regret of the little community at East Grinstead and of numberless friends outside that circle. One trait of his singularly lovable character must not be unnoticed. His charity, both in the popular and in the truer Christian sense of the word, was unbounded; he was liberal and almost lavish with his money, and his liberality extended to men of all creeds and opinions; while it is pleasing to record that his relations with his ecclesiastical superiors so much improved that he dedicated his volume of 1840, Poems to the memory of the late Bishop of Cirencester, to the bishop of the diocese. If however success in life depended upon worldly advantages, Dr. Neale's life would have to be pronounced a failure; for, as his old friend, Dr. Littledale, justly complains, "he spent nearly half his life where he died, in the position of warden of an obscure Almshouse on a salary of £27 a year." But, measured by a different standard, his short life assumes very different proportions. Not only did he win the love and gratitude of those with whom he was immediately connected, but he acquired a world-wide reputation as a writer, and he lived to see that Church revival, to promote which was the great object of his whole career, already advancing to the position which it now occupies in the land of his birth.

Dr. Neale was an industrious and voluminous writer both in prose and verse; it is of course with the latter class of his writings that this sketch is chiefly concerned; but a few words must first be said about the former.

I. Prose Writings.—His first compositions were in the form of contributions to the Ecclesiologist, and were written during his graduate career at Cambridge. Whilst he was in Madeira he began to write his Commentary on the Psalms, part of which was published in 1800. It was afterwards given to the world, partly written by him and partly by his friend, Dr. Littledale, in 4 vols., in 1874, under the title of A Commentary on the Psalms, from Primitive and Medified Writers. This work has been criticized as pushing the mystical interpretation to an extravagant extent. But Dr. Neale has anticipated and disarmed such criticism by distinctly stating at the commencement that "not one single mystical interpretation throughout the present Commentary is original;" and surely such a collection has a special value as a wholesome correction of the materialistic and rational tendencies of the age. His next great work, written at Sackville College, was The History of the Holy Eastern Church. The General Introduction was published in 1847; then followed part of the History itself, The Patriarchate of Alexandria, in 2 vols.; and after his death another fragment was published, The History of the Patriarchate of Antioch, to which was added, Constantius's Memoirs of the Patriarchate of Antioch, translated from the Greek, edited by the Rev. G. Williams, 1 vol. The whole fragment was published in 5 vols. (1847–1873). The work is spoken of very highly and, constantly referred to, by Dean Stanley in his Lectures on the History of the Eastern Church. Dr. Neale was naturally in strong sympathy with the struggling Episcopal Church in Scotland, and to show that sympathy he published, in 1856, The Life and Times of Patrick Torrey, D.D., Bishop of S. Andrews, &c., with an Appendix on the Scottish Liturgy. In the same direction was his History of the so-called Jansenist Church in Holland, 1858. Next followed Essays on Liturgiology and Church History, with an Appendix on Liturgical Quotations from the Apostolical Fathers by the Rev. G. Moutrie, 1863, a 2nd edition of which, with an interesting Preface by Dr. Littledale, was published in 1867. It would be foreign to the purpose of this article to dwell on his other prose works, such as his published sermons, preached in Sackville College Chapel, his admirable little devotional work, Readings for the Aged, which was a selection from these sermons; the various works he edited, such as the Tetralogia Liturgica, the Sequentiae Missarum Germaniæ, Anglicaæ, Gallicæ, atque Medii ævi Collecta; his edition of The Primitive Liturgies of S. Mark, S. Clement, S. James, S. Chrysostom, and S. Basil, with a Preface by Dr. Littledale; his Translation of the same; his many stories from Church History, his Voices from the East, translated from the Russische, and his various articles contributed to the Ecclesiologist, The Christian Remembrancer, The Morning Chronicle, and The Churchman's Companion. It is time to pass on to that with which we are directly concerned.

II. Poetical Writings.—As a poet he may be regarded under two aspects, as an original writer and as a translator.

i. Original Writer.—Of his original poetry, the first and the best specimens are Hymns for Children, pub. in 1812, which reached its 10th edition the year after his death. It consists of 33 short hymns, the first 19 for the different days of the week and different parts of... day, the last 14 for the different Church Seasons. This little volume was followed in 1844 by Hymns for the Young, which was intended to be a sequel to the former, its alternative title being A Second Series of Hymns for Children; but it is designed for an older class than the former, and is especially intended for young people rather than for children. The first 7 hymns are "for special occasions," as "on going to work," "leaving home," &c.; the next 8 on the Church Duties and Privileges, "Confirmation," "First Holy Communion," &c., the last 8 on "Church Festivals," which, oddly enough, include the Four Ember Seasons, Advent, and Christmas. In both these works the severe and rigid style, copied, no doubt, from the old Latin hymns, is very observable. Perhaps this has prevented them from being such popular favourites as they otherwise might have been; but they are quite free from faults into which a writer of hymns for children is apt to fall. They never degenerate into mere prose in rhyme; and in every case the purity as well as the simplicity of their diction is very remarkable. In the same year (1844) he also pub. Songs and Ballads of Manufacturers, which were written during his sojourn in Madeira, and the aim of which (he tells us) was "to set forth good and sound principles in metaphors which, from their familiarity, come home to the hearts of those to whom they were addressed." They are wonderfully spirited both in matter and manner, and their freedom of style is as remarkable as the rigidity of the former works. They were followed eleven years later (1855) by a similar little work entitled Songs and Ballads for the People, which is of a more aggressive and controversial character than the previous ones, dealing boldly with such burning questions as "The Teetotallers," "Why don't you go to Meeting?" &c. Passing over the Sebastianian Poems, most of which were of course written before those noticed above, we next come to the Hymns for the Sick, which is a fitting companion to the Readings for the Aged, and to the Hymns, and other Ecclesiastical Verses, which was published just after the author's death (1866), and may be regarded as a sort of dying legacy to the world. In fact, the writer almost intimates as much in the preface, where he speaks of himself as "one who might soon be called to have done with earthly composition for ever," Many of the verses, indeed, were written earlier, "forty years ago," he says, which is evidently intended for twenty. The preface is dated "In the Octave of St. James, 1846," and within a fortnight, on the Feast of the Transfiguration, the veil (to use the touching words of his old friend, Dr. Liddell) "was withdrawn from before his eye, and the sun hushed on earth is now swallowing the chorus of Paradise." Was it an accident that these verses dwell so much on death and the life beyond the grave? or did the coming event cast its shadow before? Not that there is any sadness of tone about them; quite the reverse. He contemplates death, but it is with the eye of a Christian from whom the sting of death has been removed. Most of the verses are on subjects connected with the Church Seasons, especially with what are called the "Minor Festivals," but the first and last poems are on different subjects. The first, the "Prologue," is "in dear memory of John Keble, who departed on Maundy Thursday, 1866," and is most touching and tender to another whom he was about to follow within a few months to the "land that is very far off." The last is a poetical version of the legend of "the Seven Sleepers of Ephesus," and is, the writer thinks, "the first attempt to apply to primitive Christianity that which is, to his mind, the noblest of our measures. That measure is the hexameter, and undoubtedly Dr. Neale employed it, as he did all his measures, with great skill and effect; but it may be doubted whether the English language, in which the quantities of syllables are not so clearly defined as in Latin and Greek, is quite adapted for that measure. Throughout this volume, Dr. Neale rises to a far higher strain than he had ever reached before.

ii. Translations.—It is in this species of composition that Dr. Neale's success was pre-eminent, one might almost say unique. He had all the qualifications of a good translator. He was not only an excellent classical scholar in the ordinary sense of the term, but he was also positively steeped in mediaeval Latin. An anecdote given in an appreciative notice by "G. M." [Moultrie] happily illustrates this:

Dr. Neale "was invited by Mr. Keble and the Bishop of Salisbury to assist them with their new hymnal, and for this purpose he paid a visit to Hurley Parsonage. On one occasion Mr. Keble "having to go to another room to find some papers was detained a short time. On his return Dr. Neale said, "Why, Keble, I thought you had told me that the 'Christian Year' was entirely original.' 'Yes,' he answered, 'it certainly is.' 'Then how comes this?' and Dr. Neale placed before him the Latin of one of Keble's hymns. Keble professed himself utterly confounded. He protested that he had never seen this 'original,' nor not in all his life. After a few minutes Neale relieved him by saying that he had just turned it into Latin in his absence."

Again, Dr. Neale's exquisite ear for melody prevented him from spoiling the rhythm by too servile an imitation of the original; while the spiritedness which is a marked feature of all his poetry preserved that spring and dash which is so often wanting in a translation.

(i) Latin.—Dr. Neale's translations from the Latin include (1) Medieval Hymns and Sequences (1851). He was the first to introduce to the English reader Sequences, that is, as he himself describes them, "hymns sung between the Epistle and Gospel in the Mass," or, as he explains more definitely, "hymns whose origin is to be looked for in the Alleluias of the Gradual sung between the Epistle and the Gospel." He was quite an enthusiastic about this subject:

"It is a magnificent thing," he says, "to pass along the far-stretching vista of hymns, from the sublime self-containedness of S. Ambrose in the most sacred inspiration of S. Gregory, the exquisite typeology of Venantius Fortunatus, the lovely painting of S. Peter Damiani, the crystal-like simplicity of S. Nucher, the scriptural calm of Galenson, the subjective loveliness of S. Bernard, till at ultimate in the full blaze of glory which surrounds Adam of S. Victor, the greatest of them all."

Feeling thus what a noble task he had before him, it is no wonder that he spared no pains over it, or that he felt it his duty to adopt "the exact measure and rhyme of the original, as whatever inaccuracy or euphony. That he succeeded in his difficult work, the verdict of the public has sufficiently proved. Of all the translations in the English language none has ever been so popular as that of the Horae Nominatae, in this volume, afterwards (1858) published separately, under the title of The Rhythm of Bernard de Mortiatz, Monk of Croy. Some original hymns may be as well known as "Jerusalem the Golden;" "For thee, O dear, dear country," or "Hymn of Life in Here, our Portion," but it would be hard to find any translations which come near them for extensiveness. A second edition of the Medieval Hymns, much improved, came out in 1863, and a third, "with very numerous additions and corrections," in 1867.

(2) We next come to the Hymnals, in which 94 out of the 105 hymns are the work of Dr. Neale. These are all translations from the Latin. The first part appeared in 1832, the second in 1834. Dr. Neale has himself given us an interesting account of his connection with this work:—

"Some," he writes, "of the happiest and most instructive hours of my life were spent in the Sub-Committee of the Ecclesiastical Society, appointed for the purpose of bringing out the Second Part of the Hymnal. It was my business to lay before them the translations I had prepared, and their's to correct. The study with which this required drew out the beauties of the original in a way which nothing else could have done, and the friendly collisions of various minds elicited ideas which a single translator would in all probability have missed." Preface, Med. Hym.

(3) The last volume of translations from the Latin published by Dr. Neale appeared in 1865, under the title of Hymns, chiefly Medieval, on the Joys and Glories of Paradise. It was intended to be a companion volume to the Rhythm of Bernard of Croy. In this work the writer gives the general reader an opportunity of comparing the translation with the original by printing the two together in parallel pages. Two specimens may be given:—

Nec quisquam nec quosquam.

Ere bathe never seen the glory,
Nec quisquam occuli vidi,
Erat bathe never heard the song,
Neque affinis sensibus.

These two stanzas have been chosen because they illustrate, the first the freer, the second the more literal method of translation. The second is especially noteworthy. It will be seen that, while the English runs quite smoothly and might easily be mistaken for a stanza in an original hymn, there is not one single idea, or even one single turn of phrase in the original, which is not faithfully reproduced in the translation, and this is observable in many of his other translations. Dr. Neale included in this work two hymns (XVIII and XIX) which have a biographical interest. "They are," he says, "two choruses of a Tragedy, written by my father, on the Greek Model, and founded on the death of Sapph, and they show that, if he did not inherit mathematical, he may have inherited poetical tastes from his father.

Before quitting the subject of Dr. Neale's translations from the Latin, it is only fair to notice that while they have been almost universally accepted by the English Church, and some of them adopted by dissenting congregations, they called down upon the translator a storm of indignation from an opposite quarter. The Roman Catholics accused him of deliberate inaccuracy because he took no pains to point out that he had either softened down or entirely ignored the Roman doctrines in those hymns. So far, they said, as the originals were concerned, these translations were deliberate misrepresentations. As however the translations were intended for the use of the Anglican Church, it was only to be expected that Neale should omit such hymns or portions of hymns as would be at variance with her doctrines and discipline.

(4) Greek.—Dr. Neale conferred even a greater boon upon the lovers of hymnology than by his translations from the Latin; when he published, in 1862, his Hymns of the Eastern Church. In his translations from the Latin he did what others had done before; but in his translations from the Greek he was opening entirely new ground. "It is," he says in his preface to the first edition, "a most remarkable fact, and one which shows how very little interest has been hitherto felt in the Eastern Church, that these are literal translations. I believe, the only English versions of any part of the treasures of Oriental Hymnology." As early as 1833 he had printed a few of his versions in The Ecclesiastical, but it was not till the appearance of the complete volume that the interest of the general public was awakened in them. Then they became wonderfully popular. His trs. "Christian, dost thou see them?" "The day is past and over," "The day of Resurrection," and his Greek-inspired "Art thou weary," and "O happy band of pilgrims," are almost as great favourites as "Jerusalem the golden," and the first in his Hymns of the E. Church, "Pierce was the wild bower," deserves to be. Dr. Neale had a far more difficult task before him when he undertook these Greek hymns than he had with the Latin, and he appeals to the reader "not to forget the immense difficulty of an attempt so perfectly new as the present, when I have had no predecessors and therefore could have no master." That difficulty in comparison with the Latin cannot be better stated than in his own words:—

"Though the superior terseness and brevity of the Latin hymns renders a translation which shall represent those qualities a work of great labour, yet still the versifier has the help of the same metre; his version may be line for line; and there is a great analogy between the colloquial and the hymns, most b.p. w

Several of these translations and notes appeared in The Ecclesiastical and Theological, in 1853. (12) Hymns, Chiefly Medieake, on the Saj and Glories of Paradise. Lond., Hayes, 1856. This work contains notes on the hymns, and the Latin texts of the former amongst them. (13) Original Sequences, Hymns, and other Ecclesiastical Verses. Lond., Hayes, 1866. This collection of original verse was published posthumously by Dr. Littledale.

In addition to these works Dr. Neale published collections of Latin verses as:—

A few of his translations appeared from time to time in The Ecclesiastical; and a few of his original hymns in The Christian Remembrance. In the collection compiled for use at St. Margaret's, East Grinstead, S. Margaret's Hymnal, Printed Privately for the use of the Community only, 1875, there are several of his hymns not traceable elsewhere.

Most of Dr. Neale's translations are annotated elsewhere in this Dictionary under their respective original first lines, as are also several of his original compositions. Those original hymns in C. U. which remain to be noted are:—

i. From Hymns for Children, 1842.
1. No more sadness now, nor fasting. Christmas.
2. O Thou, Who through this holy week. Passion-tide.
3. The day, O Lord, is spent. Evening.
4. The grass so green, the trees so tall. Morning of the Third Day.
5. Thou art gone up, O Lord, on high. Evening.
7. With Thee, O Lord, begins the year. Circumcision, or, the New Year.

ii. From Hymns for the Sick, 1843.
9. Count not, the Lord's Apostle saith. Communion of the Sick.
10. Lord, if he sleepeth, he shall surely do well. Watching.
11. O Thou, Who rising long before the day. In a Sleepless Night.
12. The Lord hath given, the Lord hath taken away. Death and Burial.
13. There is a stream, whose waters rise. In Dangerous Sickness or Fever.

iii. From Hymns for the Young, 2nd series, 1844.
These 66 hymns now in C. U. by no means represent Dr. Neale's position in modern hymnody. Those tabulated in the Index of Authors and Translators must be added thereto. Even then, although the total is very large, it but feebly represents and emphatically the enormous influence which Dr. Neale has exercised over modern hymnody. [J. J.]

Neander, Joachim, was b. at Bremen in 1650, as the eldest child of the marriage of Johann Joachim Neander and Catharina Knüpling, which took place on Sept. 18, 1649, the father being then master of the Third Form in the Pacadogium at Bremen. The family name was originally Neumann (= Newman) or Niemann, but the grandfather of the poet had assumed the Greek form of the name, i.e. Neander. After passing through the Pacadogium he entered himself as a student at the Gymnasium Illustre (Academic Gymnasium) of Bremen in Oct. 1664. Student life in the 17th cent. was anything but refined, and Neander seems to have been as riotous and as fond of questionable pleasures as most of his fellows. In July 1670, Theodore Under-Eyck came to Bremen as pastor of St. Martin's Church, with the reputation of a Pietist and holder of conventions. Not long after Neander, with two like-minded companions, went to service there one Sunday, in order to criticise and find matter of amusement. But the earnest words of Under-Eyck touched his heart; and this, with his subsequent conversations with Under-Eyck, proved the turning-point of his spiritual life. In the spring of 1671 he became tutor to five young men, mostly, if not all, sons of wealthy merchants at Frankfurt-am-Main, and accompanied them to the University of Heidelberg, where they seem to have remained till the autumn of 1673, and where Neander learned to know and love the beauties of nature. The winter of 1673-74 he spent at Frankfurt with the friends of his pupils, and here he became acquainted with P. J. Spener (q.v.) and J. J. Schütz (q.v.). In the spring of 1674 he was appointed Rector of the Latin school at Düsseldorf (see further below). Finally, in 1679, he was invited to Bremen as an ordained assistant to Under-Eyck at St. Martin's Church, and began his duties about the middle of July. The post was not inviting, and was regarded merely as a stepping stone to further preferment, the remuneration being a free house and 40 thalers a-year, and the Sunday duty being a service with sermon at the extraordinary hour of 5 A.M. Had he lived, Under-Eyck would doubtless have done his best to get him appointed to St. Stephen's Church, the pastorate of which became vacant in Sept., 1680. But meantime Neander himself fell into a decline, and left Bremen May 31, 1680 (Joachim Neander, sein Leben und seine Lieder. With a Portrait. By J. F. Iken, Bremen 1880; Allg. Deutsche Biog. xxiii. 327, &c.)

Neander was the first important hymn-writer of the German Reformed Church since the times appear of Blaurer and Zwick. His hymns did, of course, and his lips had been sealed to any but the latter work. The true history of his unfortunate conduct has now been established from original documents, and may be summarized thus:

The school at Düsseldorf was entirely under the control of the Minister and elders of the Reformed Church.
The matter from about July, 1873, to about a million, 1878, was Sylvester Ldroven (a native of Bremen), and, still, a fairness, but jealous, and, in later times quarreled. With him Neander at first worked harmonously, frequently preaching in the church, and attended by blighting or consulting minister or elders; he was absent from Holy Communion, on the one hand, he could not conscientiously communicate without him, and also persuaded others to be present; and became less regular in his attendance at the ordinary services of the church.

The school made alterations on the school building and appointed him without any examination or consultation. In the fall of 1873, he was permitted to resign his duties as rector but not as minister. He was never actually stopped, but the statement was made that he had resigned.

Neander thus the second called pastor, inconsolable.

and those setting forth the Majesty of God in His works of beauty and wonder in Nature, such as his “Himmel, Erde” (p. 523, f.), and “Unbegreiflich (out)” (see No. ii. below); while some of his hymns of Praise, such as his “Sieh hier bin ich, Ehrenkönig” (p. v.), are also very beautiful. Many are of a decidedly subjective cast, but for this the circumstance of their origin, and the fact that the author did not expect them to be used in public worship, will sufficiently account. Here and there there are doublets, and occasionally imagery which is rather startling; but and naturally enough the characteristic expressions and points of view of German 17th century. Pietism and of the “Covenant Theology” is easily enough endured. But the and its effects, originality, Scripturalism, variety and mastery of rhythmical forms, and genuine lyric character fully entitle them to the high place they hold.

Of the melodies in the original ed. of 1690
there are 19 by Neander himself, the known being those to Nos. viii. and xi. below.

The hymns by Neander which have passed into English, and have not already been referred to, are—

Hymns in English C. U.:

2. All my hope is grounded surely. A full and good tr. by Miss Winkworth, as No. 8 in her

3. Another tr. is: “All my Hope is fixed and grounded.”

By J. C. Jacobs, 1792, p. 17 (1722, p. 40), repeated in his

ed. 1732, p. 64, altered and beginning, “All my Hope is firmly grounded.”

According to tradition this was written in the summer of 1777, in a cave in the Neanderthal near Düsseldorf, while Neander was in enforced absence from his school duties (Aock, vi.

20). It is founded on Ps. cix. 24. 1686, p. 165, in 12 st. of 6 lines, and entitled, “The Joys of Summer and Autumn in Field and Forest.” The following note shows that the “Feeling for Nature” is not entirely modern.

“It is also a travelling hymn in summer or autumn for those who, on their way to Frankfurt on the Main, go up and down the river Rhine, where between Cologne and Mainz, mountains, cliffs, rocks and rocks are to be beheld with particular wonder; also in the district of Berg in the rocky region (the ‘Gieseln’ now called the Neanderthal), not far from Düsseldorf.”

The hymn is in Kuepp’s Ee., 1850, No.

2165 (1665, No. 2231), omitting st. 1. Tr.:—

Nearer, my God, to Thee.  [Nearness to God desired.]  Contributed to W. J. Fox’s Hymns and Anthems, 1841, No. lxxvi., as follows:—

"Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer to thee!"

E’en though it be a cross
That raiseth me:
Still all my song would be,
Nearer, my God, to thee—
Nearer to thee!

"Though like the wanderer,
The sun gone down,
Darkness be over me,
My rest a stone;
Yet in my dreams I’d be,
Nearer, my God, to thee—
Nearer to thee."

There let the way appear,
Steps unto heaven;
All that thou send’st to me
In mercy given;
Angels to beckon me
Nearer, my God, to thee—
Nearer to thee!

Then with my waking thoughts,
Bright with thy praise,
Out of my story griefs,
Bethel I’ll raise:
So by my woes to be
Nearer, my God, to thee—
Nearer to thee!

Or if on joyful wing
Cleaving the sky
Sun, moon, and stars forgot,
Upward I fly:
Still all my song shall be,
Nearer, my God, to thee—
Nearer to thee!"

The use of this hymn, generally with very slight alterations, but often with the omission of the last stanza, is very considerable in all English-speaking countries. It has also been translated into many European and other languages.

This hymn is a curious illustration of the mounting which is given to a hymn by the antecedents of its author. In the case of Painter’s “When all thy mercies, O my God,” and many other hymns of a like kind, no attempt has ever been made to alter its distinctive character as a hymn to the Father alone. With Mrs. Adams, being an Unitarian, the treatment is changed, notwithstanding the redeeming lines,

"Even though it be a Cross
That raiseth me:"

in the opening stanza. The following alterations and additions have been made to bring the hymn more into harmony with the views of the editors by whom it has been adopted.

1. The first change with which we are acquainted was the addition of the following stanza:—

"Christ alone beareth me
Where Thou dost shine:
Joint heir He makes me
Of the Divine:
In Christ my soul shall be,
Nearest, my God, to Thee—
Nearest to Thee!"

This is by the Rev. A. T. Russell, and was given in his Ps. & Hymns., 1851, from whence it passed into the Bap. Ps. & Hymns., 1858, Stepp, 1872, and others.

2. The second change and addition are:—

"Though by Thy bitter Cross
We raised be."
NEC QUISQUAM OCULIS VIDIT

and the doxology:

"Glory, O God, to Thee;
Glory be to Thee,
Almighty Trinity
In Unity
Glorious Mystery.

This addition is given in Skinner's Daily Holy:

3. Another change in the same direction is:

"And when on joyful wings
Left the bright sky
Upward I fly."

4. In Kennedy, 1863, the following is substituted for st. v.:

"And when my Lord again
Glorious shall come,
Mine be a dwelling-place
In Thy bright home,
There evermore to be
Nearer to Thee, my God!
Nearer to Thee!"

This same stanza is repeated in the Hymn for the Church Catholic, 1882, with line 6 as
5. In Bp. Bickersteth's note to this hymn
No. 312, he says:

"The Editor is as drunk from appending a closing verse
as this, or, if he would have suggested the following:

"There is my Father's home,
There is my Saviour's love,
Age after age to be
My God to Thee,
Nearer to Thee,"

In addition to the above alterations and changes, "Nearer, my God to Thee," has been rewritten, by Bp. How, as his prayer. See above. G. J. Stevenson's note in his unnotated ed. of the H. Comp. 1876, has the worthy of attention for its scholastic use of this hymn.

Needham, John, was the son of John Needham, Baptist Minister, of Hitchen, Herts, but the date of his birth is unknown. He would doubtless be educated by his father, who was a tutor, and in his repute as a learned man.

In 1750 Needham became co-pastor with John Beddome at the Baptist meeting-house in Pithey, Bristol; but two years later, Beddome having retired through age, a violent controversy arose in the Church with regard to a continuance of the plan of co-pastorship. As the result, Needham and a number of his friends removed to a Baptist meeting-house in Callowhill Street, where Mr. Foot was pastor. For a time the two societies used the same building at different hours, but in 1753 they were united, with Mr. Needham and Mr. Foot as co-pastors. It is known that up to 1774 this arrangement continued, and it is also known that in 1787, both Mr. Needham and Mr. Foot having died, the Callowhill Street Church became extinct, but which of the two pastors was the survivor is not known. The date of Needham's death is unknown. It was probably about 1796. In 1768 he pub. Hymns Devotional and Moral on various Subjects, collected chiefly from the Holy Scriptures, kc., Bristol, S. Farley, 1768. These hymns are 263 in all, and whilst none of them possess great excellence, yet several are of a pleasing and useful character. During the past 120 years several have appeared in Nonconformist hymn-books, and specially in the wives of the Baptists.

Of these the following are still in C. U.:

1. Ashamed of Christ! my soul disowns.
3. Glory to God, Who reigns above. Jesus, the Messiah.
7. Kind are the words that Jesus speaks. Christ the Strengthener.
8. Lord, ere [Now Lord] the heavenly seed is sown. Parable of the Sower.
9. Methinks the last great day is come. The Judgment.
10. Rise, O my soul, pursue the path. The Example of the Saints.
11. See how the little toiling ant. Youth for Christ.
13. To praise the ever beamless light. The Lord's Prayer.
14. When some kind shepherd from his fold. The Lost Sheep. From this "O how divine, how sweet the joy." in Hatfield's Church H. Bk., New York, 1797, is taken.

Neely, Henry, a. of a map and heraldic engraver in the Strand, London, was b. in London, Jan. 29, 1708. He was educated for the Law, and practised as a solicitor. In 1817 he published a volume of Poems, and in 1823 a volume of Dramatic and Miscellaneous Poetry.
There were followed by contributions to several magazines; the delivery of Lectures on English Poetry at the Russell, and again at the Western Literary Institution, in 1827; and the publication of his largest work, The History of English History, 1827. His mind gave way under the pressure of work, and he died by his own hand, Feb. 7, 1828. His Lectures on English Poetry, with Miscellaneous Tales and Poems, were pub. posthumously, in 1829.
In this work the following "Hymns for Children" (p. 380) are found:

Usually given with the same first line but altered as NEHRING, JOHANN CHRISTIAN

4. Remember Him, for He is great. Remember thy Creator.

Of these hymns No. 3 is widely used. [J. J.]

Nehring, Johann Christian, s. of J. C. Nehring, lawyer in Gotha, was b. at Gotha, Dec. 29, 1671. He studied at first medicine and afterwards theology at the University of Halle. In 1700 he became rector of the school at Essen, and, in 1703, inspector of the foundation scholars in the Orphanage at Halle. He was then, in 1706, appointed pastor of Nemendorf (or Naundorf) on the Petersburg, near Halle, and in the end of 1715 pastor at Morl, near Halle, on the Bernburg road. He d. at Morl, April 29, 1736 (Allg. Deutsche Biog. xxiii. 394, &c.) Five hymns by Nehring are in Freylinghausen's G. B., 1704. A sixth is noted under Müller, M., p. 776, ii. [J. M.]

Neuendorf, Ernst, of Hamburg, was b. on 5th of March, 1671. Died in 1733. He was an excellent preacher, and edited a well-known prayer-book, entitled Kern aller Gebete (Br., 1709; complete ed. Breslau, 1900) which passed through many editions. He wrote over thirty hymns, simple, heartfelt and useful, which became very popular in Silesia, and almost all of which passed into Burg's G. B., Breslau, 1746, and later eds. They mostly appeared, with his initials, in the 9th ed., s. d., but about 1700, of the Breslau Vollständige Kirchen- und Haus-Musik. Those which have been tr. are:

1. Adam hat im Paradies. Christmas. 1700, as above, p. 71, in 8. tr. by H. J. Backoll in his Hymn from the German, 1842, p. 5. The trs. of st. i., ii., vi. were repeated in the Dalton Hospital H. Bk. 1848: the Rugby School H. Bk., 1850 and 1876, and others.

2. Great God of Ages! by whose power. A tr. of st. i., ii., vi. as No. 10 in J. F. Thrupp's Ps. & Hys., 1853.

NEUMANN, CASPAR

Neumann, Caspar, s. of Martin Neumann, city tax-collector at Breslau, was b. at Breslau, Sept. 14, 1648. He entered the University of Jena in Sept. 1667, graduated M. A. in August 1670, and was for some time one of the University lecturers. On Nov. 30, 1673, he was ordained at the request of Duke Ernst of Gotha as travelling chaplain to his son, Prince Christian, whom he accompanied through Western Germany, Switzerland, Northern Italy, and Southern France; returning to Gotha in 1675. In 1676 he became court preacher at Altenburg, but in Dec. 1677 was appointed deacon of the St. Mary Magdalene Church at Breslau, and pastor there in 1680. Finally, in Feb. 1697 he became pastor of St. Elizabeth's at Breslau, inspector of the churches and schools of the district, and first professor of theology in the two Gymnasia at Breslau. He d. at Breslau, Jan. 27, 1713 (S. J. Ehriandt's Presbyterologische Schlesien i. 211; Allg. Deutsche Biog. xxiii. 192, &c.). Neumann was a celebrated preacher, and edited a well-known prayer-book, entitled Kern aller Gebete (Br., 1680; complete ed. Breslau, 1900) which passed through many editions. Neumann, Gottfried, was b. at Hohenheida, early 1700, apparently Nov. 30, 1698.
He studied at the University of Leipzig, and thereafter was licensed as a candidate of theology (i.e., general preacher). In 1710 he joined the staff of the Halle Orphanage, but was expelled from Halle as a Separatist, and went to Hannau. He was then for a number of years receiver of rents (Fruchtschreiber) at Berheim in Wetteravia, to the Count Lauenburg Meierholz, living later at Himbach, and at Marienberg (1736-38). Himbach was the headquarters of Johann Friedrich Reck, one of the principal leaders of the sect of the "Inspired," and between 1714 and 1734 Neumann generally speaking belonged to this sect.
During the visits which Count N. L. von Zinzdorf paid about 1730, Neumann met the poet FRIEDRICH, who robed Neumann of all he had with him, save his prayer-book and a little money saved up in the clothes he was wearing. He returned to Magdeburg, but could obtain no employment there, nor in Lüneburg, nor in Hannau, nor in Hamburg, to which in succession the friends he made passed him on. In the beginning of December he went to Kiel, where he found a few weeks later in the person of Nicolaus Becker, a native of Thuringia, and then chief pastor at Kiel. Day after day passing without an evening, till the end of the month the tutor in the family of the Judge Stephan Henning fell into disgrace and took sudden flight from Kiel. By Becker's recommendation Neumann received the vacant position, and this sudden end of his anxieties was the occasion of the writing of his hymn as noted below. In Henning's house the time passed happily till he had saved enough to proceed to Königsberg, where he matriculated June 21, 1633, as a student of law. He remained five years, studying also poetry under Dach (p. 374, ii.), and maintaining himself as a family tutor. But this time (in 1643) he again lost all his property, and this time by fire. In 1648 he left Königsberg, was for a short time at Warsaw, and spent 1649-50 at Thorn. He was then in Danzig, and in Sept. 1651 we find him in Hamburg. In the end of 1651 he returned to Thuringia, and brought himself under the notice of Duke Wilhelm II. of Sachse-
Weimar, the chief or president of the Fruit-bearing Society, the principal German literary union of the 17th cent. The Duke, apparently in 1652, appointed him court poet, librarian and registrar of the administration at Weimar: and finally secretary of the Ducal Archives. In Sept. 1653 he was admitted as a member of the Fruit-bearing Society, of which he became secretary in 1656, and of which he wrote a history (Dber Neu-Sprotscnde Deutschland, Nürnberg and Weimar, 1668); and, in 1679, became also a member of the Pegnitz Order (see p. 144, i.). In 1681 he became blind, but was permitted to retain his emoluments till his death, at Weimar, July 18, 1681. [K. Goedelke's Granditria, vol. iii., 1887, p. 74; Allg. Deutsche Bog., xxiii. 539; Weimar's Jahres-Buch, vol. i., 1835, p. 176. &c. The dates given by the different authorities vary exceedingly, and are quite irreconcilable. In the registers at Schleusingen Neumark is last mentioned in 1636, and then as in the Third Form. Dr. von Bamberg, director of the Gymnasium at Gotha, informs me that Neumark's name appears in the matriculation book there under January 31, 1641; and as one of the "newly entered" scholars.] A long list of Neumark's poetic works is given by Goedelke. A large proportion of his secular poems are pastoral, or else occasional poems written to order at Weimar; and in all there is little freshness, or originality in expression, or grace of feeling. As a musician, and as a hymn-writer, he is of more importance. His hymns appeared in his (1) Poetisch- und Musikalisches Lustwälchen, Hamburg, 1652; the enlarged ed. entitled (2) Fortepianist-Musikalisch: Poetischer Lustwälch, Jena, 1657; and (3) Unterzeichnete, so wol gottseliger Ambacht: als auch zu christischen Tagungen und zu wundersamen Lieder, Weimar, 1715. Of the 34 hymns in these three works a few are found in the German hymnbooks of the 17th cent., and three or four still survive. The best of Neumark's hymns are those of Trust in God, and patient waiting for His help under trial and suffering; and one of these may be fairly called classical and imperishable. It is:—

Wer nur den lieben Gott liest walten. Trust in God. 1st pub. in his Fortepianist-musikalisch: Poetischer Lustwälch, Jena, 1657, p. 20, in 7 st. of 6 l., entitled "A hymn of consolation, That God will care for and preserve His own in His own time. After the saying 'Cast thy burden on the Lord, and He shall sustain thee' (Ps. lv. 22). This, his finest hymn, was written in 1641, at Kiel, when after unsuccessful attempts to procure employment he became a tutor in the family of the judge Stephen Henning. Of this appointment Neumark, in his Thränendes Haus-Kreuzt, Weimar, 1681, speaks thus:—

"Which good fortune coming suddenly, and as if fallen from heaven, greatly rejoiced me, and on that very day I composed to the honour of my beloved Lord the here and there well-known hymn 'Wer nur den lieben Gott liest walten'; and had certainly cause enough to thank the Divine compassion for such unlooked for grace shown to me."

As the date of its composition is thus December, 1641, or at latest Jan. 1642, it is certainly strange that it was not pub. in his Lustwälchen, Hamburg, 1652. In that volume he does give, at p. 32, a piece entitled "a hymn of consolation, when, in 1646, through a dreadful fire I came to my last farthing." The apocryphal story, according to which the hymn was written at Hamburg, about 1653 (see Miller's Singers and Songs, 1899, p. 91), has not been traced earlier than 1744. The hymn speedily became popular, and passed into hymn-books all over Germany (Leipziger Post, 1673, No. 1169), and still holds its place as in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1853, No. 73.

Lauxmann, in Kick, viii. 348-396, relates that it was the favourite hymn of Magdalena Nibbyla (d. 1674), wife of the Elector Johann Georg II. of Saxony; was sung, by his command, at the funeral, in 1740, of King Frederick Wilhelm I. of Prussia; was sung, or rather played, by the first hand of missionaries from Herrmannsburg as they set sail from Brunshausen on the Eilie, (near Stade) on Oct. 25, 1853, &c.

The beautiful melody by Neumark was probably composed in 1641 along with the hymn, and was pub. with it in 1857. On it J. S. Bach composed a cantata. It is well known in England through its use by Mendelssohn in his 'St. Paul' ("To Thee, O Lord, I yield my spirit"), and from its introduction into H. A. & M. (Bremen), and many other collections.

Translations in C. U. —

Neumeister, Erdmann, s. of Johann Neumeister, schoolmaster, organist, &c., at Uechteritz, near Weizenfeld, was b. at Uechteritz, May 12, 1671. He entered the University of Leipzig in 1689, graduated m.a. in 1695, and was then for some time University lecturer. In June 1697 he was appointed assistant pastor at Bibra, and in 1698 pastor there, and assistant superintendent of the Eckartsberg district. He was then, in 1704, called by Duke Johann Georg, to Weizenfeld as tutor to his only daughter, and assistant court-preacher, and shortly afterwards court-preacher. After the death of this prince, Neumeister was invited by the Duke’s sister, Countess Erdmann II. von (she had married Count Erdmann II. von Prommitz) to Sorau, where on New Year’s Day, 1706, he entered on the office of senior court-preacher, contristoral, and chaplain. In 1713, he accepted the appointment of Pastor of St. John’s Church at Hamburg, entering on his duties there Sept. 29, 1715. He d. at Hamburg, Aug. 18 (not 28), 1756 (Bode, p. 120; Allg. Deutsche Biog., xxii. 538, &c.).

Neumeister was well known in his day as an earnest preacher, as a vehement upholder of High and eloquent preacher, as a warm supporter of the Lutherans, and as a keen controversialist against the Lutheran and Moravian by means of the pulpit as well as the pen. His underlying motive was doubtless to preserve the simplicity of the faith from the subjective novelties of the period. He was the author of one of the earliest historical-critical works on German Poetry (1695); and of many cantatas for use in church, of which form of service he may be regarded as the originator. He had begun to write hymns during his student days, and in later years his composition was a favourite Sunday employment. He takes high rank among the German hymn-writers of the 18th cent., not only for the number of his productions (over 800), but also for their abiding value. In the number of his productions (over 800), but also for their abiding value. The number of well-known hymns of the 18th and 17th cent.; and many of his later productions are inferior. Of his earlier efforts, many are too and hold their place as standard German hymns; and deservedly so, for their simple, musical form, their strong, deep, earnest faith, and Christian experience, and for their clear-cut sayings which have almost passed into proverbial use. They appeared principally in the following works —

1. Der Zugang zum Gnadenstuhl Jesu Christi. This was a devotional manual of preparation for Holy Communion, with interspersed hymns. It was printed in Hamburg in 1701, the 2nd ed. 1702, 3rd 1712, 4th 1715. The earliest ed. of which precise details are available is the 5th ed. 1717, from which Wiss. II, 231, quotes the first lines of all the 77 hymns (the page reference to the earlier ed. given by Fischer appears to be conjectural); and the earliest ed. available for collation was the 4th ed. 1724 (Geisingen University Lib.). In the later eds. many hymns are repeated from his other works. 2. Fünf schöne Kirchen-Andachten, 1716 (Wernigerode Library). It has the 1704 ed. of his Geistliche Versammlungen, and similar predictions. A second set (Fortgesetzte) appeared in Hamburg in 1726 (Hamburg Town Library); and a third set (Fortsetzerlich Theil) at Hamburg in 1753 (Hamburg Town Library). 3. Germanisches Nachklang, Hamburg, 1719 (Hamburg Town Library). This has 76 hymns on the Gospel for Sundays and Festivals, and 60 written to form common clines of the season. A second set of 66 appeared as The Anderer Theil at Hamburg in 1729 (Hamburg Town Library).

Those of Neumeister’s hymns which have passed into English are:

I. Gott verlässt die Seinen nicht. Eise fahret hin ihrer Sorgen. Cross and Consolation. In his Evang. Nachklang, 1718, p. 119, p. 149, in 5 st. of 8 l., appointed for the 25th S. after Trinity. In Burg’s G. B., Breslau, 1746, it appears in two forms. No. 127 is the original with alterations, and arranged in 11 st. of 4 l., with the refrain "Gott verlässt die Seinen nicht." No. 128 is a form in 3 st. of 6 l., rewritten to the melody, "Jesus meine Zuversicht." (p. 709, &c.), and beginning with st. iii. l. 5 of the original, viz., "Gott verlässt die Seinen nicht. Nach dem Seufzen, nach dem Weinen." This second form is noted at p. 444. ii.

It is a hymn on the Gifts of the Magi, and the spiritual sense in which we can offer the same — the Gold of Faith, the Frankincense of Prayer, the Myrrh of Penitence. In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 208. Tr. as—

ii. Jesus nimmt die Sunder an! Baget doch diese Trostwelt Allen. Lent. The best hymn of its author. First pub. in his Evang. Nachklang, 1718, No. 47, p. 98, in 8 st. of 6 l., founded on the Gospel for the 3rd S. after Trinity (St. Luke xv. 1-7), and also suggested by St. Matt. x. 28, and Isaiah i. 18. It has come into very extensive German use, especially at Mission services at home and abroad. In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 110. The trs. are:—

1. This man sinners doth receive. In full by Dr. H. Mills, in his Horae Germanicae, 1845 (p. 73). His trs. of st. i., ii., iv., v. are included in the Amer. Luth. Gen. Synod’s Coll., 1850-52, No. 844.

2. Jesus sinners doth receive! Spread the word of consolation. A good tr. of st. i., ii. — by A. T. Russell, as No. 47 in the Dalston Hospital H. Bk., 1846, repeated in his own Ps. & Hys., 1851.

3. Jesus is the sinners’ Friend. A good and full tr. by Miss Dunn in her Hymns from the German, 1857, p. 82. Her trs. of st. ii., iv., are No. 46 in Dr. Page’s Treuher’s Coll., 1864.

4. Sinners Jesus will receive. A full and good tr. by Mrs. Bevan in her Songs of Eternal Life, 1858, p. 23. Repeated in full in L. Reinhues’s Church at Sea, 1868, p. 50, and, abridged, in the Eng. Presb. Ps. & Hys., 1867, and Flett’s Coll., Paisley, 1871. In Dr. W. F. Stevenson’s Hys. for Ch. & Hymn, 1873, st. i., vi., vii. are included, altered, and beginning "Jesus sinners will receive; Say this word of grace to all;" and this form is also in the Bap. Hyl., 1879.

Other trs. are:—

(1) "My Jesus the sinner receives." By Miss Warner, 1869, p. 87. (2) "Jesus sinners doth receive" Tell all to a. By R. Masse in his Library of Best, 1877.

The hymn "Jesus sinners doth receive!" is one of the most popular German hymns, and is frequently sung in German and English in churches throughout the world. Neumeister’s hymns were also translated and set to music in many other languages, making them a significant contribution to the development of hymnody in the 18th century.
Neuss, Heinrich Georg, s. of Andreas Neuss, surgeon at Elbinggerode in the Harz, was b. at E., March 11, 1634, and entered the University of Erfurt in 1677 as a student of theology. In 1680 he became a private tutor at Heilsberg, near Blankenburg, and in 1683 examiner, and in 1684 rector of the school at Blankenburg in the Harz. In 1690 he was appointed assistant preacher at Woffenburg, and soon afterwards diaconus of the Heinrichstadt church there. For holding prayer meetings, &c., he was denounced as a Pietist, and chose to resign rather than desist. In the same year, 1692, he became preacher at Heilsburg, and travelling Chaplain to Duke Rudolph August of Brunswick, who, at Easter, 1695, appointed him superintendent at Rummel for the district of Asbeck. In 1696 he received the degree of D. D. from the University of Giessen, and became superintendent, consistorialrath, and chief pastor of the Church of SS. Sylvester and George at Wernigerode, being instituted on Feb. 6. His appointment there was at first unpopular, for he was suspected of Separatist tendencies, but he soon gained the love of the people by his earnest and loving practical Christianity, and by the interest he took in the development of Church music, for which under his care Wernigerode became famous in all the district.

The hymns of Neuss appeared principally in his Hymn.-Opfer zum Bau der Halberstadt, das ist, Gesellige Lieder, &c.; of this the 1st ed. with 100 hymns was pub. at Lüneburg, 1692; and the 2nd ed., with 34 additional, at Wernigerode, 1703 (both in Berlin), most of the pieces bearing the dates of their composition. They were received with great favour in Pietist circles, and Freising- bausen in his Geistertche G. B., of less than 36 (5 in pt. 1., 1704; 33 in pt. ii., 1714).

In the Wernigerode G. B., 1712, edited by Neuss, 5 are included, and 5 more in the ed. of 1730. Only a few are found in

Neuss, Heinrich Georg,

Neuss, Heinrich Georg,
in 1698, another version of the original text was published which differed considerably, both from "The Second edition corrected," and the original of 1686. The copy before us is dated 1698. The titlepages of the three books are:

(1) A New Version of the Psalms of David, Fitted to the Tunes used in Churches. By N. Tate and N. Brady. London, Printed by M. Clark, for the Company of Stationers, 1698. This has a dedication to King William signed by "N. Brady, N. Tate."

(2) A New Version of the Psalms of David, Fitted to the Tunes used in Churches. By N. Tate and N. Brady. The Second Edition corrected, London, Printed by M. Clark, for the Company of Stationers, 1698. This also has a dedication to the King signed by "N. Brady, N. Tate."

(3) A New Version of the Psalms of David, Fitted to the Tunes used in Churches. By N. Tate and N. Brady. London, Printed by T. Hodgkin, for the Company of Stationers, 1698. And are to be sold at Stationers' Hall, near Ludgate, and by most Booksellers. This has the same dedication as Nos. 1 and 2, and, in addition, the Authorization dated "At the Court at Kensington, December 3, 1698. Present the King's Most Excellent Majesty in Council."

As examples of the changes made in the text of the New Version we will give quotations from Ps. xviii., verse 7.

(1) From the Original edition, 1696

"When God arose to take my part,
The trembling Earth did quake for fear;
From their firm Posts the Hills did start,
Nor durst his dreadful Fury bear."

(2) From "The Second Edition corrected."

London, M. Clark, 1698.

"When God arose to take my part,
The conscious Earth did quake for fear;
From their firm Posts the Hills did start,
Nor could his dreadful Fury bear."

"When God arose my part to take,
The conscious Earth did quake for fear;
The Hills did at his presence start,
Nor durst his dreadful Fury bear."

In these quotations the italics represent the changes made in the 1698 (Hodgkin) edition when compared with "The Second Edition corrected" of 1698 (Clark). This is just one of hundreds of instances of changes in the text. The text of the Original of 1696 was not again reprinted, and it was natural to expect that the publication of one of the other two would cease. This, however, did not take place for over a hundred years. We have before us two copies of the New Version, both of which have been in use at public worship, and both dated 1796, as follows:

(1) A New Version of the Psalms of David Fitted to the Tunes used in Churches. By N. Brady, D.D., Chaplain in Ordinary, and N. Tate, Esq., Post-Laureate to His Majesty. London, Printed. MDCCXCII.

This edition is a reprint of No. 2, "The Second Edition corrected," pub. by Clark in 1698. The next is:

(2) A New Version of the Psalms of David, Fitted to the Tunes used in Churches. By N. Brady, D.D., Chaplain in Ordinary, and N. Tate, Esq., Post-Laureate to His Majesty. London, Printed by M. Brown, for the Company of Stationers, and are to be Sold at Stationers' Hall, near Ludgate-Street, and by most Booksellers. MDCCXCIV.

This is a reprint of the edition pub. by Hodgkin in 1698 (No. 3 above). It has the Authorization of the King dated Dec. 3, 1696, and the Bishop of London's approval and good wishes for success, dated May 23, 1697. From this it is clear that these two texts were reprinted, and were used side by side in public worship for more than one hundred years, as it was only when the printing of the New Version was undertaken by the University Press that the reprinting of Clark’s ed. No. 2 above, “The Second Edition corrected,” 1668, was gradually suspended, and the text approved by the Bishop of London, on “May 30, 1689” (No. 3 above, printed by J. Hodgkin), became the absolute Tate & Brady of the future. The issue of this Tate & Brady continued for many years, and is that usually quoted by hymnologists as the “original text.” In the “Selection of Psalms,” which was given in the American Prayer Book, 1826, those taken from the New Version were from this text.

The following list of first lines are from this text of 1689—the sub-lines being the first lines of context in C. U. which have been taken from the paraphrase of any given Psalm:

The earliest notice of the Supplement is the following advertisement at the end of the 8vo ed. of the New Version, printed by Holkin, 1806:—

"A Supplement to the New Version of Psalms by N. Tate and Mr. Brady, containing 1. The usual Hymns, Creed, Lord's Prayer, Ten Commandments, all set to their proper Tunes; with additional Hymns for the Holy Sacrament, &c. 2. Select Psalms done in Particular Measures, to make up the whole variety of Tunes that are in the old Version, with Duplication in most of those to be sung in Christ's, &c. 3. And Hymns, &c. with Tunes (Treble and Bass), proper to each of them, and all the rest of the Psalms. 4. The Sixth Edition Corrected; and much Enlarged With the addition of Plain Instructions for all those who are desirous to Learn or Improve themselves in Psalmody; near 30 New Tunes, composed by several of the best Masters; and a Table of Psalms suited to the Best Masters; and a Table of Psalms and Parts of the Church, &c. With Tables of all the Psalms of the Old Testament, and of the Psalms of the New Testament, and of Dr. Patrick's Verses, divided into a compleat Psalmody. Useful for Teachers and Learners of either Version ... In the Savoy: Printed for Veni, Creator in tua gloria, Creator come, Inspire the souls, &c.

This advertisement was repeated, with slight variations, in the 32mo ed. of 1809. The earliest fulfilment of the promised Supplement that we have been enabled to see is in the 3rd edition of 1802. Its contents are:

1. O God, we praise. 2. Come Holy Ghost, Creator, come, And visit, &c.
3. Veni Creator in tua gloria, Create, Creator, &c.
4. Now bless Israel's Lord and God, Benedictus. 5. Lord, let Thy grace fill all with joy. Magnificat. 6. Lord, Grant we may now depart. Nunc Dimittis. 7. I steadfastly believe in God, the Creed. 8. The Lord is in heaven, let us be hallowed, &c.
9. Our Father Who art in heaven, hallowed be, &c. 10. God spake these words, O Israel, hear. Ten Commandments.

As this 6th ed. of the Supplement, 1708, is of special importance to the musical student, we append the title and some details concerning its musical contents. The title is:

A Supplement to the New Version of Psalms by Dr. Brady and Mr. Tate; containing, The Psalms in Particular Measures; the usual Hymns, Creed, Lord's Prayer, Ten Commandments, for the Holy Sacrament, &c., with Gloria Patri, and Tunes (Treble and Bass), proper to each of them, and all the rest of the Psalms. The Sixth Edition Corrected; and much Enlarged. With the addition of Plain Instructions for all those who are desirous to Learn or Improve themselves in Psalmody; near 30 New Tunes, composed by several of the best Masters; and a Table of Psalms suited to the Best Masters; and a Table of Psalms and Parts of the Church, &c. With Tables of all the Psalms of the Old Testament, and of Dr. Patrick's Verses, divided into a compleat Psalmody. Useful for Teachers and Learners of either Version ... In the Savoy: Printed for Veni, Creator in tua gloria, Creator come, Inspire the souls, &c.
This edition contains 63 psalm tunes, and 12 tunes for the Hymns of the Church, 75 in all. Of these tunes 28 are marked thus *, as being new. These are:

There were also New Tunes to the Magnificent, The Creed, The Lord’s Prayer (1st metre), the Ten Commandments, the Benedicite, and the Hymn on the Divine Use of Music. How far the word new with regard to these 28 tunes means newly composed for this edition of the Supplement, or published therein for the first time, is doubtful. Courteville’s tune, St. James’s, for instance, is in the 7th ed. of Playford’s Pcaler, 1701, and was not absolutely new then.

The earliest association of the New Version with what is known as the University Press with which we are acquainted, is the following:

At the end, after the Gloria Patri, are the following Hymns:

1. High up the swell our tuneful notes.
2. Hark, the herald angels sung.
3. Christ from the dead is raised and made.
4. My God, and is Thy table spread.
5. Awake my soul, and with the sun.

These 5 hymns, and no more, are in a 1791 Cambridge edition of the N. V. printed by “J. Archdeacon, Printer to the University”; and the 1802 edition printed by “J. Burgess,” printer to the University. These hymns are also given in an Oxford edition “Printed by Dawson & Co., 1803; and in 1807 edition “Printed at the Clarendon Press by Dawson, Besley, and Cooke, Printers to the University.”

Some time after 1807, two additional hymns were added, viz.:

6. Jesus Christ is risen to-day, Our triumphant.
7. Glory to Thee, my God, this night.

But the exact date at which they were inserted we have been unable to determine.

In addition to these University editions of the N. V. and the 2 Hymns, we find J. F. and C. Harington issued the following in 1779:

Hymns taken from the Supplement to Tate and Brady’s Psalms.

In this, and subsequent editions, including 1787, the 5 hymns in the University edition of 1782 are not found. These hymns are thus distinctly associated with the Cambridge and Oxford University issues of the N. Version.

Miller, in his Singers and Songs, &c., 1863, p. 173, says concerning these hymns:

""My God, and is Thy table spread?" This is inserted as a Communion Hymn in the Prayer Book of the Church of England. It was introduced by a Univers al printer about half a century ago. He was a Dissenter, and filled up the blank leaves at the end of the Prayer Book with hymns he thought would be acceptable. The authorities did not interfere, and the hymn thus took its place. In some books there are two hymns by Doddridge, one printed by Wensley, one by Sternhold or J. Marotley, and Bishop Key’s Morning and Evening Hymns, altered and adhered.

In the Oxford Essays for 1858, in an article on “Hymns and Hymn-Writers,” by C. B. Pearson, he speaks of the introduction of hymns to Tate and Brady being due to the "University printers in modern times," moreover particularly to one about half a century back [i.e. 1808], who being a Dissenter, thought fit to fill up the blank leaves at the end of the Prayer Book with hymns suggested by himself.

This is doubtless the source of Miller's information. Both Pearson and Miller are very vague in their dates. Pearson's date is certainly 1808, and Miller circa 1819. The credit for the compilation of the hymns appeared in the Cambridge edition of the N. Version in 1782, printed by "J. Archdeacon, Printer to the University." Was "J. Archdeacon" a Dissenter? We cannot say.

Newman, John Henry, D.D. The hymnological side of Cardinal Newman's life and work is so small when compared with the causes which have ruled and the events which have accompanied his life as a whole, that the best we of biographical facts and summary of poetical works comprises that properly belongs to this work. Cardinal Newman was the eldest of John Newman, and was b. in London, Feb. 21, 1801. He was educated at Ealing under Dr. John Nicholls, and at Trinity College, Oxford, where he graduated in honours in 1820, and became a Fellow of Oriel in 1822. Taking Holy Orders in 1824, he was for a short time Vice-Principal of St. Alban's Hall, and then Tutor of Oriel. His appointment to St. Mary's, Oriel, in 1826, in the spring of 1826. In 1827 he was Public Examiner, and in 1830 one of the Select University Preachers. His association with Keble, Pusey, and others, in what is known as "The Oxford Movement," together with the periodical publication of the Tracts for the Times, are matters of history. It is well known how that Tract 90, entitled Remarks on Certain Passages in The Thirty-nine Articles, in 1841, was followed by his retirement to Littlemore: his formal resignation, in February, 1844, of all that he had said against Rome; his resignation in September of the same year of St. Mary's and Littlemore; and of his formal application to be received into the communion of the Church of Rome, Oct. 8, 1845. In 1846 he became Father Superior of the Oratory of St. Philip Neri, at Birmingham; in 1852 Reector of the newly founded Roman Catholic University, at Dublin; and in 1862 he removed to the Edgbaston Oratory, Birmingham. In 1879 he was created a Cardinal, and thus received the highest dignity it is in the power of the Pope to bestow. Cardinal Newman's prose works are numerous, and his Parochial Sermons especially being very popular. His Apologia pro Vita Sua, 1864, is a lucid exposition and masterly defence of his life and work.
Cardinal Newman's poetical work began with poems and lyrical pieces which he contributed to the British Magazine, in 1832-4 (with other pieces by Kelke and others), under the title of Lyra Apostolica. In 1836 these poems were collected and published under the same title, and Greek letters were added to distinguish the authorship of each piece. The book was not a success. Only a few of his poems from this work have come into use as hymns. The most notable is, "Lead, kindly Light" (p. 607, i.). His Tract for the Times, No. 75, On the Roman Brethren, 1846, contained translations of 14 Latin hymns. Of these 10 were repeated in his Verses on Religious Subjects, 1835, and his Verses on Various Occasions, 1868, and translations of 24 additional Latin hymns were added. Several of these translations are in C. U., the most widely known being "Nunc Sancte nobis." "Come, Holy Ghost, Who ever One" from his collection of Latin hymns from the Roman and Paris Brethren, and other sources, was published as Hymni Ecclesiatis, in 1858, and again in 1865. His Dream of Gerontius, a poem from which his fine hymn, "Praise to the Holiest in the height," is taken, appeared in his Verses on Various Occasions, in 1868. Cardinal Newman's influence on hymnody has been of a marked character. Up to this, original pieces, little more than half-a-dozen translations from the Latin, are all that can claim to rank with his imitable prose.

Newton, James, A.M., was b. at Cheynies, Bucks, in the year 1732. At the age of 17 he went to London, where he joined the Baptist church under the care of the Rev. B. Wallin [Wallin, B.]. In 1757 he became assistant minister to the Rev. J. Tommas, pastor of the Baptist church in the Pitby, Bristol; and in 1770, classical tutor at the Baptist College in that city. He filled both these offices with honour and usefulness until his death in 1789. As a hymn-writer he is known by one hymn only, "Praise, let Christ, my wondrous grace," which appeared in 3rd ed. of the Bristol Coll. of Arts & Sciences, 1765, No. 381; Rippon's Select, 1787, and others of the older hymn-books. In the Baptist New Ser., 1828; the Baptist Hymn Book, 1858; the New Cong., 1859, and others, it begins with st. 1: "Let the children grace descend on those." In this form it is widely used.

Newton, John, who was b. in London, July 24, 1725, and d. there Dec. 21, 1807, occupied an unique position among the founders of the Evangelical School, due as much to the romance of his young life and the striking history of his conversion, as to his force of character. His mother, a pious Dissenter, stored his childish mind with Scripture, but died when he was seven years old. At the age of eleven he went to sea, and during which he learned the rudiments of Latin, he went to sea with his father. His life at sea seems with wonderful escapes, vivid dreams, and sailor recklessness. He grew into an abandoned and godless sailor. The religious fits of his boyhood changed into settled infidelity, through the study of Shaftesbury and the instruction of one of his comrades. Disappointing repeatedly the plans of his father, he was flogged as a deserter from the navy, and for fifteen months lived, half-starved and ill-treated, in apparent degradation under a slave-dealer in Africa. The one restraining influence of his life was his faithful love for his future wife, Mary Cuttey, formed when he was seventeen, and she only in her fourteenth year. A chance reading of Thomas Kempis sowed the seed of his conversion; which quickened under the awful contemplations of a night spent in steering a water-logged vessel in the face of apparent death (1748). He was then twenty-three. The six following years, during which he commanded a slave ship, matured his Christian belief. Nine years more, spent chiefly at Liverpool, in intercourse with Whitefield, Wesley, and Nonconformists, in the study of Hebrew and Greek, in exercises of devotion and occasional preaching among the Dissenters, elapsed before his ordination to the cure of Olney, Bucks (1764). The Olney period was the most fruitful of his life. His zeal in pastoral visiting, preaching and prayer-meetings was unwearying. He formed his lifelong friendship with Cowper [see Cowper, William], and became the spiritual father of Scott the commentator. At Olney his chief works—Omicron's Letters (1774); Olney Hymns (1779); Gildpear, written from Olney, though pub. 1781—were composed. As rector of St. Mary Weelthorpe, London, in the centre of the Evangelical movement (1789—1807) his zeal was as ardent as before. In 1805, when no longer able to read his text, his reply when pressed to discontinue preaching, was, "What, shall the old African blasphemer stop while he can speak!" The story of his sins and his conversion, published by himself, and the subject of lifelong allusion, was the basis of his influence; but it would have been little but for the vigour of his mind (shown even in Africa by his reading Euclid drawing its figures on the sand), his warm heart, candour, tolerance, and piety. These qualities gained him the friendship of Hannah More, Cecil, Willhams, and others; and his renown as a guide in experimental religion made him the centre of a host of inquirers, with whom he maintained patient, loving, and generally judicious correspondence, of which a monument remains in the often beautiful letters of Gildpear. As a hymn-writer, Montgomery says that he was surpassed by Cowper. But Lord Selburne's contrast of the "manliness" of Newton and the "tender" of Cowper is far juster. A comparison of the hymns of both in The Book of Praise will show no great inequality between them. Amid much that is bold, tame, and matter-of-fact, his rich acquaintance with Scripture, knowledge of the heart, directness, and force, and a certain sailor imagination, tell strongly. The one splendid hymn of praise, "Glorious things of thee are spoken," in the Olney collection, is his. "Oth there is above all others" has a depth of realizing love, sustained excellence of expression, and case of development. "How sweet the name of Jesus sounds," is in Scriptural richness superior, and in structure, cadence, and almost tenderness, equal to Cowper's "Oh! for a closer walk with God." The most characteristic hymns are those which depict in the language of intense humiliation his mourning for the abiding sins of his regenerate life, and the sense of the withdrawal of God's face, coincident with the never-failing conviction of acceptance in The Beloved. The feeling may be seen in the speeches, writings, and epistles of his whole life. For its bearing on his relations with Cowper, see Olney Hymns and Cowper, William.

A large number of Newton's hymns have some personal history connected with them, or were associated with circumstances of importance. These are annotated under their respective first lines. Of the rest, the known history of which is confined to the fact that they appeared in the Olney Hymns, 1779, the following are in C. U.:

1. Be still, my heart, these anxious cares. Confine.
2. Begone, unbeful, my Saviour is near. Trust.
3. By the poor widow's oil and meal. Providence.
4. Chief Shepherd of Thy chosen sheep. On behalf of Ministers.
7. Fix my heart and eyes on Thine. True Happiness.
8. From Egypt lately freed. The Pilgrim's Song.
9. He Who on earth as man was known. Christ the Rock.
11. How blest are they to whom the Lord. Gospel Privileges.
13. How tedious and tasteless the hours. Fellowship with Christ.
17. In themselves, as weak as worms. Power of Prayer.
18. Jesus Christ, the soul that knows. The Believer's Safety.
20. Joy is the [the] fruit that will not grow. Joy.
21. Let hearts and tongue unite. Close of the Year.
22. From this "Now, through another year," is taken. New Year.
25. My heart untroubled and laid aside. Hoping for a Revival. From this "While I to grief my soul gave way" taken.
27. Now may He Who from the dead. After Sermon.
28. O happy they who know the Lord, With whom He deigns to dwell. Gospel Privilege.
29. O Lord, how vile am I. Lent.
30. On man in His own image made. Adam.
31. O speak that gracious word again. Peace through Pardon.
33. Physician of my sick soul. Lent.

35. Poor, weak, and worthless, though I am. Jesus the Friend.
36. Prepare a thankful song. Praise to Jesus.
37. Refreshed by the bread and wine. Holy Communion. Sometimes given as "Refreshed by sacred bread and wine."
40. Saviour, shine and cheer my soul. Trust in Jesus. The cento "Once I thought my mountain strong," is from this hymn.
41. Saviour, visit thy plantation. Prayer for the Church.

42. See another year [week] is gone. Uncertainty of Life.
43. See the corn again in ear. Harvest.
44. Sinner, art thou still secure? Preparation for the Future.
45. Sinners, hear the [thy] Saviour's call. Invitation.
46. Sovereign grace has power alone. The two Ministers.
47. Stop, poor sinner, stop and think. Caution and Alarm.
49. Sweet was the time when first I felt. Joy in Believing.
50. Ten thousand talents once I owed. Forgiveness and Peace.
51. The grass and flowers, which clothe the field. Hay-time.
52. The peace which God alone reveals. Close of Service.
54. Time, by moments, steals away. The New Year.
55. To Thee our wants are known. Close of Divine Service.
56. We seek a rest beyond the skies. Heaven anticipated.
57. When any turn from Zion's way. Jesus only.
58. When Israel, by divine command. God, the Guide and Sustainer of Life.
59. With Israel's God who can compare? After Sermon.
60. Yes, since God Himself has said it. Confidence.
61. Zion, the city of our God. Journeying Zionward.

Nicholas, Tressilian George, M.A., is the Rev. George Nicholas, L.L.D., was b. in London, April 11, 1822, and educated at Wadham College, Oxford. (B.A. in honors, 1843, M.A. 1846.) On taking Holy Orders he became Curate of St. Lawrence, Reading, 1845; Incumbent of West Molsey, 1846; and Vicar of Lower Halstow, 1859. In 1863 he returned to West Molsey. He contributed several poetical pieces to the Church of England Magazine. These were collected and pub. as Poems in 1851. From this work his well-known and extensively used hymn for Holy Communion, "Lord, when before Thy throne we meet," was taken. It is part of a poem which was printed in the Church of England Mag. for Jan. 6, 1838. It is usually given in 3 st. of 6 l., and often as anonymous. [J. J.]

Nicholson, Horatio Langriethe, D.D., was educated at Trinity College, Dublin (B.A. in honors 1855, D.D. 1860). After taking Holy Orders in 1856, he held several appointments in Ireland to 1859, when he became Lecturer of Holy Trinity, Newington, London. Subsequently he was Incumbent of St. James's, Kennington, 1862, and then of other parishes, the last being the Vicarage of St. James's, Forest Gate, Stratford, Essex. During his Incumbency of St. Saviour's, Brockley Hill, London, he pub. —

The Appendix Hymnal compiled as an Appendix to Hymns Ancient and Modern, by Chope's Hymnal, and that published by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, 1866.

To this Appendix he contributed several hymns for Special Services and occasions which were not then fully provided for in those collections. These are —

1. Alone, yet not, alone, so spake. Gethsemane.
2. Father of Spirits, Thee we pray. Harvest.
3. Gently I breathe to Thee, Jesus, my prayer. Lent.
5. Hark the loud Hosannah! Processional for Palm Sunday.
7. I will not leave thee, Jesus Lord. Piedad to Jesus.
8. In the hour of doubt and sorrow. In Affliction or Distress.
9. Lord, upon our knees we fall. Lend.
11. Prostrate in the dust before Him. Lend.
13. See, her hastening steps are best. Visitation.

H. V. M.
15. Starlight of Bethlehem. Life of Jesus.

Nicola, Philipp, D.D., s. of Dieterich Nicola, sometime Lutheran pastor at Herdecke, in Westphalia, and after 1532, at Mengeringhausen in Waldeck; was b. at Mengeringhausen, August 10, 1556. (The father was s. of Nicolas Raffein, of Raffein, near Hagen, in Westphalia, and in Hambach, near Hagen, in 1575 Nicola as derown surname.) In 1576 Nicola entered the University of Erfurt, where he went to the University of Wittenberg. After completing his University course in 1579 (D.B. at Wittenberg July 4, 1594), he lived for some time at Volkmaringhausen, and frequently at Mengeringhausen, and frequently at Hesslingen. In August, 1583, he preached at Mengeringhausen, and frequently at Hesslingen. In 1583, he preached at Mengeringhausen, and frequently at Hesslingen. In 1583, he preached at Mengeringhausen, and frequently at Hesslingen. Nicola resigned his post. In the end of 1583 he was appointed diacoon at Waldeck, where he became pastor there. He then became, in Nov. 1584, chief pastor at Altwildungen, and also court chaplain of the Archduke of Waldeck, and tutor to the son of his pastor, Count Wilhelm Ernst. Here he took an active part on the Lutheran side in the Sacramentarian controversy, and was, in Sept. 1582, inhibited from preaching by Count Franz of Waldeck, but the prohibition was soon removed, and in the Synod of 1593 held at Mengeringhausen, he found all the clergy of the principality of Waldeck willing to agree to the Formula of Concord. In October, 1596, he became pastor at Umna, in Westphalia, where he again became engaged in heated controversy with the Calvinists; passed through a frightful pestilence (see below); and then on Dec. 27, 1598, had to flee before the invasion of the Spaniards, and did not return till the 1st of April, 1599. Finally, in April 1601, he was elected chief pastor of St. Katherine's Church, at Hamburg, where he entered on his duties Aug. 6, 1601. On Oct. 22, 1608, he took part in the ordination of a colleague in the St. Katherine's Church, at Hamburg, which he himself undertook, and which he sank, and d. Oct. 26, 1608 (D. Philipp Nicolaus Lehen und Lieder, by L. Curtze, 1859: Koch, ii. 324; Altg. Deutsche Bibl. xxiii. 697, &c).

In Hamburg Nicola was universally esteemed, was a most popular and influential preacher, and was regarded as a "pillar" of the Lutheran church. In his private life he seems to have been most lovable and estimable. Besides his fame as a preacher, his reputation rests mainly on his hymns. He printed works, both poetical, very violent and acrid in tone, and such as the unembellished sincerity of his zeal to preserve pure and unadulterated Lutheranism may explain but cannot be said to justify. Of his hymns only four seem to have been printed.

Three of Nicola's hymns were first pub. in his devotional work entitled Freuden-Spiegel eines eisernen Lebens, pub. at Frankfurt in Main, 1599 (see further below). The two noted here ("Wacht auf!" and "Wie schön!"") rank as classical and epoch-making. The former is the last of the long series of Watchmen's Songs. The latter marks the transition from the objective churchly period to the more subjective and experimental period of German hymn writing; and begins the long series of Hymns of Love to Christ as the Bridegroom of the Soul, to which Franck and Scheffer contributed such beautiful examples. Both are also worthy of note for their musical and perfect rhythms, and for their splendid melodies. They are:

1. Wacht auf, ruft uns die Stimme. Eternal Life. This beautiful hymn, one of the first rank, is founded on St. Matt. xxv. 1-13; Eph. 5. 6-9, and xxii. 21; 1 Cor. ii. 9; Ezek. iii. 17; and Is. iii. 8. It first appeared in the Appendix to his Freuden-Spiegel, 1599, in 3 st. of 10 l., entitled "Of the Voice at Midnight, and the Wise Virgins who met their Heavenly Bridegroom. Matt. 25." Hence in Wackermueller's p. 256, the Univ. L. S., 1851, No. 690, and most German collections.

It is a reversed acrostic, W. Z. G. for the Graf zu Waldeck, viz. his former pupil Count Wilhelm Ernst, who d. at Thuningen on July 16, 1598, in his thirteenth year. It seems to have been written in 1597 at Umna, in Westphalia, where Nicola was then pastor; and during the terrible pestilence which raged there from July 1597 to January 1598, to which in July 1598, in one week in April 1598, and in all over three fell victims, Nicola's parsonage overlooked the churchyard, and there daily scenes took place, such as the number of dead in the streets. In these days of distress, when every household was in mourning, Nicola's thoughts turned to Death, and hence to the eternal shores. He therefore inserted into his hymn (dated Aug. 10, 1598) to his Freuden-Spiegel he says: "There seemed to me nothing more sweet, delightful and agreeable, than the contemplation of the noble, sublime doctrine of Eternal Life obtained through our own person, our own heart, our own soul, through the Blood of Christ. This allowed me to dwell in my heart day and night, and searched the Scriptures as to what they revealed on this matter, read also the sweet treatise of the ancient doctor Saint Augustine (Be Victoria Dei). Then day by day I wrote out my meditations, found myself, thank God, wonderfully well, comforted in heart, joyful in spirit, and truly content; gave to my manuscript the name and title of a Mirror of Joy, and took this as composed Freuden-Spiegel to leave behind me (if tis should call me from this world) as the token of my peaceful, joyful, Christian departure, or (if tis should spare me in health) to comfort other sufferers whom He should also visit with the pestilence. Now has the gracious, holy God most mercifully preserved me, and I would not shed my blood from the dreadful pestilence, as it was the only thing that would have wonderfully spared me beyond all my thoughts and hopes; so that with the Prophet David I can say to Him: "0 how great is Thy goodness, which Thou hast laid up for them that fear Thee." &c.

The hymn composed under these circumstances (it may be stated that Curtze thinks both hymns were written in 1596, while Nicola was still at Alt-Wildungen) soon became popular, and still retains its place, though often altered in the 3rd stanza. Probably the opening lines:

"Wacht auf! ruft uns die Stimme"

"Der Wacht ist sehr hoch auf der Zinne" are borrowed from one of the Wächter Lieder, a form of lyric popular in the Middle Ages, introduced by Wolfram von Eschenbach. (See K. Goedeke's Deutsche Dichtung im Mittelalter, 1871, p. 918.) But while in the Songs the voice of the Watchman from his turret summons the workers of darkness to flee from discovery, with Nicolai it is a summons to the children of light to awaken to their promised reward and full felicity.

The melody appeared first along with the hymn, and is also apparently by Nicolai, though portions of it (e.g. l. 1 b by the Gregorian Fifth Tone) may have been suggested by earlier tunes. It has been called the King's Chorale, and by its majestic simplicity and dignity it well deserves the title. Since its use by Mendelssohn in his St. Paul it has become well known in England, and, in its original form, is given in Miss Winkworth's C. B. for England, 1863 (see below).

Translations in C. U.:

1. Sleepers wake; a voice is calling. This is an unrhymed tr. of st. i. by W. Ball in his book of words to Mendelssohn's oratorio of St. Paul, 1836. This form is in Horder's Cong. Hymnæ, 1884, and others. In the South Place [London] Coll., 1873, it is a recast by A. J. Ellis, but opens with the same first line. In the Parish H. Bk., 1857, a st. of ii. also unrhymed, is added.

2. Wake ye holy maidens, wake ye. A good tr. contributed by Philip Pusey to A. R. Reugnag's Col. of Ps. and H. Tunes, Oxford, 1846, p. 134. It was considerably altered, beginning "Wake ye holy maidens, fearing" in the Salisbury H. Bk., 1857, and this is repeated, with further alterations, in Kennedy, 1863, and the Sarum Hyl., 1898.

3. Wake, arise; the call obeying. A good tr. by A. T. Russell, as No. 110 in the Dalston Hospital H. Bk., 1848.

4. Wake, oh wake; around are lying. This is a recast, by A. T. Russell, not for the better, from his 1848 tr., as No. 298 in his Ps. & Hys. 1851, st. iii. being omitted. Thence, unaltered, in the New Zealand Hyl., 1872.

5. Wake, awake, for night is lying. A very good tr. by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra German., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 225, repeated in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 200, with st. ii., ll. 7, 8, rewritten. Included in the Eng. Pres. Ps. & Hys., 1867; Scottish Pres. Hyl., 1875, &c.; and in America, in Lander Domini, 1884, and others. In the Caedle Domino, Boston, U. S., 1859, it begins "Awake, awake, for night is flying."

6. Wake! the startling watch-ye-sleepers. By Miss Cox, in Lyra Messianica, 1864, p. 4, and her Hys. from the German, 1864, p. 27; repeated in W. F. Stevenson's H. for Church and Home, 1873. The version in J. L. Porter's Coll., 1876, takes st. i., ll. 1-4 from Miss Cox. The rest is mainly from R. C. Singleton's tr. in the Anglican H. Bk., but borrows lines also from Miss Winkworth, and from the Hymnary text.

7. Wake! the watchman's voice is sounding. By R. C. Singleton. This is No. 259 in the Anglican H. Bk., 1868, where it is marked as a "versification by R. C. Singleton, 1867."

8. Wake, awake, for night is lying. This is by Canon W. Cooke, in the Hymnary, 1871, and signed A. C. C. In the ed. of 1872, ll. 7, 8 of st. ii. are recast, and the whole is marked as "based on E. A. Dayman." It is really a canto, four lines of the 1872 text (i., l. 5; ii., ll. 7, 8; iii., l. 9) being by Canon Cooke; and the rest being adapted from the versions of P. Pusey as altered in the Sarum Hyl., of Miss Winkworth, of Miss Cox, and of R. C. Singleton. It may be regarded as a success, and as passed into the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871; the 1874 Appr. to the N. C. H.; Horder's Cong. Hys., 1884, and others.

9. Wake, arise; the voice is calling. This is an anonymous tr. in the Ohio Eth. Hyl., 1880.

Other trs. are:

(1) "Awake, the voice is crying." In Lyra Davidea, 1784, p. 73. (2) "Awake! awake! the watchman calls by Miss Fry, 1845, p. 33. (3) "Hark! the trump of God is sounding." By Dr. H. Mills, 1845 (1846, p. 206). This is from the altered form by F. G. Klopstock, in his Christliche Lieder, 1784, p. 346, as further altered in Zeiller's G. B., 1876, No. 363, where it begins "Wasch mit auf, so ruft," and is repeated in 1869, p. 171, beginning. "Awake, arise, it is the warning." (5) "Wake! From the tower it sounds." By Mrs. I. Osborne, 1864, p. 4. (6) "Up! awake! his summons hurried." By J. B. Hare in the Family Treasury, 1860, p. 84, and his Memoir & Remains, 1869, p. 234.

11. Wie schön leuchtet der Morgenstern, Voll Ocr und Wahrheit vor dem Herrn. Love to Christ. 1st pub. in the Appendix to R. J. Eichendorff's Spiegel, 1599, in 7 st. of 10 l. entitled "A spiritual bridal song of the believing soul concerning Jesus Christ, her heavenly Bridegroom, crowned on the 45th Psalm of the prophet David." Lanzmann, in Koch, viii. 271, thus gives an account of it as written during the Pentecost of 1597. He says Nicolai was "One morning in great distress and tribulation in his quiet study. He rose in spirit from the distress which surrounded him to his Redeemer and Saviour, and while he clasped Him in ardent love there reeled forth from the inmost depths of his heart this precious hymn of the Saviour's love and of the joys of Heaven. He was so entirely absorbed in this holy exaltation that he forgot all around him, even his midday meal, and allowed nothing to disturb him in his pietistic labors till the hymn was completed"—three hours after midday.

As Nicolai was closely connected with Waldeck he formed with the initial letters of his stanzas the acrostic W. E. G. U. H. Z. W., viz. Wilhelm Ernst Graf Und Herr Zu Waldeck—his former pupil.

The hymn has reminiscences of Eph. v., of Canticles, and of the Medieval Hymns to the R. V. M. It became at once a favourite in Germany, was reckoned indispensable at weddings, was often sung around death beds, &c. The original form is in Wackerspiegel v. p. 258, and the Ur. L. S., 1851, No. 437; but this (as will be seen by comparing Miss Winkworth's version of 1863) is hardly suited for present day congregational use. In Bunsen's Versuch, 1833, No. 554, it is slightly altered. The form in Knapp's Ev. L. S., 1857, No. 2974 (1865, No. 1818) is a recast by Knapp made on Jan. 14, 1832, and pub. in his Christusruhe, 1833, p. 285, preceded by a recast of "Wachet auf!"; both being marked as "rewritten according to the requirements of our times."

The popularity of the hymn was greatly aided by its beautiful chorale (named by Mr. Mercer, Franklinford, which has been called "The Queen of Chorales," and to which many city chimes in Germany were soon set. It was pub. with the hymn, and is probably an original tune by Nicolai, though petitions may have been suggested by earlier melodies, especially by the "Resonet in Laudibus," which is probably of the 14th cent. (Brettner l., N. Nicolai, Philip,
No. 498, cited it from the "Observations, Langlois, 1870. In Allon's "Cony. Psalms" (names a person.)

Translations in C. U.:

1. How bright appears the Morning Star! This is a full and fairly close version by J. C. Jacobi, in his Psal. (Edin.), 1722, p. 90 (1732, p. 162); repeated, with alternations, in the Moravian H. Bk., 1754, pt. ii., No. 317 (1886, p. 369). The version of v. vii. beginning, "The Father from eternity," are included in Adams to the Service of Song, Edin. N.D., but since 1860. In 1875 Mercer rendered it, his C. P. & H. Bk., as No. 15, a hymn in 4 st. of 10 l., of which five lines are exactly from Jacobi. St. i., ll. 1-3; ll. 8, 9; iii., ll. 2, 3, 6; iv.; ll. 1, 10, are exactly; and i., ll. 9; ii., ll. 2, 3, 6, 10; iii., ll. 1, 4, 5; iv., ll. 7, 9 are nearly from the Moravian H. Bk., 1801. The interjected lines are by Mercer, but bear very slight resemblance either to Nicoll's original text, or to any version of the German that we have seen. In his 1859 ed. he further recast it, leaving only the first line unaltered from Jacobi; and this form is in his O.E. ed., 1884, No. 121, in the Irish Church Hym., 1889 and 1875, and in the Hym. Comp., 1870 and 1876. In Kennedy, 1865, the text of 1859 is given with alterations, and begins "How brightly dawns the Morning Star;" and this form is in the People's Hym., 1867; Dale's Eng. H. Bk., 1875 &c.

2. How graciously doth shine afar. By A. T. Russell, as No. 8 in the Dalston Hospital H. Bk., 1845, and repeated in the Cheltenham College H. Bk., 1855, No. 37. It is a free tr. of st. i., vi., v.

5. How bright the Morning Star shines in truth and mercy from afar. A tr. of st. i., iii., iv., vii., by Miss Borthwick, as No. 239 in Dr. Pangestcher's Coll., 1864.

Other trs. are:

(1) "How fairly shines the Morning Star." In Levy's Psalmodia, 1760, p. 40.
(2) "As bright the star of morning gleams." (st.) By W. Bartholomew, in his Book of Words to Mendelssohn's celebrated Christus, 1852, p. 11.
(5) "Morning Star. How fair and bright." By Miss Winkworth, 1866, p. 8.

There are also three hymns in C. U., which have generally been regarded as trs. from Nicoll. They are noted as follows:—i. "Behold, how bright appears the Morning Star!" (see Leben der menschen.) ii. "How bright the Morning Star!" (see Schlegl.) iii. "How bright the Morning Star! What eye describeth it afar!" (see Schlegl. J. A.).

ii. Mainz, Comp. Lies. 'New Notes Work. Appeared as No. 1223 in Appendix vii. c. 1727 to the Herrnhut G. B., 1735, in 4 st. of 8 l. In the Brüder Bk., 1717, No. 755, reduced to 8 stanzas (st. v. 1776 is by N. L. Zinzendorf). The only tr. in C. U. is noted at p. 558.

Another tr. is: "Thou exalted first-born Brother." This tr. is of st. iv. in the Moravian H. Bk., pt. II., 1741, p. 798. In 1874, pt. II., p. 369, altered to "O Thou our first-born Brother." (1849, No. 852, st. IV.) [J. M.]

Nitschmann, Johann, brother of Anna Nitschmann, was b. Sept. 25, 1712, at Kuno-wald, and came to Herrnhut in 1725. In 1726 the Count von Promnitz took him into the Orphanage at Sorau, and in 1728 sent him to study theology at Halle. In 1731 he became a tutor in the Orphanage at Herrnhut, in 1732 went to Halle to study medicine, but returned to Herrnhut in 1733, and spent a year as private secretary to Count Zinzendorf. Thereafter up to 1745 he was principally engaged in mission work in Swedish Lapland, and in forming communities in Livonia. He was then appointed, in 1745, diaconus and Gemeinlehrer at Herrnhau in Wetteravia, and in 1750 to the same position at Herrnhut. Consecrated Bishop of the Brethren's Unity in 1758, he took in 1761 the superintendence of the communities in England and Ireland. In 1766, he was appointed to the charge of the new settlement of Sarepta on the Volga in Asiatic Russia, and d. there June 30, 1783 (Altg. Deutsche Bls. xxiii, 714; ms. from Diakon J. T. Müller, Herrnhut, &c.). His hymns are few in number, and not of much importance. Only one has passed into use outside the English Moravian H. Bk. It is:

Das blütige Verhältn. The Lamb of God. Appeared as No. 1219 in Appendix vii., c. 1737 to the Herrnhut G. B., 1735, in 5 st. of 6 l. In the Brüder G. B., 1776, it is No. 575, and in the Historische Nachrichten to st. iv. is ascribed to N. L. von Zinzendorf. The tr. in C. U. is noted at p. 558.

Another tr. is: "Dear Lamb, from everlasting slain," as No. 21 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1742. In the 1799 and later eds. (1849, No. 441), it begins "Gracious Redeemer, Who for us." [J. M.]

No Gospel like this Feast. Elizabeth Charles, née Hunter. [Holy Communion.] Pub. in the New ·Three Wakeings and Other Poems, 1859, p. 149. It has passed into a large number of hymnals, including the Universal H. Bk., 1885, the American Lauder Domini, 1884, and others. [J. J.]

No prophet, nor dreamer of dreams. J. Hart. [Adoration.] 1st pub. in his Hymn, composed on Various Subjects, &c., 1759, in 7 st. of 8 l., and based upon the words "I shine, arise among you a prophet, or a dreamer of dreams, and give the sign or wonder," &c., Deut. xiii. 1. In its original form it is not in common use; but the following centos have been compiled therefrom:

1. This God is the God we adore. This is the last stanza of the hymn, and was given in M. Madan's Sapp. to Ps. and Hys., 1863, No. 192, broken into 2 st. of 4 l. The same arrangement was repeated by A. M. Toplady in his Ps. & Hys., 1767, No. 127. From these collections it passed into an individual hymn to the modern hymnal. The same stanza, but altered to:

2. This is the God we adore. This was given in the Sapp. of the Wm. H. Bk., 1820, in the revised ed. 1820, and also found in other collections. In the Bp. Sel. of Ps. and Hys., 1826, No. 386, a cento is given, the first stanza of which we have not traced:

st. ii., iii., are composed of Hart's "This God is the God we adore." It begins:

1. The God Who created the skies, and is repeated in the Bap. Pr. & Hys., 1858, No. 265.

2. How good is the God we adore. In The Enlarged London H. Bk., 1873. [J. J.]

No sleep, no slumber, to his eyes. I. Watts. [Ps. cxvii.] 1st pub. in his Psalms of David, &c., 1719, in 8 st. of 4 l., and headed "A Church Established." In its full form it is not in general use; but as, "Arise, O King of grace, arise," the first stanza, as in the Leeds H. Bk., 1853, it is in somewhat extensive use, especially in America. [J. J.]

No songs shall break our gloom today. W. C. Dix. [Good Friday.] Pub. in Lyra Musicaea, 1861, p. 244, in 7 st. of 4 l., and entitled "Calvary." It was also included in the author's Hys. and Carols for Children, 1869. In the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871, "O Thou the Eternal Son of God" is composed of st. ii., iv. of this hymn. [J. J.]

No track is on the sunny sky. F. W. Faber. [Whitsun.] Appeared in his Jesus and Mary, &c., 1849, in 18 st. of 4 l., on "The Mission of the Holy Ghost." From its three centos have come into C. U.: (1) "No track is on the sunny sky;" (2) "The Mother stirs her mighty prayer," and (3) "The Mother sits all worshipful." In these various forms its use is somewhat extensive. [J. J.]

Nobis, Olympo redditus. Jean Baptiste de Santeuil. [Ascension.] This hymn appeared in the Cluniace Breviary, 1686, p. 503, as "Nobis, Olympo redditus." It was repeated in Santeuil's Hymni Sacri et Not. Nov. 1689, p. 24 (ed. 1698, p. 196.), in 5 st. of 4 l. In the Paris Breviary, 1736, st. ii. is omitted, and another was added as the concluding stanza, beginning, "Venum Judex sacellum." The 1736 text is in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, and Card. Newman's Hymnæ Ecclesiæ, 1836 and 1865. Tr. as:

1. O Christ, Who hast prepared a place. By J. Chandler, from the Paris Breviary, text, in his Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 86. It was soon introduced into the hymn-books, sometimes with slight alterations, as in Murray's Hymnæ Sacrae, 1852; and at other times with the omission of st. v., as in Mercer, Oxford ed., 1864, and others. In H. A. & M., 1861, it reads: "O Christ, Who dost prepare a place," but it is omitted from the revised ed. 1875. This tr. in various forms is in extensive use. In Martineau's Hymnas, 1873, 3 st. are given as "The Crucified is gone before." [J. J.]

2. Thou Who dost build for us on high. By L. Williams. 1st printed in the Christian Magazine, Dec. 1834 (vol. vii, p. 621, with the Latin). It was also included in his Hys. tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839, p. 145. It is given, with alterations, in the Hymnary, 1872.

The first stanza is complete:

Other trs. are:

1. Jesus! Thou from earth hast vanished. W. J. Hony, 1852-55. [J. J.]

2. Enthroned in heaven, Thy mansions fair. J. D. Chambers, 1867.

Nocete mox diem fugata. [Holy Communion.] In the Cluniae Breviary, 1686, p. 503, this is the hymn at Mattins for the

Google
Octave of Corpus Christi, and consists of 5 st. and a doxology. Tr. as:—

1. See the sun ascending. By E. Caswall. 1st pub. in his Masque of Mary, 1838, p. 305, in 5 st. of 6 l.; and again in his Hymns, &c., 1873, p. 158. It is given in the People’s H., 1867; the Hymnary, 1872; and others, including some Roman Catholic collections. [J. M.]

Noces Surgentes Vigiliumus

St. Gregory the Great. [Early morning.] This is one of the eight hymns which the Benedictine editor assigned to St. Gregory (Opera, Paris, 1705, i., col. 879). It is found in three 11th cent. Hymnaries of the English Church, now in the British Museum (Vesp. D. xii., f. 6b; Jul. A. vi., f. 20 b; Harl. 2661, f. 219), and in an 11th cent. Breviary of the Spanish Church (Add. 30486, f. 67 and f. 70 b). It is in an 11th cent. ms. at Corpus Christi, Cambridge (291, p. 299), and in the Latin Hymn of the Anglo-Saxon Ch. (Surtees Society), 1851, is printed from an 11th cent. ms. at Durham (B. ii. 32, 1. 3 b). Also in a tenth cent. ms. at Bern, No. 455, and an 11th cent. ms. at St. Gall, No. 387. It is the companion hymn to and in the same metre as “Eccle jam noctis,” (p. 320, i.) It was included in the Roman (Venice 1478, and 1529; 1592, 1625; 1693, A.D. 1693; and other Breviaries, generally assigned to Sunday Matins or Nocturns from Trinity S. to Advent. The text is also in Daniel i. No. 146: Wackernagel’s, No. 95: Hymnarium Sarisb., 1851, p. 127; Königsdorf, p. 76, and Card. Newman’s Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1863. [J. M.]

The translations of this hymn are:—

2. Throughout the hours of darkness dim. Hymnarium Anglicanum, 1844.

3. Rising at midnight, one and all waking. W. J. Copeland, 1849.

4. Let us arise and watch ere dawn of light. E. Caswell, 1819.

5. Uprising with the morning light. W. J. Blew, 1843-44.

6. Arise we in the nightly watches waking. J. D. Chambers, 1852.

7. Let us arise from night and slumber waking. J. D. Chambers, 1852.

9. Watch we by night, with one accord uprising. J. Kebbe, 1849.

10. Come let us arise, and keep the watches of the night. J. Wallace, 1874.

11. ‘Mid evening shadows let us all be watching. Ray Palmer, 1872, dated 1855.

Non Abluunt Lymphae Deum. Nicolas de Torneuz. (Epithaph.) This hymn, on the Baptism of our Lord, appeared in the Cluniac Brev., 1686, p. 229, beginning, “Lavem purgaturitus,” and signed “N. T. P. R.” When included in the Paris Brev., 1736, as the hymn for Compline during the Octave of the Epiphany, it began with st. ii., “Non ablununt lymphae Deum,” and in this form it is known to the present time, both in Latin and in the tr. into English. This text is in Card. Newman’s Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:—

1. It is not that the wave can wash our God. By J. Williams, in the British Magazine, 1835 (vol. viii., p. 152), and his Hymn. tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839, p. 96.

2. Since the heavenly Lamb hath stood. By W. J. Blew, in his Church Hym. and Tune Bk., 1852.
NORTON, Andrews, D.D., s. of Samuel Norton, was b. at Higham, Massachusetts, Dec. 31, 1786, and was educated at Highham, and at Harvard College. After being engaged there for a short time as a tutor, he was appointed Librarian, and subsequently Lecturer on Biblical Criticism, as successor to Dr. Channing. When the Theological School was opened in 1819 he became Dexter Professor of Literature. This position he held until 1830. He d. at Newport, Rhode Island, Sept. 18, 1853. He was for some time editor of the General Repository and Review, and pub. several prose works, one of the most extensive being The Genuineness of the Gospels, in 4 vols. His hymns are few in number, and are mainly meditations in verse. They were contributed to various periodicals, and after his death were collected and pub. in a small volume. Of these hymns the following are in C. U.:

1. Another year, another year. The unceasing wave. &c. Close of the Year. Appeared in the Christian Examiner in Nov. and Dec., 1827, in 11 st. of 4 l. It is used in an abbreviated form in the American Boston Unitarian Hymn [§ Tune] Bk, 1868, it begins with st. vii., “O what concerns it him whose way.”

3. He has gone to his God, he has gone to his home. Burial. Printed in the Christian Examiner, Jan. and Feb., 1824.

4. My God, I thank Thee! may no thought, Trust and Submission. Appeared in the Monthly Anthology and Boston Review, Sept., 1809. This is his earliest and best known hymn.

5. O stay thy tears: for they are bleat. Burial of the Young. Printed in the General Repository and Review, April, 1812, in 5 st. of 4 l.

In 1835, st. iii.—v. were given in Beecher’s Plymouth Coll., No. 1094, as “How bleat are they whose transient years.”
OF ALL THE BLOOD OF BEASTS

6. Where ancient forests round us spread. Dedication of a Church. This “Hymn for the Dedication of a Church,” is dated 1833.

These hymns are in some of the American hymnals. Nos. 1, 4, 5 are in Martined’s Hymnals, 1873, and the full texts of all are in Putnam’s Singers and Songs of the Liberal Faith, Boston, U.A., 1875. [F. M. B.]

Norton, Thomas. [Old Version, § ix. 7.]

Not all the blood of beasts. I. Watts. [Christ the Heavenly Sacrifice.] Ist pub. in his Hys. and Spiritual Songs, enlarged ed., 1709. Bk. ii., No. 142, in 5 st. of 4 L, and headed “Faith in Christ, our Sacrifice.” It was brought into use in the Church of England through M. Madian’s Ps. & Hys., 1769. and A. M. Toplady’s Ps. & Hys., 1770. In these collections alterations were introduced which, with additions from other sources, have been handed down to modern hymnbooks. These changes in the text are the outcome of religious convictions and controversy. The most striking instance of this fact is given in the Wes. Bk. new ed., 1875. The outlook of Watts, which is that of hope and the outlook of Methodism, which is that of absolute knowledge, is strikingly set forth in st. iv. and v. as follows:

I. Watts. 1709.

My soul looks back to see
The burdens Thou didst bear.
When hanging on the accursed tree
And hopeless cries was there.
Believing we rejoice
To see the curse removed.
We bless the Lamb while Cheerful voice,
And sing His bleeding love.

In these new versions, other alterations have crept into the text. The following list will assist in tracing these out:

St. i. our stain
St. iii. Upon that head
divine
On that head
wise as a serpent
lay its hand acquiesced in
And hunger her
And trusts our guilt
And sends her
there
At. v. To feel the curse
And trust His
And sing His dying and pub. in the Parish Bk., as an addition to the edition of 1863, circa 1866, in 7 st. of 4 L., and again in the new ed. 1875, No. 271. In the Sarum Hym., 1868, st. i.-iv. vii., were given with slight alterations as No. 95. [J. J.]

Not from the dust affliction grows. I. Watts. [Affliction of God.] Pub. in his Hymns, &c., 1719. Bk. i., No. 88, in 4 st. of 4 L., and from thence has passed into a few hymnals. In the Translations and Paraphrases of the Church of Scotland, which were authorized in 1781, this hymn (No. 5) is included in a new form as, “The trouble springs not from the dust.” In the form as Watts is reproduced in everything but the actual words. By whom this recast was made is not known. In the marked copy of the Tra. & Paraph. by the daughter of W. Cameron (p. 300, ii.) it is left a blank. [J. J.]

Not here as to the prophet’s eye. J. Montgomery. [Opening of a Place of Worship.] Written for the opening of the Methodist New Connexion Chapel, South Street, Moor, Sheffield, June 8, 1828, and printed as a flyleaf for the occasion. [st. i.]

It was included in Condor’s Comp. H. Bk., 1836, No. 436, and in Montgomery’s Original Hymns, 1833, No. 297, in 5 st. of 4 L. It is in C. U. in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

Not to the terrors of the Lord. I. Watts. [Whitsuntide.] Appeared in his Hys. and Spiritual Songs, 1709. Bk. ii., No. 152, in 6 st. of 4 L, and entitled “Sinai and Sion.” It is in C. U. in G. Britain and America. It is also in use in the following forms:

1. Not to the terrors of the Lord. In the Wes. Bk., 1836, No. 203; Kennedy, 1863, and others. This is composed of st. i., ii., from Watts, and a third stanza probably by E. Tucker, who assisted W. J. Hall in compiling the Wes. Bk.

3. The saints on earth and those above (q.v.). The opening stanzas of this cento are st. v. of this hymn. [J. J.]

Not unto us, but to Thy Name. [Salvation through Grace.] The first stanza of this cento is from J. Cennick’s hymn, “Let us the sheep in Jesus name” (p. 673, ii.), somewhat altered, and the rest of the cento is by T. Cottrell. It appeared in the Utopia Collection (see Staffordshire Hymn-books), 1805, and again in Cottrell’s Salt., 1810. It is given in several modern collections in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

Not what these hands have done. B. Bower. [Salvation through Christ alone.] Pub. in his Hys. of Faith and Hope, 2nd Ser., 1864, in 12 st. of 4 L. In its full form it is not in C. U., but the following centos are in several hymnals in G. Britain and America:

1. Not what these hands have done. In the Wes. Church Hymal, 1861, and others.

3. I bless the Christ of God. Beginning with st. vii. This is the most popular of the centos, and is given in a great number of hymn-books in G. Brit. and America.

4. I praise the God of grace. This begins with st. ix., and is in several collections.

Through these various forms this hymn is in extensive use. [J. J.]

NOTKER BALBULUS

in the revised ed. of his H. Companion, 1876. It is also in several other collections. [J. J.]

Notker Balbulus, so called from his slight stuttering, was b. in Switzerland about 840. Ekkehard V. in the 2nd Chapter of his Vita Sancti Notkeri (written about 1220), says he was b. at Heiligen, now Elgg, in the Canton of Zürich, but Meyer von Knonau (see below), stating that his family were closely connected with Jonswil in the Canton of St. Gall, thinks that Notker was probably b. at Jonswil. He entered the school of the famous Benedictine Abbey of St. Gall at an early age, and spent the rest of his life there. In due course he was admitted as one of the brethren of the monastery; in 860 is marked as librarian, and in 892 and 894 as guest-master (hospitarius); his principal employment being in scholastic and literary work. He became eventually one of the foremost in the monastery at that its most flourishing period; but was never abbot there (Notker the Abbot of St. Gall, who d. 975, was of a younger generation), and declined various offers of preeminent elsewhere. He d. at St. Gall, April 6, 912. In 1313 he was beatified by Pius II, but does not seem to have been canonized nor does an office in his honour appear to have been authorised for use except at St. Gall (Lebenbild des heiligen Notker von St. Gallen, by G. Meyer von Knonau, Zürich, 1877; Allg. Deutsche Biog., xxvii., 35, &c.).

Ekkehard IV. (d. 1069), in his Casus Saneti Galli, chapter iii., thus lovingly characterises Notker (a tr. would not express the conciseness of the original):—

"Corporis, non animo, graculis; voce, non spirital, bal- bulus; in divinis euctus, in adversis patient, ad omnia missis, in nostrum acer erat exactor disciplinis; ad repentina thinulmn et insipnias, praeclaras laudem instan- tes, erat; quibus quidem as anderlicher opponere solebat. In orando, legendo, dictando, celerissimus. Et ut omnia sanctissatis ejus in brevissimis doctis, sancti spiritus erat acer; in alia quidem, et uno tempore."

Notker was a favourite of the Emperor Charles the Fat, who paid him special attention during his visit to St. Gall, Dec. 4-6, 883. His claim to notice here is as the first important writer of sequences; and as indeed the practical inventor of this species of compositions. He seems to have begun writing sequences about 862, and in 885 collected them into a volume (the Liber Sequentiurum Notkeri), for which he styled himself the "Compositor Scholasticus". In the interlinear notes to the L. S. N. (see below), Notker is described as "the first who composed the melodies as well as the words of sequences, one might hope to gain help. There is indeed an important ms. at St. Gall (No. 841) apparently written early in the 11th century, which contains the melodies without words; but there is nothing to show which of these are by Notker, and which are earlier. Nor does early tradition help us much. In the interlinear notes to his Rhythmi de Sancto Otmaro (St. Gall ms. 393, p. 153, both the text and notes being in Ekkehard's autograph), Ekkehard IV. speaks of Notker as having composed 50 sequences, but nowhere does he give a list of their first lines. The conjecture of Wilhams is probably correct, viz., that Ekkehard took the St. Gall ms. No. 378, as his standard. It contains 55 sequences in the L. S. N. (Nos. 84, 114 had not been inserted when Ekkehard wrote), and deducting from these the sequences which in his Casus Saneti Galli Ekkehard designates ascribed to others (Nos. 48, 95, 97, 106, 110, 111) there remain, in round numbers, 50. (See further below.)

The most careful attempt to settle what are genuine and what are false is in an article by W. Wilmanns (Welche Sequenzen hat Notker verfasst?) in Moriz Haufl's Zeitchrift
The eight MSS. here indexed are:

1. Einsiedeln MS. No. 121, of about the end of the 11th cent. The first part of this MS. consists of an Antiphoner, the second Antiphonary of St. Gall (see Scherer's Verscelasch, 1875, of the St. Gall ms., p. 124). The L. S. N. occupies pp. 436-599.
2. The St. Gall MS. No. 376, of the 11th cent. The L. S. N. occupies pp. 312-435.
3. The St. Gall MS. No. 378, of the 11th cent. Here the L. S. N. is at pp. 146-298.

vi. Analysis of the Table.—In classifying the above 115 Sequences (including 76) we may first of all eliminate those which are certainly not by Notker, viz.:—

Nos. 49, 95, 96, 111, by Eberhard l. (d. 923); No. 84, by Godericus or Godthald (d. 1086); No. 106, by Widun (B. 909); No. 110, by Eberhard n. (d. 998); No. 113, inserted in the St. Gall Miss. before the 12th cent. No. 119 is sometimes ascribed to Aelmut.

For the rest, taking the joint evidence of the two most important St. Gall MSS., Nos. 376 and 378, we find that the following are not contained in the L. S. N. of either, viz.:—

Nos. 3, 15, 22, 44, 45, 49, 50, 51, 52, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 81, 82, 83, 88, 99, 99, 100, 105, 106, 109, 112; and besides these Nos. 34, 57, 74, 76, 78, 114, while contained in No. 378 are not in the L. S. N.

To pursue the analysis further would exceed the limits of our space, and would require a mass of wearisome details. The conclusions the present writer, in view of all the evidence, has arrived at, may best be seen by his dividing the Sequences into four classes: I. Those which may be accepted as genuine. II. Those of which the genuineness is probable. III. Those which may possibly be by Notker. IV. Those certainly not by Notker.

i. Nos. 1, 2, 4-14, 16, 17, 18, 21, 22, 23, 24-41, 43, 45, 47, 48, 50, 59, 59, 65, 72, 73, 81: in all 46.

ii. Nos. 19, 20, 21, 34, 44, 45, 46, 54, 55, 56, 61, 63, 72, 75, 78, 78, 81, 82, 83, 88, 104, 109, 109, 110, 113: in all 34.

IV. Nos. 48, 54, 56, 57, 90, 106, 110, 111, 114: in all 8.

A more acute criticism may be able to discriminate the third class more accurately and eliminate from it those mistakenly ascribed to Notker. With at least may be taken for granted, viz., that while the above lists probably contain various sequences not really composed by Notker, it is in the highest degree improbable that any here omitted can be his genuine compositions.

vii. Conclusion.—Notker’s Sequences are remarkable for their majesty and noble elevation of tone, their earnestness and their devoutness. They display a profound knowledge of Holy Scripture in its plainest and its more recondite interpretations, and a firm grasp and definite exposition of the eternal truths of the Christian Faith. The style is clear, and the language easily comprehensible, so that whether he is paraphrasing the Gospel for the day, or setting forth the leading ideas of the Church’s festivals, or is engaged in vivid and sympathetic word-painting: he is at once pleasing and accurate. His sequences were speedily received with favour as a welcome change from sound to sense, and from the end of the 9th century to the middle of the 12th, they, together with sequences on the same model, were in universal use over Northern Europe. As they were written for the neumes of the Alleluia they were of course made to correspond thereto, and must be studied in connection with their melodies. The metrical rules governing their composition are intricate, suffice it to say here that they were written in rhetorical prose, somewhat in the form of the Hebrew Psalms, in irregular lines and without any attempt at rhyme. It is thus difficult to present a version in English which shall be at once exact and yet suited to modern congregational use. The only literal version which has attained any popularity in English is Dr. Neale’s tr. of No. 56, “Canemus canticum” (see p. 804, l.), and he complains bitterly (Med. Hps., ed. 1867, pp. viii., and 42) that hymnal compilers have ignored the ancient melody to which it was written, and that it has been “cramped, tortured, tamed down into a chant.” Still the Notkerian sequences are worthy of greater attention than they have been bestowed on them by English translators. If the endeavour to give a literal version is abandoned, they allow a wider choice of measures and greater freedom of rendering than the later rhyming Sequences. Those which have been at-
Now are the days of humblest prayer. *F. W. Faber. [Lmd.| Pub. in the 2nd ed. of his Jesus and Mary, &c., 1852, in 8 st. of 7 l.; in his Oratory Hymns, 1854, in 5 st., No. 12; and his Hymns, 1862. It is usually given in an abbreviated form, sometimes as in the Oratory Hymns as above, and again as in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, where st. i., ii., and vii. are omitted. In the Hymnary, 1872, it begins, "Lord, in these days of humblest prayer." [J. J.]

deming Love.] The authorship of this hymn is unknown. The earliest form in which it is found differs widely from that followed in modern hymnals. In 1763 it appeared in the Appendix to M. Matan's Ps. and Hymns, as No. clxvii, thus: —

Re redeeming love.
1. Now begin the Heavenly Theme, Sing aloud in Jesus' Name, Ye, who Jesus' Kindness prove Triumph in redeeming Love.
2. Ye, who see the Father's Grace, Reaping in the Saviour's Face As to Canna on Ye move Praise and blest redeeming Love.
3. Mourning souls dry up your Tears, Banish all your guilty Fears, See your guilt and curse remove, Cancel'd by redeeming Love.
4. Ye, alas! who long have been Willing slaves of Death and Sin, Now from Bills no longer rove, Stop—and taste redeeming Love.
5. Welcome all by Sin opprest, Welcome to his sacred Rest, Nothing brought Him from above, Nothing but redeeming Love.
6. He further'd th' Infernal Pow'r, His tremendous Foes and ours From their curried Empire drove, Mighty in redeeming Love.
7. Hither then your Mutil bring, Strike aloud each joyful String, Mortals join the Hymns above, Join to praise redeeming Love."

In this form, or with alterations, the hymn appeared in about fifty collections between 1763 and 1833, and in all it was given anonymously, except in that of Dobell, 1806, who quoted it as from "Langford's Coll." This reference is to the Hymns and Spiritual Songs pub. by John Langford (p. 639, ii.) in 1776, and in which the hymn appeared. In Langford's 2nd ed. he marked all his own hymns with an asterisk, but this hymn is unmarked. This is clear evidence against his authorship. The error of ascribing the hymn to Langford arose through the careless editing of E. Buckrasteth, who in the Index of his Christian Hymnody, 1833, gave the hymn as "Now begin the, Langford." This was copied by later compilers, some expanding the name into "John Langford," and others into "William Langford," and all basing their guesses on an error. The earliest date to which it has been traced is Madan's Appendix, 1763. Failing evidence that it was written by Madan, we must give it as Anon. No. 982, in Kennedy, 1863, "Now the heavenly joy proclaim" is an altered form of this hymn. [J. J.]

Now, from the altar of our hearts. *J. Mason. [Even.] Appeared in his Spiritual Songs, or Songs of Praise, 1683, pp. 25-6, in 8 st. of 11., and a half stanza of 4 l., and entitled "A Song of Praise for the Evening." (Orig. text. Lyra Brit. p. 386.) The third stanza, which is usually omitted in the hymnals, reads: —
"Man's life's a book of history; The leaves thereof are days; The letters, mercies closely join'd; The title is Thy praise.

This hymn is usually thought to have suggested Dr. Franklin's well-known epitaph upon himself, wherein he compares his body to "the cover of an old book, the contents torn out, and stripped of its lettering and gilding." The whole hymn is sometimes quoted, and not without reason, as Mason's finest production. [J. J.]

Now from the world withdrawn. *J. Bulmer. [Even.] 1st pub. in his Hymns, Original and Select, &c., 1836, Bk. i., No. 157, in 4 st. of 4 l., and entitled "The Spirit of Prayer and Holiness implored." It is one of the very few hymns by the author which have come into general use. It is found in its original form in Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1866, No. 975, with, in st. i., l. 3, "O Lord!" for "dear Lord!" [J. J.]

Now gracious Lord, Thine arm reveal. *J. Newton. [The New Year.] The first of thirteen hymns to be sung "Before Annual Sermons to Young People, on New Years' Evenings," 1st pub. in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. ii., No. 17, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed "Prayer for a Blessing." (Orig. text, Hymn Comp., No. 90.) Its use is very extensive in all English-speaking countries; it has also been translated into several languages. [J. J.]

Now let a spacious world arise. *J. Watts. [Creation.] 1st pub. in his Hymns, &c., 1709, Bk. ii., No. 147, in 11 st. of 4 l. Its use is limited. In the 1745 Draft of the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, No. xxxvii., it was given with the omission of st. xi., and the change, in st. ii., l. 3, of "He call'd the Night," into "He call'd the Light," a change which evidently suggested the form of st. ii. in the recast of 1781. This recast, which opens, "Let heav'n arise, let earth appear," was given as No. 1. (Gen. i. 1) in the authorized Trans. and Paraph. of 1781, and has been in use in the Church of Scotland for more than 100 years. In the markings of authors and revisers by W. Cameron's daughter, this recast is claimed for him (see p. 800, ii.). [J. J.]

Now let a true ambition rise. *P. Doddridge. [Seek first the Kingdom of God.] Written January 1, 1738 [p. 888.], and pub. by Jos. Orton in his posthumous ed. of Doddridge's
NOW LET OUR CHEERFUL EYES

Hymns, 1755, No. 178, in 4 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Seeking first the Kingdom of God," it was also given in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 199. [J. J.]

Now let our cheerful eyes survey: J. Dodridge, [Jesus, the High Priest.] This hymn is No. 67 in the n. m., but included. It is placed between hymns are dated respectively "April 10, 1733," and "January 1, 1733." The heading reads "Christ bearing the name of His people on His breastplate, from Exodus xxvi. 29." When included by Job Orton in his posthumous ed. of Dodridge's Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 8, in 5 st. of 4 l., the heading was altered to "Christ's intercession typified by Aaron's Breastplate," and at i., l. 4, was changed from "With correspondent love," to "And sympathetic love."

In J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the Hymns, 1839, No. 8, the line reads, "His sympathy and love," He has also "And high o'er all the heavenly host," for "And high o'er all the shining train," in st. ii. This hymn is in C. U. both in G. Britain and America, Orton's text being that commonly adopted. Sometimes, however, it reads, "Now let our truthful eyes survey." [J. J.]

Now let our mourning hearts revive. P. Dodridge. [Death of a Minister.] Written on the death of a Minister, at Kettering, August 22, 1736, and headed, "Comfort in God under the Removal of Ministers; or, other Useful Persons by Death, Joshua, i. 2, 4, 5." It was given in Job Orton's posthumous ed. of Dodridge's Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 17, in 6 st. of 4 l., with the heading changed to, "Support in the gracious presence of God under the Loss of Ministers, and other useful Friends;" and repeated in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, in 1839, with the same heading. It is in C. U. in G. Britain and America. Another form of the text, beginning with st. ii., "What though the arm of conquering death," is also in several collections. [J. J.]

Now let our souls ascend above. [Christian Confidence.] In the Draft Translations and Paraphrases of the Church of Scotland, 1743, this vigorous paraphrase of Romans viii. 31-39, was given as No. xxxv., in 9 st. of 4 l. The authorship is unknown. The first stanza reads:—

"Now let our souls ascend above the fears of guilt and woe."

"Gone is for, our Friend declared;"

"Who then can be our Fear?"

In the Draft of 1751, it remained unaltered; but in that of 1753 if seemed the form which was authorized in the Transl. and Paraphrases (No. xlviii.) of the same year. W. Cameron's daughter (p. 300, l. ii.) gives, in her markings of authors and revisers, J. Logan as the author of this arrangement of the text of 1743; and, as stated in the memoir of Bruce (p. 187, l.) in this work, we see no reason to doubt its accuracy. As this arrangement has been in authorized use in the Church of Scotland for more than 100 years, and some copies have also been compiled therefrom for use in English hymnals, we give the full text of 1751, with those portions taken from the Draft of 1743 printed in italics:—

1. "Let Christian faith and hope dispel the fears of guilt and woe;"
2. "He who his Son most dear and loved gave up for us to die,"
3. "Behold the best of gifts, of everlasting love,"
4. "Where is the judge, who can condemn, since God hath justified?"
5. "The Saviour died, but rose again triumphant from the grave; and pleads our cause at God's right hand, insensible to save."
6. "Who, then, can e'er divide us more from Jesus and his love." Or break the sacred chain that binds the earth to heaven above?"
7. "Let troubles rise, and terror frown, and days of darkness fall; through all dangers we'll defy, and more than conquer all."
8. "Nor death nor life, nor earth nor hell, nor time's destroying sway, Can e'er apace us from his heart, or make his love decay."
9. "Each future period that will bless, as it has bless'd the past, he loved us from the first of time, he loves us to the last." The designation of this full text must thus be Scottish Tr. & Par., 1745, Anon., and J. Logan, 1728. In addition to the full text there are also the following centos in C. U.:—

1. O let triumphant faith (hope) dispel. This form appeared in the American Proper Bk. Ord., 1726, and has passed into many American collections.
2. The Saviour died, but rose again. This, in W. Stevenson's Hymns for the Church, 1781, is composed of st. v.-viii.
3. Who from the love of Christ our Head. This appeared in Miss Leeson's Paraphrases and Hymns, 1833. It is based on st. vii.-ix. To this Miss Leeson added a second part in 4 st. as, "Let followers of the Apostle's faith." [J. J.]

Now let our souls on wings sublime. T. Gibbons. [Death anticipated.] Appended to Sermon iv. of his Sermons on Various Subjects, with a Hymn adapted to each. Subject, 1762, p. 17, in 5 st. of 4 l., the text of the Sermon being Eccles. xi. 7, and the title "The Return of the Body to Earth, and the Return of the Soul to God." In 1769 it was included in the Bristol Bapt. Coll. of A. Evans, No. 206; in 1787, in Rippon's Sel., No. 223; and later in a large number of collections in G. Britain and America. The American Meth. Episc. Ch. Hymns, 1849, gives it in 4 st. as "Arise my soul on wings sublime." In the American Church Praise Bk., N. Y., 1882, No. 718, is a cento of which st. i., ii. are st. i., and iii. of this hymn, and st. iv., are st. i. and iii. of J. Newton's "As when the weary traveller gains" (see p. 86, l.). In its various forms this is one of the most widely known of the author's hymns. [J. J.]

Now let the feeble all be strong. P. Dodridge. [Help in Temptation.] Written June 24, 1733, on 1 Cor. x. 13, in 4 st. of 4 l. [D. M., and put, by Job Orton in his posthumous ed. of Dodridge's Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 298, and again in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 309, with the original heading. "Temptation moderated by the Divine Fidelity, Power, and Love," changed, as in the Hymnus, 1755, to "God's fidelity in moderating Temptations." [J. J.]

Now let Thy servant die in peace. [Note. Dimittis.] In the 1745 Draft of the Translations and Paraphrases of the Church of Scotland, the following paraphrase of Simeon's Song appeared:—

1. "Now let thy Servant die in Peace, from this vain World dismiss: I've seen thy great salvation, Lord: and hasten to my Rest."

2. "Thy long expected Grace, disclose'd before the People's View, Hath prov'd thy Love was constant still, and promises were true."

3. "This is the Sun, whose cheering Rays, through Gentile Darkness spread, Peace and thy chosen Race, and Blessings on their Head."

The author of this paraphrase is unknown. A second Paraphrase of the same passage, beginning, "When Jesus, by the Virgin brought," appeared in John Logan's Poems, 1781, in 7 st. of 4 l. This text is given in full in Dr. Grosart's Works of M. Bruce, 1805, pp. 133-6. For reasons assigned in the memoir of M. Bruce in this work (p. 187, l.), we regard this paraphrase as the work of Bruce, possibly with a few alterations by Logan. During the same year, 1781, the authorized Translations and Paraphrases of the Church of Scotland were published. In them, as No. 38, is a paraphrase of Simeon's Song, in 11 st. of 4 l. "Just and devout old Simeon liv'd." This is thus composed:—

St. l.-iii. First given in the Draft of 1781.
St. iv.-vi. From the paraphrase as given in Logan's Poems.
St. vii. New, in Draft of 1781.
St. viii. Based on 1745 text as above.
St. ix. From the paraphrase in Logan's Poems.
St. x., xii. Based on 1745 text as above.

This arrangement was made, according to the markings by the daughter of W. Cameron (p. 180, lii.), by J. Logan. In Miss J. E. Leeson's Par. & Hys., &c., 1833, No. lxviii., the hymn begins, "Now lettest Thou Thy servant, Lord," in 16 l., based on st. vii., ix., and x. of the 1781 text as above. It is by Miss Leeson, as is also the second hymn on the same subject, "Behold, according to Thy word." [J. J.]

Now let us join with hearts and tongues. J. Newton. [Man honoured above Angels.] Appeared in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. ii., No. 39, in 7 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Man honoured above Angels." From this hymn "Jesus, Who passed the angels by," is taken. It is composed of st. iv.-vii. It is more widely used than the full hymn. [J. J.]

Now, Lord, we part in Thy great (blest) Name. J. Draup. [Dismissal.] This hymn, which has undergone various modifications, first appeared in Draup's Hys. and Spiritual Songs, Bolton, 1787, No. 82, entitled "At Parting," and reads:—

1. "Now, Lord, we part in Thy great Name, In which we here together came, Help us our few remaining days To live unto Jehovah's praise.

NOW SHALL MY INWARD JOY

II. "Help us in life and death to bless, The Lord our strength and righteousness; And bring us all to meet above, Then shall we better sing Thy love."

In one or two instances the opening line is given as, "Now, Lord, we part in Thy blest Name." The most popular form of the hymn is that given to it by Bp. Heber, "Lord, now we part in Thy blest Name," and pub. in his posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 112, as a "Hymn after Sermon," and given as "Anon.," Bp. Heber's alterations are: st. i., l. 1. "Lord, none for "Now, Lord," "blest" for "great:" l. 3. "Grant" for "Help;" l. 4. "Teach" for "Help;" l. 3. "And Grant" for "And bring." In this form it is found in several collections, including Kemble's Ps. & Hys.; the Irish Church Hymnal, 1873, &c. [W. T. B.]

Now may servant prayer arise. J. Newton. [New Year.] The third of thirteen "Hymns before Annual Sermons to Young People on New Years' Evenings," pub. in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. ii., No. 9, in 7 st. of 6 l. It is in C. U. both in the original and in the following forms:—

1. Bless, O bless the opening year. 2. Bless, O Lord the opening year. 3. Bless O Lord this opening year. 4. Bless O Lord each opening year.

These forms of the text generally embrace st. ii., iii., vi., vii., and are in use in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

Now one day's journey less divides. Charlotte Elliott. [Evening.] 1st pub. in her brother's Ps. & Hys., 2nd thousand, 1836-7, in 6 st. of 4 l., as an Evening Hymn. In 1839 Miss Elliott rewrote the original stanzas, added four more, and included the 10 st. as the hymn for Tuesday evening in her Hys. for a Week, which were pub. in 1842. This full text is given in Snapp's Songs of G. & G., 1872. The 1839-7 st. are i., iv., vi., x., and the 1839 st. iii., vii., viii., ix. No. 437 in the Presbyterian Sel. of Hys., Philadelphia, 1861, is from this revised text, but slightly altered. [J. J.]

Now shall my inward joy arise. I. Watts. [God's care of His Church.] Pub. in his Hys. and Spiritual Songs, 1709, Bk. i., No. 39, in 6 st. of 4 l., as a paraphrase of Isaiah xlix. 13, &c. In this form its use is limited. In the Draft of the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1745, No. xvii., is a hymn on the same passage beginning, "Ye heav'n, send forth your praising song." Of this hymn st. i.-iii. are by an unknown hand, and have little or no resemblance to the corresponding stanzas in Watts, whilst st. iv.-vi. are from his hymn, as above, with the alteration of a "kind woman," in st. iv., 1. 1, to a "fond mother." In the authorized issue of the Trs. and Paraphs. of 1781 the opening line reads, "Ye heav'n, send forth your song of praise:" and the text is a recant of the Draft of 1745 throughout. As Watts's text of st. iv.-vi. is easily attainable for comparison we add hereot only the text of st. i.-iii. from the 1745 Draft:—

Ye heav'n, send forth your praising song! Earth, raise thy Voice below! Let Hills and Mountains join the Chor, And joy thro' Nature flow!
NOW THAT MY JOURNEY'S

"Behold, how gracious is our God:
with comfort to our Strains
He heals the Sorrow of our Heart, and banishes our Pain.

"Cease ye, when Days of Darkness fall,
with trembling Hearts to mourn;
As if the Lord could leave a saint forsaken or forlorn."

The final recant of this hymn in the authorized issue of the Scottish Tr. & Paraphrases of 1781 is claimed for W. Cameron (p. 300, 3) by his daughter in her markings of authors and revisers of that issue. In Miss J. R. Leeson's Paraph. & Hym., 1853, No. 11., on the same passage is a hymn of 8 st. in two parts: (1) "Sing, O ye heavens! Be joyful, earth;" and (2) "O Zion, from the stranger's hand."

This arrangement by Miss Leeson is based on the Scottish Tr. & Paraph. of 1781, as above.

Now that my journey's just begun,
Jane Taylor. [Early Piety.] Appeared in Hym. for Infant Minds, by A. & J. Taylor, 1810, in 9 st. of 4 1., with the motto, "Early will seek Thee." (ed. 1866, p. 11.) It is found in a few of the older hymn-books in an abbreviated form. With later compilers it is more popular, and is given in a great many collections for children. In a few hymnals, as the Meth. S. S. H. Bk., 1879, it begins, "Lord, now my journey's just begun."

Now the day is over. S. Baring-Gould. [Evening.] Written in 1865, and printed in the Church Times the same year. In 1898 it was given in the Appendix to H. A. & M., and from that date it has gradually increased in popularity until its use has become common in all English-speaking countries.

Now the labourer's task is o'er. J. Ellerton. [Burial.] Written for and first pub. in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, in 6 st. of 6 1. Mr. Ellerton says:

"The whole hymn, especially the third, fifth, and sixth stanzas, owe much to Mr. A. Ollivier, who first expressed it in a beautiful poem of the Rev. Gerhard Monniter's, beginning, "Brother, now thy toils are o'er, which will be found in the People's Hymnal, 150." (Notes on Church Hymns, p. 173.)"

From Church Hymns this hymn has passed into H. A. & M., Hy. Comp., Thring's Coll., and many other collections, and sometimes, as in the last-named, with the omission of st. iii. In R. Brown-Borthwick's Select Hymns for Church and Home, 2nd ed., 1885, the original text as it appeared in the 1st ed. of that work in 1871 is given as No. 72; and the revised and authorized text as in Church Hymns, as No. 185. The latter is also in Mr. Ellerton's Hymns, &c., 1888, and may be at once known by the name:

"Father, in Thy gracious keeping Leave we now Thy servant sleeping."

Now, when the dusky shades of night retreating. [Morning.] This cento was given in Hedge and Huntington's Hym. for the Church of Christ, Boston, U. S. A, 1853, No. 404, in 6 st. of 4 1. The first stanza is an altered form of st. 1. of W. J. Copeland's tr. of "Excejum noctis" (p. 300, l.) It is suggested in the Index of Latin first lines in Thring's Coll., 1882, that st. iii. ("Look from the tower of heaven") is also from the same Latin hymn; st. ii. ("To Thee Whose word, &c.") is from "Lucia Creator optime," and st. vi. ("So when the morn, &c.") is from "Nocte surgentes, &c." Possibly this may be so, but the resemblance is remote. The hymn as in the Hys. for the Church of Christ, either in full or in part, is in a great many hymn-books in G. Britain and America, including the Plymouth Coll., 1855; Kennedy, 1863; the Hymnary, 1872; Thring’s Coll., 1882, &c. In manuscript collections st. iv. and v. of the 1853 text are omitted, and sometimes a doxology is added. [J. J.]

3 G 2

Nox atra rerum congetit. St. Gregory the Great (?). [Thursday Morning.] Mone, No. 278, gives this as probably by St. Gregory the Great (it is not assigned to him by the Benedictine editors), and at p. 372, cites it as appointed for Nocturns on Thursday in an 8th cent. ms. at Trier. Daniel i. No. 45, gives the text, and at iv. p. 32, cites it as in a Rheinam ms. of the 10th cent. Among the British Museum ms. it is found in three 11th cent. Hymnaries of the English Church (Vesp. D. xii. f. 19 b; Jul. A. vi. f. 27 b; Harl. 2961, f. 233), and in an 11th cent. Brevisary of the Spanish Church (Add. 30948, f. 77 b). It is in an 11th cent. ms. at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge (391, p. 235), and in the Latin Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon Ch. (Surtewa Society), 1851, is printed from an 11th cent. ms. at Durham (B. iii. 32 f. 76). Also in three ms. of the 11th cent. at St. Gall, Nos. 367, 413, 414. It is included in the Roman (Venice, 1478, and the revision of 1632), Sarum, York, Aberdeen, and other Brevisaries, the universal use being for Thursdays at Nocturna or Matins. The text is also in Wackernagel, i. No. 94; Hymnarium Sarisb., 1851, p. 51; Königsfeld, i. p. 12; and Card. Newman’s Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. [J. M.]

Nox, et tenebrae, et nubila. Prudentius. [Wednesday and Thursday.] This hymn is found in a ms. of the 5th cent. in the Bibliothèque National, Paris (3094 f. 3 b), and is given in all editions of Prudentius’ works, including Aurelii Prudentii Clementis V. C. Opera Omnia, London, 1824, vol. i. p. 61, where it is given with notes. It is No. ii. of the Catechemerion, and extends to 72 lines. At a very early date it was divided into two hymns, the first beginning as above, and the second. “Lux ecce surgit aures.” Each of these must be taken in detail.

1. Nox et tenebrae, et nubila. [Wednesday Morning.] This is found in four mss. of the 11th cent. in the British Museum (Jul. A. vi. f. 26 b; Vesp. D. xii. f. 18; Harl. 2961, f. 22 b; Add. 30948 f. 77), and is printed in the Latin Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon Church, 1851, from an 11th cent. ms. at Durham (B. iii. 34 f. 7). It is found in unfit of the later Brevisaries, as the Sarum, Roman, York, Aberdeen, &c. The text is also in Mone, No. 276; Daniel i. No. 104; in Card. Newman’s Hymni Ecclesiae 1838 and 1865, &c. [J. M.]

Nun freut euch lieben Christenlehm Christenlehm. [Advent. Redemption by Christ.] This is Luther's first congregational hymn. It was written in 1523, immediately after, and is a companion to his "Ein neues Lied" (p. 328). It appeared in the Elich erdicht Liefer, Wittenberg, 1524, in 10 st. of 7 l., entitled "A Christian hymn of Dr. Martin Luther, setting forth the unbreakable grace of God, and true faith" in (Klug's G. B. 1541, and most later books, ettled "A hymn of thanksgiving for the great blessings which God has bestowed on us in Christ"). Hence in Wackenage, ill. p. 5, in Schirck's ed. of Luther's Geistl. Lieder, 1854, p. 31, and in the Unr. L. S., 1861,
No. 235. By its clear and full doctrinal statements in flowing verse it soon became popular in German. Titian Hessiusius, in his preface to Johannes Magdelaberg's Psalter, 1565, thus speaks of it:
"I do not doubt that through this one hymn of many Lutherians have been brought to the true faith, who before could not endure the name of Luther; but the noble, precious words of the hymn have won their hearts, so that they are constrained to brace the truth, so that in my opinion the hymn helped the spread of the Gospel not a little."

We may note that the original melody of 1524 is in H. A. & M., No. 293.
Cf. Kler. The melody, which appeared in King's G.
B., 1525 (and possibly in the lost ed. of 1529), is said to have been written down by Luther from hearing it sung by a travelling artisan, and bears considerable resemblance to an old popular song tune (see L. Eker's Choral Buch, 1663, Nos. 193-195). In England the melody of 1525 has been long used, in an altered form, under the name of Luther's Hymn, and set to "Great God: what we see and hear!" (p. 434). 1.

Owing to the structure of this hymn forbidding selection, and to its length, it has come very little into English C. U. Tr. as:

of the ms. the initial "O" has dropped out.
Morel, No. 236, gives it as a hymn for the Common of Apostles (beginning: "Christe, tu splendor gloriae"); from an 11th cent. Rhineland

O Sun of glory! Christ our King. By J. D. Chambers, in his Laudis Sonum, 1666, p. 6; and in the 2nd ed., 1663, of the Appendix to the H. Noted, No. 206. [J. M.]

O come and dwell in me. C. Wesley. [Holiness desired.] This is a cento compiled from his Short Hymns, etc., 1762 (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. vii.), as follows: st. i. from vol. ii., No. 508, on 2 Cor. iii. 17; st. ii. from vol. ii., No. 578, on 2 Cor. v. 17; and st. iii. from vol. ii., No. 713, on Heb. xi. 5. This cento was given in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 336, and has passed into several collections in G. Britain and America. G. J. Stevenson has an interesting account in his Methodist H. Bk. Notes, 1833, p. 298, of the spiritual use of this cento. [J. J.]

O come and mourn with me awhile. F W. Faber [Good Friday.] Pub. in his Jesus and Mary, 1849, in 12 st. of 4 l., and headed "Jesus Crucified;" and again, after revision, in his Hymnæ, 1862. It was brought into special notice by being included in an abbreviated and altered form in H. A. & M., 1861. The original refrain reads, "Jesus, our Love, is crucified." This was changed in H. A. & M. to "Jesus, our Lord, is crucified," and has been almost universally adopted. The history of this refrain, which is somewhat interesting, is given under "My Lord, my Love was crucified" (p. 761, ii.). In addition to the H. A. & M. arrangement there are others, including, "Ye faithful, come and mourn awhile" in Skinner's Daily Service Hymnal, 1864, "O come, and look awhile on Him," in the 1874 Supplement to the N. Cong.:

O come, and mourn beside the Cross," in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymn., 1871; "Have we no tears to shed for Him," in Beecher's Plymouth Coll., 1855; and others. The H. A. & M. version of the text is translated into Latin in Biggs's annotated H. A. & M., 1867, by the Rev. C. B. Pearson, as "Adeste fideles, mocom complorantes." [J. J.]

O come, Creator Spirit, Inspire the souls. W. J. Blee. [Annunciation of B. V. M.] This hymn, which, as given in his Church Hymn. and Tune Bk., 1852-55, is a cento as follows:—st. i. is original; st. ii. is a tr. of "Memento rerum conditor" (p. 289, i.); and st. iii.-vii., is a tr. of "Hanc solam diei" (p. 477, i). This cento is repeated in Rice's Sol. from Mr. Blee's Church H. & Tune Bk., 1870. [J. J.]

O comfort to the dreary. J. Conder. [Christ the Comforter.] Given as No. 428 in the Cong. H. Bk., 1836, in 5 st. of 8 l., again in his Choir and Oratory, 1837, p. 43; and again, with the omission of st. v. in his Hymn of Praise, Prayer, &c., 1865. It is usually given with the omission of st. iii. [J. J.]

O comfort to [of] the weary! O balm to the distressed! T. R. Birks. [Ps. Lxxxi.] Appeared in his Companion Puddler, 1874, in 4 st. of 8 l. It is repeated in the Universal H. Bk., 1883, and others, and sometimes as "O comfort of the weary." It is a good specimen of the author's paraphrases. [Psalter, English, § xx. 7.] [J. J.]

O! day of days! shall hearts set free? J. Kebbe. [Easter.] Written April 18, 1822, and 1st pub. in his Christian Year, 1827, as the poem for Easter Day. It is in 15 st. of 4 l., and headed with the text from St. Luke xxiv. 5, 6. It has been repeated in all later editions of the Christian Year. As a whole it is not in C. U.; but st. ix. and xii., slightly altered, are given as, "As even the lifeless stone was dear," in the H. Bk. for the Use of Wellington Coll., 1860, where it is appointed for the evening of the 4th Sunday after Easter. [J. J.]

O day of rest and gladness. Bp. C. Wordsworth, of Lincoln. [Sunday.] This is the opening hymn of his Holy Year, 1862, pt. i., in 6 st. of 8 l. It is a fine hymn, somewhat in the style of an Ode from a Greek Canon, and is in extensive use. Sometimes st. vi. and vii. are given as a separate hymn, beginning, "To day on weary nations." In the 3rd ed. of the Holy Year Bk., 1874, the full hymn was given and appeared as No. 3. In the 1874 Supplement to the New Cng. H. Bk., it is reduced to 4 st. of 8 l., and is also somewhat altered. [J. J.]

O Dei sapientia. [Presentation of the B. V. M.] This hymn does not appear to be earlier than the 15th cent. Mone, No. 342, gives it from ms. of the 15th cent. at Bamberg, and at St. Paul in Carinthia; and Morel, p. 82, cites it as in an Einsiedeln ms. of 1470. It is in three St Gall ms. of the 15th cent., Nos. 408, 438, 440. The printed text is also in the Sarum Brev., Paris, 1531; the Ablerned Brev. of 1500; in Daniel, iv. p. 283, &c. Tr. as:—

O wisdom of the God of Grace. By J. D. Chambers. In H. S. Syn. 1866, p. 64, and, with slight alterations and another doxology, in the Hymnary, 1872. [J. M.]

O Deus ego amo Te, Nam prior Tu amasti me. [Love to Christ, or Passiontide.] This hymn is found in the Psalterium Cantionum Catholicarum, Cologne, 1722, p. 328, and is probably by some Gobian Jesuit of the 17th cent. In J. C. Zahnnesnig’s Katholische Kirchengesänge, Augsburg, 1822, vol. i., p. 150, it is entitled, "The Desire of St. Ignatius," which probably is meant to refer to St. Ignatius Loyola (b. 1491, d. 1556; founder of the Society of Jesus, i.e. the Order of the Jesuits). The Latin text is also in the Hymnodia Sacra, Münster, 1753, p. 268; Daniel, ii., p. 335; H. M. Macgillivray’s Songs of the Christian Creed and Life, 1876, &c. [J. M.]

Translations in C. U.:—

1. I love Thee, Lord most high. By E. Caswall, in his Hymn, 1849, p. 295; and his Hymns & Poems, 1873, p. 152. It has been included, with slight alterations, in nearly all of the prominent hymn-books since 1850, and is very popular in G. Britain and America. It is also found in the following forms:—

(1) I love Thee, O my God, but not. I in the Reformed Dutch Hsz. of the Church, N. Y., 1869, much altered. In the Rep. Hsz. of the Church, 1871, this form is again altered as "I love Thee, O my God, and still.

(2) Jesus I love Thee; not because. I in Schaff’s Christ in Song, 1869.

(3) Lord, may we love Thee, not because. I in Kenedy, 1863.

(4) O God, we love Thee; not because. I in the Irvingite Hsz. for the Use of the Churches, 1871.

(5) Saviour, I love Thee; not because. I in Dale’s English H. Bk., 1874.

(6) Thou, O my Jesus (Saviour) Thou didst me. In the Unitarian Hsz. for the Church of Christ, Boston, U.S.A. 1833; T. Darley’s Hsz. for the Church of England, 1867, &c.

(7) I love Thee, O my God and [my] Lord. Given anonymously in Kenedy, 1863, No. 961, in 4 st. of 6 l. In the Sarum Hsz., 1868, and Porter’s Churchman’s Hsz., 1876, it is abbreviated to 3 st.

Other tr. are:—

1. My God, I love Thee, not because I covet Thy salvation. Anon. in The Old Church Pores, 1857.
O DISCLOSE THY LOVELY FACE

2. O God, my heart is fixed on Thee. Elizabeth Charles, 1863.
5. O God, let not my love to Thee. H. M. Macgill, 1876.

O DISCLOSE THY LOVELY FACE. C. Wesley.

[Pardon desired.] There are two centos in C.C., each beginning with this line, as follows:

(1) The first is No. 146 of the Westminster Bk., prior to the 1875 revision. It is thus composed: St. i. is st. ii., of C. Wesley’s hymn, “Lord, how long, how long shall I,” which appeared in the Hymn & Sacred Poems, 1744; and st. ii. is the 1st st. ii., III. of Christ, Whose glory fills the skies” (p. 226, i.). In this form the cento was given in the Westminster Bk., 1875, and is found in several Methodist collections. (2) The second form of the hymn is No. 156, in the revised Westminster Bk., 1875, and is composed of st. i., ii., and v. of “Lord, how long, how long shall I!” as above. [J. J.]

Thou Holiest Love, whom most I love. A good tr., omitting st. iv., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 1st Ser., 1855, p. 83 (2nd ed., 1856, altered, and with a new tr. of st. ii.). It was repeated in full in Schaff’s Christ in Song, 1869, p. 185. Abridged in Flett’s Col., 1871; Whiting’s Hymns for the Ch. Catholic, 1882, the latter reading “most I love.” In the original hymn-books, the Dutch Ref., 1869, and the Bapt. Praise Bk., 1871, give centos beginning with the tr. of st. vi., “O Love! who gav’st Thy life for me.”

It is Arnold’s finest church hymn, and is a very characteristic expression of the romantic and passionate feeling of the time toward the old and the new man. Leuzmann, in Koch, viii., 432-434, says of it:

“‘In this hymn the poet powerfully expresses his innermost emotions under the many conflicts he had with his heart. It is a true daily hymn of supplication for earnest Christians who have taken the words of the Apostle ‘Follow...the sanctification without which no man shall see the Lord’ (Heb. xii. 14) as the rule of their lives. Many such might often rather sigh it out than sing it.”

Translators in C. U.:

1. Thou who breakest every chain. A very good tr., omitting st. vi., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 140 (C. B. for England, 1863, No. 111, omitting the trs. of st. iii., viii.). Included in the Horrow School H.Bk., 1866; Brown-Borowing’s Select Hymns, 1871, and the S. P. C. K. Church Hymn, 1871, &c. In Church Hymns the cento is: st. i. is from 1., i. 1-4, and iv., 11., 1-4 of the German; ii. from 1., i. 5-8, and vii., 11., 1-4; iii. from 11., ii. 1-4, and xi. 5-8.

2. Thou who breakest every fetter, Thou who art. Omitting st. vi., by Mrs. Beran, in her Songs of Eternal Life, 1858, p. 51. Her trs. of st. i., viii., x., xi., are No. 188 in Dr. Pagenstecher's Cof., 1834.

Another tr. is, "Thou who breakest every fetter, Whom art ever," by J. L. Frinkingham, 1730. [J. M.]

O esca viatorium. [Holy Communion.] This hymn was probably composed by some German of the 17th cent., though it has been by some ascribed to St. Thomas of Aquino. It has not been traced earlier than the Mainz G. B., (R. C.) 1661, where it is given at p. 367 in 3 vols., entitled "Hymn on the true Bread of Heaven." It is also in the Hymnalia Sacra, Mainz, 1671, p. 86; in Danielii i. p. 369, and others. [J. M.]

Translations in C. U.:-
1. O Bread to pilgrims given. By R. Palmer, 1st pub. in the American Sabbath H. Bk., 1858, No. 1051; again in his Hymns, &c. 1865; and then in the Lyra Sac. Americana, 1868. In 1867 it was given with alterations in Alford's Year of Praise, and subsequently in other collections.
2. O Food that weary pilgrims love. By the Compilers of H. & M., in the 2nd ed. of Intros, prefixed to H. & M., 1865, and then in the 1868 Appendix to the same, and in other hymnals.
4. O Bread of Life from heaven. By Philip Schaff, in his Chris's in Song, N. Y., 1869, Lond., 1870. This is repeated in the Scottish Presb. Hymnal, 1876, and altered as "O Food, the pilgrim needeth," in the Hymnary, 1872.

2. O Meat the pilgrim needeth. J. D. Chambers, 1866.

O Ewigkeit, du Donnerwort. J. Riet. [Eternal Life.] 1st pub. in the Vieter Zehn of his Heimliche Lieder, Lüneburg, 1812, p. 51, in 16 st. of 8 l., entitled "An earnest conception of the ascending Eternity." It has given in full in Burg's G. B., Breislaw, 1744, No. 1142, and still holds its place as a standard hymn, but is frequently abridged; st. iv., vii., viii., being generally omitted, as in the Berlin G. L. S. ed., 1863, No. 1608. It is an impressive and strongly coloured hymn, and has proved a powerful appeal to many German hearts. Trs. as:
2. Eternity! most awful word. By A. T. Russell, as No. 258 in his Ps. & Hys., 1851. It is in 4 st., founded on st. i., ii., ix., xvi. Repeated, altered and beginning "Eternity, tremendous word, The womb of mysteries yet unheard," in Kennedy, 1863.
3. Eternity, then word of fear. A good tr. of st. i., xxii., xvi., by E. Thring, as No. 47 in the Uppingham and Sherborne School H. Bk., 1874.

Another tr. is "Eternity! tremendous Word, Homestriking Point, Heart-piercing Sword," by J. C. Jacobs, 1722, p. 97. [J. M.]

O Ewigkeit! O Ewigkeit. [Eternity.] Wackenroder v. p. 1258, gives this as an anonymous hymn (in 18 st. of 6 l. and the refrain, "Betracht o Mensch die Ewigkeit," from the Catholic Churchen-Gesang, Cologne. 1623 (Bäumker, ii. p. 304, says it is in the Ausserlesene Catholiche geistliche Kirchenge- sang, Cologne, 1623.) In Daniel Wülfler's Zweifl Andachten, Nürnberg, 1648, p. 356, in 16 st. considerably altered. Wülfler's text is in the Nürnberg G. B., 1690; Schöber's Liedersameng, 1769, and others: and is followed by Bunsen in his Versuch, 1833, No. 899. Bunsen's st. correspond to st. i.-iv., vii., xii., xiv.-xviii. of the 1625 text, some being considerably altered. As almost in all the trs. the second line is "How long art thou, Eternity," we employ in the following notes —, to show this. Trs. as:
1. Eternity! Eternity!—Yet onward. In full from Bunsen, by Miss Cot, in her Sac. Hys. from the German, 1841, p. 187 (1864, p. 139). Included, more or less altered and abridged, in Alford's Ps. & Hys., 1844, and his Year of Praise, 1867; Holy Song, 1869; the American Hys. for the Church of Christ, 1853; Plymouth Coll., 1855; Dutch Reformed, 1869; and others.
2. Eternity! Eternity!—And yet. A good and full tr. from Bunsen by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Germ., 1st Ser., 1855, p. 24. It is repeated abridged in the Cumbrine H. Bk., 1863; and in America in the Hys. for Ch. & Home, 1860; Robinson's Songs for the Sanctuary, 1865, and the Church Praise Bk., 1882.

See also Eternity! Eternity! how vast, p. 337. i. [J. M.]

O Faith! thou workest miracles. F. W. Faber. [Faith.] Appeared in his Jesus and Mary, 1849, in 12 st. of 4 l. and entitled "Conversion." It was also included in his Hymns, 1862. The hymn "O Gift of gifts! O grace of Faith," in the Hymnary, 1872, and others, is composed of st. v. vii.-x. and xii. of this hymn slightly altered. [J. J.]

O filii et filiae, Rex coelestis, Rex gloriosae. [Easter.] Neale in his Med. Hys., 1851, classifies this with others as belonging to the 13th cent.; but it is more probably not earlier than the 17th cent. with a French origin. The Latin text, for the Salut on Easter Day, is in the Office de la Semaine Sainte, Paris, 1674, p. 478. Bäumker, i. p. 569, cites a German tr. as in the Nord-Sterne's Führers zur Seeligkeit, a German Jesuit collection pub. in 1671. The hymn is introduced by "Alleluia, Alleluia, Alleluia." It is used in many French dioceses in the Salut, or solemn elevation of the Blessed Sacrament, on the evening of Easter Day. The text will be found in the Parroissiens pub. for use in the Paris and other dioceses in France. [J. M.]

Translations in C. U.:—
1. Ye sons and daughters of the Lord. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 251, and his Hymns of Poems, 1873, p. 152. It is given in some Roman Catholic hymn-books in an abbreviated form.

2. Ye sons and daughters of the King. By J. M. Neale in his Medieval Hymn., 1854, p. 111, and the Hymnal N., 1854, No. 65. In addition to its use in its 1851 form it is also found as:
   (O sons and daughters, let us sing. This is the H. A. & M. text, and is Neale's altered by the Compiler.
   (The Sarum 1868 is the same text with further alterations.)

3. Children of God, rejoice and sing. For Christ hath risen. &c. In the Hymnary, 1872, is based upon Dr. Neale and J. D. Chambers.

Translations not in C. U.:—
1. Young men and maidens, rejoice and sing. In the Evening Office, 1749; the Divine Office, 1763; and O. Shipleys Annae Sanctae, 1844. In J. R. Bester's Church Hymns, 1849, p. 50, the same tr. is given with slight changes.

2. Let Zion's sons and daughters say. T. C. Porter (1859, revised 1868) in Schaff's Christ in Song, N. Y., 1869; Lond. 1870, O. maidens and stripplings, hear love's story. C. Kent, in O. Shipleys Annae Sanctae, 1884. [J. J.]

O for an Overcoming Faith. C. Wesley. [Holiness desired.] Appeared in Hymns and Sacred Poems, 1742, p. 80, in 8 st. of 4 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. ii. p. 77.) It is based on the Prayer Book version of Ps. ii. 10. From its appearance in M. Madan's Ps. & Hymns, 1760, No. 3, to the present time, it has been one of the most widely used of C. Wesley's hymns. It was given in the Wesley H. Bk., 1780, No. 334. G. J. Stevenson's note in his Methodist H. Bk. Notes, 1883, p. 245, is of more than usual interest. [J. J.]

O for a closer walk with God. W. Cooper. [Walking with God.] This is one of the most beautiful, tender, and popular of Cowper's hymns. It appeared in the 2nd ed. of R. Conyers' Coll. of Ps. & Hymns, 1772, in 6 st. of 4 l., and again in A. M. Toplady's Ps. & Hymns, 1776, and in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. i., No. 5, and headed, "Walking with God." It is based on Gen. v. 24, "And Enoch walked with God." It is in extensive use in all English-speaking countries, and usually in its original form. [J. J.]

O for a faith that will not shrink. W. H. Bathurst. [Faith.] 1st pub. in his Ps. and Hymns., &c., 1831, Hy. 86, in 6 st. of 4 l., and entituled, "The Power of Faith." As found in H. A. & M., the Hym. Comp., and others, st. iv. is omitted. Its omission is a great gain to the hymn, as it mars its simplicity and tenderness. It reads:—
   "That bears unmoved the world's dread frown,
   Nor heeds its sorrowful smile;
   That sin's wild ocean cannot drown,
   Nor its soft arts beguile."

The use of this hymn is great, and more especially in America, where it is given in most of the leading collections. [J. J.]

O for a heart to praise my God. C. Wesley. [Second Advent.] 1st pub. in his Hymns and Spirituals, 1707 (2nd ed. 1709, Bk. i. 17), in 4 st. of 4 l. It is based on 1 Cor. xvi. 53-58, and is included in several hymn-books in G. Britain and America.

Another form is that given to it as No. 41 in the Draft Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1743, beginning, "When the last trumpet's awful voice," It is in 7 st. of 4 l., of which i.-iii. and vii. are now, and st. iv.-vi. are st. ii.-iv. of this hymn by Watts. It was rewritten in the public worship ed. of the Trans. and Paraphs., issued by the Church of Scotland in 1781 and still in C. U.; st. iii., ii., 3, 4, being altered from the 1745 text, and st. vii. rewritten as st. vii. and viii. The text of 1745 is ascribed by the eldest daughter of W. Cameron (p. 200, &c,) to Thomas Randall (an opinion not shared in by the other authorities); and the alterations in 1781 are of W. Cameron. This form of the text is in C. U. outside of the Trs. and Paraphs., both in G. Britain and America. Sometimes st. iii.-vi. are slightly altered as, "Behold what heavenly prophets sung." This form is in the Edinburgh Diocesan Sel. of 1830, No. 23.
and again in the Scottish Episcopal Coll., 1838, No. 126. [J. M.]

O for one celestial ray. Anne Steele and A. M. Toplady. [Prayer for the Holy Spirit.] This hymn is based on the 12 concluding lines of Miss Steele’s poem on “Captive,” pub. in her Poems, &c., 1781, vol. lu. p. 46; Sedgwick’s reprint, 1823, p. 227, and appeared in A. M. Toplady’s Ps. & Hymns., 1776, No. 194, in 5 st. of 4 l. This form of the text is in a few modern collections, including the Bap. Ps. & Hymns., 1858, and others. [J. J.]

O for the death of those. [Burial.] The opening line of this hymn is the first line of J. Montgomery’s “Ode to the Volunteers of Britain, On the Prospect of Invasion,” pub. in his Wanderer of Scotland and Other Poems, 1819; and the third line of st. 1 is partly from the last stanza but one of the same “Ode.” From these extracts, and the whole tone and swing of the hymn, it is clear that it was suggested by the “Ode.” It appeared anonymously in Mason and Green’s American Church Psalmody, Boston, 1831, No. 616, in 5 st. of 4 l. It is given in several modern American collections, including Hatfield’s Church Hymns, 1872, and others. It is sometimes ascribed to J. Montgomery, and at other times to S. F. Smith, but in each case in error. Its authorship is unknown. [F. M. B.]

O for the happy days gone by. F. W. Faber. [Dryness in Prayer.] Appeared in his Jesus and Mary, &c., 1849, in 18 st. of 4 l., and again in his Hymns, 1852. In the American Bapt. Praise Book, N. Y., 1871, No. 937, beginning, “One thing alone, dear Lord, I dread,” is a cento compiled from this hymn. [J. J.]

O for the peace which floweth as a river. Jane Credston, née Fox. [Hoping and Trusting to the end.] Pub. in her posthumous work, A Little White, and Other Poems, 1864, as the opening line of the volume, in 6 st. of 4 l. It is found in full or in part in a large number of hymn books in G. Britain and America, and is much esteemed as a hymn for private use. [J. J.]

O fortis, O clemens Deus. C. Coffin. [Evening.] Included in the Paris Breviary, 1736, as the Ferial hymn at Vespers on Thursdays from Trinity to Advent; and again in Coffin’s Hymni Sacri, 1736, p. 24. Also in J. Chandler’s Hymns of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 20; and Carl Newman’s Hymni Eclesiastici, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:—

2. Merciful and mighty Lord, Author of redeeming love. By R. Campbell, in his Hymns and Anthems, 1850. This is repeated in the 1860 Appendix to the Hymnal Noted. Other trs. are:
1. Merciful and mighty Lord, Author of the saving word. J. Williams. 1839.
2. O God of mercy, God of might. J. D. Chambers. 1867.

O frommer und getreuer Gott. [Penitence.] Based on a hymn, “Ich armere Menchen, mein Herr und Gott;” by Johann Leon in his Trostbuchlein, 1811, and thence in Wurkenargel iv. p. 597, in 14 lines. It is included in 6 st. of 4 l. in the Kommer’s Ges. aus 1550, p. 297, and probably in an earlier ed. c. 1643; also in J. Cruger’s Praeis pietatis, 1648, No. 47, in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 527, &c. Sometimes erroneously ascribed to Bartholomäus Ringwaldt, whose hymn with the same first line (Porst’s G. B., ed. 1853, No 318) is entirely different. Tr. as:—

O God, before Whose radiant throne. [Opening of a Place of Worship.] This hymn appeared anonymously in the 1810 ed. of Rippon’s Bap. Sel., No. 338, Pt. ii., in 7 st. of 4 l. It was rewritten by the Rev. C. Spurgeon in 1866 in 5 st., and included in his O. O. H. Bk., 1866, as by “John Rippon, 1810; Charles H. Spurgeon, 1866.” This text and ascription of authorship were repeated in Dale’s English H. Bk., 1874. We have seen no authority for attributing the original to Dr. Rippon. Its anonymous appearance in his Sel., in which the authors’ names are not given with the hymn, is no proof that he was the author. [J. J.]

O God, for ever near. Albert W. Brown. [Public Worship.] Written in 1844, and 1st pub. in his Introits, 1845, in 4 st. of 4 l.; again in his Hymns and Scriptural Chants, 1848; and again in his Sel. of Ps. & Hymns, 1865. In this last it was increased to 5 stanzas, the addition being st. iv. In the Bap. Ps. & Hymns, 1888, No. 883, st. i.—iii. are from this hymn, and st. iv. is st. i. in a rewritten form. The hymn in whole or in part is also in other collections, as Afford’s Year of Praise, 1867. [J. J.]

O God, my God, my all Thou art. [Ps. liii.] This translation, by John Wesley, of a version of the 63rd Psalm, by an unknown Spanish author, was first pub. in J. Wesley’s Coll. of Psalms and Hymns, 1747, No. 499. The following is an enlarged edition of the Ps. and Hymns, previously pub. by him at Charles-Town, printed by Lewis Timothy, 1787. [See Methodist Hymnody, § l.] The tr. was again pub. in the Wesley Hymns and Sacred Poems, 1793, p. 196, in 10 st. of 4 l. (P. Works, 1868–72, vol. I., p. 174.) In 1780 it was included in the Wes. H. Bk., No. 425, with the omission of st. iv. “In holiness within Thy gates.” Curiously enough, this stanza, as “O Lord, within Thy sacred gates,” is the opening stanza of a cento from this hymn given in several modern collections, including the Hymnary, 1872, the H. Comp., 1870 and 1876, and others, together with many American collections. This cento is in Elliott’s Ps. and Hymns, 1885, and is probably much earlier. Dr. Osborn says, in his note on this hymn (P. Works, vol. i., p. 174.) “This noble version of Ps. liii. was inserted in the book of 1780, and therefore probably translated in America. The Spanish author is unknown.”

Mr. G. J. Stevenson, in his Methodist Hymn Book Notes, 1885, p. 294, says positively:—

"This hymn is from the Spanish, translated by John Wesley when he was in America in 1747." Although there is much to strengthen Dr. Osborn’s suggestion, that the tr. was made in America, we have seen no proof that it was. made there in 1735; and somewhat against it is the fact that the hymn is not in the Charles Town Coll. of Ps. & Hks., 1786-37. Bishop Bickersteth's note on the cento, in his H. Comp. (annotated ed., 1890), is well deserved:

"This very beautiful version of part of the 83rd Psalm is varied from the translation of a Spanish version by J. Wesley. It seems to the Editor one of the most melodious and perfect hymns we possess for public worship."

The use, both of the Wee. H. Bk. text, and of the cento, "O Lord, within Thy sacred gates," is extensive, especially of the latter. [J. J.]

O God, my Refuge, hear my cries.

I. Watts. [Ps. 18.] Appeared in his Psalms of David, &c., 1719, p. 147 (misprinted 947), in 10 st. of 4 L. and headed, "Support for the afflicted and tempted Soul." In explanation of some portions of the Psalm which are not paraphrased, the following note is added:--

"I have left out some whole Psalms, and several parts of others that tend to fill the mind with overwhelming sorrows, or sharp resentment; neither of which are so well suited to the spirit of the Gospel, and therefore the particular complaints of David against Achitophel here are entirely omitted."

This paraphrase is given in some collections in full, and in others in an abbreviated form. In the Leeds H. Bk., 1833, and others, it begins with st. vith, as "God shall preserve my soul from fear." [J. J.]

O God of Bethel, by Whose hand.

P. Doddridge. [Jacob's Voe.] This well-known and much-appreciated hymn has more than usual interest attached to it from its historical association with the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases of 1745 and 1781, and the numerous forms it has undergone. The facts cannot be grasped without much difficulty unless they are set forth in chronological order, and with more than usual detail.

1. The English form of the Text.

The earliest form of the hymn is that in the hand-writing of Doddridge, now in the possession of the Hooker family, and quoted in this Dictionary as the D. ms. (see Doddridge). Doddridge's ms. hymnas number 100. This is as follows:

"No. xxxii.:"

JACOB'S Voe.

From Gen. xxxiii. 20, 22.

1. Oh God of Bethel, by whose hand
When Israel still was led
Who there this weary Pilgrimage
Hast all our Fathers led

2. To thee our humble Vows we raise
To thee our address, our Prayer
And in thy kind and faithful Breast
Deposition all our Care

3. If thou thro' each perplexing Path
Will be our constant Guide
And Rainment will provide

4. Then will spread thy Shield around
And at our Father's holy Abode
Our Souls arrive in Peace

5. "We'll to our Covenant God
And our whole selves resign
But all we have is thine alone"

2. In 1755, Job Orton published 870 hymns from another MS. (written in shorthand, Humphrey's ed., Preface, p. xiii.) by Doddridge as Hymns founded on Various Texts in the Holy Scriptures, &c. This hymn is given as No. iv., and begins:--

"O God of Jacob, by whose hand," this being the only variation from the Rooker MS. as above. In 1819, J. D. Humphreys reprinted the hymn in his edition of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., No. iv., from the same MS. as J. Orton had used, but with these variations: st. i., l. 4, "Hath for "Hast"; and st. v., l. 2, We will ourselves for "We'll our whole selves."

Of Humphrey's text editors have taken no notice.

From Orton's text there are the following hymns in C. U.:

1. O God of Jacob, by Whose hand. In several collections.

2. O Thou, by Whose all-bounteous hand. This was given in J. Beiknap's Sacred Song, Psalms and Hymns, &c., Boston, U. S. A., 1795; and again in later American collections.

ii. The Scottish form of the Text.

1. It is through the Scottish text that the hymn is most widely known. Its history, which is somewhat singular, is as follows:--

2. A copy of the Rooker MS. noted above, and in Doddridge's handwriting, is in the possession of the descendants of Col. Gardiner's family. It formerly belonged to Lady Frances Erskine (an intimate friend of Doddridge's), who became the wife of Col. Gardiner, and her name is written therein. It is a complete copy of the Rooker MS. with the exception that the corrections of the text made by Doddridge in the margin of the Rooker MS. are given in the body of the hymn instead of the original words, and the dates are omitted. An Index of first lines, not in the Rooker MS., is added in Doddridge's handwriting. From this MS. R. Blair (p. 164, l.) secured this hymn from Lady Frances Gardiner, and presented it to the Committee engaged in compiling the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, and in the issue of 1745 it was given therein as No. xlv., with the single alteration of "shield" to "wings" in st. iv., l. 1.

3. Doddridge wrote the hymn on "Jany. 16, 1739"; it was included in the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases in 1745; and J. Logan was born in 1748. Notwithstanding this, Logan gave it in his Poems, 1781, in the following form, and as his own:--

1. "O God of Abraham, by Whose hand
Thy people still are led
2. Who through this weary pilgrimage
Hast all our fathers led

2. "Our voice, our prayers, we now present
Before the throne of grace
God of our fathers! be the God
Of their succeeding race.

3. "Through each perplexing path of life
Our wandering footsteps guide;
Give us each day our daily bread,
And rainment to provide!

4. "O spread thy co'ring wings around,
Till all our wanderings cease;
And at Our Father's holy abode
Our souls arrive in peace!

5. "Now with the humble voice of prayer
Thy mercy we implore;
Then with the grateful voice of praise,
Thy goodness we'll adore."

Here st. i.-iv. are a revise of Doddridge, and st. v. is new.
4. During the same year (1781) the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases were published in their new and revised form (see Scottish Hymnody). The text as in Logan's Poems is included as No. ii., with the following variations:
St. i. "O God of Bethel! by whose hand."
St. iii. and iv. as in Logan's Poems.
St. v. "Such blessings from Thy gracious hand."

5. This arrangement is evidently by the same hand as the text in the Poems. The text as in the Poems has been claimed for M. Bickersteth's Cr. Bk., but we think on insufficient evidence. Its designation is "P. Doddridge, Jan. 1734: Scottish Trs. & Paraphs., 1745: J. Logan, 1781; and Scottish Paraphs., 1781."

6. From the Scottish Trs. & Paraphs., 1781, the following arrangements are in C. U.:
1. O God of Bethel, by Whose hand. In numerous collections, in full or in part, in J. Britain and America.
4. O God of Israel, by Whose hand. In the Hymns for Use in the Chapel of Marlborough College, 1849.
7. O God of Jacob, by Whose hand. In the 1859 Supplemental Hymns to A. & M.

iii. Claim on behalf of Ridley Darracott. Doddridge's original has been claimed for Ridley Darracott, a sometime pupil with Doddridge, and subsequently a Presbyterian minister at Wellington, Somerset. The earliest date given to Darracott's version is his marriage, after 1741. Darracott, as we have seen, actually wrote the hymn on Jan. 16, 1734. Darracott may have adapted it for his own marriage, or Darracott may have done it for him; in either case the hymn is by Doddridge.

O God, of God, O Light of Light. J. Julian. [Praise of Jesus.] Written to Sir John Goss's tune Peterborough in Mercer's Ch. Psalmist and H. Bk. for the Sheffield Church Choirs Union Festival, April 16, 1888, and first printed in the Festival book. In 1884 it was included in Horder's Cong. Hymns, and subsequently in other collections.

O God of hosts, the mighty Lord. Tate & Brady. [Ps. Ixxviii.] This is a more than usually good example of Tate and Brady's c. m. renderings of the Psalms. It appeared in the New Version, 1686, and when that work yielded to the modern hymn-book, it was adopted, usually in an abbreviated form, in many collections. The centos vary in their length, and in the stanzas chosen, and when a doxology is added, as in H. A. & M., Thring's Coll. and others, that of Tate and Brady is chosen. In Bigge's Annotated H. A. & M., a translation into Latin by George Buehannan, c. 1550, of the corresponding verses in the Psalm, is given, together with a Latin doxology from the Paris Breviary. [Psalmers, Eng. § 11. 7.]

O God of love, O King of Peace. Sir H. W. Baker. [In Time of Trouble.] Written for and first published in H. A. & M., 1861. It has been repeated in several collections. In Alford's Year of Praise, 1887, it is attributed to "Cowper" in error. [J. J.]

O God of our forefathers, hear. C. Wesley. [Holy Communion.] 1st pub. in Hymns on the Lord's Supper, 1745, No. 125, in 4 st. of 6 l. (W. Works, 1865-72, vol. 309.), from whence it passed into the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 382, and the collections of other Methodist bodies. In those works it is usually given in Section viii., entitled "Seeking for Full Redemption." Its strictly Eucharistic character is thus lost. St. ii.:

"With solemn faith we offer up
And spread before Thy gracious eyes,
That only ground of all our hope,
That precious, bleeding sacrifice,
Which bring's Thy grace on sinners down,
And perfects all our souls in one:"

Certainly suggests most strongly, if it does not actually teach, the doctrine of the "Real Presence," and would have been "so regarded if the hymn had been appropriated to its original use, or had appeared anonymously in a modern hymn-book.

O God of Zion, from Thy throne. [Prayer on behalf of the Church.] This hymn appeared anonymously in the 1800 ed. of Rippon's Bap. Sel., No. 427, Pt. ii., in 7 st. of 4 l. In Bedeome's posthumous Hymns, 1817, No. 654, there is a hymn in 4 st. of 4 l., beginning, "Look with an eye of pity down," which is probably the original of that in Rippon's Sel. If this is so Dr. Rippon must have had a ms. copy of the hymn from Bedeome. No. 289 in the Presbyterian Sel. of Hys., Philadelphia, 1861, is Rippon's text with the omission of st. ii. and vii. [J. J.]

O God [that] Who madest earth and sky. Bp. R. Heber. [Patience.] First pub. in the Christian Observer, Jan. 1816, p. 27, in 4 st. of 4 l., and entitled "Patience." In Heber's posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 138, it was given in 2 st. of 4 l., as "O God that madest earth and sky, the darkness of the day," and appointed for use "In Times of Distress and Danger," the only alteration being the change of "Who" to "that" in the first line. It is in C. U. in Great Britain and America.

O God, the Rock of Ages. Bp. E. H. Bickersteth. [Sunday after Christmas.] In his note to this hymn in his annotated ed. of his H. Comp., 1880, Bp. Bickersteth says that "this hymn was written by the Editor (1800)." but in his work, The Two Brothers, &c., 1871, p. 226, it is dated "1802." It was included in the Eng. Presh. Ps. & Hys., 1867: the H. Comp., 1870 and 1876; and the author's From Year to Year, 1883. Its use has extended to America and other English-speaking countries. [J. J.]

O God! to Whom the happy dead. J. Conder. [All Saints' Day.] Appeared in the Cong. H. Bk., 1836, No. 171, in 2 st. of 6 l., and headed, "Whose faith follow." In his work The Choir and the Oratory, 1837, p. 230, it was republished as a "Collect," in metre. It is a paraphrase of the words in the prayer "For the whole state of Christendom Militant here on earth," in the Office for Holy Communion in the Book of Common Prayer:—
O God unseen, but not unknown.

J. Montgomery. [Tmmunence of the Father.
Written " Sep. 22, 1828" (st. 9). A copy, dated " The Mount, n. Sheffield, Dec. 16, 1845," ap¬ ppeared in the Christian Treasury, 1847, p. 7. It had previously appeared in the Evangelical Magazine, 1846, p. 1. In 1833 it was included in Montgomery's Original Hymns, No. 30, in 9 st. of 12 l, and headed, " Thou, God, see me." It is in C. U. in an abbreviated form, and also as " The moment comes when strength shall fail," in the American Sabbath H. Bk., 1858. [J. J.]

O God unseem, yet ever near. E. Osler. [Holy Communion.] 1 st pub. in Hall's Mitre H. Bk., 1843, p. 270, in 4 st. of 4 l, and entitled, "Spiritual Knoll." In the March number of Osler's Church and King, 1857, it was repeated with the single change of st. iv., l. 1., from "Thus may we all " to "Thus could we all," &c. In some collections, as the English Hymnal, 1856 and 1861, it is given as, "O Christian unseem, yet ever near"; and in others as, "O God unseen, yet truly near." Other corruptions of the text are also found in Darling's Hymns, 1887, and other collections. H. A. & M., is an exception in favour of the original, with the single change in st. iv., l. 1., of "Thy words" to "Thy word." The use of this hymn in a more or less correct form, is very extensive in all English-speaking countries. [J. J.]

O God, Who gavst Thy servant grace. Bp. B. Heber. [St. John the Evangelist.] Pub. in his posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 19, in 4 st. of 4 l. In Thring's Coll., 1882, and some others. It is, "O Thou! Who gavst Thy servant grace." In this form of the text st. ii. is omitted, and a new stanza is added as st. iv. from another source. [J. J.]

O God, Who hearest the prayer. C. Wesley. [In Time of National Troubles.] This is the first of three hymns " For His Majesty King George," which appeared in the Wesleyan tracts of H. for Times of Trouble, for the Year 1745, the remaining two being (2) " The Lord is King " and (3) " Head of Thy Church triumphant." Concerning the hymn, it is, " Concerning the hymn, tracts issued by the Wesleyans to their Adverb, they were chiefly composed of patriotism and loyalty to the cause of the Free Church of Rome, and probably by an unfaltering hatred of Rome." [J. J.]

O Gott, du Frommer Gott. J. Heer.

O Gott! O Geist! O Liecht des Lebens. G. Tersteegen. [White乳white.] This beautiful hymn is one of the finest compositions of Tersteegen's mysticism. It was published in his 4th ed., 1745, of his Geiliches Blumenpfluezen, Bk. iii., No. 17, in 8 st. of 6 l., and entitled " Prayer for the inward working of the Holy Spirit." Included in Knapp's Be. L., 1857, No. 749 (1863, No. 769). Tr. as:

1. O God, O Spirit, Light of all that live. A good tr., omitting st. vii., by Miss Winkworth, in her German, 1st Ser., 1855, p. 140. Her tvs. of st. i., ii., vi., altered to four 10's are included in the Hs., of the Spirit, Boston, U.S., 1864, No. 10. Another cento is No. 105, in M. W. Stryker's Christian Choral, 1885.

2. O God, O Spirit, Light of life. A spirited but free tr., omitting st. vii., by Mrs. Bevan, in her Songs of Eternal Life, 1858, p. 7. From
O HAPPY BAND OF PILGRIMS

O HAPPY SAINTS

this st. i.-v. considerably altered and beginning “Spirit of Grace, Thou Light of life,” were included as No. 1182 in Kennedey, 1863; and repeated in this form, abridged, in the Throe Hymn., 1871; Dr. Martineau's Hys. of Praise & Prayer, 1873; Thring's Colh., 1880-82, &c. [J. M.]

O happy band of pilgrims. [Pilgrims of Jesus.] Appeared in Dr. Neale's Hys. of the Eastern Church, 1865, in 8 st. of 4 l., with the note by Dr. Neale, “This is merely a canto from the Canon of SS. Chrysanthus and Daria (March 19).” In his Preface to the 3rd ed., 1866, he is more explicit, and says concerning this hymn, “Safe home, safe home in port, and “Art thou weary?” they contain so little that is from the Greek, that they ought not to have been included in this collection; in any future edition they shall appear as an Appendix. Dr. Neale did not live to publish another edition: but in 1882 the 4th ed. with notes, was issued under the editorship of S. G. Hatherly, and in it the three hymns named were “removed from the body of the work at Dr. Neale's suggestion,” and included in an Appendix. Its proper designation, therefore, is By Dr. Neale, based on the Greek Canon of SS. Chrysanthus and Daria by St. Joseph the Hymnographer. It must be added that no Greek lines corresponding to those in the English hymn can be found in that Canon. Dr. Neale nevertheless found what he wanted there, that is the inspiration to write the hymn as it now stands. The use of this hymn is very extensive in all English-speaking countries. [J. J.]

O happy day that fix'd my choice. P. Doddridge. [Joy in Personal Dedication to God.] Appeared in J. Orton's posthumous edition of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1755. No. 29, in 5 st. of 4 l., and entitled, “Rejoicing in our Covenant Engagements to God,” 2 Chron. xv. 15; and again, with changes in the text of st. iv., in J. D. Humphrey's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 29. Its use in its full, in an abbreviated, and in a translated form, is extensive. The third stanza, “Tis done; the great transaction's done;

I am the Lord's, and He is mine:
He drew me, and I followed on,
Charmed to confess the voice divine,” although often omitted from the hymn is frequently found as a quotation. In the American Prayer Bk. Coll., 1826, the hymn was altered throughout, and began, “O happy day, that stays my choice.” This form is in several modern American collections. In the American Unitarian Hymn. for the Church of Christ, 1853, st. iv., v. are given as No. 381, and begin “Now rest, my long-divided heart.” The alterations which have been made in Doddridge's text are too numerous to be given in detail. At the present time two texts are quoted as the original, the first that in J. Orton's ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1755, and the second that in J. D. Humphrey's ed. of the same, 1839. These are the same, except in st. iv. The readings are:—

1755. “Now rest, my long divided heart,
Fix'd on this blissful Centre, rest;
With Ashes who would grudge to part;
When call'd on Angels bread to feast;”

1830. “Now rest, my long-divided heart,
Fix'd on this blissful Centre, rest;
O who with earth would grudge to part
When call'd with angels to be blest;”

As this hymn is not found in any Doddridge ms. with which we are acquainted, we cannot determine which of these two readings was written by Doddridge. Orton admits in his Preface that he lampooned in some instances (not named) with Doddridge's text [see Doddridge, P.], whilst Humphreys contends that he was faithful thereto. We can only add that Orton's reading has more in common with Doddridge's usual style and mode of expression than that of Humphreys, but the weight of evidence in favour of the latter. [J. J.]

O happy is the man who hears. M. Bruce. [Wisdom.] From evidence set forth in our biographical sketch of M. Bruce (p. 187, 1.), we believe the original of this hymn to have been written by M. Bruce about 1764, and that the ms. of the same was handed to J. Logan by Bruce's father a short time after Bruce's death in 1767. It was published by Logan as his own in his Poems, 1781, p. 104, No. 4, in 5 st. of 4 l. In the same year, a slightly altered version of the text was given in the new and revised edition of the Scottish Translations, Poems, etc., No. xi., and this has been in authorised use in the Church of Scotland for more than 100 years. It is also found in many English and American collections. The nearest approach to the original text is given in Dr. Mackelvie's Locheene and other Poems, &c., 1837, p. 258; and Dr. Grosart's Works of M. Bruce, 1865, p. 153, The text of the Scottish Tr. and Paraph., 1781, has been altered in several modern collections to (1) “How blest the man that bonds the ear;” (2) “How happy is the child who hears;” (3) “How happy is the youth who hears;” and (4) “Wisdom has treasures greater far.” [J. J.]

O happy land, O happy land. E. Parson, see Rookee. [Heaven.] Contributed to J. Curwen's Child's Own H. Bk., 1840, in 2 st. of 8 l., the first beginning as above, and the second, “Thou heavenly Friend,” &c. This was repeated in the Bap. Ps. & Hym., 1858, and several other collections. Another text, also by Mrs. Parson, in 3 st. of 4 l., was published in her Willing Cross Hymn some time after her death. Both sets of the stanzas as above, somewhat altered, and another stanza, beginning, “The saints in light,” &c. These three stanzas are given in W. F. Stevenson's Hymns for Ch. & Home, 1873. [J. J.]

O happy saints [that] who dwell in light, And walk with Jesus, &c. J. Berridge. [Saints in Glory.] Pub. in his Zion's Songs, &c., 1785, No. 143, in 6 st. of 4 l. and headed, “At Thy right hand are pleasures for evermore.” Ps. xvi. 11 (ed. 1742). p. 229. Although seldom found in English collections, its use in America, sometimes abbreviated as in the Bap. Service of Song, Boston, 1871, is somewhat extensive. It is based upon Ralph Erskine's "Aurora veils her rosy face" (p. 86, 1). The second stanza in Berridge reads:—

“Release'd from sin, and toil, and grief,
Death was their gate to endless life;”
This reads in Erkine’s original:—

“Death is to us a sweet repose.

The dead was got to show the rose;

The rose, was got to show a rose.

And build our happy nest on high.”

The rest of the hymn follows Erkine’s line of thought, but there is no repetition of his actual words.

O Haupt voll Blut und Wunden.

P. Gerhardt. [Passiontide.] This is a beautiful free tr. of the “Salve caput cruentatum” which is pt. vii. of the Hymnica Oratio, ascribed to St. Bernard of Clairvaux. The Latin text is found under “Salve salutare.” The present note is given here on account of the length of that article. Gerhardt’s version appeared as No. 156 in the Frankfurt ed., 1686, of Crüger’s Paeans, in 10 st. of 8 lines, entitled, “To the suffering Face of Jesus Christ.” It is repeated in Wackernagel’s ed. of Gerhardt’s Paeans, No. 22; Bachmann’s ed., No. 54: the Una L.S., 1851, No. 109; and almost all recent German hymn-books. Lauxmann in Koch, viii., 47, thus characterizes it:

“Gerhardt’s original is powerful and searching, but his melody is still more powerful and more profound, as drawn from the deeper spring of evangelical Lutheran, Scriptural, knowledge, and fervency of faith.”

Stanzas I. & II. Lauxmann would trace not only to Bernard but to St. St. of “Vae vesta vellich dir geboten” (see Herberger); and to Luther’s words on the death of his daughter Magdalene, who was to be married thus, “dies wohl.” He adds many instances of its use. Thus A. G. Spangenberg, when on the celebration of his jubilee he received many flattering testimonials, republished in melody with the words of stanza iv. In 1819, while C. P. Schwartz lay a-dying, his Malabar pupils gathered round him and sang in their own language the last verses of this hymn, he himself joining till his breath failed in death.

The beautiful melody (in H. A. & M., called Passion Choral) first appeared in Hans Leo Hassler’s Lustgarten, Nürnberg, 1601, set to a love song, beginning “Mein Gmuth ist mir verwirrert.” In the Harmoniae Sacrae, Gorlitz, 1613, it is set to “Herzlich that ich verlangen” (see Knoll), and then in the Piae, 1656, to Gerhardt’s hymn. The original forms are in L. Erk’s Choral Buch, 1868, Nos. 117, 118. It is used several times by J. S. Bach, in his Passions Music according to St. Matthew.

The hymn is tr. as:—

1. O Head so full of bruises. In full, by J. Gambold, in Some other Hymns and Poems, London, 1752, p. 12. Repeated in the Moravian H. Bk., 1754, pt. i., No. 222; and pt. ii., pp. 389, 391. In the ed. of 1798, it was greatly altered (1866, No. 288), and a new tr. of st. ii. substituted for Gambold’s version: the Gambold tr. of st. ii., “When I shall gain admission,” being given as the text of 1869, No. 1247. Centos from first line in Walker’s Cheltenham Ps. & Hys., are as follows:

(1) “O Head, so pierced and wounded” (st. i. alt.) in Dr. Pangeneger’s (1830).

(2) “O Christ! what is the use” (st. ii. alt.) in Mr. H. H. Bickernack’s (1833), and others.

(3) “O Head, so pierced and wounded” (st. iii. alt.) in the Ryle’s Old, 1860, and others.

(4) “O Head, so pierced and wounded” (st. iv. alt.) in D. W. Johnson’s (1830), and others.

2. O Sacred Head! now wounded. A very beautiful tr. by J. W. Alexander. The tr. of st.

L., ii., iv., v., vi., vii.–x. were first pub. in the Christian Lyre, N. York, 1830, No. 136. These were revised, and trs. of st. iii., vi. added, by Dr. Alexander for Schaff’s Deutsche Kirchen-Gesch. 1849, p. 91. The full text is in Dr. Alexander’s Breaking Crucible, N.Y., 1861, p. 7; in Schaff’s Christ in Song, 1869, p. 178; and the Cantate Domino, Boston, U. S., 1859. In his note Dr. Schaff says:—

“This classical hymn has shown an imperishable vitality in passing from the Latin into the German, and from the German into the English, and proclaiming in three tongues, and in the name of three Confessions—the Catholic, the Lutheran, and the Reformed—with equal effect, the dying love of our Saviour, and our boundless indebtedness to Him.”

This version has passed into very many English and American hymnals, and in very varying centos. A comparison with the Christ in Song text will show how these centos are arranged. We can only note the following forms:

(1) “O sacred Head! now wounded” (st. i.), People’s H. 1861; Hymnary, 1872; and In America in Haidfield’s Church H. Bk., 1874; Hymns & Songs of Prayer, N. Y., 1874, &c.

(2) “O Sacred Head! once wounded” (st. ii.), Leeds H. Bk., 1850; Hymns & Ps., 1856; New Song, 1859.

(3) “O Sacred Head, sore wounded” (st. i.), in the Stoke H. Bk., 1875.

(4) “O Sacred Head, so wounded” (st. ii.), J. L. Porter’s coll., 1876.

(5) “O blessed Christ, once wounded” (st. iii.), Dr Thomas’s Augustine H. Bk., 1866.

(7) “O Lamb of God, sore wounded” (st. 1. alt.), in the Hymn Stew., 1871.

Other trs. are:—(1) “Ah wounded Head! must Thou?” By Miss Winkworth, 1855, p. 80. (2) “Thou pierced and wounded Head.” By Miss Brown, 1857, p. 39. (3) “O Head, blood-stained and wounded,” in the Schaff-Cillman Lib. of Religious Poetry, ed. 1883, p. 745, marked as tr. by Samuel M. Jackson, 1873, 1876.

O heavenly love, arise, arise. [Love as a Guide.] This is part of a song which Wolfmann von Eschebach (q.v.) is supposed to have sung at a contest for a prize at the hands of a German princess. The work in which this song is found is Tannhäuser; or, The Battle of the Bards. A Poem by Nevile Temple and Edward Trevor, Lond., Chapman & Hall, 1861, p. 54, in 5 st. of 4 l. The hymn in Kennedy, 1863, No. 195, is composed of st. iii.–v., and a closing stanza by Dr. Kennedy. It is a beautiful hymn and suited for the Epiphany. We may add that Neville Temple was the Hon. Julian Ciarles Henry Fane; and Edward Trevor was Edward Robert Balwer, afterwards Lord Lytton.

J. J. [J. M.]
O help us, Lord; each hour of need.

H. H. Milman. [Lent.] 1st pub. in Bp. Heber's posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 52, in 6st. of 4 sq. and appointed for second Sunday in Lent, being based on the Gospel of that day. In his Sel. of Ps. & Hys., 1837, Milman omitted st. iv. and v., thus reducing it to 4 sq. of 4 sq. and each stanza beginning with the words, "O! help us." In this form it has come into extensive use in all English-speaking countries. In the Mitte H. Bk., 1836, No. 190, it is partly rewritten by E. Osser as, "O help us, Lord! all in our need." This is repeated in Osser's Church and King, June 1, 1837, but it has failed to attract attention. Another arrangement, beginning with st. ii., "O help us, when we spirits bleed," is sometimes found in modern hymnals. [J. M.]

O Herr Gott, dein göttlich Wort.

[Holy Scripture.] Appeared in the Erfurt Emehrurison of 1527, and thence in Wackenroder, iii. p. 125, in 8 sq. of 12 1. Included in King's G. B., 1529, and became very popular in Reformation times. Recently it is found as No. 431 in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1868.

In the 1527 and many later books it bears the initials "A. H. Z. W." Langmann, in a long note in Koch, viii. 697-706, tries to vindicate its authorship as by Ulrich (Alaricus) Herzog zu Witttenberg, who d. at Tübingen Nov. 6, 1556. In the Blätter für Herausg. 1883, p. 79, 1887, p. 11, it is noted that in the Lieder Krome of 1744 to the Ratisburg G. B., these initials are resolved to mean Anark Herr zu Wildenhof (near Zwicau), who was known as one of the principal supporters of the Reformation at the court of the Elector John of Saxony, was one of the signatories to the Augsburg Confession (subscribing it as Anark dominus de Wilden- hof), and d. at Altenburg, June 1, 1539. The ascription to Anark of Wildenhof seems to us much the more probable.

Tr. as—

1. How long, Oh God, Thy word of life. A very free tr. in 16 sq. of 4 sq. by Miss Fry, in her Hymns of the Reformation, 1843, p. 122. Hertrs. of st. i., vi., viii. are No. 48, in Whittemore's Suppl. to all H. Bks., 1900.

Other trs. are—

(1) "O heavenly Lord, Thy godly Worde," by P. Coverdale, 1539 (Roman, 1844, p. 584).

(2) "Lord God, Thy face and word of grace," in the Siche & Godly Hymn. ed. 1558, fol. 29 (1866, p. 48).

(3) "O God the Father, Thy divine Word," as No. 397 pt. i. of the Romisch H. Bk., 1754. (4) "We give thee thanks, most gracious Lord," by Dr. J. Hunt, in his Eign. Songs of Martin Luther, 1843, p. 73. [J. M.]

O Heavenly Love, thou hast made me Thy dwelling.

By Dr. Littlecote, in full, as No. 399 in the People's Hymn. 1867, and signed "F. B." [J. M.]

Tr. as—

This version has attained considerable popularity, and is found in a number of the leading hymals of Great Britain, e.g. H. A. & M., 1875; the S. P. C. K. Churc' Hys., 1871; Free Ch. H. Bk., 1882, &c.; and in America in the Epis. Hys. for Ch. & Hone, 1869; Boardman's Sel., 1861, &c.

Other trs. are—

O Holy Ghost, Thou God of peace.

I. Williams. [Communion of Saints; and For Unity.] 1st pub. in his Hymn. on the Catechism, 1842, No. 28, in 4 sq. of 4 sq., and again in later editions of the same work. In its original form it is not much used. In 1854 it appeared in an altered form in Morrél & How's Ps. & Hys., st. i.-iii. being from I. Williams with alterations, and st. iv. being new by Bp. W. W. How. 1. Williams's omitted stanza reads—

"For love is life, and life is love,
And Thou Thyself art love and life;
And we in Thee shall live and move;
If Thou wilt keep us free from strife.

The Williams-How text has been repeated in the S.P.C.K. Church Hymns, 1871, Tiling's Coll., 1882, and others. [J. J.]

O Holy Ghost, Thy people bless. Sir H. W. Baker. [White锦标赛.] Written for use in the London Mission of 1874, and printed in Hymn. for the London Mission (No. 2), which were published by the compilers of H. A. & M., 1874. In 1875 it was included in the revised ed. of H. A. & M. [J. J.]

O Holy Jesu, Prince of Peace. & Browns-Bortwick. [Holy Communion.] Written in 1750, and 1st pub. in his Sixteen Hys. with Tunes, &c., the same year, in 6 sq. of 6 sq., and again in his Select Hymn. for Church and Home, 1871, No. 58. In 1871 it appeared in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, with the omission of st. iv. In the author's 2nd ed. with Appendix of his Select Hymn., &c., 1883, st. iv. is bracketed for omission, a slight alteration in st. i., No. is introduced, and the following note is added:

"This is not a congregational hymn, but a meditation, to be read while non-communants are retiring, or to be sung by the choir alone, anthem-wise, kneeling." [J. J.]

O Holy Lord, content to live (dwell—fill). Rp. W. W. How. [A Child's Hymn.] Written in 1850, and 1st pub. in The Parish Choir in 1851. In 1854 it was repeated in Morrél & How's Ps. & Hys., No. 65, in 4 sq. of 4 sq. When included in H. A. & M., 1881, considerable alterations were made in the text and it began, "O Holy Lord, content to dwell." This first line, but not the alteration in detail, was adopted in the enlarged ed. of Morrél & How's Ps. & Hys., 1861. For the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, it was again rewritten, this time by Bp. How, as "O Holy Lord, content to fill." This is the author's authorised text, and is repeated in his Hymns, 1886. All these texts are in C. U. [J. J.]

O Holy Saviour, Friend unseen. Charlotte Elliott, [In Affliction.] This hyno

O how I love Thy holy word. W. Cooper. [Holy Scripture in Affection.] This is No. 17 of Book iii. in the Olney Hymns, 1779. It is in 6 st. of 4 l. and headed, "Affections sanctified by the Word." It is in C. U. in its original form, but a cento therefrom, beginning with st. iii., "Long unafflicted, unassayed, much more pleasing than the complete hymn.

O how they thought that we shall know. E. Swaine. [Heaven Anticipated.] The original publication of this hymn we are unable to determine. It probably appeared in a religious magazine, circa 1830; for st. ii.-v. were given in Bickersteth's Christian Psalmody, 1833, No. 575: as "For ever to behold Him shine." The original was republished in Swaine's The Hand of God, a Fragment, with Poems, Hymns, and Verses of Psalms, 1839; Bickersteth's arrangement was also repeated in several collections. In 1876 Bp. E. H. Bickersteth wrote a new stanza, substituted it for Swaine's original, and gave the hymn in his Hym. Comp. as "For ever to behold Him shine," together with an elaborate note in which he says it was strange to begin the hymn as his father had done, with the second stanza of the original, "For ever to behold Him shine."
O JESUS CHRIST

1. Jesus, Thy boundless love to me (st. i.), in Merner (10 st.); N. Cong., 1859 (4 st.); Bapt. Hyl., 1879 (3st.); A. C., in American in the Dutch Rev., 1866 (3st.); Knapp’s Rev., 1866 (4 st.); Laudes Domini, 1884 (3st.), &c.

2. Love, how cheering is Thy ray (st. iii.). Bk. of Hymns, Boston, U.S.A., 1848; Sacred Song, 1867.

3. My Saviour, Thou Thy love to me (st. v.). Moravian H. Bk., 1879; H. L. Hastings’ Hymnals, 1890.

4. More hard than marble is my heart (st. vi.), American Sabbath Bk., 1858.

7. Still night me, O my Saviour stand. St. t. of this form is taken from “Peace, doubting heart, my God I am” (q.v.). This is added in Speyer’s Songs of P. & G., st. xii., xiv., xvi., and in J. L. Porter’s Coll., 1876, st. xii., xvi., of this tr.

8. Thou Friend of sinners! Who hast sought. This is st. v., iv., xvi., rewritten by E. Osler, and pub. as No. 169 in the Metre H. Bk., 1836, and in his own Church and King, June, 1837, p. 149. Repeated in the Irish Rev. Hymnals, 1868 and 1873.

9. Other trs. are: (1) “O Christ, my sweetest Life and Light,” in the Suppl. to German Psal., ed. 1783, p. 29; in Select Hymns, from German Psal., Tranquiller, 1754, p. 47, and in the Moravian H. Bk., 1754, pub. by the Moravian H. Bk., 1754, pub. p. No. 444. St. v., vii., beginning “Thou cam’st in love to my relief,” are given at p. 362 in the Moravian H. Bk., pt. ii., 1858. In the Moravian H. Bk., 1879 (No. 496), it begins, “O Christ, my only Life and Light.”

O Jesus Christe, wahres Licht. J. Heermann, [Christian Church.] 1st pub. in his Devoti musica cordis, Breslau, 1830, p. 120, in 6 st. 4 of 4 as one of the “Songs of Tears” in the section entitled, “In the time of the persecution and distress of pious Christians.” Thence in Mutzell, 1858, No. 49; in Wacker- nagle’s ed. of his Geistliche Lieder, No. 87, and the Univers. L. S., 1851, No. 242. It is a beautiful hymn on Christ as the Light and Centre of the world, and the most widely used through English trs. of any of Heermann’s hymns. Tr. as:

1. O Thou, the true and only Light, Direct, &c. A good tr. of st. i., ii., by W. Ball, as part of his book of works for the English ed. of Mendelssohn’s St. Paul, 1836, and thence in Robinson’s Church Psalter & H. Bk., 1860. To this in Allen’s Suppl. Hys. and C. F. Hyl., 1866, Bapt. Hyl., 1879, &c., trs. of st. iv.-v., from Chope (see below), were added; and in the Suppl. of 1874 to the New Cong., trs. of st. iii.-vi. from Miss Winkworth (see below). The version in the Anglican H. Bk., 1868, No. 275 (1871, No. 316), is st. i. by Ball, ii.-v. by R. C. Singleton, 1867.

2. O Christ, the Light of heavenly day! A full and very good tr. by A. T. Russell, as No. 153 in his Ps. & Hys., 1851, and thence in Bosworth’s Church Hymns, 1865, and G. S. Jellicoe’s Coll., 1867. In the Cooke-Denton Hymnal, 1853, No. 12 is composed of st. i., iv., v., vi., v., of Russell, in the above form. This form is repeated in Chope’s Hyl., 1862, Thring’s Coll., 1890-92, &c. The form beginning “O Jesus, Light of heavenly day,” in Kennedy, 1863 (thence in Dr. Thomas’s Augustine H. Bk., 1866), is Chope greatly altered.

3. O Thou, the true and only Light! Enlighten, &c. A somewhat free tr. in 5 st., as No. 58 in J. F. Thrupp’s Ps. & Hys., 1853.

4. O Christ, our true and only Light. A good and full tr. by Miss Winkworth in her Lyra Ger., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 21, repeated in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 100. This is found in the App. of 1874 to the Leeds H. Bk., 1855; Psalmist, 1878; and in America in the Freeb. Hyl., 1874; Baptist H. Bk., 1871; Bapt. Service of Songs, 1871; Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880, &c. O Jesu Christe, the word’s true Light. A good but rather free version by E. Massie in his Sacred Odes, vol. ii., 1867, p. 175, and thence in J. L. Porter’s Coll., 1876. Another tr. is, “O Christ, Thou heavenly Light, illuminate,” by Dr. G. Walker, 1860, p. 31. [J. M.]

O Jesus, meine Sonne. C. J. P. Spitta. [Love to Christ.] A beautiful hymn on Jesus as the daily help and life of His faithful people. 1st pub. in Spitta’s Psalter and Harfe, Pirna, 1833, p. 69, in 8 st. 8 l. entitled, “Life and full satisfaction in Jesus.” Included in Knapp’s Ec. L. S., 1850, No. 145 (1855, No. 1507). Tr. as:

1. O blessed Sun, whose splendour. A full and good tr. by R. Massie in his Lyra Domestic, 1860, p. 66, repeated in Reid’s Praise Bk., 1874, and in Schaft’s Christ in Song, 1869-70. Varying centos with the original first line are found in Flett’s Coll., Paisley, 1871; Hatfield’s Church H. Bk., N. Y., 1872; Harland’s C. P. Hyl., 1876; J. L. Porter’s Coll., 1876, &c.; and (with the first line as “Blessed Sun”) in the Bk. of Common Praise, 1865. Varying centos (generally ir.-vi.) beginning “I know no life divided” (st. iv.) are included in Kennedy, 1863; People’s Hyl., 1867; and in America in the Freeb. Hyl., 1874; Meth. Epis. Hyl., 1784; Dutch Reformed H. Bk., 1869; Laudes Domini, 1884, &c.

Other trs. are: (1) “Jesus, my sun! before Whose eyes,” by Miss Fry, 1858, p. 143. (2) “O Jesus Christ, my Sunshine,” by Miss Mantingh, 1861, p. 15. (3) “O Jesus, at Thy shining,” by Miss Burlingham in the British Herald, Aug., 1865, p. 124, repeated in Reid’s Praise Bk., 1872. (4) “Jesus, my Sun, before Whose beams,” by Lady Durand, 1873, p. 29. [J. M.]

O Jesus, Thou art standing. Bp. W. W. How. [Christ at the Door.] Written in 1867, and first pub. in the 1867 Supplement to Merrill & How’s Ps. & Hymns, in 6 st. of 4 l. It has passed, and usually in an unaltered form, into the 1868 Appx. to H. & A. & M., the 8. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871, and other collections in G. Britain, and also into several American collections. It is one of the most popular of Bishop How’s hymnas. [J. J.]

O Jesus bruised and wounded more. Cecil F. Alexander. [Holy Communion.] Appeared in her work, The Legend of the Golden Prayers and other Poems, 1859, p. 143, in 5 st. of 4 l., and entitled “Communion Hymn.” In the Lyra Anglicana, 1865, it was given as Pt. ii. of the hymn “He cometh, on yon hallowed board.” Pt. ii. being an addition of 6 st. to the original hymn. Each of these “Parts” is in C. U. as a separate hymn, the second part being the more popular of the two. [J. J.]

O Jesus! God and man. F. W. Fisk. [Children’s Hymns.] This popular children’s O JESUS, I HAVE PROMISED

hymn was given in his Jesus and Mary, &c., 1849, in 7 st. of 4 l., and headed “Ragged School Hymn.” In C. U. it is found in two forms, first, the original, in Roman Catholic hymn-books for missions and schools, in which st. iii., iv., both of which are addressed to the B. V. M., are retained, and secondly, in other hymn-books, where they are omitted. Orig. text in Faber’s Hymn, 1862. [J. J.

O Jesus, I [we] have promised to serve Thee to the End. J. E. Bode. [Confirmation.] Contributed to the 1863 Appendix to the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hymns, No. 395. It has been repeated in a great number of hymn-books, and is very popular as a Confirmation hymn. [J. J.

O Jesus, Jesus, dearest Lord. F. W. Faber. [Love to Jesus.] 1st pub. in his Jesus and Mary, &c., 1849, in 10 st. of 4 l., headed “Jesus, my God, and my All!” and again in his Hymns, 1862. It is in C. U. in its full form, and also abbreviated to 5 st., as in Hatfield’s Church H. Bk., N. Y., 1872. A cento therefrom, beginning with st. vii., “O Light in darkness, Joy in grief,” is No. 380 in the Hymnary, 1872.

O Jesus, make Thyself to me. Charlotte Elliott. [The Presence of Jesus desired.] Under date of Jan. 26, 1872, the Rev. J. Babington, brother-in-law to Miss Elliott, wrote to the late D. Sedgwick concerning this hymn:

“The lines you refer to, ‘O Jesus, make Thyself to me,’ are Miss Charlotte Elliott’s. They were for many years the opening lines of prayers, and were so much a part of her own hidden life, with her Saviour that they were rarely communicated by her to any one, and only to her most intimate friends. One of those had them printed on a card by Taylor (Edinburgh, 1860), and at first she was rather disinclined, till she was led to feel that this was her loved Saviour’s way of leading others to participate in her own sacred inner life.”

The lines are:

“O Jesus, make Thyself to me,
A living, bright reality;
More present to faith’s vision keen
Than any outward object seen;
More dear, more infinitely nigh.
Than e’en the sweetest earthly tie!”

These lines are given in Snopp’s Songs of G. & G., 1872, as No. 538. [J. J.

O Jesus, Saviour of the lost. Bp. E. H. Bickersteth. [Jesus, the Rock.] Appeared in his Water from the Well-Springs, &c., 1852, p. 190, in 4 st. of 4 l., and headed, “Thou art my Rock.” In 1858 it was repeated in his Ps. & Hymns, No. 133; and again, as “O Jesus, Saviour, &c.,” in his H. Companion, 1870 and 1876. It is also in use in America. Bp. Bickersteth dates its composition 1849, but it is not in his Poems of that Year. [J. J.

O Jesus, still, still shall I groan. C. Wesley. [Lent.]” This poem, in 4 parts, appeared in Hymns and Sacred Poems, 1742, in 36 st. of 6 l., and entitled, “Gracious Redeemer, seek my heart.” (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. ii, p. 126.) In 1780 the following hymns were compiled therefrom, and included in the Wes. H. Bk., 1785:

1. Jesus, Thou knowest my simplicity [sinfulness]. St. i., ii., iv., of Pt. ii.
2. Lay to Thy hand, O God of grace. St. vii., x., of Pt. iii.

These hymns are retained in the Wes. H. Bk., 1875, and are found in various collections. [J. J.

O King of earth, and air, and sea. Bp. R. Heber. [Lent.] Appeared in his posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 55, in 6 st. of 4 l., and appointed for the 4th Sunday in Lent. Although apparently based upon the petition in the Lord’s Prayer, “Give us this day our daily bread,” it was doubtless suggested by the Gospel of the day, the feeding of the five thousand (John vi. 1). It is in C. U. in G. Britain and America. In the American Unitarian Bk. of Hymns, 1848, No. 492, it begins with st. iv., “Thy bounteous hand with food can bless.” [J. J.

O King of kings, Thy blessing shed. [National Hymn.] This hymn “For the King” appeared anonymously in the 8th ed. of Cotterill’s Selection, 1819, No. 265, in 5 st. of 4 l. It is known in the following:

1. Its full form as above, and in various hymn-books to 1835.
2. In 4 st. of 4 l. In Bickersteth’s Christian Psalmody, 1822. This is the text, with the necessary changes from King to Queen, &c., which was used in the S. P. C. K. Jubilee Hymns, 1877, and other Jubilee collections.
3. The same arrangement of stanzas altered to suit the changed circumstances occasioned by the accession of H. M. Gracious Majesty upon Victoria. This was given in an early edition of Hall’s Hb. Bk. (1st ed., 1834), and was made by Hall.

2. The Hb. Bk. text, with a return in some instances to the original text on the one hand, and some new changes on the other, in Thring’s Ch. Hymns, 1882.

This hymn is usually attributed to T. Cotterill. In the Julians and the Brooke marked copies of his Selection [see Cotterill, T.], it is blank. Snopp, in his Songs of G. & G., 1872, and others attribute it to T. Cotterill. Their authority was the simple guess of D. Sedgwick, as his ass. testify. So far as we can discover it is “Anon. in Cotterill’s Selection, 1841.” [J. J.

O Kύριε ἔρχοιται. [Τὸν ἐπίστας την ψυχήν.] O Lord, consider, my distress. W. Whittingham. [Ps. li.]” This rendering of the 51st Ps., which first appeared in the Anglo-Genevan Psalter, 1556 [Old Version. § 111.], is the earliest known version of a Psalm in the English language. A copy of the Psalter in which it appeared is preserved in the Bodleian, Oxford. Notwithstanding its historical value and some merit, it is unknown to modern collections. As a specimen we will quote the first stanza:

“O Lord, consider my distress,
And now with speed some pity take;
My sins deface, my faith redeem,
A good Lord, for thy great mercies sake.”

The full text is difficult to find, except in the Psalter appended to many old copies of the Bible, and in the Old Version. [J. J.]
O Lord, how good, how great art Thou. H. F. Lyte. [Ps. cxiii.] This is Lyte’s altered version of his paraphrase of Ps. viii., which first appeared as “How good, how faithful, Lord, art Thou” (p. 396, ii. 4), in his Poems, 1833. This altered form was given in his Spirit of the Psalms, 1834, and is found in the Wes. H. Bk., 1875, and other collections. [J. J.]

O Lord, how happy should we be. J. Austin. [Rest and Peace in Jesus.] 1st pub. in his posthumous Hymns, 1836, No. 44, in 5 st. of 6 l. In 1841 it was included in the Child’s Christian Year, and from thence has passed into numerous hymn-books in all English-speaking countries. It was probably suggested by the words of the Psalmist, “Casting thy burden upon the Lord, and he shall sustain thee,” but in the Hymns there is nothing to indicate its origin, as it is printed there without title or heading of any kind. Usually the text is slightly altered, that in the H. Companion, although claiming to be the original, being at fault in no less than four instances. This hymn is the best known and most widely used of Austin’s hymns. [J. J.]

O Lord, in all our trials here. Emma Toke, nee Leslie. [Saints’ Days.] Written in 1854, and contributed anonymously to the S. P. C. K. Hymns for Public Worship, 1852, No. 114, in 3 st. of 4 l. This hymn is in use in the following forms:

1. The original in S. P. C. K. Hymns, &c.
3. In Honey’s Appendix, Lincoln, n.d., composed of the original; st. iv. from J. Newton’s Olney Hymns, No. cxvii., st. vii.; and a doxology. This arrangement was given in Thring’s edit. 1861, but omitted in the 2nd ed., 1882, in favour of:

4. The original with a fourth stanza added by Presb. Thring, No. 385. [J. J.]

O Lord, incline Thy gracious ear. C. Wesley. [Ps. x. v.] Pub. in the Wesley Ps. & Hys., 1743, in 7 st. of 8 l. (P. Works, 1863-1874, vol. viii. p. 92.) From this paraphrase three cantos are in C. U.:—

3. On Thee, O God of purity. This, which begins with st. ii., was given in the revised ed. of the Wes. H. Bk., 1875, in Common Praise, 1879, this is again changed to “On Thee, Thou God of purity.” [J. J.]

O Lord, my best desire fulfill. W. Conyngham. [Resignation.] 1st pub. in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. ii., No. 29, in 6 st. of 4 l., and entitled “Submission.” It was somewhat widely used in the older hymn-books, and is still given in several collections in G. Britain and America. Usually it is abbreviated, and sometimes it is attributed to J. Newton, but in error. [J. J.]

O Lord of heaven, and earth, and sea. Bp. C. Wordsworth of Lincoln. [Offering.] 1st pub. in the 3rd ed. of his Holy Year, 1865, in 9 st. of 4 l., and headed, “Charitable Collections.” It is in extensive use in G. Britain and America, sometimes in its original form, as in the 1869 Appendix to the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hys., and again as altered in H. A. & M., or the S. P. C. K. Church Hymn, and others. The changes in the text of the Church Hymn were approved by the author. His authorised text is in the 6th ed. of his Holy Year, 1872. [J. J.]

O Lord of hosts, Whose glory fills J. M. Neale. [Laying Foundation Stone of a Church.] Appeared in his Hymns for the Youth (being the 2nd series of his Hys. for Children) in 1844, No. 27, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed, “Laying the First Stone of a Church.” It is given in numerous hymnals, as H. A. & M., the People’s H., Thring’s Coll., &c. The alteration of st. v., line 2–4, from—

“Endue the hearts that guide with skill; “Preserve the hands that work from ill;”

to—

“The heads that guide endue with skill, “The hands that work preserve from ill;”
given in H. A. & M. in 1861, has been adopted with almost common consent. [J. J.]

O Lord, our fathers oft have told Tate & Brady. [Ps. xlii. Thanksgiving for Victory.] 1st pub. in three parts in the New Version, 1856. From this rendering, copies of varying length have been compiled from time to time, and have come into common use. In 1836, Edward Osler rewrote various lines from the N. V. and formed them into a hymn of 4 st. of 4 l., beginning:—“Great God of hosts, our ears have heard.” This was included in Hall’s Mitre H. Bk., as a version of Ps. xlii., and entitled “For Success against our Foes.” From thence it passed into various collections, including Poth’s Hymns, &c., in 1861, wherein it appeared with slight alterations and a doxology. This text was repeated in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, with the change in the doxology of “One everlasting Three” to “One God in Persons Three.” [J. J.]

O Lord our God, with earnest care. [Fast Day.] This cento, in 5 st. of 4 l. in a Selection of Hys. Designed as a Supp. to the Ps. & Hys. of the Presb. Church, Philadelphia, 1861, No. 356, and the Songs for the Sanctuary, N. Y., 1865, No. 1385, is from tr. of Latin hymns pub. in the H. Noted; st. i., being st. iii. of “Erech hortatus humilis,” in Elze, ii., iii, being st. iii. iv. of “Jesus quadragesima;” st. iv. being st. iv. of “Ande benignae Conditor;” and st. v. of “Plasmator hominis Deus.” (For history of the Latin texts see under their respective first lines.) Of these trs. st. i–iv. are by Dr. Neale, and st. v. by another hand. The result is a most successful hymn for a Fast Day service, or for Lent. [J. J.]

O Lord, our languid souls inspire J. Newton. [Opening of a Place of Worship.] This hymn was written at the same time under the same circumstances as Conyngham’s “Jesus, where'er Thy people meet.” Full details are given in the note on that hymn. “O Lord, our languid souls,” &c., was pub. in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. ii., No. 43, in 7 st. of 4 l., and headed, “On opening a Place for Social Prayer.” It is rarely found in its full form. The abbreviated texts sometimes begin with the first stanza, but the most popular arrangements are:

1. Dear Shepherd of Thy people, hear. This is O LORD, OUR STRENGTH
usually composed of four stanzas of the original, beginning with st. 6.
2. Great Shepherd of Thy people, hear. This is the most popular form of the hymn. Bickersteth included it in his Christian Psalter, 1833.
3. Kind Shepherd of Thy people, hear. This arrangement appeared in J. R. Gurney's vol. of Hymns, 1836, and has been used in later hymnals.
The use of this hymn in these various forms is extensive.

O Lord, our Strength in weakness. Bishop C. Wordsworth of Lincoln. [For a Girls' Friendly Society.] Written in 1881 for the Irish Diocesan Mission of the Girls' Friendly Society, and first printed in the琳, 1881, in 6 st. of 8 l. (Lincoln: Williamson). It is an admirable lyric on Temperance, and is one of the most beautiful of Bp. Wordsworth's hymns.

O Lord, refresh Thy flock. J. Audice. [Passion tide.] Appeared in his posthumous Hymns, 1836, No. 27, in 5 st. of 4 l., and again, with alterations, in the Child's Christian Year, 1841. In the former it is without title (it is marked "kiled in; in the latter it is appointed for "Thursday in Passion Week.
It is in several hymn-books, the text being usually that of the Child's Ch. Year.

O Lord, Thou knowest all the snares. Emma Toke, née Leslie. [Lent.] Written in 1831, and contributed anonymously to the S. P. C. K. Hys. for Public Worship, 1852, No. 34, in 2 st. of 8 l. From thence it has passed into later ed. of the same collection, the Ireland Church Hymnal, and others. In 1870 Mrs. Toke altered it (for the worse) for the Rev. R. Judgell's A. K. Liturgy and H. Bk., Halifax, 1870, No. 24, as "O God! Thou knowest all the snares," but in this form it has failed to attract attention.

O Lord, turn not Thy face away. J. Marchant. [Lent.] This hymn, known as The Lamentation of a Sinner, is first found in J. Daye's ed. of Sternehold and Hopkins, 1560-61 [Old Version, § v.] but without signature. In the edition of 1565, the authorship is given to Marchant. This name, sometimes written Market, appears also in the editions of 1580-86 [Old Version, § 19. 10]. The first stanza is:

"O Lord, turn not Thy face away
From him that lies prostrate,
Lamenting sore his sinful life
Before Thy mercy seat.

In The Whole Book of Psalms, &c., by J. Playford, 1677, p. 295, it begins "O Lord, turn not away Thy face.

The authorship of this hymn is given by Miller (Singers and Songs, 1867, p. 46) and by Lord Selborne (Book of Praise, 1862, p. 239, and note) to John Mordly, although Miller adds a "*" in his Index [Old Version, § ix. 16]. These conclusions are based upon Farr's note in his Select Poetry Chiefly Devotional of the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, &c., 1845, vol. i. p. 1, where the signature "m" in the Old Version is thought to represent John Mordly.
A second rendering of The Lamentation is that by Tate and Brady, in the 6th ed. of the Supplement of the New Version, 1708. It is the Old Version text rewritten in 9 st. of 4 l.

The first stanza reads:

"O Lord, turn not Thy face away
From him that lies prostrate,
Lamenting sore his sinful life
Before Thy mercy seat.

This text continued in use as a part of Tate and Brady until that work was superseded by modern hymn-books. It is also found in a considerable number of the latter, but usually in an abridged form.

A third rendering of The Lamentation, by Bp. R. Heber, was given in his posthumous Hymns, 1827, p. 104, in 12 double lines. The opening lines are:

"O Lord, turn not Thy face away
From him that lies prostrate,
Lamenting sore his sinful life
With tears and bitter cry.

This rendering, signed in Heber's Hymns "Sternehold" in error, is given in full in Lord Selborne's Book of Praise, 1862, p. 239. It is considerably altered from the Old Version original. In several modern hymn-books, including the Scottish Presbyterian Hymnal, 1876, it is slightly altered, as "O Lord, turn not Thy face away. O Lord," in the American Sabbath Hh. Bk., 1850, and others; and (2) "Turn not, O Lord, Thy face from me," in Alford's Ps. & Hys., 1841, and his Year of Praise, 1867. The original texts of the O. and the N. Versions may be found bound up with old copies of the Book of Common Prayer.

O Lord, upon Thine heritage. [Ember Days.] This hymn, in W. J. Blee's Church Hymn and Tune Bk., 1852-55, in 3 st. of 4 l., is based upon F. Rous's version of Ps. 68, st. 16, in Ps. xii., its pub. in the Scottish Psalter, 1650. In the H. Bk. for the use of Wellington College, 1860, and in Kennedy, 1883, st. i.-iv., are repeated, together with the substitution of a doxology for Blee's st. v.

O Lord, when dangers press me round. W. H. Badurth. [Ps. cx.] 1st pub. in his Ps. & Hys., 1831, as a version of Ps. cx. in 3 st. of 6 l. with the heading, "God a sure Defence." In its original form it is not in C. U., but as "My God, when dangers press me round," it is in a few modern collections, including the New Comp., 1859, No. 263. This altered form of the hymn appeared in Hall's Mitre Hh. Bk., 1886. The changes introduced by Hall are very slight.

O Lord, Who in Thy love divine. Bp. C. Wordsworth of Lincoln. [Ember Days and Ordinations.] 1st pub. in his Holy Year, 1862, p. 200, in 9 st. of 6 l. and headed "For Ember Weeks; and at the Ordination of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons." In 1869 a new stanza was added, as st. vi. ("My Lord Who in the night in prayer didst spend"), and the hymn was divided into two parts, Pt. i. beginning with st. v. "O may Thy pastors faithful be." In Stepp's Songs of G. & G., 1872, No. 759, begins with st. vi. of the 1863 text. "O Thon Who didst at Pentecost."

O Lord, wilt Thou teach me to pray? Jane Taylor. [A Child's Hymn.] 1st pub. in Orig. Hys. for Sunday Schools, 2nd ed., 1813, No. 21, in 6 st. of 4 l. In the 4th ed. of the Original Hys., 1816, the opening line was changed to "Lord, teach a sinful child to pray." In this form, and in the more pleasing reading given to it by some, "Lord teach a little child to pray," it is found in numerous collections for children.

[3. J.]

O Love divine, how sweet Thou art.

The leading colts are in C. U.:

1. Composed of st. 1., ill., iv. and vii. This was given in G. Whitsfield's Hymns, 1723, No. 88, as the second of two hymns on "Longing for Christ." This colt was repeated by Madan, Toplady, and others in the older collections, and is that usually found in the Church of England hymn-books.

2. Composed of st. 1. - iv. This was given in the Wes. H. Bk., 1760, No. 141, and is in very extensive use in all English-speaking countries. In the revised ed. of the Wes. H. Bk., 1817, st. vi., of the original were added to the hymn.

3. Composed of st. iv., vi., and iii., in the order named. This colt, beginning "O that I could for ever sit," is in the American Songs for the Sanctuary, N. Y., 1865.

In addition to these other forms of the text beginning with st. i. are in limited use. G. J. Stevenson's associations in his Methodist H. Bk. Notes, 1883, are most interesting. [3. J.]

O Love divine, what hast Thou done? C. Wesley. [Passiontide.] 1st pub. in Hyms. & Sacred Poems, 1742, in 4 st. of 6 l., as the last of three hymns on "Desiring to Love" (P. Works, 1685-72, vol. ii. p. 74). It came into use in the Church of England through Toplady's Ps. & Hys., 1776, No. 25, and with the Methodist Societies and other nonconformists through the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 27. The historic account of its bountiful refrain, "My Lord, my Love is crucified," is given under "My Lord, my Love was crucified" (p. 781, ii.).

O luce quae tuā lates. Claude de新业态. [Trinity.] Appeared in the Paris Seriery, 1680; the Clunie Breviary, 1686, p. 32; the Paris Brev., 1736; and again in other and other French Breviaries. It is also in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837; Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiasticæ, 1838 and 1865; and Bigge's annotated ed. of H. A. & M., 1867. Tr. as:—

1. O Thou Who dwellest bright on high. By J. Chandler in his Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, p. 93, and again in his Hys. of the Church, 1841, No. 54. This is given unaltered in some collections found in others as "Thou ever blessed Trinity," as in Murray's Hymnal, 1852, No. 68.

2. Who, in Thy very light, self-shrouded art. W. J. Blew in his Church Hy. & Tune Bk., 1852-55, and again in Rice's Sel. from the same, 1870.

O Luce qui mortalibus. C. Coffin.

[Sunday Evening.] Given in the Paris Bre-

O Lux beata Trinitatis iary, 1736, as the hymn for Sundays at Vespers, from Trinity to Advent; and again in Coffin's Hymn Sacert, 1736, p. 10. It is also in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 10; Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiasticœ, 1838 and 1865; and in Bigge's Annotated ed. of H. A. & M., 1867. Tr. as:—

1. O Thou Who in the light dost dwell. By I. Williams in the British Magazine, Jan. 1834, vol. v. p. 31, and his Hys. tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839, p. 10. It was included with alterations in the Hymnary, 1872. It is also No. 104 (altered) in Knox's Hys. and Anthems, 1851.

2. O Thou, whose throne is hid from men. By J. Chandler in his Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, p. 8, and his Hys. of the Church, &c., 1841, No. 7. It is in a few collections only.

3. Thou Who in light dost dwell. By W. J. Blew, in his Church Hy. & Tune Bk., 1852-55, and Rice's Sel. from the same, 1870.

5. Great God, Who hid from mortal sight. By the Compilers of H. A. & M., 1861 (based on J. Chandler), omitted from the revised ed., 1875, but restored, with alterations, in 1889.

Translations not in C. U.:

1. O Thou Who in the light dost dwell. R. Campbell, 1826. This is I. Williams's tr. as above, rewritten in L. M. The opening ll. 1-3 are the same as Williams's.

2. O God, enshrined in heavenly might. J. D. Chambers, 1847.

O Lux beata Trinitatis, Et principalis

Unitas. St. Ambrose. [Evening.] This is one of the twelve hymns which the Benedictine editors regarded as undoubtedly the work of St. Ambrose. It is cited as by St. Ambrose by Hucemar of Rheims in his treatise De unde et non trinit Deitatis, 827. The original consists of two stanzas (ii. "Te manum in termino"") and a doxology. Its most universal use was at Vespers on Saturday, as in the older Roman (Venice, 1478); Paris, 1643; Sarum, York, and Aberdeen Breviaries. It was sometimes also assigned to Vespers or Lauds on Trinity Sunday. Daniel, I., No. 26, gives the original, along with the revised text of the Roman Breviary of 1632, where it begins Jam sal sis; and in 1643, given in the additional st. tr. in J. D. Chamber's Lauda Sigla, 1857 (see below): (ii. "Jam noctis tempus adventit"; iv. "Tu Christe solus vineula"; v. "Oramus ut exaudiat") which are found only in the Mozarabic Breviary, where the hymn is given for Vespers on the 2nd S. after the Epiphany, and at other seasons. In his further notes at iv. pp. 47-48, Daniel refers to the original text as in a 10th cent. Rheinsian ms.: gives the statements of Hucemar: and also cites a passage from the 21st Epistle of St. Ambrose, which he thinks clearly refers to this hymn, and so decisively settles its authorship.

[W. A. S.]
O LUX BEATA TRINITAS

Mon, 1, p. 372, cites this hymn as in an 11th cent. at Durham, where it is assigned to daily Vespers. Breeze gives it in his Hymnarium Moestacense, 1803, from the 12th cent. It also in three us. of the 11th cent., in the British Museum (Vesp. D. xii. f. 2 b; Hari. 21. f. 218; Add. 39.464, 'a Musicable brevity'), as in the Lat. Hymn. of the Anglo-Saxon (Sorice Society), 1851, p. 1, it is printed from an 11th cent. ms. at Durham (B. III, 32, f. 2). Also in an 11th cent. ms. at Corpus Christi, Cambridge (291), in the St. Gall. Ms., No. 267, of the 11th cent.; in Migne's 'Patrol. xvi, col. 1407, and lxxvi., cols. 229, 350, 769, 921, 1075. It is in the 'Psalter tr. in Middle English, in the Nunnis Hymni Ecclesiæ, 1838 and 1846, and others.

The original text has been frequently tr. into German, and through these three versions has passed into English.

1. Der du bist drei in Einigkeit. This is a full and faithful version by M. Luther, written in 1525, and first pub. in the 'Lugd. Iter., 1524, and in the 'Psalter tr. in Middle English, 1874, p. 25. Repeated in the 'Ohio Luth. Hym., 1880, and by Dr. Bacon, 1844, p. 71.

Other trs. are:

[II. O virtute Spiritus sancti.]

Both forms of the Latin text have been tr. into English. The text of Ostat is:

Durham text.
Breve Rom.
"O lux beata Trinitas,"
Et principalitates.
Jam sol recedite ignes;
Infunde lumen cordibus.
Te manem laudant carmines,
Te deprecantur vesperae,
Te nostra suppellex gratia,
Amplius inter celulam.
Marti.
Farti, simulque Filio, etc.

These forms have been translated thus:

1. O Lux beata Trinitas.

2. O Trinity of blessed light. By J. M. Seale, in the Hymnal N., 1862, No. 1. It is given in several collections, including H. A. & M., 1861 and 1875, with slight alterations; the Hymnal, 1872, with other changes; and other hymn-books.

3. O Light thrice blessed, Holy Trinity. By W. J. B. in his Church H. & Tune Bk., 1852, and again in Rice's Sel. from the same, 1870.

4. O Light! Thou [O] Trinity most blest. By W. E. Chambers. This is a tr. of the 5th stanza and doxology form of the hymn as given in the *MozartISC tr. (see above). It was pub. in Chambers' Varia, 1852, p. 325; and his Louda Syon, 1857, p. 56, and is No. 410 in the People's H., 1867.

Other trs. are:

1. O blessed Light, O Trinity, O Unity that is the chief. Primer, 1864.

2. O blessed light, O Trinity, O Unity most principal. Primer, 1865.

4. O Trinity, blest Light. *L. Williams, in his Flowers in Past Years, 1848.*

5. When sinks in night that radiant sun. H. M. Magill, 1876.

6. Jam sol recedit ignes. This revised version of the hymn appeared in the Roman Breed. in 1832. It is the hymn on Saturdays at Vespers from the Octave of the Nativity of the Lord to Pentecost; also at first and second Vespers of Trinity Sunday; and also on Saturdays at Vespers from the Octave of Corpus Christi until Advent. It is tr. as:

This paraphrase rather than translation appeared in his Ancient Hymn. from the Rom. Brev., 1837, p. 16, in 3 st. of 8 l. (ed. 1871, p. 31). The first stanza may be said to be the tr. of the Latin and the rest an expansion of the same line of thought, thus making the paraphrase. It is in several modern collections, including Kennedy, 1863, Thrng's Coll., 1882, and, altered as "Father of lights, Who dostst in light," in the 1874 Supplement to the New Cong., and as "The flaming sun has sunk in night," in the Hymnary, 1872.

2. Now doth the fiery sun decline. By E. Cresswell, in his Hymnary, 1849, pp. 36 and 108, and again in his Hymnary, 1873, pp. 21 and 61. It is in several modern collections.

Other trs. are:

1. Now doth the fiery sun retire. Primer, 1865.

2. The fiery sun now rolls away. Primer, 1766.

3. The fiery sun now rolls away. Blest Three and One, Evening Office, 1716.

6. The fiery sun is gone. W. J. Copeland, 1848.

7. The fiery sun now fades from sight. W. J. Copeland, 2nd tr. 1848.

10. While the sun is setting. T. J. Potter, 1874.

11. Blest Light, eternal Trinity. *J. D. Apteard. This tr. is followed by 5 additional stanzas.

12. The fiery sun recedes from sight. J. Wallace, 1874.

Of these trs. not in C. U. Nos. 1, 2, 3, 5, 8, 10, and 11, are in O. Shipley's Annum Sanctum (and its Appellizes, 1884).

[II. O Majestat! wir fallen nieder. G. Tersteegen. [Public Worship]] This hymn, founded on Rev. iv., first appeared in the 4th ed., 1745, of his Geistlichen Blumen-gärten, Bk. iii., No. 74, in 7 st. of 12 l., entitled
O MASTER, AT THY FEET

"Hallelujah!"; repeated in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. The form tr. into English is that given in Dr. H. A. Daniel's Ewangel, Kirchen G. B., 1842, No. 251, beginning, "Herr, unser Gott!..." with Ehrfurcht dienen," being st. ii.-iv., v.i., greatly altered. Tr. as:

1. Lord our God, in reverence lowly. A good tr. of Daniel's text by Mrs. Fidler in H. L. L., 3rd Ser., 1858, p. 32 (1884, p. 154), and repeated in the Meth. N. Conn. Hymns, 1863. It is also found in the following forms:

(1) Lord of might, in reverence lowly. In Ken- nel's, 1863, &c.

(2) O Lord our God, in reverence lowly. In the 1849 Appendix to the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hymns., repeated in their Church Comm., 1871; the Homily, 1872, &c.

2. Lord our God, to whom is given. A free tr. of Daniel's st. i., iii., iv., by Dr. W. E. Stevenson, 1874, given in his Hymns, for Ch. & Home, 1874, the refrain of st. i., ii, being taken from Mrs. Fidler as above. [J. M.]

O Master, at Thy feet. Frances R. Havergal. [Adoration.] We have been furn- ished with the following interesting account of this hymn from Miss Havergal's private papers:

"I felt that I had not written anything specially in praise to Christ. A longing to do so possessed me. I wanted to show forth His praise to Him, not to others, even if no mortal ever saw it. He would see every line, would have known the unwritten longing to praise Him even if words failed utterly. It describes, as most of my hymns do, rather reminiscence than present feeling. I cannot transcribe at the moment of strong feeling. I recall it afterwards and write it down." O Master! It is perhaps my favourite title because it implies ruhe and submission; and this is what love craves. Men may feel differently, but a true woman's submission is inseparable from deep love. I write it ("O Master") in the cold and twilight in the little back room, uncarpeted, at Sharsheil Parsonage, Dec. 31, 1866. I began my book [Ministry of Song] with the expression of its design, "to God to glory, I wished to clothe it with a distinctive ascription of praise to Jesus, and, therefore, without any hesitation, at once decided upon placing 'Adoration' [this hymn] where it stands." The hymn was given in the Sunday Magazine, 1867; in her Ministry of Song, 1869; and in Life and Love, 1879, in 5 st. of 4 l. [J. J.]

O may the power which melts the rock. J. Newton. [National Fast.] This is one of his Fast-day hymns pub. in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. ii., No. 65, in 8 st. of 4 l. and headed, "Confession and Prayer, Dec. 13, 1776." In Cotterill's Sel., 1810, it was given in 6 st. and in this form it has come down to modern hymn-books. [J. J.]

O may seem may seem this house of clay. T. H. Gill. [Divinity of, and Oneness with, Christ.] Written in 1850; 1st pub. in G. Dawson's Ps. & Hymns, 1853; and again, after slight revision, in the author's Golden Chain, &c., 1869, No. 36, in 11 st. of 4 l. Concerning it the author says that it "has had by far the widest acceptance of all my hymns. It was pub. in the author's Manual of Devotion, in which it appeared 20 months before the death of the incardination was revealed to me [see GILL, T. H.]."

O nata lux de lumine. [The Transfiguration.] The oldest text known of this hymn is in G. M. Drevse's Hymnologia Mihi Fidei, 1888, from a 10th cent. ms. and in two Rheinau ms. now in the University Library at Zürich, No. 91 of the 11th cent. ; No. 92 of the 12th cent. It is also in an early 14th cent. ms. in the Bodleian (Ashmole 1523 f. 247): in the Sarum Breviary, V-nice, 1495; the Aberdeen Breviary of 1509, &c. The printed text is also in Carol. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865; Daniel, iv. p. 161, &c. [J. M.]

Translations in C. U.:

1. 0 Light of Light, Lord Jesu. By W. J.
Blew, in his Church Hym. and Tune Bk., 1852-55, and again in Rice's Sel. from the same, 1870.

2. O Light. Which from the Light last birth. By J. D. Chambers, in his Lyra Salm., 1852, p. 241. This is repeated in several modern collections, including the People's H., 1867; the Hymmer, 1882, &c.

In the Hymnal Noted, 1854, the tr. "A type of those bright rays on high," is given in error under "O Nata Lux de Luminis," instead of "Coelastis formam Gloriae" (p. 240, ii.), of which it is a tr. [J. J.]

'O νέος Οὐρανός. [Conception of the B. V. M.] Three Cathisata (i.e. hymns sung seated from the Day dawn or Lauds for the Conception of Anna, Dec. 9, in the Menaea. The tr. by Dr. R. F. Littledale, "Within the womb of Anna," was first pub. in the Church Times, Dec. 3, 1864, signed "R. F. L." and again in the People's H., 1867, and signed "L." It is an expansion of the original, the second stanza being introduced for the sake of clearness. The doxology is also by Dr. Littledale.

O παίδας ἐκ Καμίνου. [Ἀναπτάνως ωἐπάρα] Ο πάπτων ἐπέκεια. St. Gregory of Nasissos. [Praise.] This "Hymn to God" is found in various editions of S. Gregory's Opera: in Daniel, iii. 12, and in Anth. Greek Carm. Christ., 1871, p. 24. It is an exceedingly fine hymn, and has been well rendered into English by Mr. Chatfield in his Songs and Hymns, &c., 1876, in 12 st. of 4 i., pp. 98-101, as, "O Thou, the One Supreme o'er all." [Greek Hymnody. iv.] [J. J.]

O Paradise eternal. T. Davis. [Heaven.] Appeared in his Hym. Old and New, 1864, No. 192, in 6 st. of 4 i., and again in his S. Annus Sanctus, 1877. It has passed, in its full, or in an abbreviated form, into a large number of hymn-books in Great Britain and America.

O Paradise, O Paradise. F. W. Faber. [Heaven.] 1st pub. in his Hymns, 1862, in 7 st. of 8 i., and entitled "Paradise." In 1868 it was included in the Appendix to H. A. & M., with the omission of st. iii. and v., and the addition of the stanza "Lord Jesus, King of Paradise," by the compiler. For some time after the hymn was included in H. A. & M., it was very popular. Dr. Dykes's tune therein being the chief cause of its success. Latterly, however, its unpopularity, and, in its original form, its longing for sudden death, has caused it to be omitted from several of the best collections. The rewritten version, in three stanzas, in Morrell & How's enlarged edition of their Ps. & Hymns, 1864-67, No. 165, is a failure. [J. J.]

O Pater sanote, mitis atque pie. [Trinity Sunday.] This hymn is found in two ms. of the 11th cent. in the British Museum (Vesp. D. xii. f. 118 b; Jul. A. vi. f. 70 b); and in the Lat. Hymn. of the Anglo-Saxon Ch., 1851; it is printed from an 11th cent. ms. at Durham (B. iii. 32, f. 43). It is included in the Sarum, York, Aberdeen, old Roman (Venice, 1478), and other Brevaries. The printed text is also in Mone. No. 12; Daniel, iv. p. 270; G. M. Dreyer's Hymnarium Mozarabicum, 1888, from a 10th cent. ms., and Card. Newman's Hymnæ Ecclesiæ, 1838 and 1865. [J. M.]

Translations in C. U.:—

1. O Holy Father, merciful and loving. By W. J. Blew, in his Church Hym. and Tune Bk., 1852-55; and again, with slight alterations, in the 1860 Appendix to the Hymnal A., No. 140.

2. O gracious Father, merciful and holy. By R. F. Littledale, in the People's H., 1867, under the signature of "A. L. P."

3. Holiest Father, pitiful and loving [tender]. In the Antiphoner and Grad, 1880, and, altered, in the Hymner, 1882.

Translations not in C. U.:—

1. O Holy Father, gracious and benign. J. D. Chambers, 1852 and 1867.

2. Father most Holy, merciful and loving. J. W. Hewett. 1859.

O perfect life of love. Sir H. W. Baker. [Passiontide.] Written for the revised edition of H. A. & M., and included therein in 1875, as one of the "Hymns of the Passion," in 7 st. of 4 i. It is a hymn of much merit. [J. J.]

O πλάτης του κύριου. St. Theophanes. [Quinquagesima.] Stichers from the Triacon at the Vespers of Tyrophanes, the Sunday before the commencement of the Great Fast, in which event cheese (allowed for the last time on this Sunday) is prohibited. [See Δέσο Μάρια, p. 288, 4. a.] The original is in 5 st. of unequal length, as in Dr. Neale's tr. Adam's expansion from Paradise is the subject of Tyrophanes, and the first three stanzas are spoken in the person of Adam. Dr. Neale's tr.: "The Lord my Maker, forming me of clay," is of st. i., ii., iii., and v., and appeared in his Hymn of the Eastern Church, 1862. He introduces it with the following note:

"The reader can hardly fail to be struck with the beautiful idea in the third stanza, where the foliage of Paradise is asked to make intercession for Adam's recall. The last stanza, Milton, as an universal scholar, doubtless had in his eye, in Eve's lamentation." [J. J.]

O praise our God to-day. Sir H. W. Baker. [Friendly Societies.] Written in 1861, and pub. in H. A. & M., the same year, in 5 st. of 4 i. It has passed into several hymn-books in Great Britain and America, and is admirably suited for the purpose of Friendly Societies, &c., for which it was written. [J. J.]

O praise ye the Lord, Praise Him in the height. Sir H. W. Baker. [Ps. cl.] Written for and 1st pub. in H. A. & M., 1875. One of the author's most spirited productions. It is in 4 st. of 8 i. [J. J.]

O qualis quantas aestitit. Thomas à Kempis. [Eternal Life.] In his Opera, Nürnberg, 1494, f. 130, entitled "Hymn on the joys of Heaven and the nine angelic choirs." The full text is in Weckermagel, i., No. 374. Trench, ed. 1864, p. 321, gives a beautiful fragment beginning with 1. 9, "Astant (Adstant) angelorum chori." This portion has been tr. as — "In the far celestial land. By Harriet M. Chester, made for and pub. in the Hymnary, 1872, under the signature of "H. M. C."

Hys. of the Anglo-Saxons. 1851, it is printed from a ms. of the 11th cent. at Durham (B. ii. 32 f. 32 b). Among the St. Gall ms. it is found in No. 92 of the 9th cent.; and in Nos. 387 and 413 of the 11th cent. It was included in the Sarum, York, and several German Breviaries, as a hymn for the Assumption of the B. V. M. The printed text is also in Daniel, iv. p. 188; and G. M. Drevv's Hymnarium Moissianus, 1888, from a 10th cent. ms. Tr. as:—

O quum juvât frater, Deus. C. Coffin. [Unity.] Appeared in the Paris Breviary, 1736, as the hymn for Tuesdays at Vespers; and again in Coffin's Hymnæ Sacri, 1736, p. 17. It is also in J. Chandler's Hymns of the Primitive Church, 1837, and Card. Newman's Hymnæ Ecclesiæ, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:—

1. O Lord, how joyful 'tis to see. J. Chandler, in his Hymnæ of the Primitive Church, 1837, p. 19. It is given, generally without alteration, in a large number of hymn-books, including H. A. & M., 1875; the Hymnary, 1872; Thring's Collect., 1882, &c. It ranks with the most popular of Chandler's translations.
2. How sweet the days, O Lord, are sped. Given anonymously in the Wellington College H. Bk., 1860, and later editions.

Other trs. are:—

1. How sweet it is to see, Brethren in Unity. J. Williams. 1839.
2. Father and God, how sweet to see. W. J. Blew. 1823-4.
3. O God, what joys around are shed. J. D. Chambers. 1837.

O quanta qualia sunt illa Sabbata. Peter Abelard. [Sunday. Eternal Life.] Cousin, in his ed. of Abelard's Opera, Paris, 1819, vol. i. p. 306, gives this from a ms. in the Royal Library at Brussels. This ms. is of the 12th cent. and is probably the collection of hymns which Abelard prepared for the use of the abbey of the Paraclete of which Heléna was abbess. More, No. 242, gives the text from the St. Gall ms. No. 528, of the 14th cent.; and in the 1875 catalogue of the St. Gall ms. it is also marked as being contained in No. 387 of the 11th cent. It is also in Migne's Patrologiae Cursus, vol. 178, col. 1786.

1. O what their joy and their glory must be. By J. M. Neale, in the Hymns, N. 1854. It is in several hymn-books, including the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871; Thring's Collect., 1882; and others, the text most in use being Neale's tr. slightly altered by the compilers of H. A. & M., 1861.
2. O how fair and how great. By J. D. Chambers, in his Laudis Sym., 1867, p. 58. In the Scottish Epis. Coll. of Hys., 1874. "O how surpassing fair."

3. O what shall be, O what W. Duffield, Mr. Duffield in Hymns, &c., N. Y., 1886, p. 4. This tr. says that he used the text as hopias. This tr. was given in N. Y., 1884, in two parts. glorious King, O happy state.

Other trs. are:—

1. O what must be their joy. J

O quickly come, dread Judge of all. L. Tuffield. [Advent.] 1st pub. in his Hymns for Churchmen, 1854, in 4 st. of 6 l. It was included in the 1808 Appendix to H. A. & M., in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, and several other collections. In a few American hymn-books it begins — "Come quickly come, dread Judge of all." In the Guardian of Dec. 24, 1884, the H. A. & M. text is rendered into Latin by "A. C." as:—

Ipse veni, generis Judex sanctissimo nostri. [J. J.]

O rubentes coeli rosae. [Virgins.] This hymn on St. Ursula and her 11,000 virgin companions is given by More, No. 1187, from a 15th cent. ms. at Basel. Daniel, iv. p. 281, repeats the text from More. The original was illustrated by G. Moullard, and printed in the Church Times, June 23, 1864; then in his Hymns and Lyrics, 1867; and the People's H. the same year as "Heavenly gardent, ray red." [J. J.]

O salutum, salutare convivium. [Holy Communion.] In the York Breviary of 1493 this is given as an antiphon to the Gospel on the Festival of Corpus Christi, as follows:—

"O salutare convivium in quo Christus stumtur, recolitur memoriae passione ejus, mens impletur gratia, et futurae gloriae nobis pignus datur, Alleluia." In this form it is found in other ancient breviaries, and in a Sarum Processional of circa 1380, in the Brit. Mus. (Harl. 2942 f. 80 b). A hymn in metrical form, with this first line, we have been unable to find. The tr. in the Irvingite Hymns for the Use of the Churches, 1871, is by E. W. Eddis, and was written in 1863. It begins: "O holy, holy, Feast of Life Divine." There is also a prose tr. in the 1863 ed. of the Appendix to the H. Noted, No. 228. [J. M.]

O sator rerum, reparator aevi. [Transfiguration.] The festival of the Transfiguration of our Lord was authorised by Pope Callistus III, in 1457 (and adopted by the English Convocation in 1483), and there are few hymns on this subject older than the 15th cent. This hymn is in two Rheinm. ms., in the University Library, Zürich, No. 91 of the 11th cent., and No. 82 of the 11th or 12th cent. It is also in a 14th cent. ms. in the Bodleian (Ashmole 1523 f. 247 b); in the Sarum Breviary, Venice ed. 1495 (Pars Est), pb. ii. f. 174 v as the hymnal Matins for the Transfiguration; in the Aberdeen Breviary; and in some of the eds. of the York Breviary after 1493. It is given in Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiæ, 1858 and 1865; and G. M. Drew's Hymns, 1888, from a 10th cent. ms. Daniel, i. No. 280, gives only st. 1. Tr. as:—

Author of all things, Christ, the world's Redeemer. In the Antiphoner and Gradual, 1889, and the Hymner, 1882.

Other trs. are:—

2. Father of worlds: Restorer of our days. J. D. Chambers. 1857. [J. M.]

O Saviour, is Thy promise fled? Bp. R. Heber. [Advent.] This is the third of the four hymns contributed by Heber to the October number of the Christian Observer, 1811. It was given for the 3rd Sun. in Advent, and consisted of 5 st. of 4 l. In Heber's posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 10, it is slightly altered and expanded to 6 st. of 4 l., the new stanza being "Yet, 'mid the wild and wintry gale," It is in C. U. in its full form as in Thring's Call, 1882, and in an abbreviated form as in Common Praise, 1879. There are also two stanzas, both beginning "Come, Jesus, come, return again," the first, in the American Unitarian Hymns for the Church of Christ, Boston, 1883, and others, consisting of st. ll.-iv. of the 1827 text; and the second in the Boston Ps. & Hym., 1862, No. 270, where st. ii. v. vi. are given. The latter arrangement is also repeated in other collections. The original hymn is based upon the Gospel for the 3rd Sun in Advent, St. Matt. xii. 2-10. [J. J.]

O Saviour of the faithful dead. Bp. R. Heber. [On Recovery from Sickness.] 1st pub. in the Christian Observer, Jan., 1816, in 4 st. of 8 l. and headed, "View of Death." In Heber's posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 152, it is slightly altered, divided into 8 st. of 4 l., and the heading is changed to "On Recovery from Sickness." It is usually given in an abridged form of 2 st. of 8 l. or 4 st. of 4 l., but its use is not extensive. [J. J.]

"Oh Saviour! Whom this holy morn Gave to our world below; To wandering and to labour born, To weakness and to woe!"

In Heber's posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 13, it was given with alterations, the first stanza reading:—

"Oh Saviour! Whom this holy morn Gave to our world below; To mortal woe and labour born, And more than mortal woe!"

Each stanza, except st. ii. is altered in like manner, the result being two distinct texts. Of these texts that of 1827 is almost absolutely followed by hymn-book compilers. Very few, however, give it in its complete form. The H. C. is an exception in favour of the full 1827 text, with the change of st. v. l. i., "Through fickle fortune's various scene," to "Through this world's fickle various scene." Other forms of the hymn are:—

1. O Saviour, Whom this joyful morn. This text is very much altered throughout. The opening stanza is the 1811 text with alterations; the rest are altered from the text of 1827. In this form it was given in Heber's Christian Psalmody, 1833, No. 381; Elliott's Ps. & Hym., 1835; and again in recent hymn-books.

2. O God, Whose Holy Child this morn. This altered form of the 1827 text appeared in Tennyson's Hymns, 1849.

3. Incarnate Word! by every grief. This, beginning with st. ii. of the 1827 text, is No. 318 in the American Bap. Psalter, N. Y., 1871.

4. Jesus, Thou man of Sorrows born. This is found in several modern collections, including Common Praise, 1879, and others, and is the 1811 text slightly altered.

When these various forms of the text are taken into account it is found that the use of this hymn is extensive. It is, however, far from being one of Heber's best productions.

[J. J.]

O Saviour, whose mercy severe in its kindness. Sir H. Grant. [Benefits of Affliction] This poem is found in Sacred Poetry, 2nd Series, Edinburgh, W. Opham & Son, circa 1824, No. 149, in 8 st. of 4 l., headed "Benefit of Affliction," and signed "Sir Robert Grant." In Grant's posthumous Sacred Poems, 1839, it was given unaltered as No. v., with the text "Blessed is the man whom thou chastenest. Psalm xlv. 12." It is given in full in H. W. Beecher's Plymouth Coll., 1855, and other American hymn-books.

In the Boston Unitarian Hymn. of the Spirit, 1864, No. 586, "I thought that the course of the pilgrim to heaven, is composed of st. v.-vii.

[J. J.]

O say not thou art left of God. Card. J. H. Newman. [Faith.] 1st pub. in the Boyne Magazine for July, 1834, in 5 st. of 4 l., again in the Lyra Apostolica, 1836, No. 27, with the heading "Token. 'The Lord stood with me and strengthened me,' " and signed "8." It is also in his Verses on Religious Subjects, 1853, and his Verses on Various Occasions, 1866. In Kennedy, 1863, the text is slightly altered, and a doxology is added.

[J. J.]

O see how Jesus trusts Himself. F. W. Faber. [True Love.] Pub. in the 1852 ed. of his Jesus and Mary, &c., No. 59, in 23 st. of 4 l., and headed "True Love." It is also in his Hymns, 1864. The stanzas usually found in C. U. was given in Spurgeon's O. O. Bk. of 1865, No. 784, and is composed of st. i, iii, v, and vi. This is repeated in Laudis Domini, N. Y., 1884, and, with slight alterations, in Dale's English H. Bk., 1874.

[J. J.]

O selig Haus, wo man dich aufgenommen. C. J. P. Spitta. [Private Use.] A beautiful description of a true Christian household, taken from the happy home life of the author. 1st pub. in his Psalter and Harfe, Pirna, 1833, p. 97, in 5 st. of 8 l., entitled "Salvation is come to this house." (St. Luke xix. 9.) Included in the Wurtemberg G. B., 1842, No. 500; Hazard, B. G., 1883, No. 527, and many others. Tr. as:—

1. Oh happy house! where Thou art loved the best. A good but free tr. by Mrs. Findlater in H. L. L., 3rd Ser., 1858, p. 16 (1884, p. 142), in Spence's Christ in Song, 1869-70. St. i-v. were also repeated in the 1869 Appendix to the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hym.

Other tr. are: (1) "O blessed house, whose favoured inmates know," by S. A. Stoops, in her Thoughts and Sketches, 1857, p. 68. (2) "O happy house, where every breast," by Dr. G. Walker, 1860, p. 67. (3) "O blessed house, where Thou, dear Lord," by Mr. R. Muguirae, 1863, p. 163.

[J. M.]

O show me not my Saviour dying. J. Conder. [Easter.] 1st pub. in the Cong. H. Bk., 1836, No. 160, in 4 st. of 8 l.; again in Conder's Choir and Oratory, 1837, p. 65; and again in his posthumous Hymn. of Praise.

O Spirit of the Prayer, &c., 1836, p. 123. for "The Lord's Supper" it is, strictly speaking, an based on the words "He risen, Come, see the place." In an abridg'd with alterations, it is given Church Hymn, 1871, as Jesus dying.

O sight for angels. W. How. [Baptism of J. S. P. C. K. Church Hymn given as one of the hymns In his Notes to the folk. 1881, Mr. Ellerton exp. of the hymn as follows: "The Baptism of our Lord event commemorated in the or Epiphany, and in the East key-note of the festival. I desire to place amongst the hymns used in commemorating this Son of God."

In T. Darlington's Hymn. 1887, st. iv. is omitted.

O splendor aeterni Patria. C. Coffin. [Lent.] Given in the Paris Breviary, 1736, as the hymn on Sundays and Saturdays at Compline throughout Lent till Wednesday in Holy Week. It is also in Coffin's Hymni Sacri, 1736, p. 85; J. Chandler's Hymn of the Primacy of the Church, 1837, No. 15; and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiæ, 1838 and 1865. It is based upon the "Christe qui lux es et dies" (p. 287, i.). Tr. as:—

1. Thou Brightness of the Father's face. By J. Chandler, in his Hymn of the Prim. Ch., 1837, p. 12, and thence into a few collections.

2. Brightness of the Father's glory. By Br. J. H. Woodford, in his Hymn arranged for the Sundays, &c., 1803; the Parish H. Bk., 1805, and several other collections.

Other trs. are:—

1. O Christ, blest influence divine. J. Williams, 1839.

2. O Christ, the true and endless Day. R. Campbell, 1866.

3. O Brightness of Thy Father! Bay. J. D. Chambers, 1867. [J. J.]

O take away this evil heart. J. Montgomery. [Lent.] Written Dec. 9, 1829 (M. 158), and pub. in his Original Hymns, 1853, No. 281, in 5 st. of 4 l., with the heading "O Lord, I beseech Thee, deliver my Soul." It is found in a few modern hymn-books. [J. J.]

O ter jucundas, o ter foecundas. [Christmas.] Included in the Mainz G. B. (R. C.), 1661, p. 103, in 5 st., entitled "Hymn on the holy birth-night of Christ." In later collections it begins, "O ter foecundas, o ter jucundas," and so in Daniel, ii. p. 332; Trench, ed. 1864, p. 116; and in H. M. Macgill's Songs of the Christian Creed and Life, 1876. "This pretty poem," as Trench terms it, does not seem to be earlier than the 17th cent. Tr. as:—

O blessed night! O rich delight. By H. M. Macgill, contributed to the Draft of the Scottish Preface, 1874, and pub. in that Hymnal in 1876. It is also in Dr. Macgill's Songs of the Christian Creed and Life, 1876, No. 34.

Other trs. are:—

1. Thrice joyful night. C. E. Leaton-Blenkinsopp, in Lyra Heiæntilæca, 1864.

O that I was heretofore. C. Wesley. [A Minister's Prayer.] Pub. in Hymns and Sacred Poems, 1747, vol. i. No. 188, in 8 st. of 6 l. (P. Works, vol. v., 1868-72, p. 103). Two centos from this hymn are in C. U.:—

1. Give me the faith which can remove. Composed of st. vii.-viii. in the West H. Bk., 1760, No. 421, and later collections.

2. I would the precious time redeem. Composed of st. v.-vii. in the Bapt. Hymn., 1879. [J. J.]

O that Thou woul'st the heavens rend. C. Wesley. [Prayer against the power of evil.] Appeared in Hymns and Sacred Poems, 1749, p. 76, in 7 st. of 4 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 292). It has been broken up into parts thus:—

1. 1. That Thou woul'st the heavens rend. St. v.-vi., in the West H. Bk., 1760, No. 134. In the American

Meth. Epis. Hymns, 1849, st. i.-iv. are given as No. 376.

5. O Christ, Redeemer, Saviour, Lord. In Kennedy, 1865, is composed of st. x., xii.-xviii, slightly altered. In addition to these arrangements from this hymn another in 8 st. is sometimes found in the Church of England collections. It opens with the first stanza of the original, but is distinguished from the arrangement in the West H. Bk. as above, by the second stanza, which reads, "What tho' I cannot break my chain." It first appeared in A. M. Toplady's Ps. & Hymns, 1776, No. 352, and is composed of st. i., iv., vii., ix., x., xii., xvi., xiii., in the order named. A second cento in Toplady, 1776, No. 108, and beginning, "Jesus, Redeemer, Saviour, Lord," is composed of six stanzas from this hymn, and three (iv.-vi.) from C. Wesley's "Jesus, if still Thou art to-day." Also in later collections. [J. J.]

O the bitter shame and sorrow. T. Monod. [Gratitude.] Mr. J. Thyn's annotation of this hymn (the substance of which was derived apparently direct from the author) as given in his Notes of 1887 to the Scottish Presbyterian Hymnal, reads:—

"By Rev. Theodore Monod, Paris. Written by him in English during a series of 'Consecration' meetings held at Broadlands, England, in July 1874. Given by the author to Lord Mount-Temple at the close of the meeting, and printed by his Lordship on the back of a programme card for another series of similar meetings held at Oxford in October, 1874, . . . . The author writes (1887) that he now wishes line 4 of vers. 4 to read, 'Grant me now my supplication.'"

This hymn is given in several collections, including the Hymn, Comp., 1876, where, in the annotated edition, it is accompanied by the following note by Br. E. H. Becketten:—

"This touching hymn by Monod, with the exception of reading 'petition' for 'desire' (st. iv. 1, 4) for the measure's sake, is without alteration. In the last letters which the Editor received from the late Sir H. W. Baker, he expressed his regret that his name was not included in the revised edition of H. A. & M.

It is in the H. A. & M. Suppl. Hym., 1889. [J. J.]

O the hour when this material. J. Conder. [The Invisible State.] Pub. in Collyer's Coll., 1812, No. 808, in 8 st. of 8 l., and headed "The Invisible State; or, 'also from the Body present with the Lord.' Rev. vii. 15-17." It was repeated in the Comp. H. Bk., 1836, No. 620, and again in Conder's posthumous Hymns of Praise, Prayer, &c., 1856, p. 132. It is in C. U. in its full form, as in the Leeds H. Bk., 1853. A cento therefrom is also in use as "Jesus, blessed Mediator; This cento is popular in America. [J. J.]

O the vastness, O the terror. J. M. Neate. [All Souls.] This Sequence for All Souls appeared in his posthumous Sequences, Hymns and other Ecclesiastical Verses, 1866, p. 34, in 30 st. of 4 l. From it three centos have come into C. U.:—(1) "O the vastness, O the terror;" (2) "At length the Master calls:" and (3) "Now when prayer and toil have failed." [J. J.]
O Thou, before Whose gracious throne. [During the dangerous illness of a Minister.] The earliest date to which we have traced this hymn is the 4th ed. of the Bristol Bap. Coll. of Ash & Evans, 1781, where it is given in 9 st. of 4 l., and is unsigned. In the 5th ed., 1801, it is signed "J. K." It was included in full in Rippon's Bap. Sel., 1787, No. 413, but without signature. In Dobell's Sel., 1802, No. 592, it is signed "K." In later editions it is "K." only. This uncertainty of authorship was inCREASEd by D. Sedgwick's guesses at the meaning of "K." In one of his books annotated in ms. we find him giving it to "John Kentish," in another to "George Keith," and so on, but in each case confessing that it was a guess only. In the Primit. Meth. Hymn., 1807, it is given to "F. Kirkeham," a signature which is evidently wrong. We must subscribe it "J. K. Ash & Evans, 1781." In modern collections the text is usually in an abbreviated form. [J. J.]

O Thou Eternal Victim slain. C. Wesley. [Passional.] Pub. in the Hys. on the Lord's Supper, 1745, No. 5, in 3 st. of 6 l. (P. Works, 1788-72, vol. iii. p. 219). It is found in its full and unaltered form in the Wes. H. Bk. and other collections, both old and new. In the Salisbury H. Bk., 1857; the Sarum, 1858; the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, and others, it reads "O Thou before the world began." In addition this hymn has been entirely rewritten in two forms, the first by Dr. Kennedy in his Hymno. Christ., 1863, as, "O first in sorrow, first in pain"; and the second by T. Darling, in his Hymns, 1887, as, "Christ Jesus, ere the world began." Of these Dr. Kennedy's is the finer of the two. [J. J.]

O Thou from Whom all goodness flows. T. Haweis. [Christ our Hope in Affliction.] This hymn is given at the close of a tract the title of which is:—

In the account given in this tract of Browne's last illness, it is said he made this remark to a gentleman who called upon him:—

"I have chosen my funeral text and hymn Remember me. He hath remembered me with that favour which He beareth to His own people. The Lord will perfect that which concerneth me. Thy mercy, O God, endureth forever: fulfill the work of Thine own hands" (p. 8).

From this it is tolerably clear that the hymn appeared before 1791, in some book or magazine which we have failed to trace. On p. 12 of the tract the hymn is given as follows:—

O THOU FROM W

"Hymn:" Composed by the Rev. Mr. H. (Browne) Funeral Sermon.

"O Thou from Whom all I lift my heart to The In all my sorrows, come Dear Lord, come unto me. While on my poor distress My soul lie heavily, My word is heard, and new In love, Remember me. Temptations sore other To shake my faith in God. Give me strength, Lord. For good. Remember me. When in desertion the Thy face I cannot see Then, Lord, arise with balm. And still, Remember me. If on my face for Thy grace Shame and reproaches, All hall, reproach, and praise. If Thou remember me. The hour is near, consoling I own the just decree. Saviour, with my last breath, I'll cry, Remember me."

In Haweis's Carmina Christi it is given in another form in S. l. As above. S. ii. "When groaning on me, and as above. S. iii. 1. 2. "And I cannot fly above. S. iv. "Distress with pain, distress. This feeble body see. Good, patience, rest, and Peace. Remember me."

This form of the hymn is several of the older collections, S. 1819, the hymn unchanged. As No. 359 it reads:—

"O Thou, from Whom all I lift my soul to Thee; In all my sorrows, come, Good Lord, remember me. When on my aching, but My sins lie heavily, Thy pardon grant, next pray. Good Lord, remember me. When trials sore oppress And ill I cannot flee, O let my strength be as in Good Lord, remember me. If, for Thy sake, upon my Shame and reproach, and well Good Lord, remember me. When worn with pain, do This feeble body see; Grant patience, rest, and Good Lord, remember me. When in the solemn hour I wait Thy just decree. Be this the prayer of my Good Lord, remember me. And when before Thy throne And lift my soul to Thee Then with the saints at Thy Good Lord, remember me."

This form of the hymn was Montgomery in his Christian No. 188. As Montgomery as in compiling Cotterill's Sel. altered several hymns by altering the same, it seems (from the reproduced the same text in Psalms) that the alterations in this are not by Cotterill, as attributed the original hymn phrasing." The text and the scrip-
O Thou God Who Hearkest Every Hour

O Thou who art the morning star
And the evening star,
When the world is dark as night,
And the soul is in distress;
Then ascend to the throne of grace,
And receive our prayer.

O Thou who art the source of light,
And the guide of our feet,
When the path is dark and obscure,
And the mind is in doubt;
Then ascend to the throne of grace,
And guide us in the right way.

O Thou who art the rock of age,
And the foundation stone,
When the world is in confusion,
And the mind is in despair;
Then ascend to the throne of grace,
And make us strong and brave.

O Thou who art the provider of all things,
And the giver of life,
When the world is in want,
And the mind is in need;
Then ascend to the throne of grace,
And fill us with thy blessings.

O Thou who art the source of all knowledge,
And the fountain of wisdom,
When the world is in ignorance,
And the mind is in darkness;
Then ascend to the throne of grace,
And enlighten our minds.

O Thou who art the protector of the weak,
And the defender of the poor,
When the world is in danger,
And the mind is in fear;
Then ascend to the throne of grace,
And save us from harm.

O Thou who art the source of all comfort,
And the provider of peace,
When the world is in sorrow,
And the mind is in despair;
Then ascend to the throne of grace,
And grant us peace.

O Thou who art the source of all joy,
And the giver of happiness,
When the world is in sadness,
And the mind is in grief;
Then ascend to the throne of grace,
And fill us with joy.

O Thou who art the source of all love,
And the giver of friendship,
When the world is in loneliness,
And the mind is in isolation;
Then ascend to the throne of grace,
And grant us friendship.

O Thou who art the source of all strength,
And the giver of courage,
When the world is in weakness,
And the mind is in fear;
Then ascend to the throne of grace,
And grant us strength.

O Thou who art the source of all hope,
And the giver of faith,
When the world is in despair,
And the mind is in doubt;
Then ascend to the throne of grace,
And grant us hope.

O Thou who art the source of all goodness,
And the giver of kindness,
When the world is in unkindness,
And the mind is in cruelty;
Then ascend to the throne of grace,
And grant us kindness.

O Thou who art the source of all beauty,
And the giver of grace,
When the world is in ugliness,
And the mind is in rudeness;
Then ascend to the throne of grace,
And grant us grace.

O Thou who art the source of all truth,
And the giver of justice,
When the world is in untruth,
And the mind is in falsehood;
Then ascend to the throne of grace,
And grant us justice.

O Thou who art the source of all learning,
And the giver of knowledge,
When the world is in ignorance,
And the mind is in darkness;
Then ascend to the throne of grace,
And grant us knowledge.

O Thou who art the source of all wisdom,
And the giver of understanding,
When the world is in misunderstanding,
And the mind is in confusion;
Then ascend to the throne of grace,
And grant us understanding.

O Thou who art the source of all power,
And the giver of authority,
When the world is in weakness,
And the mind is in fear;
Then ascend to the throne of grace,
And grant us authority.

O Thou who art the source of all authority,
And the giver of dominion,
When the world is in subjection,
And the mind is in servitude;
Then ascend to the throne of grace,
And grant us dominion.

O Thou who art the source of all dominion,
And the giver of supremacy,
When the world is in inferiority,
And the mind is in inferiority;
Then ascend to the throne of grace,
And grant us supremacy.

O Thou who art the source of all supremacy,
And the giver of preeminence,
When the world is in mediocrity,
And the mind is in mediocrity;
Then ascend to the throne of grace,
And grant us preeminence.

O Thou who art the source of all preeminence,
And the giver of eminence,
When the world is in insignificance,
And the mind is in insignificance;
Then ascend to the throne of grace,
And grant us eminence.

O Thou who art the source of all eminence,
And the giver of eminence,
When the world is in insignificance,
And the mind is in insignificance;
Then ascend to the throne of grace,
And grant us eminence.

Hymns for Children, 1st series, 1842, No. 23, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed “The Epiphany, or Twelfth Night.” It is usually described as a translation, but in error. Its use is extensive, the original text as in the H. Comp., with the omission of the doxology, being generally followed. [J. J.]

O Thou Who camest from above.
C. Wesley. [For Holiness, and for Earnestness in Work.] Pub. in his Short Hymns, &c., 1762, vol. i. p. 57, in 2 st. of 8 l. (P. Works, 1808-72, vol. ix. p. 58). It was included in the Wes. H. Bk., 1790, No. 318, and has become one of the most popular hymns in the Methodist denominations. To some hymnbook compilers the opening lines of st. ii.:

“Thou art the glory of Thy glory born

have presented difficulties which have caused its omission from many collections. By E. H. Bickerstaff, in his H. Comp., has done much towards removing this difficulty by rendering the lines:

“Thou art the glory of Thy glory born
Unquenched, undimmed in darkest days.”

This reading has been adopted by others. Bp. Bickerstaff’s note thereto explains the cause and meaning of the change:

“The Editor believes that this admirable hymn would have been far more popular if it had not been for the very long word ‘inextinguishable.’ Words of five syllables must be admitted into hymns sparingly; but for a whole congregation to be poised on five, practically leads to a hymn being passed by. It is hoped that the line given in the text, which only paraphrases the same thought, will be allowed.”

In Martineau’s Hymns, 1840, and 1873, the opening line of this hymn is changed to “O Thou, Who designd from above.” [J. J.]

O Thou Who didst with love untold.
Emma Tols, née Leslie. [St. Thomas.] Written in 1851, and contributed to the S. P. C. K. Hymns for Pub. Worship, 1852, No. 117, in 4 st. of 4 l., and appointed for St Thomas’s Day. The various forms which these 4 st. of 4 l. have taken are somewhat perplexing, and we can name only those which are of importance:

1. The original text as above and in later editions of the same collection.
2. An altered version with a doxology by the editors in the Cooke & Denton Hymnal, 1853, No. 185. This is repeated in full in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymn, 1871 (with one slight variation), and, in an abridged form, in Cooke’s Hymnal, 1884: Windle’s Hymn, and others.
3. In the Hymnary, 1872, No. 342 is composed of st. i.-iii. of the Cooke & Denton text, and st. iv.-vi. by the editors.

Other altered texts, beginning with the same first line, are to be found. Their departures from the original may be ascertained by a collation with the original as in any edition of the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hymns. [J. J.]

O Thou Who hast Thy servants taught.
H. Alford. [Fruits of Holiness.] 1st pub. in his Ps. & Hymns, 1841, No. 61, in 4 st. of 4 l., for the 8th S. after Trinity, and again in his Year of Prayer, 1867, No. 47, for the 3rd S. after Epiphany. Another form to adapt it for children is “O Thou Who hast Thy children taught.” It is composed of stts. i., iv., slightly altered. [J. J.]

O Thou, Who when I did complain.
S. Wesley, sen. [Ps. cxv.] 1st pub. together with other Psalm-versions.

O Traurigkeit, o Herzeli.
O Thou Who didst with love untold.
O Thou Who hast Thy servants taught.
O Thou, Who when I did complain.
O Traurigkeit, o Herzeli.

This hymn, based upon the 8. in Lent, was pub. in H. Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 57, iv. has passed into several hymn collections; for the Harrow and I. Leeds H. Bk., 1833, Dale 1874, and others.

O Thou Whose just high.

O TREUER HEILAND

The first verse of this funeral hymn, along with its devotional melody, came accidentally into my hands. As I was greatly pleased with it, I added the other seven as they might suit my purpose. As I could not be a party to the use of the other verses.

The original hymn appeared in the Würzburg G. B. (Roman Catholic), 1628, in 7 st. The st. adopted by Rist is there: —

"O Traurigkeit,
O Herzzerreisend,
Ist das denn nicht zu küssen:
(ohne Worte einsiges Kind, und zum Grab getragen)

The hymn in this form (i.e. st. i. as in the 1628, and st. ii.-viii. by Rist) by its simplicity and force obtained speedy popularity in Germany: passed into Crüger’s Prazis, 1656, No. 161, and most later books, and is No. 112 in the Unve. L. S., 1851. Its popularity was greatly aided by the plaintive melody, which appeared with the original hymn in 1628 (see Bäumker, i. p. 190). Tr. as:

1. O darkest wo! This omitting st. i. vi. is by Miss Winkworth, given in her C. H. for England, 1863, No. 54, with the original melody. Repeated in her Christian Singers, 1869, p. 191, and in the Ohio Lutheran Hym., 1880, No. 78.

Other trans.: (1) "O boundless grief," by J. C. Jacob, 1722, p. 19. (2) "O grief of heart," as No. 361 in pi. 1. of the Moravuson H. Bk., 1754. (3) "O deepest grief," based on the 1754, as No. 119 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1799 (1799, p. 150). [J. M.]

O treuer Heiland Jesu Christ. C. J. P. Spitta. [Supplication.] Founded on 1 Cor. v. 17, being also a prayer that the good work may be carried on in our end. First pub. in his Psalter und Harfe, 2nd Ser., Leipzig, 1843, p. 25, in 9 st. of 4 l., entitled “Thanksgiving and Supplication.” Tr. as:

We praise and bless Thee, gracious Lord. A free tr. in 10 st. by Miss Borthwick, in H. L. L., 1862, No. 185, p. 104. In full in Bp. Viele’s Odes, 1869, p. 279. St. i.-vi. are included in Kennedy, 1863, and in Dr. Thomas’s Augustine H. Bk., 1866. St. i., iii., iv., vi., vii., ix. are in Allon’s Suppl. Hym., 1868, and his Cong. Psalmist Hym., 1868; the Batt. Hym., 1879; Dale’s Eng. H. Bk., 1874, &c. Other stanzas are in the Church S. S. H. Bk., 1868, W. P. Stevenson’s Hym. for Ch. & Home, 1873; Harland’s C. P. & Hym.; 1876; Boardman’s Selection, Philadelphia, 1881, &c. In the Hys. of the Spirit, Boston, U.S., 1884, No. 417, beginning “I praise and bless Thee, O my God,” is Miss Borthwick’s st. i. iv., and a st. added.

O vos olim dolores animae. [All Souls.] This is the hymn in the Little Office for the dead, in W. Nakatani’s Coreleste paaltemn. It is at p. 363 in the ed. of 1701, which processes to be smothered from the original ed. of 1698; and is repeated in all later eds., e.g. Mechiin, 1859, p. 264. Tr. as: "Ye spirits of the faithful," by E. Caswall, in his Maques of Mary, &c., 1858, p. 371; and his Hys. & Poems, 1873, p. 233.

O weep not o’er thy children’s tomb. Bp. R. Heber. [Holy Innocents’ Day.] Pub. in his posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 29, in 4 st. of 4 l. It is in use in its original form, and as “Why weep’st thou by thy children’s tomb?” It is one of the least popular of the author’s hymns. [J. J.]

O Welt, sieh hier dein Leben. P. Gerhardt. [Passiontide.] 1st pub. in the 3rd ed., 1618, of Crüger’s Prazis pietatis meliores, No. 113, in 16 st. of 8 l., reprinted in Wackernagel’s ed. of his Geistliche Lieder, No. 15; Bachmann’s ed., No. 8, and included as No. 127 in the Unve. L. S., 1851. It is a thoughtful meditation on the Passion. St. iii.-vi. were favourites with J. S. Bach and used by him in his St. Matthew and St. John Passion Music. Tr. as:

1. Extended on a cursed tree. A free tr. in L. X. of st. i., iii., iv., vii., viii.-x., xii., xvi., by J. Wesley, in Hys. of Sacred Poems, 1740 (P. Works, 1862-72, vol. i., p. 322), and included in No. 23, in the Wes. H. Bk., 1790, and since in all other hymnals of the Methodist family. Included in full, as No. 402, in the 1857 ed. of Mercer’s C. P. & H. Bk. (Ox. ed., 1864, No. 172, omitting the tr. of st. xi.). The tr. of st. ix.-xii., xvi., beginning “My Naviour, how shall I proclaim,” were included in the American Sabbath H. Bk., 1858, and the Baptist Service of Song, Boston, U.S., 1871.

2. See, World, upon the bloody tree. A C. M. version by P. H. Molther of st. i.-x. as No. 118, in the Moravuson H. Bk., 1742, and thence, as No. 442, in pi. 1. of the Moravuson H. Bk., 1754. In 1789, No. 96 (1886, No. 109) it is altered to “See, world, upon the shamefu1 tree.” In his Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 280, Montgomery omitted the tr. of st. ii., vi., in 1856, st. i., st., iii.-vi. were included in the Evang. Union H. Bk.

3. O World! behold upon the tree. A good tr., omitting st. vii., by Miss Winkworth, in the 2nd Ser., 1858, of her Lyra Gen., p. 29, and thence in Schaff’s Christ in Song ed., 1899, p. 174. Her tr. of st. i., ii., iv., vi., x., XVI., were included, slightly altered, in the Hymnary, 1872, and that of st. xi.-xiii., xv., xvi., altered and beginning “Lord, be Thy Cross before our sight,” in Kennedy, 1883.

O what a lonely path were ours. Sir E. Denby. [Jemsa ever with us.] Given in the Appendix to Hymns for the Poor of the Flock, 1838; in the author’s Selection, 1839, No. 260; in the Ps. and Hym., Lond., D. Walther, 1842, Pt. i., No. 72, and other and later Plymouth Brethren collections. In some hymn-books it is abridged to 5 st., and in others it is sometimes attributed to "T. Moore" in error. [J. J.]

O! what, if we are Christ's. Sir H. W. Baker. [Feasts of Martyrs.] 1st pub. in Murray's Hymnal, 1852. No. 126, in 6 st. of 4 l., and inc. "Ye shall indeed drink of My cup, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with." It was repeated in the following year in the Cooke & Denton Churen Hymnal, No. 166, where it was appointed for the "Conversion of St. Paul." This was followed in 1857 by the Salisbury H. Bk., No. 161, where it was given as one of the hymns for the "Festivals of Martyrs." In 1859 it appeared in the trial copy of H. A. & M., No. 126, with st. iv. 1-2, changed from "Ever like them to bear," to "Like them in faith to bear," and the substitution of a new doxology. These changes were retained in the authorized H. A. & M., 1861, and in the revised ed., 1875. Also found in a large number of hymn-books. [J. J.]

O when my righteous Judge shall come. [The Judgment Day.] Miller's account of this hymn in his Singers and Songs, &c., 1869, p. 182, is:—

"It was in this fourth edition of the Lady Huntington's H. Bk., 66, that there appeared for the first time the striking and well-known hymn by the Countess. "O! when my righteous Judge shall come." It is the second verse of a piece on the Judgment Day which has a first part of five verses, beginning "We soon shall hear the midnight cry.""

This statement by Miller is based upon information which he received from Daniel Sedgwick. On turning to D. Sedgwick's own copy of the edition of the Lady Huntington's H. Bk., referred to by Miller, we find, first, two separate and distinct hymns numbered 146 and 147, and beginning respectively, "We soon shall hear the midnight cry," and "O when my righteous Judge shall come;" and, secondly, a note in pencil in Sedgwick's handwriting which reads, "Hymn 146 and 147 seem to be both by the same Author—perhaps the Countess's." On turning to Sedgwick's copy of Miller's Singers and Songs, we find, written by Sedgwick opposite the words quoted by Miller as above, the following:—

"Upon the testimony of the Rev. Thomas Young of Canterbury this hymn was composed by Charles Wesley. None doubt it was wrote at the suggestion of the Countess by C. Wesley."

It is clear that these guesses of Sedgwick are worthless. The history of the hymn, so far as we have been able to trace it, is as follows:—

(1) In an enlarged edition of the Lady Huntington H. Bk., 1774 [see Huntington's Hymn-books, Lady. § iv.], it was given, together with "We shall hear the midnight cry" (as Nos. 146 and 147), in 4 st. of 6 l., and in common with all the rest of the hymns in the collection without signature. Both hymns were subsequently omitted from all official editions of the hymn-book, a fact which tells greatly against the guess that they were written by the Countess.

(2) We next find both hymns in the 1775 Appendix by L. Coughlan to J. Baxlee's Select coll. of Ps. & Hys. for the Use of the Congregation of Cumberland Street [London] Chapel. (Lady Huntington.) They are numbered 285, 286. [See Baxlee, J. p. 119, i.]

(3) "We soon shall hear the midnight cry," as wisdom found after this date; but its companion hymn, "O when my righteous Judge shall come," appears in Kippis's Bap. Sel., 1774, No. 579, as "When Thou, my righteous Judge, shalt come." This was repeated in numerous hymn-books in G. B. in the popular form of the hymn.

The rest, therefore, is regard to its authorship: the Lady Huntington's H. L. pon's Bap. Sel. 1787."

O where shall we find Montgomery. [The Preach] Written for the Anniversaries Red Hill Wesleyan Sund which were preached in 1817, and printed for use 6 st. of 4 l. It was included in 1819, No. 172, in 3 st. of 4 l. of the original rewritten th Baud.-sheet, "Lord God of grace."

Oakeley, Frederick, b. 1824, youngest s. of Sir Charles Oakeley, Bart., sometime Governor of Madras, was b. at Shrewsbury, Sept. 3, 1802, and from [1824].
In 1855 he gained a University prize for a Latin Essay; and in 1827 he was elected a Fellow of Balliol. Taking Holy orders, he was a Prebendary of Lichfield Cathedral, 1832; Preacher at Whitehall, 1837;
and Minister of Margaret Chapel, Margaret Street, London, 1839. In 1845 he resigned all his appointments in the Church of England, and was received into the Roman Communion.
Subsequently he became a Canon of the Cathedral in the Roman Catholic ecclesiastical district of Westminster. He d. January 29,

"He gave the beginning of his change of view to the lecture of Dr. Chas. H. Lloyd, Regius Professor, Caen. 1847, 387] of the Anglican Prayer Book." About that time a great demand arose at Oxford for Missals and Breviaries, and Canon Oakeley, sympathising with the movement, co-operated with the London booksellers in supplying that demand. . . . He promoted the (Oxford) movement, been raised, proceedings were taken against him in the Court of Archbishops, and a sentence given that he was permanently suspended unless he retracted. He then re-signed his prebendal stall at Lichfield, and went over to the Church of Rome.

Canon Oakeley's poetical works included:—
(1) Devotional Commemorative of the Most Adorable Pasion of Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, 1842;
(2) The Catholic Priest (1) (3) The Catholic Priest of Rome, a Christian Drama, 1866; (4) Lyra Liturgica;
Reflections in Verse for Holy Days and Seasons, 1865.

Canon Oakeley also published several prose works, including a tr. of J. M. Horne's Paradise
He is widely known through his tr. of the "Adorete Riedelen" (p. 30, l.). Several of his original hymns are also in Roman Catholic collections.

Oocom, Samson (sometimes given as Oocum, and again as Occum), a Mohican
Indian, was b. at Norwich, Connecticut, in 1723. He was converted from Paganism under G. Whitefield, in 1739-40, and educated by the Rens. E. Wheelock and Benjamin Pomeroy.
In 1748 he returned to Long Island and laboured amongst a remnant of his people.
In 1759 he received Presbyterian orders, visited England, 1766-67, where he preached often (once for J. Newton at Olney), and with acceptance, and raised about ten thousand pounds for Dartmouth College, and for Indian education. His later life was spent first among his own race on Long Island, and, from 1786, in Oneida County, N.Y. He d. in July, 1796.
Oocom's Choice Collection of Hys. and Spiritual Songs was pub. at New London, Connecticut, in 1774 (2nd ed. 1785). He is credited as the author of several hymns, but none of those hymns are found in his own collection. They are:

1. Now the shades of night are gone, M. Nancy
The date of 1776 is given to this hymn, but on insufficient authority. No evidence connects it with Oocom, though it has not, on the other hand, been claimed for any other. It First it was found in the Hartford and Connectional Coll., 1779, and was brought into general use by the Preceptor Book Coll., 1826. It is in several modern hymn-books.

By this hymn, from its extensive use, Oocom is chiefly known. We are satisfied, however, that in this form it is not his. It is first found in the Connecticut Evangelical Magazine, July, 1824, p. 39, "communicated as original." It is however altered from "Awaked by the "soul to its powerful sound," which is No. 285 in Josiah
Goodard's Coll. Walpole, N. H. 1801, and possibly earlier.
This older text is probably Oocom's own composition,
but not his. [F. M. B.]

O'er those gloomy hills of darkness.
W. Williams. [Missions.] This hymn was pub. (not in his Hosannah, 1759, as sometimes stated, but) in his Gloria in Excelsis; or, Hymns of Praise to God the Lamb, Carmarthen, John Ross, 1772, No. 37, in 7 st. of 6 l. (Orig. text in Lyra Brit., 1867, p. 631.) It is known to modern hymn-books in the following forms:—

1. O'er those gloomy hills of darkness. The original in full, but more often abbreviated.

2. O'er the gloomy hills of darkness. This was given in Rippon's Bap. Sel., 1787, No. 429, with slight alterations, and the omission of st. v. and vii. In the 27th ed., 1827, it was enlarged to 6 sts. by the addition of "Every creature, living, breathing," &c. This text is repeated in Spurgeon's H., o. H. Brit. 1866.

3. O'er the realms of pagan darkness. This appeared in Cotterill's H., 4th ed., 1819, No. 239, in 4 st. of 4 l. It can hardly be said to be William's text rewritten, there is so little of Williams therein. It would be more accurate to say that it is based upon William's, as the first stanza of each will show:—

Original. O'er those gloomy Hills of Darkness
Look, my Soul, be still and gase,
All the Promises of Grace
On a glorious Day of Grace.
Blessed Jubil., &c.
Let the glorious Morning dawn.

Cotterill. O'er the realms of pagan darkness
Let the eye of pity gaze;
Seek the kindred of the people,
Lost in ruin's bewildering maze:
Darkness brooding
On the face of all the earth.

This arrangement is in several hymn-books in Great Britain and America.

4. Light of them that sit in darkness. This, in the Irish Church Hymnal, 1873, and others, begins with st. ii. of Cotterill's text as above.

The use of this hymn in these various forms is extensive. [J. J.]

Of justice and of grace. I sing. I. Watts. [Ps. cx.] Pub. in his Ps. of David, 1719, p. 258, in 6 st. of 4 l. It is in use in its original form, and as, "Mercy and judgment I will sing," in the Islington Ps. & Hs., 1862, and as, "Mercy and judgment will I sing," in the Wes. H. Bk., 1875. Although found in these three forms its use is limited. [J. J.]

Of Thy love some gracious token.
T. Kelly. [Close of Service.] 1st pub. in his Coll. of Ps. & Hs., Dublin, 1802, No. 256, in the following form:—

"Of Thy love, some gracious token,
Grant us, Lord, before we go;
Bless Thy word which has been spoken,
Life and peace on all bow; When we join the world again,
Let our hearts with Thee remain:
O direct us,
And protect us;
Till we gain the heav'ly shore,
Where Thy people want to more."
